Mass Meet for Marine Workers Defense New Forces Join Defense Committee

A mass meeting with the most representative list of speakers that New York has seen in many years will be held at Webster Hall, 125 East 11th St., on Thursday, January 7th at 8 P. M.

The meeting is called under the auspices of the Marine Workers' Defense Committee and will be devoted to an all-sided exposure of the New York "Dynamite Plot", in which an attempt is being made to railroad John G. Soderberg, Secretary of the International Tide-water Boatmen's Union, and Thomas Bunker and William Trajer, active member of the Union, in a typical frame-up case.

A dozen or more organizations are working to support the meeting and an overflow crowd is anticipated. All the speakers billed for the meeting are well known in the New York labor movement and have spoken to New York audiences on many occasions. Carter Hudson, a member of the Executive Board of the Independent Tide-water Boatmen's Union, will preside. The speakers include, James P. Cannon, A. J. Muste, Ben. Gitlow, Carlo Tresca, Walter Starrett and Ben Fletcher.

New affiliations to the Marine Workers' Defense Committee are being registered with increasing frequency and are rapidly giving to this body the character of a broad united front movement. The committee which has previously included two Communist groups, anarchists, I. W. W.'s, the Boatmen's Union and other organizations, seated additional delegates at its meeting Monday, December 28th. W. H. Hermann and Michael Gordon, presented credentials from Carpenter's Union 2090. The City organization of the Young People's Socialist League was represented by H. Luxemburg. Maurice Goldblum came from the Students Council of the League for Industrial Democracy and H. Stone from the Marxian Youth Club. The credentials of all the delegates were accepted and in addition, Walter Starrett, former editor of the Road to Freedom, was seated as a member of the committee.

The Conference for Progressive Political Action, which had sent a delegate to a previous meeting to secure information about the case and the work of the committee, has decided to participate officially in the committee and give full support to its work. The information of this decision was conveyed to the committee in a letter from A. J. Muste who is also scheduled as one of the speakers at the mass meeting on January 7th.

During the past week the work of the sub-committee in charge of the canvass of workers' organizations began to bear fruit. Herbert Capelis spoke in behalf of the committee at the meeting of Carpenters Local Union 2090 and the meeting voted a donation of twenty-five dollars to the defense. Forrest Edwards, who has been delegated to represent the committee at the Conference of the Jewish Anarchists on Sunday, December 27th, made an appeal there and secured a collection of $17.40. The sub-committee has prepared a letter which will be sent out to more than three hundred unions and other organizations this week, appealing for financial and other support for the imprisoned marine workers. It was also decided to begin a wide circularization of individual addresses in a campaign for funds. Lists are being collected and prepared for this purpose.

Following the January 7th mass meeting, which will mark a new stage in the campaign to popularize the cause of the frame-up victims, the Defense Committee plans to proceed to the calling of a broad conference of workers' organizations in behalf of the defense. A decision to that effect was made at Monday's meeting and a sub-committee elected to draft a call and work out the preliminary plans.

All the activity of the committee has been carried on under the banner of the united front of labor against the frame-up system. The correctness of this policy and the effectiveness of the appeal for the imprisoned workers was indicated by the response that has already been gained. Organizations and groups having the widest differences on many questions of principle and tactics are uniting for a common fight for the imprisoned marine workers. For the first time in years, we see the signs of a genuine united front movement taking shape. The rank and file workers in all organizations that are standing aloof should take up the fight for united action. A victorious united front struggle will for Soderberg, Bunker and Trajer will give a powerful impetus to working class unity against the capitalists on other fronts.

IN THE NEXT ISSUE

We have received today an important and most timely article from the pen of comrade L. D. Trotsky.

The subject is:
"FOR A WORKERS UNITED FRONT AGAINST FASCISM!"
What Constitutes The Mistakes of the Present Policy of the Communist Party of Germany?

The entire article will appear in the next, January 9th, issue of The Militant. No one will want to miss Trotsky's penetrating analysis of the significance of the events in Germany and the next tasks of the Communists.

MARTIAL LAW AT FOCHOW

FOCHOW, Fukien, (Fenprecor)—In this city as throughout China, the military authorities have demonstrated the character of their opposition to Japanese aggression in Manchuria by suppressing every attempt to organize a popular anti-imperialist movement.

The recent arrival at this port of four Japanese gunboats was made the occasion for a declaration of martial law. Ostensibly aimed at preventing disturbances "likely to be created by the Japanese", it is in fact aimed at the Chinese populace.

The Geneva Disarmament Bluff

«Disarmament» Conference Will Expose Imperialist Rivalries and Aims Against the Soviet Union

On February 2, 1932, the Disarmament Conference called by the League of Nations will convene at Geneva. This conference is to give consideration to the limitation of armaments by the various powers. It will devote much talk on the need to "outlaw" war as the means employed by nations to solve their economic and political differences and rivalries.

So uncertain and cynical are the capitalist powers on the matter of disarmament or even limitation of armaments, that for a long time there has been doubt that the Conference would even be held. But it will be, and each capitalist nation has or is selecting delegates who are to lie or to sow illusions on the prospects of peace for a weary world.

Characteristically enough, President Hoover has appointed Charles G. Dawes, Ambassador to Great Britain, to be chairman of the delegation from the United States Government. Dawes is one of the outstanding jingos in this country—a noisy war-monger who carries the appellation of "Hell N' Mavia". Dawes, a bitter foe of labor and the Soviet Union. The American delegation will, however, be perfumed with pacifist flowers, among them being Mary Emma Woolley, president of Mount Holyoke College. It is the same with the delegations from other capitalist powers. The bearers of pacifist illusions in a world armed to the teeth will mingle with the gentlemen who "keep their powder dry", and the latter will prevail. Arthur Henderson of the British Labor Party will give the proper touch at Geneva through his selection as Chairman of the Conference. Thus the militarists, pacifists and the labor betrayers will make up a trinity of forces who will talk loudly against war and militarism, come to the conclusion that nothing really can be done now about the matter—and the capitalist nations will continue to strengthen their war departments.

The Cost of Militarism

Armaments and wars are very expensive affairs and no doubt the imperialist powers would like to decrease expenditures, particularly so, if by topping off some small sums here and there, they can satisfy to some extent the demands of the workers and the petit-bourgeois middle classes for a reduction in armaments and their longing for peace. But in all these years of disarmament confabs, war "outlawry" and pacifist talk, the powers, particularly the United States, Great Britain, France and Japan have been increasing their armament expenditures. The following figures, compiled by the World Peace Foundation from the League of Nations Armaments Year Book, give the expenditures for the fiscal year of 1930:

Government	Budget Expenditures
United States	$ 707,425,000
France	400,300,000
Great Britain	463,255,000
Italy	248,946,500
Japan	236,861,500
Germany	171,923,040

War to maintain peace between the capitalist powers, and periods of peace to prepare for war again, are indeed costly matters—and, as always, it is the working class that carry the burdens, shoulder the guns, foot the costs—and then are honored with an "Unknown Soldier's" grave.

A Fake Disarmament Conference

And now we are to have another fake "disarmament" conference to lull the mass of people throughout the world to sleep, into a false security on the possibility of the maintenance of peace under capitalism. The Secretariat of the League of Nations has organized five commissions for this conference to deal with the land, sea, air, budgetary and political phases of the negotiations. This is the same League of Nations that has listened to the guns roaring, the cannon booming and the airplanes tossing bombs on the fields of Manchuria—and did nothing because it could not. The League is not the instrument that can solve or even diminish the capitalist rivalries. That lies in the hands of the international proletariat when it awakens to the problem and becomes conscious of its own unused power.

Since the World War there has been a growth of pacifist illusions, peace societies, declarations of "conscientious objectors" that they will not bear arms in times of war, etc., etc. All the while there has not been a day without war in some part of the globe: semi-colonial and colonial wars for national independence, capitalist warfare (Sino-Jap war in Manchuria today), wars of intervention (imperialist interventions in Soviet Russia, Nicaragua, etc.) and, lastly, the insurrection by an oppressed people against its rulers. Its highest and best expression was reached in the insurrection in Russia which brought the Bolsheviks into power and the dictatorship of the proletariat into being and by means of which the historical basis for the final elimination of exploitation and war was first laid. For with the assumption of political power by the working class which alone has no exploiting, imperialist or ulterior aims to serve, there will in time be needed neither an oppressive or suppressive governmental apparatus with its military concomitants, etc.

The Proposal of the Soviet Union

These are times to restate fundamentals of class struggle on whatever front it manifests itself. An exposure of the fake disarmament aims of the capitalist powers and proofs that disarmament or peace are impossible and utopian under capitalism, is an absolute necessity if the proletariat is to be able to fight effectively against capitalist imperialism, understand the causes underlying another impending world war, and give the revolutionary answer to the imperialists.

The Soviet Union long ago showed up the hypocrisy of the capitalist nations on the issue of war or peace when it made a proposal for complete disarmament of all countries and laid its program for disarmament and peace on the table. The capitalist nations ran from this proposal as if from the plague. With a single stroke the Soviet Union demonstrated that the capitalist nations were not seriously interested in the abolition of war, but only in such measures as would maintain the capitalist system and serve to fool the working people on this scourge of humanity—capitalist war.

Imperialist Rivalries

This is an epoch when the imperialist rivalries are not lessened, but, on the contrary, approach the breaking point and can find solution only in capitalist war or proletarian revolution. It is the fear of the latter possibility in an awakening proletariat that holds off for the time being the "solution" of the first, capitalist war. Does anyone with half a mind seriously doubt that, despite all the claptrap about the "unity and close relations of the English-speaking people", the contradictions and imperialist rivalry between Great Britain and the United States are sharpened? Or that, notwithstanding the visit of the "pacifist" Ramsay MacDonald to the United States, the economic basis for warfare between nations, with the United States and Great Britain as the outstanding rivals, has increased manifold in the past years? Only fools would deny the facts. It is one of the great capitalist contradictions that is heading the world into another convulsion.

A United States of Europe or A Soviet United States of Europe

Pacifists and other well-meaning mud-heads have raised the slogan of a United States of Europe as a solution to the war danger and other problems in Europe. Little or no consideration is given by them to the economic differences of the capitalist groupings in each of these nations that have caused these conflicts and that have no solution on the basis of a capitalist program. There are treaties and agreements between "little ententes", among the Balkan States, France and Poland, Germany and Austria, etc., but no sooner are these understandings arrived at, then others break out—each steps on another's toes.

It is hoped, therefore, that a federated or United States of Europe, a political agreement on a continental scale, could reconcile the grievances and differences. But all these agreements and proposals are based upon the continuation of the system of exploitation, of capitalist relations in the individual countries. This is an insoluble capitalist contradiction. No sooner would such a United States of Europe be formed, then it would already begin to disintegrate, to establish rival groupings and—there would be an end to the United States of Europe.

There can be a United States of Europe, but it must take the form, as L. D. Trotsky has so brilliantly demonstrated, of a SOVIET UNITED STATES OF EUROPE. In other words, there must first be the elimination of capitalist exploitation, of capitalism itself, before there can be a solution to its effects—militarism and war. The 'abolition of customs tariffs and similar barriers between nations can have a meaning only under such conditions. German-Austrian Anschluss, for example, therefore can (Continued on page 3)

The Struggle for Power in Germany

The center of the political stage in the present international situation is occupied by Germany. What will transpire there in the coming six months will have a direct and immediate influence upon the whole development of the world revolutionary movement. The catastrophic economic and social conditions, the collapse of the ruling parties which are enforcing extra-parliamentary measures against the proletariat, the revolutionary feelings of the masses existing alongside of a menacing growth of Fascism have created a direct revolutionary situation in Germany and raise to the foreground the question of the struggle for power.

It is axiomatic for Marxists, that without the leadership of the Communist Party, based on a policy of revolutionary struggle, the thought of the seizure of power is impossible. It requires in the Party, independence, audacity and a will to victory. The absence of such a condition in the ranks of the Party spells defeat for the proletariat. It is precisely this absent condition which makes the situation in Germany today so fraught with dangers to the international working class. The German Communist Party does not understand its tasks. It has falsely evaluated the present state of affairs with the result that it pursues a policy that is little short of criminal.

The Basis For Fascism

The greatest obstacle in the path of the German proletariat is Fascism. Many workers will undoubtedly question: How is it possible that in Germany there should be such a huge growth of Fascism?

The defeat of the revolutionary situation in 1923 gave rise to the present Fascist wave. Fascism in Germany, composed of the militarists, the petty-bourgeoisie, the administrators, office workers, degenerated unemployed elements (a great part of them youth), sections of the working class disgusted with the betrayals of social democracy and the capitulation of the C. P. G. and seeking new ways out of the present difficulties, receives support from the industrialists and financiers and to an extent from international capital. German capitalism remembers only too well that in 1923, had the Party pursued a correct policy, there would at the present time be no capitalism in Germany. It is with this in mind that she prepares herself against a recurrence of 1923. Fascism receives its strength from the social crisis and the weakness of the proletariat (expressed in Germany in the failure of Communism to unify the working class for the conquest of power). The bourgeoisie understands the nature of Fascism. "The bourgeoisie advances its Fascist shoulder only at the moment an immediate revolutionary danger threatens the foundations of the regime itself and when the normal organs of the bourgeoisie state prove themselves insufficient. In this sense active Fascism signifies the condition of civil war on the part of capitalist society facing the rebelling proletariat. Contrariwise, the bourgeoisie is forced to advance its Left, the social democratic, shoulder in a period that precedes the time of the civil war, so as to deceive the proletariat, to pacify and disintegrate it, or in a period following upon a serious and lasting victory over the proletariat". ("The Strategy of the World Revolution", L. D. Trotsky, Pioneer Publishers, New York, page 35.)

Fascist Growth And Threats

But neither the Party nor the Comintern has understood this. Confused themselves, they spread confusion in the ranks of their supporters. The lead is given by Stalin: "The social democracy is an objectively more moderate wing of Fascism". Therefore, between the Nazi and the social democracy there is no difference. Hitler is the more extreme wing, the social democracy, the moderate wing.

Within the last year the small party of Hitler has grown to be the most menacing antagonist of Communism. In the provincial elections held to date (Hamburg, Anhalt, Hesse and Stuttgart), the Fascists have won sweeping victories. They are moving forward to the seizure of governmental reigns through "legal" means—awaiting the general elections to be held in the early part of 1932. But Hitler makes no effort to conceal the fact that should the moment present itself, the Fascist Party will sweep into power through a putsch. The brown shirts in the meantime transcend parliamentary activity. They are carrying on violent reprisals against the proletariat in general, and the Communist Party, the trade unions and the Social Democratic workers in particular. They invade proletarian quarters and attack workers indiscriminately with weapons. Hitler promises that the moment he comes into power he will rid the country of the "pest of Marxism". Every effort then will be utilized to destroy the revolutionary working class and the Communist movement through sheer physical violence. It appears that the experiences of Italian fascism should afford deep lessons for the Comintern and its Parties. But evidently this is not so.

The Capitalist Policy of the Party

The German Communist Party advances numerous theories regarding the Fascist danger—all of them signify capitulation, and the surrender of struggle. The Party first says: There is no Fascist danger. That is all an illusion. The German working class will never stand for the existence of a Fascist dictatorship. But, if this is not enough, the Party continues: It will be a good thing if Fascism comes to power. Such a condition would lead to the unification of the working class and lay the basis for our own seizure of power. In a word, this new theory means that before the working class can seize power it is necessary to go through the school of a Fascist dictatorship which lays the basis for the proletarian dictatorship.

In an effort to win the support of the working class against Hitler, (he recently paid a visit to Tyrol for the purpose of organizing his Fascist legions there and also to obtain aid from Mussolini and Italian Fascism), the Rote Fahne, official organ of the C. P. G. protests because Hitler saw fit to appeal to Italian Fascism which destroyed, "our language", "our culture", and "our traditions" in the Tyrol region. At the "elections front" (united front) meetings held throughout Berlin with the object of organizing "resistance" against Fascism, the Party officially invites Fascist reporters to participate in the discussions. We witness the unique spectacle of a Party speaker against Fascism and a Fascist speaker against Communism, speaking from the same rostrum. Left Opposition workers present at those meetings, who protest against such an arrangement, denounce the Fascist "reporter", and demand the floor themselves, are requested to maintain silence or be ejected from the hall by "Red Front Fighters".

For A United Front Against Fascism

Against a unified German working class the Fascists could never take power. The proletariat can successfully resist and destroy the heterogeneous Hitler movement only on the basis of a united resistance. The Party, instead of concentrating all its efforts in the creation of a genuine united front between the Communist and social democratic workers—rejects principally and practically this essential policy. Through the theories of the "Third Period" and

Trotsky Pamphlet on International Situation

We are about to go to press with a new pamphlet by comrade Trotsky. It is entitled: GERMANY—THE KEY TO THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION—SHALL FASCISM REALLY BE VICTORIOUS? The latest work of the leader of the Left Opposition fulfills the most burning need of the moment for the revolutionary movement of the entire world. It analyses in clear and distinct strokes the problems facing Communism and offers the Bolshevik solution to them, concentrating particularly on the Fascist danger in Germany and the revolutionary situation in that country.

This new pamphlet will be out in two weeks. Every worker and Communist should read it. It is being printed by the Pioneer Publishers, 84 East 10th St. Order your copy now. The price is ten cents for the individual copy and seven cents for bundle orders.

JAPS USE RUSSIAN WHITE GUARDS TO PROVOKE SOVIETS

HARBIN, MANCHURIA, Nov. 1. (Fenprecor)—Japanese attempts to provoke the Soviet Union have been forced out into the open this week by the arrest of a White Guard named Ushakov, who was captured by the Chinese authorities at a small station along the Chinese Eastern Railway. Documents and letters were found on the man proving his connection with the Japanese military mission and proving the reported connivance between the Japanese and White Russians with a view to creating disturbances on the Chinese Eastern Railway and otherwise provoking the Soviet authorities into action.

Ataman, Semenoff, notorious White Russian bandit leader, has been closeted with General Chang Hai-peng, Japanese "rebel" puppet in Heilungkiang and it has been reported that he is planning to remobilize his White Russian guerrilla bands to stage raids

ON THE WORKERS' FRONT

In the Needle Trades

Tasks Before the Plenum of the Needle Trades Industrial Union

The Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union Plenary session of the G. E. B. has been announced for the first week in January. This Plenum will take the place of a convention and will therefore have to consider the work of the whole period since the last convention.

What has the Union to report and register as accomplishments for the last eighteen months? Have the policies adopted at the last convention been verified? To what extent have the resolutions adopted at the convention been instrumental in the building and strengthening of the Industrial Union?

Even a superficial glance will point to negative results. The last convention was held under the banner of the "third period." This was evidenced in the phraseology employed and in the policies adopted. The right wing controlled unions were branded as hopeless company unions and the building of Left wing opposition groups in them pronounced—futile. The policies proved wrong, to the root and disastrous for the Left wing. Not growth and expansion followed the convention, but isolation.

A Genuine United Front Imperative

The plenum is confronted at present with one basic problem from which all the others follow. The sentiment for united front and for one union has become the outstanding issue of the day. The Industrial Union, as well as the reformist unions, cannot any more dull the voice of the workers for unity. The future of the Left wing in the trade unions depends largely upon the correct solution of the problem of unity. The latest mechanical gesture of the leadership in going through the motions of united front action in the Dress Trade, and the distorted manner of applying united front tactics, as exemplified by the Furriers of which the Militant, (Nov. 24, 1931) spoke, confronts the Left wing with many new contradictions. The Left wing must strive for unity in such a way that it will rise in the eyes of the workers and gain strength in the struggle with reformism. What the Left wing has done up till now is the exact opposite.

Unity over the heads of the bureaucratic officials would be very desirable if it were possible—but unfortunately this is not the case.

The slogan of "united front from below" used aimlessly and mechanically by the leadership of the Party and the Union disregards all circumstances and is therefore not realistic and applicable as a weapon against the Right wing.

Lovestone For Liquidation

It is absolutely impermissible to follow the path of the Lovestone united front maneuvers. Here is a group that is always ready to stab the Left wing in the back; always ready to give the benefit of doubt to the Right wing; always ready to plead the case of the Right wing and to throw the blame upon the Left wing and unites for that purpose with any shady and unprincipled cliques. (Zimmerman's article in the Revolutionary Age (12-26-31).

It is wrong likewise to pursue united front tactics as were practiced by the Golds and Wortises under the Lovestone Party regime—with Sorkin and others in the furriers.

But it is perfectly in line with Communist principles for the Left wing to demand unity from the Right wing bureaucrats on the basis of a struggle against the bosses, to call them to conferences for this purpose and at the same time call upon the workers to press the issue of unity; to send committees to the Executive and Joint Board, etc. Nor must we necessarily demand a majority at the conference as a prerequisite for trade union unity negotiations. As long as we are able to bring the message of unity before the workers and to make our demands known, we are in a position to expose the Right wing fakery and to educate the workers in the class struggle. In the struggle for unity, in the endeavor to build one union, we must strive to gain all possible "concessions" from the Right wing to assure a fighting chance for the militant workers. What the Lovestone group proposes is identical with the proposals made by Zaritsky a few years ago to Local 43 of the Milliners—not amalgamation but liquidation of the Left wing as an organized group.

Issues of Struggle Must Be Posed

The present intolerable conditions of the needle trades workers can be improved only through a united struggle of the workers. Because of the division in the ranks, the weakness of the Industrial Union and the utter ignorance of the Party leadership of how to lead the united front movement—the great need of a struggle for better conditions, shorter hours, the week work system, etc., is being lost sight of. The Left wing has as yet not considered nor made mention of these issues.

The great number of Italian, Spanish and Negro workers in the dress trade requires special attention and an organization campaign, well equipped with language speakers and language literature. This is being abandoned because of the organizational weakness of the Left wing. The Right wing is not interested to improve their lot. The result is brutal exploitation by the bosses.

The Plenum must deal adequately with each branch and with the Union as a whole, and lay emphasis where it's due. In some branches like the Millinery, for instance, the original base is practically gone. Here undoubtedly more attention must be concentrated on the building of a real opposition within the Right wing controlled union.

In the dress industry we are nearing the expiration of the agreements. Again we find ourselves in the midst of a great deal of confusion and indecision. The tactics to be pursued are handled behind the scenes—the open platform is decorated with a lot of name calling, denunciations, slander, etc. The dressmakers who come to meetings hear a lot of monotonous and meaningless speeches, but not a word about the real issue involved—namely, how to solidify the broken ranks; how to build one united strike committee and when we will draw up demands. The time is short and too much of it is wasted by the Stalinist leadership of the Industrial Union.

Opposition Points the Way

This pre-strike period is very similar to the same period of last year, before the so-called general strike of the dressmakers under the direction of the N. T. W. I. U.

The Freiheit writes editorially (Dec. 7, 1931): "The strike of the Industrial Union of a year ago did not accomplish much, because in the preparation only general and often meaningless propaganda was made use of and very little healthy practical work." This is said now by the official organ of the Party a year after the strike was lost. It is said in a big-hearted way and in the name of self-criticism. These writers conveniently forget that members of the Industrial Union and adherents of the Left Opposition were called counter-revolutionists and betrayers for saying the same thing at the time of the strike discussions in order to avoid a failure of the strike.

The Left Opposition was and remains the only consistent fighter in the ranks of the Left wing. Our proposals to effect a united front for the dressmakers' strike (Militant, Oct. 24, 1931) should be taken as a basis.

The sooner we get on the job, the stronger we will be to undertake a struggle against the bosses and the Right wing bureaucrats.

The Plenum has a big job before it—Not a policy of one sidedness and the calling of names, not mechanical control over a small group of blind followers, but a free discussion on the matters before us will help the Plenum to solve the tasks before it. Not victimization of Left wingers and Left Oppositionists for disagreements with the official policy, nor the repulsion of tried devoted workers from active participation.

Will the Plenum measure up to the tasks before it?

—SYLVIA BLECKER.

In the Workmen's Circle

The Membership Begins to Awaken

Since the split in the Workmen's Circle in 1930, organized by the Left wing, tranquility has reigned there. The Socialist Party bureaucrats who are entrenched in the Workmen's Circle, and more so since most of the militant elements split away, expected easy sailing. The self-complacent bureaucrats of the S. P. school don't seem to have learned anything, nor, surely, have they forgotten anything. To them the cause of the Left wing is just the agitation of a few trouble-makers and not the product of objective conditions.

But this self-complacency didn't last very long. The working class elements in the Workmen's Circle, who still predominate (contrary to the contentions of the Stalinists) remained for a long time after the split, as if in a stupor. The organization was being pushed further to the right by the stupid tactics of the "third period" (by the way, what became of the "third period"?), by which every worker who remained in the Workmen's Circle, or in other mass organizations, was called a "social-fascist". Such tactics by the Left were only grist to the mill of the corrupt clique of Right wingers.

But the workers in the Workmen's Circle did not remain forever in a stupor. In the present period, when the foundations of the capitalist structure are being ever more undermined, the capitalists are driven to vicious attacks on the standards of living of the workers. Consequently the cleavage between the workers' ranks and the bosses deepens and widens. Impelled by the worsening of his economic conditions, the workers in the Workmen's Circle, especially the revolutionary elements among them, who would not respond to the Stalinist cry to split away from the Workmen's Circle, are awakening.

From occasional rumblings there finally resulted a statement by Branch No. 417, W. C., which was published. In no uncertain terms it declared its adherence to the revolutionary movement. With this definite act, new hopes arose in the hearts of many of these workers, and a readiness to renew the struggle.

The Paterson Strike and the W. C. Scabs

There is no need to tell the readers of the Militant that there was a strike of silk workers in Paterson, though the "wisecracker" Harrison George of the Daily Worker isn't sure of it. Over 7,000 workers participated in it. Despite the misleadership, to which Lovestone and Co. contributed their share, the rank and file led a heroic struggle. The strike was lost, and no small share of this loss is due to over 200 members of the Workmen's Circle who scabbed during the strike, against the National Textile Workers Union (for which act the Lovestonites have excuses) and against the United Textile Workers of America, affiliated with the A. F. of L. The U. T. W. strike received the support of the leadership (S. Pites) of the Workmen's Circle, and over 300 branches of the Workmen's Circle contributed support to the strikers.

After the strike was over, a few of the more aggressive and militant workers of Paterson attempted to call on the strikers for action against those scabs still members of the Workmen's Circle. They discovered that many, if not most, of the workers are disheartened and brow-beaten by these same scabs who are co-members with them of their fraternal organization, the W. C.

Socialist Party Supports Scab Members

These workers realized that under these conditions it will be a difficult task to get rid of the scabs in the Workmen's Circle. They have appealed to the National Executive Committee of the Workmen's Circle to dispense with the ordinary rules of procedure because of the special conditions in Paterson, pointing out that when and if the workers bring charges against these scabs, the latter, small employers, etc. retaliate by black-listing them. They have asked the appointment of a special committee to deal with the scab problem in the W. C. of Paterson. The reply was: "We must obey the laws of the constitution." But in the struggle against the militants and Left wingers they spoke differently. "To hell with the constitution" was the slogan then.

The question will be asked, "What are the reasons that the Socialist Party leadership of the Workmen's Circle supports scabs?" The Socialist Party leadership everywhere is losing its hold on the workers. True to their breed, they follow in the footsteps of their comrades, Noske, Scheidemann, Renard, etc. They have thrown off the little baggage of revolutionary phrases they still retained. Today they find their allies in the middle class elements in the Workmen's Circle, who have increased tremendously in numbers during and after the war. These S. P. bureaucrats cannot divorce themselves from these elements, their chief supporters, who have become a decisive factor in the Workmen's Circle.

A Movement For A Special Conference

The Paterson workers seem now to have realized this. They know that this is not a Paterson affair only. It involves the very existence of the organization, sometimes called the "Red Cross" of the Jewish labor movement. The Paterson workers, members of the Workmen's Circle, have sent out a clarion call to rally the broad membership of the Workmen's Circle around this struggle. So far, the New York District has responded, and the response is a very encouraging one. This call was first published in the Jewish Day and, after a delay of three weeks, in the Freiheit. An organization has already been formed for the purpose of calling a Special Conference of the branches of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

This movement must be supported by every class conscious worker. The issue is clear-cut. "The scabs must be driven out of the Workmen's Circle!" "The leadership that makes it possible for scabs to belong to the Workmen's Circle must go!"

There are great opportunities for the Left wing movement, as well, of course, as serious dangers. In another article I will deal with various points and the role the Party and Communists should play.

Carpenters' Local Supports Marine Defenses

When on Dec. 23 a member of the Marine Workers Defense Committee asked for the floor at our local Union, L. U. 2000, U. B. of C. & J. of A. to speak in behalf of the three framed up Marine Workers in jail, a member of the I. W. W. made a motion that the delegate be granted ten minutes to state their case. Immediately Spitzer, a leading member of the T. U. U. L. made an amendment, that the time be reduced to five minutes. A vote was taken and the result was that the speaker was given the floor for ten minutes.

The speaker was able in a few minutes to explain the frame up case. He appealed to the membership for its moral as well as financial support, when Friedman, chief leader of the T. U. U. L. made a motion that we send two delegates to their conference, to find out who this committee was. Having fully understood this act of sabotage, I made an amendment that since the case of these prisoners was already somewhat neglected and mainly due to lack of financial support, that we grant them twenty-five dollars immediately. My amendment was seconded. Again Friedman took the floor and spoke against my amendment. His argument was that we should send our delegates to this conference and then act in accord with their report. They had the whole thing summed up as follows: Since our meeting, on account of the holidays, was held on a Wednesday instead of Thursday, therefore we only had an attendance of a few hundred. Friedman thought that they would succeed in electing both delegates from their group and thereby the unfavorable report would automatically follow. But due to their efforts to get on the committee, when many of us knew that they never supported any proposition in our local Union except it comes from the I. L. D. or the Party), my amendment to Friedman's motion carried by three votes. Then, along with one of their supporters I was elected delegate.

With such unscrupulous tactics the T. U. U. L. intends to build up a Left wing movement in a trade union. Not even the reactionary Hutcheson machine cares to place itself in such a position. The T. U. U. L. must get wholeheartedly behind the Marine Workers Defense and help to smash the frame-up.

The Struggle For Power In Germany

Itself from the trade unions, and draws itself further away from the millions of social democratic workers. The C. P. "Social-Fascism" the Party has isolated G. has aped the Fascists in an effort to stem their growth. In these efforts it has traveled another step away from a policy of revolutionary struggle and adopted instead a line of nationalism, dragging along with it the demands of Hitler. Within the Party a strong wave of anti-semitism exists.

The huge growth of the C. P. G. (its membership is now over 200,000) only testifies to the revolutionary character of the present situation. But the negative features of the Party policy, which is a negation of struggle and signifies a surrender to Fascism, will have disastrous results for the international working class. A victory of Fascism in Germany would mean the destruction of the German Communist Party. It would mean the dissolution of the labor movement. Once in power, Fascism would strengthen and unify its forces. It would cause a reaction to the Right in other countries. With the destruction of the German Communist Party, the Comintern would find itself weakened tremendously. A Fascist Germany, would in a short period of time receive the support of the imperialist powers and result in a quick attack against the Soviet Union.

The Party has as its task to prepare the basis for the seizure of power. It is an unavoidable task. The struggle in Germany is between Fascism and Communism. A victory for Fascism is a defeat for the international revolutionary movement. The Soviet Union would be in immediate danger of a military attack of the imperialist powers. It

N. Y. FORUM

On Friday, January 8, 1932, comrade Albert Glotzer, member of the National Executive Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition), will speak on his visit to comrade Trotsky. Comrade Glotzer, who has just returned from a trip to Europe, spent five weeks with Trotsky and has much to relate to the American workers. The meeting is part of the program of regular forums held by the Left Opposition in New York. The meeting will be held in the Labor Temple, 14th Street and Second Avenue, and begins at 8 P. M.

MASS MEETING

PHILADELPHIA—On SUNDAY JANUARY 10, 1932, at 8 P. M., a lecture on "The Economic Crisis and the Communists" will be given by Arne Swabeck. The lecture will be held at OSTROPOLSKY HALL, 943 No. FRANKLIN ST. The admission is free and everyone is invited. There will be a period for questions and discussion by the audience. The meeting is being held under the auspices of The Philadelphia Branch, Communist League of America (Opposition).

would be the signal for a reactionary turn to the Right on a world scale.

The international Communist movement, and in particular the German Communist Party must block this development. It can do this if its line is reversed. If it realizes that the foremost task for it is the organization of the working class for the revolutionary struggle. In this situation the Opposition must exert all its energies to force a turn in the Party line, and must actively project itself into the situation.

—ALBERT GLOTZER.

THE ECONOMIC MONTH

The American crisis continues to reach new depths. Steel production for the last week of December was at the rate of 21% of capacity, the lowest operating rate since 1921, against 29% at the beginning of the month. Undoubtedly there will be some increase during January and February in steel production, as there was in the early months of 1931 as well as 1930, due to some accumulation of orders in the automobile and other industries, but any such increase will have little bearing on the immediate perspectives of the crisis.

Railroad car loadings have kept on decreasing week after week; in the week ended Dec. 13 they amounted to 613,000 cars, against a weekly average of 740,000 for the year 1931 to date. These figures are of special significance because of the quickness with which they reflect any tendency to recovery out of the crisis.

Automobile production for November of 60,000 cars was the lowest reported for any month since 1921, and compared with an average of 203,000 cars per month for the first 11 months of 1931, and with 136,000 cars for November 1930.

Unquestionably the present crisis, in proportion to the present development of productive facilities in the United States, will go down in history as the deepest up to the present time, reflecting the accumulation and intensification of capitalist contradictions on the economic field on an unprecedented scale.

Senator Brookhart has introduced a bill to abolish the gold standard, and replace the gold dollar by a new unit equivalent to one-third hundred and sixty billionth of the national wealth of the United States as of July 1, 1931. The present currency is to be exchanged for Treasury notes redeemable in any of the commodities used by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in computing its index numbers of prices, and the total volume of currency in circulation is to be manipulated on the basis of the 1926 level of prices. Senator Shipstead, Farmer-Laborite, wants to issue non-interest bearing Treasury notes having legal tender to inflate the currency.

It has been characteristic of the petty bourgeois liberal-reformist and agrarian movements in this country that they have tried to pick the pockets of the grand bourgeoisie through currency manipulations as a basic tactic rather than fighting them openly in the political arena. Senator Brookhart continues the traditions of the Greenbackers of the '70's, the Free-Silver movement of W. J. Bryan, the 1920-21 agrarian agitation against the so-called "Federal Reserve deflation conspiracy", etc. If these gentlemen need an ideological basis, they will find it in the Proudhonist theories of money culminating in the "exchanging banks" which were so thoroughly exposed by Marx and Engels.

The grand bourgeoisie itself is not above using financial manipulations to create the illusion that there is a way out of the crisis through other means than the class struggle in the field of production. The National Credit Corporation, commented on previously in the Militant in connection with the acute phase of the banking crisis of September-October 1931, is being discredited even among bankers.

In a hearing before the Senate subcommittee on finance and banking, Melvin A. Taylor, president of the half-billion-dollar First National Bank of Chicago, said the N. C. C. would only transfer undesirable loans from bank to bank and in the end leave the stronger banks holding $500,000,000 worth of such paper. The practical outcome of his criticism is an endorsement of Hoover's proposed Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which would make the government put up the money instead of the banks, and incidentally holding the bag. George L. Harrison, governor of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, said the N. C. C. "could not be employed in the general situation and had not done as much as desired in relieving frozen credit among the banks".

All of which does not prevent Mr. Hoover from proposing as Point 10 of his 12-point program in a statement of Dec. 11, "the safeguarding and support of the banks through the National Credit Corporation, which has already given great confidence to bankers and extends their ability to make loans to commerce and industry". The Germans have the word for it—"unverschämt"—something more than shameless.

The Bruening government has shot its last bolt with the group of emergency decrees cutting wages 10%, raising the turnover tax from 85-100 of 1% to 2% which tends to raise prices and the cost of living while it hypocritically "orders" a 10% cut in prices, etc. As the bourgeois financial press remarks, the 10% wage cut is sure, the 10% cut in prices may in practice "result in hardships" which will lead to modification.

While German capitalism thus strengthens itself internally, it is being forced to its knees internationally. In its relations with the capitalists of other countries, Foreign bank credits continue to be withdrawn; the short-term debt, which amounted to 4 1/2 billion marks on July 31, had been reduced by Oct. 31 to 3.7 billions, of which the American share declined during this period from 2.1 to 1.8 billions. The Rasle committee of bankers has had to throw up its hands and pass the buck back to the governments, with the notation that Germany surely cannot pay reparations by July 1, 1932, when the moratorium expires.

The exploitation of the German proletariat which now has to carry on its back capitalists of other countries as well as its own bourgeoisie is raising international contradictions to a still higher level and hastening the relief of the accumulating social tension through an explosion in the form of war, revolution or fascist coup d'état.

One of the expressions of the intensification of the crisis in France is the growing inability of taxes to cover expenses; a point of special importance to France because the whole stabilization since 1927 was predicated on the ability of the government to balance its budget. For the month of October, 1931, the yield of taxes was off 11 million dollars from the same month of the preceding year; for the seven months to October, the decline was 31 millions! an official estimate before the Chamber of Deputies is that the 1933 budget will show a deficit of 240 million dollars. The unstable nature of the "equilibrium" of French economy, pointed out in a recent article in the Militant, will lead to an immense piling-up of contradictions and sharpening of the class struggle when French capitalism attempts to put through its solution of the crisis in Government finance—reduced expenses through cutting the pay of Government employees, and attempts to cut wages in industry at a time when living costs are adjusting themselves to the international level.

The sharpening of the industrial crisis and its development to a higher level, that of the financial crisis, has been exemplified by the declaration by Hungary of a moratorium on at least two-thirds of its foreign debt of $715,000,000. So far it claims to be able to deposit the required amounts in Hungarian currency, but to be unable to sell this currency for gold without breaking down its foreign exchange values. The logical next step would be the declaration that it is unable to accumulate the 60-odd millions per year required, even in Hungarian currency.

Japan too has had to withdraw formally from the gold standard, after having lost gold consistently ever since the attempted stabilization. Yesterday the yen broke to about 37 cents, losing 6% of its value in one day, and the Tokyo Stock Exchange has had to be closed after a one-day gesture to restore confidence by reopening. Imperialist wars in the declining phase of world capitalism create fresh crises and contradictions as fast as they solve old ones, but the new crises are on a higher plane—this is what Japan is illustrating on a small scale now, as the European war has done since 1918, and as the next world-wide war will triumphantly prove.

Prospects for Jewish Paper Bright

The preliminary work for the early publication of the Jewish organ of the Communist League of America (Opposition), Unser Kampf is well under way. We are now ready to announce the editorial board of the paper. It will consist of comrades: M. Lewit, Albert Orland, and P. Rubinstein. Sylvia Blecker has been chosen Business Manager. As yet we cannot with certainty announce the exact day of its appearance. We are aiming to have Unser Kampf out on the fifteenth of January.

Will we succeed in that? The answer to this question lies with our comrades and sympathizers throughout the country. We have not yet received all the payments on the pledges.

Rush your contributions immediately, so that there may be no delay in the appearance of Unser Kampf.

From the manuscripts we have at hand, we can say that the first number of Unser Kampf promises to be very rich in content. No worker will want to miss the first issue—and we are sure—the issues following. The only way to assure yourself of a copy of Unser Kampf is to subscribe. For one dollar (Canada $1.25) the paper will be mailed to you for one year (26 issues).

Stalin and the Chinese Revolution

-- Facts and Documents --

6. How Did The Shanghai Uprising Occur?

In this connection we have the extraordinarily valuable testimony of a witness and participant, the Stalinite Chitrov, who arrived from China on the eve of the 15th Congress and who appeared with his information at the Congress. The most important points of his narrative have been deleted by Stalin from the Minutes with the consent of Chitrov himself; one cannot make the truth public if it so crushingly proves all the accusations of the Opposition directed against Stalin. Let us give the floor to Chitrov (Sixteenth Session of the XV Congress of the C. P. S. U., December 11, 1927):

"The first bloody wave has been inflicted upon the Chinese Revolution in Shanghai by the execution of the Shanghai workers, April 11-12.

"I would like to speak in greater detail about this Shanghai overturn insofar as I know that in our Party there is little known about it. In Shanghai there existed for a period of 21 days the so-called, People's Government, in which the Communists had a majority. We can therefore say that for 21 days Shanghai had a Communist government. This Communist government, however, manifested complete inactivity in spite of the fact that the overturn by Chiang Kai-Shek was expected from day to day.

"The Communist government, in the first place, did not begin to work for a long time under the excuse that, on the one hand, the bourgeois part of the government does not want to get to work, sabotaging it—and, on the other hand,—because the Wuhan government did not approve the composition of the Shanghai government. From the activity of this government three decrees are known, and one of them, by the way, speaks of the preparation of a triumphal reception for Chiang Kai-Shek who was expected to arrive in Shanghai.

In Shanghai at this time the relations between the army and the workers grew sharp. It is known, for instance, that the army (that is, the Chiang Kai-Shek officers—L. T.) consciously drove the workers into slaughter. The army for a period of several days stood at the gates of Shanghai, did not want to enter the city because they knew that the workers were battling against the Shan Duts, and wanted the workers to be bled in this struggle. They expected to enter later. Afterward the army did enter Shanghai. But among these soldiers there was one division that sympathized with the workers—the first division of the Canton army; the commander, Say-O, was in disfavor with Chiang Kai-Shek, who knew about his sympathies to the mass movement, because this Say-O himself came from the ranks. He was at first the commander of a company and presently he commanded a division.

"Say-O came to the comrades in Shanghai and told them that there was a military overthrow in preparation, that Chiang Kai-Shek summoned him to headquarters, gave him an extraordinarily cold reception and that he, Say-O, will not go there any longer because he is afraid of a trap. Chiang Kai-Shek proposed to Say-O to get out of the city with his division and to go to the front; and he, Say-O, proposed to the Central Committee of the Communist Party to agree with him not to subordinate himself to the order of Chiang Kai-Shek. He was ready to remain in Shanghai and together with the Shanghai workers to fight against the military overthrow that was in preparation. To these our responsible leaders of the Chinese Communist Party, Chen Du Hsiui included, declared that they knew about the overturn that is in preparation, but that they do not want a premature conflict with Chiang Kai-Shek and that they proposed to Say-O that either he goes to the front or that he retires, in order to prove his loyalty to Chiang Kai-Shek. The First Division was let out of Shanghai, the city was occupied by the Second Division of Bai-Sung Gee and, two days later, the Shanghai workers were shot down."

Why was this truly stirring narrative left out of the Minutes (P. 32)? Because it was not at all a question of the Chinese Communist Party but of the Polit Bureau of the Soviet Union.

On May 24, 1927, Stalin spoke at the Plenum of the E. C. C. I.: "The Opposition is dissatisfied because the Shanghai workers did not enter into a decisive battle against the imperialists and their minions. But it does not understand that the revolution in China cannot develop at a fast tempo. It does not understand that one cannot take up a decisive struggle under unfavorable conditions. The Opposition does not understand that not to avoid a decisive struggle under unfavorable conditions (when it can be avoided)—means to make easier the work of the enemies of the revolution..."

"This section of Stalin's speech is titled: 'The Mistakes of the Opposition'. In the Shanghai tragedy Stalin found mistakes... of the Opposition. In reality the Opposition at that time did not yet know the concrete circumstances of the situation in Shanghai, that is, it did not know how much more favorable the situation remained for the workers in March and the beginning of April in spite of all the mistakes and crimes of the leadership of the Comintern. Even from the consciously concealed story of Chitrov it is clear that the situation could have been saved even at this time. The workers in Shanghai are in power. They are partly armed. There is a complete possibility of arming them incomparably better. Chiang Kai-Shek's army is unreliable. There are parts where even the commanding staff is on the side of the workers. But everything and everyone is paralyzed at the top. We must not prepare for the decisive struggle with Chiang Kai-Shek, but for a triumphal reception to him. Because Stalin gave his categorical directives from Moscow: not only to resist his ally, Chiang Kai-Shek, but on the contrary, to prove loyalty to him. How? Lie down on the back and raise all four paws.

In the May Plenum of the E. C. C. I. Stalin on technical tactical grounds still defended this terrible abandonment of positions without a struggle, which led to the crushing of the proletariat in the revolution. Half a year later, at the XV Congress of the C. P. S. U., Stalin already kept silent. The delegates at the Congress extended Chitrov's time to give him a chance to end his narrative which gripped even them. But Stalin found a very simple way out of it, by deleting Chitrov's narrative from the Minutes. We publish here this truly historic document for the first time.

Let us note additionally one interesting circumstance: While smearing up the course of events as much as possible and concealing the truly guilty ones, Chitrov singles out the responsibility of Chen Du Hsiui whom, on the contrary, the Stalinists until then had defended in every way against the Opposition, because he had merely carried out their directives. But at this time it was already becoming clear that comrade Chen Du Hsiui would not agree to play the role of a silent scapegoat, that he wanted openly to analyze the reasons for this catastrophe. All the hounds of the Comintern were let loose upon him, not for the mistakes fatal to the revolution but because he did not agree to deceive the workers and to be a cover for Stalin.

7. The Organizers of the "Influx of Workers and Peasants Blood"

The leading organ of the Comintern wrote on March 18, 1927, about three weeks prior to the Shanghai overturn: "The leadership of the Kuo Min Tang is at present ill with a lack of revolutionary workers and peasants blood. The Chinese Communist Party must aid in the influx of this blood, and then the situation will radically change."

What an ominous play of the words! The Kuo Min Tang is in "need of workers and peasants blood". The "aid" was rendered in the fullest measure: in April-May, Chiang Kai-Shek and Wang Chin-Wei received a sufficient "influx" of workers and peasants blood.

In regard to the Chiang Kai-Shek chapter of the Stalinist policy the eight Plenum (May, 1927) declared: "The E. C. C. I. assumes that the tactical of the block with the national bourgeoisie in the already declining period of the revolution was absolutely correct. As historic justification of this tactic even (!) this one northern expedition serves..."

8. Stalin Repeats His Experiment With the "Left" Kuo Min Tang

Further on, the following remarkable point is left out of Chitrov's speech: "After the Shanghai coup, it has become clear to everyone that a new epoch is beginning in the Chinese Revolution: that the bourgeoisie is retreating from the revolution. This was recognized and immediately so stated. But one thing was left out of sight in connection with this,—that if the bourgeoisie retreats from the revolution, the Wuhan government did not even think of leaving the bourgeoisie. Unfortunately among the majority of our comrades this was not understood: they had illusions in respect to the Wuhan government. They considered the Wuhan government all an image, a prototype of the democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry". (The omission is on page 33).

"After the Wuhan overturn it became clear that the bourgeoisie is retreating..." This would be ridiculous if it had not sounded tragic. When Chiang Kai-Shek stayed the revolution in the face of the workers disarmed by Stalin, then the penetrating strategists finally "understood" that the bourgeoisie is "retreating". But having recognized that his friend Chiang Kai-Shek is retreating, Stalin ordered the Chinese Communists to subordinate themselves to that same Wuhan government which, according to Chitrov's information at the 15th Congress, "did not even think of leaving the bourgeoisie". Unfortunately "our comrades did not understand this". What comrades? Borodin, who was hanging on to Stalin's telegraph wires? Chitrov does not mention any names. The Chinese Revolution is dear to him, but his hide—still dearer.

However, let us listen to Stalin: "Chiang Kai-Shek's coup d'Etat means that in south China there will from now on be two camps, two governments, two armies, two centers: The center of the revolution in Wuhan and the center of the counter-revolution in Nanking."

Is it clear where the center of the revolution is? In Wuhan!

"This means that the revolutionary Kuo Min Tang in Wuhan, leading a decisive struggle against militarism and imperialism, will in reality be transformed into an organ of the revolutionary-democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry"...

Now we finally know what the democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry looks like!

"From this it further follows," Stalin continues, "that the policy of close collaboration of the Lefts and the Communists inside the Kuo Min Tang acquires a particular force and a particular significance at the present stage... that without such a collaboration the victory of the revolution is impossible". ("Problems of the Chinese Revolution", pages 125-27).

Without the collaboration of the counter-revolutionary bandits of the "Left" Kuo Min Tang, "the victory of the revolution is impossible!" This is how Stalin step after step—in Canton, in Shanghai, in Hankow—assured the victory of the revolution.

9. Against the Opposition—For the Kuo Min Tang!

How did the Comintern view the "Left" Kuo Min Tang? The VIII Plenum of the E. C. C. I. gave a clear answer to this question in its struggle against the Opposition.

"The E. C. C. I. rejects with all its determination the demand to leave the Kuo Min Tang... The Kuo Min Tang in China is precisely that specific form of organization, where the proletariat collaborates directly with the petty bourgeoisie and peasantry."

In this manner the E. C. C. I. quite correctly saw in the Kuo Min Tang, the realization of the Stalinist idea of the "two-class workers and peasants party".

The not-known Rades, who was at first a minister under Petlura* and afterward carried out Stalin's directives in China, wrote in May, 1927 in the theoretical organ of the C. C. of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union:

"Our Russian Opposition, as is known, also considers it necessary for the Communists to leave the Kuo Min Tang. A consistent defense of this viewpoint would lead the adherents of the policy to leave the Kuo Min Tang, to the famous formula proclaimed by comrade Trotsky in 1917: 'Without a Czar, but a labor government'... which for China might have been changed in form: 'without the militarists, but a labor government'. To such consistent defenders for leaving the Kuo Min Tang, we have no occasion to listen". (Proletarian Revolution, page 54).

The slogan of Stalin-Rades was: "Without the workers, but with Chiang Kai-Shek." "Without the peasants, but with Wang Chin-Wei!" "Against the Opposition, but for the Kuo Min Tang!"

10. Stalin Once Again Disarms the Chinese Workers and Peasants

What was the policy of the leadership during the Wuhan period of the revolution? Let us listen to the Stalinist Chitrov on this question. Here is what we read in the minutes of the 15th Congress:

"What was the policy of the C. C. of the Communist Party at this time, during this whole (Wuhan) period? The policy of the C. C. of the Communist Party was carried on under the slogan of retreat..."

"Under the slogan of retreat"—in the revolutionary period, at the moment of the highest tension of the revolutionary struggle, the Communist Party works and under this slogan surrenders one position after another without a battle. To this surrender of positions belongs: the agreement to subordinate all the trade unions, all the peasant unions and other revolutionary organizations of the Kuo Min Tang; the refusal of independent action without the permission of the central committee of the Kuo Min Tang; the decision for the voluntary disarming of the workers' pickets in Hankow; the dissolution of the pioneer organizations in

*A Ukrainian White Guard general.

Wuhan; the actual crushing of all the peasant unions in the territory of the national government, etc."

Here is pictured quite frankly the policy of the Chinese Communist Party, the leadership of which actually helps the "national" bourgeoisie to crush the people's uprising and to annihilate the best fighters of the proletariat and peasantry.

But the frankness here is treacherous; the above citation is printed in the minutes after the omission cited above by the line of periods. Here is what the section concealed by Stalin says:

"At that time some responsible comrades, Chinese and non-Chinese, invented the so-called theory of retreat. They declared: The reaction is advancing upon us from all sides. We must therefore immediately retreat in order to save the possibility of legal work, and, if we will retreat, then we will save this possibility, but if we will defend ourselves or attempt to advance, then we will lose everything."

Precisely in those days (end of May 1927) when the Wuhan counter-revolution began to crush the workers and peasants in the face of the Left Kuo Min Tang, Stalin declared at the Plenum of the E. C. C. I. (May 24, 1927):

"The agrarian revolution is the basis and content of the bourgeois democratic revolution in China. The Kuo Min Tang in Wuhan and the Wuhan government are the center of the bourgeois democratic revolutionary movement" (page 154).

To a written question of a worker, why there are no Soviets created in Wuhan, Stalin replied:

"It is clear that whoever calls, at present, for the immediate creation of Soviets of workers' deputies in this (Wuhan) district, attempts to jump (!) over the Kuo Min Tang phase of the Chinese revolution, and he risks putting the Chinese revolution in a most difficult position."

Precisely: In a "most difficult" position! On May 13, 1927, in a conversation with students, Stalin declared:

"Should Soviets of workers and peasants deputies, in general, be created in China? Yes, they should, absolutely they should. They will have to be created after the strengthening of the Wuhan revolutionary government, after the unfolding of the agrarian revolution, in the transformation of the agrarian revolution into the revolution of the proletariat."

In this manner Stalin did not consider it permissible to strengthen the position of the workers and peasants, through Soviets, so long as the positions of the Wuhan government, of the counter-revolutionary bourgeoisie, were not strengthened.

In reference to the famous theses of Stalin which justified his Wuhan policy, the organ of the Russian Mensheviks wrote at that time:

"Hardly much can be objected to in the essence of the 'line' laid down in the theses. As long as possible not to leave the Kuo Min Tang and to cling to the last to its Left wing and the Wuhan government: to avoid the decisive struggle under unfavorable conditions; not to advance the slogan, 'All Power to the Soviets', in order not to give the enemies of the Chinese people a new weapon in their hands in the struggle against the revolution, for the creation of legends about the fact that in China there is not a national revolution in progress, but an artificial transplanting of Moscow Sovietism!—what in reality can be more sensible?..." (Socialistische Vestnik, 9-151, 9-v—page 1).

On its part the VIII Plenum of the E. C. C. I. which was in session at the end of May, 1927, that is, at a time when the crushing of the workers and peasants organizations in Wuhan had already begun, adopted the following decision:

"The E. C. C. I. insistently calls the attention of the Chinese Communist Party to the necessity of all possible measures for the strengthening and developing of all mass organizations of workers and peasants... within all these organizations it is necessary to carry on an agitation for the entrance into the Kuo Min Tang, transforming the latter into a mighty mass organization of the revolutionary petty bourgeoisie democracy and the working class."

"To enter the Kuo Min Tang" meant to voluntarily bring one's head to slaughter. The bloody lesson of Shanghai passed without a trace. The Communist as before were being transformed into cattle herders for the party of the bourgeoisie executioners (Kuo Min Tang), into suppliers of workers and peasants blood for Wang Tin Wei and Company.

IMPRISONED FOR CHALKING COMMUNIST SLOGANS

SHANGHAI, Nov. 20 (Fenprecor) Two and one half years in prison for chalking Communist slogans on a wall! Such was the sentence meted out to young Lee Kwong-pun in the First District Court here. The student claimed he was only reading the slogans when arrested, but police evidence to the contrary was accepted by the court which proceeded to inflict the outrageous penalty.

have, under capitalist conditions, only a transitory significance. Of the imperialist rivalries and contradictions in the Near and Far East, we need not comment. They are only too evident. There is need only to cite the present war in Manchuria. The League of Nations has proved powerless there. The Disarmament Conference can once again in February "outlaw" war by passing another resolution—but the Japanese guns will boom and possibly others as well.

The Fundamental Struggle: For Capitalism or Communism

And lastly, there is the outstanding contradiction, the historical contradiction between the imperialist powers of the world and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. For this the "Disarmament Conference" has no solution except war. And it is this war against the Workers' Republic, based upon the fundamental contradiction of capitalism and Communism, that the capitalist powers are preparing. There is no answer to the existence side by side of a capitalist world and a country aiming for the abolition of all forms of capitalist exploitation and ideology, except a struggle between them for supremacy. That can only be by the destruction of one and the victory of the other on a world scale. This economic, social and political contradiction in the world today—a capitalist world and a Soviet Russia—can find no solution, nor even a beginning of one, in a League of Nations, the Kellogg Pact or Disarmament Conferences. The answer can only be: the domination of international capitalism or international Communism.

The Soviet Union, under the aegis of Stalin, Litvinoff, et al, has most unfortunately assisted in the sowing of illusions of pacifist nonsense, of fraudulent peace talk, by being a signatory to the Kellogg Pact, a capitalist instrument aimed, in the last analysis, at clipping the wings of the Soviet Republic, disarming and destroying it. The propagation by the Soviet Union of the theory of peaceful co-habitation side by side, indefinitely, of the Soviet Republic and the capitalist world only plays into the hands of the bourgeoisie and the muddled pacifists and confuses the working class which must see the problem of war and peace as a class problem.

Pacifism—A Middle Class Movement

Pacifism, which finds its greatest expression and hope in "disarmament conference", League of Nations, etc., has been swelling its forces numerically. In all countries pacifist movements have grown. Yet the pacifist movement is impotent to solve the problem of militarism and war. Pacifism represents the outlook of the middle class, the petty-bourgeoisie; it represents the flower of its idealism. We find here a diffused economic class, declassed elements too, caught between the main classes of society, the capitalist class and the industrial proletariat, crushed from all directions, also, victims of capitalism, militarism and war.

Pacifism is the only way in which this group finds it possible, with its limited consciousness of today, to express its resentment and opposition to capitalist warfare. Students, overwhelmingly from the middle class, make up the "militant" section of the pacifist movement. But, when all is said and done, when the war drums begin to throb, they will answer the call of "Tommy Atkins" and the "doughboy". Until these elements, the petit-bourgeois, grasp the class outlook, the proletarian concept of the causes of war, their movement is doomed to sterility.

"Conscientious objection, anti-war strike, and so on," says Lenin, "are just stupidities, pitiful and poor-spirited dreams of unarmed struggle against the armed bourgeoisie, of the ending of capitalism without a desperate civil war or a series of wars... Away with the personal, sentimental, absurd dreaming about 'peace at any price'!"

That is why, too, all the post-war literature of pacifism, the horrors of war, have no lasting impression or genuine value for a solution to the war problem.

Militarism and War: A Class Problem

War and militarism must be approached by the working class from a class standpoint. They are class problems. War is a manifestation of capitalist society: it occurs when there is no other way out of the impasse of capitalist rivalries or rivalry today between contending social systems: capitalist society and the Soviet Republic. War remains as long as capitalism remains. Armaments, navies, armies, airships—all are unavoidable while these class divisions and rivalries exist. Capitalist Disarmament Conferences can do nothing about this—except to play the game of the capitalists. It is a matter of class struggle. Capitalist militarism has found in the imperialist epoch its class rival—the Red Army of the Soviet Union, the protector of the class interests of the proletariat in the Soviet Union and the entire world.

The future lies, not with pacifism, but in a recognition by the working class of the world that it must prepare the organization of all its forces for the impending final struggles between the workers and the capitalists. Not pacifism—but class war. Not "national security and defense"; not social-patriotism and nationalism—but international solidarity and organization of the proletariat.

The Geneva Conference will settle nothing; it has not the power to settle anything. Geneva will only serve further to expose the futility of pacifism, the impotence of the League of Nations, the incapacity of the imperialist powers, their unwillingness to give up any part of their spoils. The only thing peaceful at Geneva will be its peaceful waters. Otherwise, it will only reveal the imperialist contradictions once again and be a warning to the proletariat to be on guard.

Mother Mooney Denounces Gov. Rolph

Writings from St. Joseph's Hospital, Tom Mooney's Mother, Mary Mooney, sent a letter to Gov. Rolph requesting pardon for her son. Excerpts from it follow:

St. Joseph's Hospital, San Francisco, Calif. December 13, 1931

Governor James Rolph, Jr. State Capitol, Sacramento, California.

Dear Governor: Sure and I'm sick and in the hospital or I'd come to see you myself to talk to you about my son, Tom Mooney, so I'm writing you this letter. In all the long years since my boy was in prison, I've never bothered any Governors, as I thought I'd look like I wanted pity and I didn't and don't want any now. And I want my boy to get a square deal like any other man and it's up to you to give it to him.

Governor Rolph, I came to this country from old Ireland before you was born. I've lived here over sixty years. I raised my children to be honest. Our whole family was hard-workin' people. Tom was the oldest child; he worked his head off to help the rest of us. His father died when Tom was a small boy. He never in his life did anything that wasn't honest.

Sure, I was because he was honest and a brave boy and stood up like a man to fight for his own people, the workin' people, that they framed on him and putty near hanged him. Faith, and I'm proud of my son because he wouldn't sell himself to nobody for money or an easy job. That's the way I brought him up.

My son was framed on by the corporation because he fought for the workin' people. They wanted him out of the way. Take the main witness in the case: Oxman. Sure, and I told the scoundrel when he was walkin' out of the court after he swore my boy's life away for a few dollars "You're lyin' on my boy and tryin' to put the rope around his neck..." He never answered me, but hung his head for shame.

You're the fourth governor since my boy went to jail and his putty black hair turned gray. He became an old man in jail. Sure and it's the sixteenth Christmas he'll be spendin' in jail.

Now it looks like you're usin' my boy for a football like all the other governor did. You kick him to Mr. Sullivan and I guess he'll kick him back to you. You say it'll take three or four months to look over the facts. Faith, and it makes me old Irish heart sick to hear that old blarney. Sure, any schoolboy could know all the facts in three or four hours. And you were mayor when it happened and marched in the parade and sure should know all the facts.

Three or four months might not be long for you, Governor, or for Mr. Sullivan, but it's a long time for me what's been waitin' for over fifteen years and for my boy what's had almost sixteen years stolen from his life.

Motherly yours, (Signed) Mrs. Mary Mooney

Entertainment

EDITORIAL NOTES

EVIDENCE MADE TO ORDER

The trial of the gangsters, Coll and Giordano, on murder charges, which resulted in the acquittal of the defendants, throws a glaring searchlight on "justice" as it is administered in New York. The men were "positively identified" as the men who fired the shots in the baby killing last summer by a witness who had been on the police payroll for months and kept secluded in a hotel under guard. Brecht, the police witness, did not merely think they might be the killers. He knew it. He was an "eye witness" to the shooting, and he swore that Coll and Giordano were the men he saw spraying bullets from the auto. And then, all of a sudden, the prosecution's case went to pieces. Brecht was exposed by the defense counsel as a professional "identifier" and perjurer, a thief, ex-convict and all-around scoundrel—a sort of a Boyle. It was even disclosed that he had "identified" the defendants some years ago in a similar case in St. Louis and that on that occasion, also, his testimony had been discredited. Following this bomb-shell the case collapsed and the court ordered an acquittal.

Victims of the frame-up system of American justice are not always so fortunate. The police in this case made the mistake of picking on real gangsters with money and influence. They were able to employ competent legal counsel. They had the means to finance investigations. They owe their acquittal to these circumstances. If they had been small fry, if they had been friendless men, without money or connections, they would be on the way to the electric chair already without a doubt.

The police frame up their victims all the time as a matter of routine, as a habit. We have seen the revelations of the Seabury investigation regarding women framed as prostitutes. During the Greco-Carillo case a few years ago a veteran newspaper man covering the trial remarked: "Half of the fellows who go out of this court room to prison are convicted on fake evidence. Everybody knows that. If these two men don't go up, it will be because they have good lawyers and influential friends." This is the record and the reputation of the New York police and prosecution system among all informed people. If the use of perjured evidence and third degree intimidation are used systematically in ordinary criminal cases day by day, what man in his right senses would trust them to deal justly and fairly with defendants in a labor case?

The stage was all set for a speedy railroad by the time-honored methods in the case of the indicated marine workers, Soderberg, Bunker, and Trajer. The formation of a defense committee and the employment of qualified attorneys have introduced a few "complications" into the game. It is already obvious that there is going to be a fight and not a one-sided victimization of helpless prisoners who have no means of defending themselves. They will have to be more careful with their cooked-up perjury out of fear of another annihilating exposure. The whole question of whether they will have the nerve to go through with their brazen frame-up will depend on the public interest in the case, and particularly the interest of the labor movement.

This interest is growing and is being organized. But not fast enough. If we work harder, if we extend our fight on a broader front, if a real movement of the working class comes to the support of the prisoners, they will be liberated. And that will not be a victory for them alone. It will be a form of protection to the labor movement as a whole against attempts to disrupt it by frame-ups and dynamite plants. To that end we must work with all our strength in the time that is left before the trial.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE PROBLEMS

The appearance of a Greek organ of the Left Opposition in America, and the projected early publication of a Jewish paper, will no doubt extend the propaganda effectiveness of our movement to a considerable extent. At the same time these developments pose before the Communist League for the first time in its experience as a distinct organization, one of the most difficult and complicated problems—the problem of coordinating and centralizing a movement which is compelled, by the force of circumstances in the country, to speak in many tongues.

Foreign language speaking workers constitute an important—even if not the most decisive—section of the American proletariat. To carry the message of Communism to them and to unite them with the native workers in a single movement is a task that American Communism has stumbled over more than once in the past. We ought to learn from the costly mistakes of the past Party experience in order to avoid them in our own work as a faction.

The problem is political, first of all. Organizational difficulties, which have in the past assumed tremendous importance, flow from the political essence of the question. As Marxists we can do no other than aim at a centralized movement which carries an identical message in every language, and always acts as an organizational unit. Special language organizations cannot have an independent existence under our banner. The Left Opposition has no use for autonomous language groups.

The strength of the Left Opposition, in all of its manifestations, is the strength of its ideas, its granite foundation of principle. Every special language grouping or propaganda expression must be built from the very start on this conception. It follows from this that all of our language papers, as well as all other propaganda mediums, are organs of a single National Committee. The references all our language organs make to specific problems of the immigrant workers have to be subordinated entirely and directly related to our fundamental principle line.

The right wing of American Communism is also having an experience in this field. In the contrast between that experience and ours can be seen the contrast between a movement that lives from day to day, as best it can, and a movement that goes by principle. The Revolutionary Age complains about its Lithuanian twin Naujoji Gadyne which has recently made its first appearance.

"There is a distinct tendency to treat the struggle of the Lithuanian Opposition as if it were an isolated 'Lithuanian' fight. The fundamental political struggle . . . is almost completely neglected. . . . It does not as much as mention the Communist Party (Majority Group)."

Well, what do you expect? Of course they leave aside the big questions and devote themselves to the comparatively petty "national" issues to catch the support of people with transitory grievances. "The opportunists always do that. The Naujoji Gadyne is only repeating the method it learned from the Revolutionary Age."

Such exhibitions cannot happen in the Left Opposition. The Revolutionary Age also criticized the manifesto of the Communist League in the Greek language—but from an opposite standpoint. The manifesto, it said, talked too much about the Anglo-Russian Committee and the Chinese Revolution, and not enough about the so-called "Greek" questions. We need not worry about such criticism. Let us go to the workers in all languages with a uniform propaganda on the fundamental questions of world import. In that way we will build a movement among the foreign language speaking workers that is ideologically united with the Communist League and an integral part of its organization. If we go ahead with this aim we will be armed in advance against most of the difficulties and contradictions which hampered the Party in the past in the foreign language field.

WHERE DID THEY LEARN?

Honor to carpenters' union Local 2090 of New York. This is the first union to respond to the appeal of the Marine Workers Defense Committee and to vote a donation for the expenses of its work. This action took place at its meeting last Wednesday when a representative of the Defense Committee spoke before it on the case.

This act of solidarity was not performed without an internal struggle. Of course nobody flatly opposed the idea of helping union men to defend themselves in the capitalist court. Nobody ever does. The opposition to the contribution expressed itself in the form of proposals to delay, to "investigate", to find out more about the facts, and similar fraudulent devices and subterfuges. And whom do you think were the exponents of these worthless and dishonorable maneuvers to cheat the imprisoned workers of the aid that is their due? As the news report in another column in this issue tells, it was the members of the Trade Union Unity League, the revolutionary trade unionists if you please who spoke for this counterfeit caution. The reactionary elements in the union voted with them. An incongruous lineup, indeed.

Militants in the labor movement who have served their time on various occasions in the fight to gain trade union support for persecuted workers have grown familiar long ago with the technique of obstruction to this work. Never, or in any case hardly ever, do you encounter a straight out fight against the prisoners in question. The impulses of the workers are always on the side of their persecuted brothers; their tendency is to respond generously and unquestionably to their appeal. The reactionaries know that. That's why they resort to flank movements, tricks, traps, maneuvers to put off and wear out the question. The favorite maneuver of all, when they are taken unawares, is to postpone action and "investigate". They are never opposed to helping the men in prison. God forbid! They only want to know more about the case. If it comes to trial and results in a conviction, before they get the necessary information—all the better.

This, as has been said, is the well known strategy of the reactionary bureaucrats. But here we have "the vanguard of the proletariat" resorting to this hypocritical shrewdness. Is it not time for the trade union militants who draw their inspiration from the Communist Party to stop discrediting themselves in this manner? You cannot violate all the ethics of labor solidarity and then expect to be taken seriously as a revolutionist. You cannot fight reaction with methods and practices borrowed from the reactionaries.

THE NATIONAL TOUR

The balance of the schedule for the National Tour of comrade Arne Swabeck is as follows:

Balance of schedule follows:
Cleveland, Ohio January 5th
Youngstown, Ohio January 6th
Pittsburgh, Pa. January 7th
Philadelphia, Pa. January 9, 10.

A Sojourn With Comrade Leon Trotsky

— Five Weeks in Kadikoy —

Kadikoy is an Anglo-American resident suburb of Constantinople, twenty minutes by boat from the Pera quarter of the city and located on the Asiatic side of Turkey, where the Bosphorus flows into the Marmora Sea. At the outskirts of this suburb, in the section called Moda, located on the bluffs overlooking the eastern shores of the Marmora, dotted here and there with many islands, is the home of comrade Leon Trotsky.

Comrade Trotsky has been living here for almost a year—since the lamentable fire destroyed his home of exile on the island of Prinkipo. The present house is a simple two-story, wooden-frame dwelling, that boasts of no historic pre-occupants. It is surrounded by a high picket fence, reinforced with barbed wire. In the garden running about the house is the abode where the two policemen, the cook and the fisherman live. It is here together with his wife, Natalia Ivanovna, his daughter's son, his secretary comrade Frankel, and a stenographer, that Trotsky lives and works.

We arrived at the house early in the morning and after making our identity known gained admittance into the house. In a few moments we found ourselves in the workroom face to face with the leader of the International Left Opposition. Comrade Trotsky pushed aside his manuscripts and greeted us warmly. Little time was wasted with formalities. We were too eager to question each other. We talked for over two hours, drifting from subject to subject and then proceeded to outline our discussions to cover the length of our stay.

A subject of intense interest to every revolutionist, one that came first to our lips and which our American readers undoubtedly are anxious to learn about is the state of comrade Trotsky's health. In the past a variety of reports circulated regarding the numerous ailments with which he was afflicted. When we inquired as to his health comrade Trotsky replied: "My two chief ailments are malaria and an ulcerated stomach. I suffer of these from time to time. The condition of my stomach forces me to adhere to a rigid diet and occasionally I have been laid low through this illness. Regarding my malaria I can add very little to what I have already told the comrades previously. There is very little that can be done for it in Turkey. The climate is extremely bad for malaria. Particularly in hot weather do I succumb to spells accompanied by terrific fevers which forbid me from continuing my work. If it were possible to live in a climate where the heat were not so intense it would help considerably but, as things look now, I must consider Turkey my home for some time to come. My heart functions well and otherwise I feel well. If only for these two ailments I would consider myself a healthy man."

We observed particularly, during our stay, the enormous energy of comrade Trotsky. While we were there he was completing the last chapters of the second volume of the "History of the Russian Revolution". (The first volume will be out in February, published by Simon and Shuster Company). Comrade Trotsky lives very methodically. He goes to bed early and rises early. He begins to work in the morning and continues until he is ready to go to sleep. All his energy is directed toward the completion of his present work. In addition to the book, Trotsky maintains a correspondence with the leading sections of the International Left Opposition. He reads the most important international periodicals of the Comintern, the organs of the various parties and the capitalist press of the leading countries. The only break in this program of immense work of the leader of the Opposition, comrade Trotsky finds in fishing occasionally and, on rare moments, to hunt. "This is the only form of relaxation from the terrific pace with which he works."

America absorbs a great deal of comrade Trotsky's interest. To him the United States symbolizes capitalism at the height of its development. "This period sees America assuming the leadership of the capitalist world," he told us. He continued: "While it is not excluded that America can rise out of the present crisis and attain its former strength, she will have to do this at the expense of the rest of the world. The United States will turn its attention to the quest for a redification of the world markets. And in this development she will exhibit her ruthlessness. One of the weaknesses in the present situation is the subjective factor. It is not enough to say that statistics point to the impossibility for America to rise out of the present difficulties. We must not forget that from the subjective point of view there does not exist a revolutionary working-class to harass America at home. She apparently feels free to proceed without much protest with wage-cuts on a national scale and repressions against the American working class."

"But in spite of this we have reason to be hopeful for the American working-class. The effects of the crisis have a tremendous influence in shattering their bourgeois and petty bourgeois longings, which came as a result of the stupendous rise of American capitalism during the almost uninterrupted growth of industry there. But America has passed that 'golden era'. I think that it is correct to say that from now on her development will be a far more difficult one, made at the expense of the rest of the world and in particular through increased persecution of the working class at home. It is nowhere written that the United States must be last on the calendar of the revolution. The world character of economy, plus various combinations, can push the United States to the upper portion of the list. I have spoken on this same question to the American comrades before. The problem, however, assumes even more importance now."

"A great deal depends upon the preparations made by the Communists for the struggles of the future. The Comintern heretofore refused to recognize the role of American Imperialism and only after a criticism by the Opposition made a belated turn about face. But it is absolutely necessary for the Communist to realize the role of American capitalism, to see its development and prepare for the future."

Jokingly we asked comrade Trotsky whether he would like to come to the United States to live. He expressed a real desire to be here, but replied: "I think it is best to wait until the revolution and I trust that you comrades will push a little faster to accomplish this."

Comrade Trotsky is deeply interested in the youth movement. Repeatedly he asked us questions regarding the youth in the States. "Have you any youth in the Opposition?" "What kind of youth activity have you been carrying on?" "What are the possibilities of organizing a youth movement supporting the Opposition and training, educating and preparing the cadres of youth for the future?" He expressed himself as follows: "It is absolutely necessary that the Opposition concentrate on winning the youth to its support. Unlike the thoroughly corrupted bureaucrats, it is quite possible to win large sections of the youth to the Opposition. They are less corrupted and are more susceptible to the ideas of the Left Opposition. We must concentrate especially upon winning them to our banner. They will become a tremendous reserve for us. I should really like to see efforts made in this field of work."

The steps already taken by the National Executive Committee in promulgating youth work through the issuance of Young Spartacus and helping to create the Youth Clubs will find a favorable support from comrade Trotsky. He is especially interested in our efforts in this field of work.

America is not altogether strange to him. He asked about the role of the Socialist Party in the present crisis. "Does the Socialist Party take an active part in the struggles of the workers in the present crisis? Are they really making efforts to build their organization? Do the workers support the anti-working class activity of the Hillquists and liberal matters of the Thomases? American Socialism has not changed its reformist approach to the problems confronting the proletariat. It remains a constant danger to the working class."

In connection with the Socialist Party, comrade Trotsky asked about the role of the Jewish workers in this country. He told us that it was quite possible to win their support. But for this it would be necessary to publish our literature in the Jewish language in order to make it accessible to them. "Yes, you should not neglect the Jewish worker. He will be a great help to you and the American comrades should try to attract them to the Opposition and win them to the support of our ideas."

Comrade Trotsky takes a deep interest in the minutest tasks of the Opposition. He asked many questions about the Militant, which he regards very highly. "The Militant must be maintained as a weekly at all costs. It is a powerful weapon and no doubt is your strongest phase of work." He questioned us regarding its sales, whether it was read by the members of the Party, what our financial condition is, and numerous other questions regarding the existence of the Lovestone group and the activity of the Party. He often repeated the absolute necessity to win the Party members. "They are most important," he told us, "and for this you must organize your Party factions. They must be active bodies, participating in the life of the Party. We must not lose sight of the fact that we are a Party faction, and our future depends directly upon the whole future of Communism and the Party."

We found comrade Trotsky in good spirits despite the extreme hardships of his exile. He must write in order to live and this in a sense is a handicap in that it does not allow him to concentrate all his thoughts and energies on the International Opposition. We talked about life in Turkey, and often his humorous though tragic sides would come in for discussion. The fire that broke out almost a year ago destroyed his library and a box of valuable clippings that were collected over a period of years. Comrade Trotsky is planning a book on the International Situation following the completion of his present work. It was for this that he had been collecting material. "When we first arrived, I made inquiries regarding a library in Turkey, which I might be able to use in my work. But unfortunately, I learned that such an institution was not to be found in Turkey. After the fire, I sent comrade Frankel to the National University of Stambul requesting the use of the school library. They were anxious to help, but found that impossible because the university did not have a library which I could use. So you see that I am really handicapped in this sense."

We learned from the comrades there that the fire destroyed almost everything. It broke out late at night and before much could be done, it spread through the entire house. All that was saved from the ruins were the archives, Lenin's letters and documents. His library consisting of 2000 read and annotated volumes and clippings were burned. The clothes belonging to the entire family were destroyed and $150.00 in cash was burned. "But even so," comrade Trotsky said smilingly, "it could have been very much worse."

Comrade Frankel related the following incident to us: "Shortly after the fire we engaged a room in a nearby hotel. All of us felt dejected and were very much disturbed by the irreparable losses of the fire—all except comrade Trotsky. No sooner were we settled, when he laid his manuscripts out on the table, called the stenographer over and began to dictate chapters of his book as though nothing at all had happened during the night."

Upon news of this loss, books were sent to Trotsky from different parts of the world. These help to rebuild the library that he lost. Books on economics, history, politics and labor movement are especially needed and welcomed by him. In this article we appeal to our comrades, sympathizers and anybody who is interested, to communicate with us in regard to rebuilding the library of comrade Trotsky.

Comrade Trotsky is much troubled by the situation in Germany. He regards the situation there to be decisive in its influence on the whole trend of events internationally. "A victory of Fascism in Germany would have disastrous effects everywhere," he told us. "The Party does not realize that should Hitler come to power he would destroy the Party and the labor movement. But instead of that it plays with the situation in a most criminal manner. It recalls to my mind the period of 1923 when Brandler and Company capitulated. Then the Party followed behind events instead of leading the proletariat in the struggle for power. From all appearances the Party is continuing the very same course today. The Opposition must do all in its power to prevent this attitude of the Party from continuing. This is one of our chief tasks. We must make the Party realize that its task at present is to organize the working class resistance to Fascism and prepare for the revolutionary struggle."

From Germany we went on to a discussion on the situation in the Soviet Union. We asked comrade Trotsky just what effects the world crisis would have on the Soviet Union. Comrade Trotsky was of the opinion that "the world crisis will have severe repercussions there. It appears now that the five year plan is experiencing a number of difficulties about which we warned long ago, but the relation of economy on a world scale to national economy will cause a crisis of the five year plan and only increase the economic difficulties of the proletarian dictatorship." Even now, while Stalin and Litvinov speak of the possibilities of the peaceful development side by side of Socialism and Capitalism, the capitalist powers only work to make matters more difficult for Soviet Economy. For the Opposition it means more determined efforts than ever.

"The capitalists find things more difficult than ever. Those who were influenced by the step of Radok and the other older comrades, and who sincerely felt that a change was taking place in the policy of the Party, found themselves returned to exile shortly after they were taken back into the Party. Radok tries to establish himself in the Party by continuously denouncing the Opposition and reminding every principled idea that he ever held. He has become the most vicious of them all. Most of the capitalists do not exist politically. They have sold their ideas for the right to return to the centers to enjoy the existence of 'marked men'. The genuine Oppositionists remain steadfast. There are many thousands in exile. It is hard to estimate how many. Official figures will tell nothing. Those in exile are forced to go through terrific persecution and in spite of the extremely unfavorable conditions of work (lack of writing materials, lack of books, periodicals, relations with other Opposition colonies, or with the Party itself) exhibit a fearlessness that should encourage every Oppositionist. There are in exile today between three and five thousand young Oppositionists as well as a few thousand old Bolsheviks. In the Party ranks there are currents of Oppositionists everywhere. Stalin thinks that by his severe repressions he can stamp out the Opposition. But he can never do this in spite of everything that he does. The Opposition lives because its ideas are the ideas of Marx and Lenin. Because their ideas are the ideas of the October Revolution."

It was not easy to part when the time came to leave. But there was no other choice and we made ready to go. The thought came often to us: What a horrible crime Stalinism has committed to the revolutionary movement. The exile of comrade Trotsky is a terrible blow to the Russian Revolution and to the Communist International. Trotsky in Turkey is Trotsky endangered. The nest of white-guardists in Constantinople and in the Balkan countries always loom up as a constant threat to the life of our leader. The great handicaps in the work, his health made more aggravated in this country, his general separation from the centers of the movement, are not easy to overcome. Comrade Trotsky keeps on fighting. The greatest tribute to him is to build the International Left Opposition and to carry on the historic fight against Stalinism—that virus which has brought these conditions upon the Communist movement—and thereby to regenerate the International Communist movement for the conquest of proletarian power.

Successful Banquet for Press Held in Mpls.

MINNEAPOLIS—The first of a series of events, which marked comrade Swabeck's visit to Minneapolis, the banquet held for the benefit of the Militant and the forthcoming Jewish organ, Unser Kampf was held on Saturday, December 26 and was unanimously considered a success. After an excellent dinner of over 50 comrades and Left wingers, comrade Carl Cowl, the chairman, gave greetings in the name of the Left Opposition and then introduced comrades Carl Skoglund and Vincent Dunne who made appropriate remarks befitting the occasion. Albert rendered some violin selections, and then comrade Miles Dunne favored the audiences with a few monologues. Comrade Avrin next read Trotsky's farewell remarks upon Lenin's death. "Farewell, Ilyitch!" and then delivered a speech on Lenin. Comrade Arne Swabeck then spoke on the tasks and duties of the Communist movement and dealt particularly with our press. In response over $50.00 in cash and pledges was collected, as well as a number of subscriptions to the Jewish paper, Unser Kampf.

The cash contributions were as follows: Vincent Dunne, $10.00; Carl Skoglund, Louis Roseland, S. Zalmanoff, Ladies Auxiliary of the L. W. C. and L., each $5.00; Hoberman—$1.50; comrades Averbach, Malinsky, Chas. Johnson, Lucatsky, J. Schwartz, Pat Rogers, Frank Glaser, Grant Dunne, Miles Dunne, Carl Cowl, Avrin, Fanny Barach, Lessin, M. Schwartz, Mogilefsky, Lubitsch—$1.00 each; Clem Forsen Bertha Sauer and others—50 cents each.

The Committee is grateful to all those comrades who worked to make the banquet for the Left Opposition a success.

DEBATE IN MINNEAPOLIS

"Resolved that COMMUNISM CAN EMANCIPATE THE WORKING CLASS"

Affirmative: V. R. Dunne, representing Communist League of America (Opposition).

Negative: Jean Spielman, representative of the A. F. of L. Printing-Presses.

Our Martyrs

Liebknecht and Luxemburg

On January 15th 1919, the leaders of the revolutionary German working class, Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht, were murdered in the streets of Berlin. The ruling class of Germany, fearing these two heroic and dauntless fighters, their ability to mobilize the proletariat for the proletarian dictatorship and socialism, called upon the lackeys of the capitalist class, the social democrats, Noske, Schiedeman, Ebert, to stem the revolutionary tide, to murder its outstanding leaders and fighters. (The official social democracy carried out these instructions; murdered Liebknecht and Luxemburg, destroyed the Spartacus movement. For the time being it saved Germany—by wage slavery and exploitation. Luxemburg and Liebknecht remain the symbol of proletarian struggle for emancipation; the German and international social democracy continue as the active henchmen of capitalism.)

Both Rosa and Karl had, long before 1919, fought the treacherous policies of the social democracy within the official movement. Luxemburg took up the struggle against both the revisionism and opportunism of Bernstein, David, Legien, and Noske, and the academic centrism of Karl Kautsky. Previous to this she had been active in the Polish movement where she fought tooth and nail against the nationalist position of the leaders. Closely in contact with the Russian social democracy she followed the revolution of 1905 with the greatest interest. She recognized the importance of the leading role of the proletariat in the democratic revolution. She wrote a brochure in which she drew some lessons on mass political strikes, trade unions, relations between trade unions and for the German party and international working class from the Russian events.

Luxemburg not only popularized the writings of Marx, especially on economics but wrote a theoretical work which attempts to apply the economic laws discovered by Marx to the stage of the imperialist capitalism ("Accumulation of Capital"). Her knowledge and treatment of Marxism, not as a dogma but a revolutionary method of penetrating, knowing and transforming social reality, made Rosa one of the few original thinkers of the revolutionary movement has produced since Marx and Engels. She actively participated in all phases of the social-democratic movement, women's work, practical politics, theoretical discussions, anti-militarist and youth work.

It was in the latter two fields that she worked arm in arm with Karl Liebknecht. Both stressed the importance of work within the armed forces—a proposal which sounded Blanquist to the pacifist and ultra-legalistic social democratic leaders. Karl and Rosa fought for the organization of special youth leagues which would attract young workers and students to the socialist movement, educate them in Marxism, struggle against capitalist militarism. Liebknecht in "Militarism and Anti-Militarism" analyzed the class nature of present day militarism showing its two-fold character: against the enemy capitalist nation and colonial peoples; to suppress the working class at home. Luxemburg exposed the sham and hypocrisy of the proposals for disarmament and pacifism under capitalism, and castigated them as "pacifist utopias". The activity of Rosa and Karl prepared them for the war period role.

The coming of the World War, which like all deep social crises poses the questions of class struggle sharply, found social democratic opportunism develop logically into social chauvinism, social imperialism. The policy of class collaboration during peace time led to support of the bourgeoisie during the war. On the other hand, the advocacy of class struggle, a relentless fight against the capitalist class during "peace" time, found Liebknecht and Luxemburg during as prior to the war in the vanguard of the proletariat struggling against the capitalist conflagration and for proletarian revolution.

Luxemburg and Liebknecht aided by such fighters as Jogiches, Mehring, Levine, organized the Spartacus Bund, unfurled the banner of revolutionary Marxism and proclaimed the struggle against the war, the social democrats, the mainstay of capitalism, and for socialism. Karl hurled the defiant voice of the militant working class in the Reichstag when voting against war credits; in the Kaiser's army he agitated the soldiers for socialism; in the streets of Berlin at the height of the war in May 1918, he echoed the class interests of the German proletariat. For these actions Liebknecht was arrested and thrown into jail.

Luxemburg had also been incarcerated by the Kaiser's government; the other Spartacists were issuing illegal literature and conducting other forms of propaganda under the able leadership of Leo Jogiches. Rosa, while in prison, wrote her now famous brochure on "The Crises in the German Social Democracy" explaining in a scientific manner the reasons for the degeneration of the official social democratic movement, for its war position and the road the Marxists should take.

When the Russian workers overthrew capitalism and established a proletarian dictatorship, Liebknecht and Luxemburg unhesitatingly supported the Bolshevik Revolution. Rosa, while criticizing some of the policies of the Bolsheviks, stressed (in contrast to Kautsky) that they were in the main conditioned on factors independent of their (the Bolsheviks) will and on that bases were justified.

The German revolution of 1918 released Luxemburg and Liebknecht from prison. The Spartacus Bund, which had been part of the Independent Social Democratic Party (the Centrist party of Kautsky, Hilferding, etc.) withdrew and on December 31, 1919 founded the Communist Party of German (Spartacus Bund). The questions of armed insurrection, barricade fighting, the proletarian dictatorship and socialism, in a word, precisely those matters which put horror and fear in the hearts of the capitalists and their labor lieutenants, were illuminated with a lucidity which only a brilliant Marxist like Rosa Luxemburg could use. Not fearing to struggle against the stream though only a handful, Rosa and her Spartacan comrades, with faith in the working masses, intransigent in their Marxist principles, with a heroic will to struggle for socialism, launched the organization which will lead the German proletariat to power.

The German Communist Party was founded at a time when street fighting took place in Berlin. In a few days, on January 15th, 1919, Luxemburg and Liebknecht were arrested and shamefully murdered by the social democratic henchmen of the German bourgeoisie. A short time later, Leo Jogiches was brutally killed while in prison. The traitorous social democracy established "order" in Germany. But "order," "peace," "stabilization," cannot be permanently established under capitalism. The class struggle leads inevitably to revolution as shown by Germany today.

The Left Opposition considers itself the rightful inheritors of the traditions of Liebknecht and Luxemburg. Rosa more than once was at logger-heads with Lenin and the Bolsheviks. She undoubtedly made mistakes. But in spite of this she remains one of the few Marxist leaders of our times. Her works are almost unknown to the American comrades; most of her critics have never studied them. It is the task of the Left Opposition to publish and make known the writings of Luxemburg so that we will not only be able to judge wherein she erred, but learn a great deal from one of the most brilliant Marxist teachers.

Capitalist Politicians Favor Russian Credits; Stalinists Mark Time

The flat proposal for trade with the Soviet Union made by Mr. Rainey, Democratic leader of the House of Representatives, in a speech delivered over the radio for the National Broadcasting Company last Monday, brings one more prominent capitalist politician into the column of those who have already advanced the idea before. In this programmatic speech, widely reproduced in the press, which is intended as a semi-official indictment of the Hoover régime and as the plan of action of the Democratic House majority for "solving the crisis", Rainey advocates large-scale trade with the Soviet Union which, he adds, constitutes one of the world's largest untapped markets at the present time, and particularly necessary for the United States with the present state of its industry.

Further indications of the trend of capitalist opinion are contained in a speech delivered in the house by another Democratic politician, William Sirovich, who recently returned from a visit to the Soviet Union, but also the diplomatic recognition of the country by the United States as a solid preliminary to such trade.

It is clear that the thoroughly bewildered American bourgeoisie, rendered desperate by the deepening of the crisis and the growing discontentment of the working class, and somewhat flabbergasted by the fact that all the nostrums hitherto invoked by the bourgeois statesmen and economists for the solution of the difficulties have failed, is even beginning to orient itself—at least in certain quarters—towards the Bolshevik devil in the hope of finding some way out.

That trade with the Soviet Union, no matter on how large a scale, will not solve the convulsive contradictions inherent in the capitalist system, is of course incontestable. For the bourgeoisie,

Japanese-American Conflict

The Recent Manchurian Incident as a Factor in World Politics

Outstanding in last week's news is the diplomatic incident around the American consul, Culver B. Chamberlin, in Manchuria. Many versions of the story have appeared in the press. There are already "official" Japanese versions and "official" American versions. Developments are not moving with the speed characteristic of such incidents. It is true. The cloud-burst following Sarajevo was much more prompt. But that is not at all sufficient reason to interpret the slowness of procedure in the vulgar and watered manner of the Stalinists, who attribute it solely to the imperialists' anxiety not to spoil the solid (?) front against the Soviet Union. For the Stalinists, the internal contradictions of imperialism constitute just one more hollow phrase with which to adorn a "thesis" or a manifesto, nothing more.

Every serious observer, every serious revolutionist could not help but see the growing dissatisfaction of the Western capitalist brigands with the Japanese invasion of Manchuria. In a world economic crisis like the present, gripping industry as tightly as it does, every scrap of market is the subject of the greatest avarice and envy for every one of the robber states. All the more so, when it concerns so promising and so valuable a market as China. It would be rank stupidity to assume for even a minute, that the United States, Great Britain and the others would so readily cede such a treasure to the Nipponese. On the contrary, a revolutionist, a disciple of Lenin cannot doubt at all that conflicts of a high order among the imperialist powers are bound to result. The tempo in which these conflicts are sharpened and the forms that they take on are controlled by other factors in the world situation, with which we shall deal further on.

At the present time, the United States State Department appears to restrict itself to the invocation of the Nine Power Treaty and the policy of the "Open Door", in its struggle against the Japanese. There has been talk of action along these lines for some time. The Chamberlin affair has merely served as the pretext for giving this line of action the necessary impulse. The State Department is calling upon Great Britain and France to support its side of the conflict. It is doubtful, to say the least, whether France would give its aid. Strained relations between the bourgeoisies of the two countries in the past few months confirm us in our doubt. The British are confronted with rising revolutionary activity among the Indian masses and in jockeying for position might be more amenable to American plans, especially due to the temporary decline of American "sympathies" for Indian independence. For the time being, American-Japanese relations are characterized by less active hostility than would normally be expected. Imperialist alignments in days of economic stress like the present are fickle things. But it is only a matter of time for the lines to be drawn.

The community of interests between the working class of the world and the oppressed colonial peoples of the Orient, is the lesson taught by political necessity. Today, this becomes clearer than ever. The imperialist powers are preparing to strike. While centering our attention on the struggle in Germany, we must not forget the danger threatening from the East. The coordination of the aims of the imperialists will undoubtedly be achieved by devious routes.

Clarity on War Danger!

Yes, the Soviet Union is in danger. The capitalist world is desperate. For the present, this danger is most acute on the Western frontier, to be more precise in the menace of Fascism facing the German working class, which is an invaluable ally of the Soviet Union. It is there that the greatest watchfulness is necessary. It is there, that the whole Communist movement is standing a test that will be decisive for the working class and for the oppressed peoples of the entire world for many years to come. But historical development does not proceed along one straight line. Any "incident" is bound to serve as a spark with which to set off the explosive forces inherent in world politics today. That is why all Communists must pay the closest attention to the turns in imperialist policy, that is why they must not underestimate them, distort their importance. The Chamberlin incident and the further progress of Japanese-American relations requires the utmost attention of the workers, not as an incident in itself, but as a factor in the world situation as a whole.

OPPOSITION LEADER ARRESTED IN ARGENTINA

We are informed by letter of the arrest of comrade Camilo Lopez, the secretary of the Left Opposition in Argentina. The letter from our comrades reads: "Our secretary, Camilo Lopez was arrested and his home raided by the police. They took all his papers and propaganda material. We have been very busy since trying to prevent his being sent to Ushuaia, the Siberia of the Argentine. Comrade Lopez has been given twenty days to get ready to go to Ushuaia or to be deported to Spain..."

MOONEY CONFERENCE IN BELLEVILLE

On Sunday, January 10, the first session of a united front conference to demand Mooney's release will take place in Belleville, Illinois. This conference has been organized along the lines of Mooney's August 20 appeal by the local comrades in Belleville, cooperating with the St. Louis branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition). Reports of its sessions and activities will appear in forthcoming issues of the Militant. All active workers are urged to give all support to the Belleville conference.

JAPANESE COMMUNIST WINS VOLUNTARILY DEPARTURE TO RUSSIA

Sadaichi Kenmotsu, young Japanese graduate, who has been held in San Francisco two years facing deportation as a Communist, has finally been granted voluntary departure to Russia by the Department of Labor. This ends a persistent contest to prevent Kenmotsu being sent to Japan, where he would have been subject to drastic punishment as a Communist. Proceedings against him were based on his attendance at a meeting at which alleged "subversive" literature was distributed.

The Impending Danger of Fascism in Germany

road is unthinkable for them. It is stupid to believe that the Nazis would grow uninterrupted, as they do now, for an unlimited period of time. Sooner or later they will drain their social reservoir. Fascism has introduced into its own ranks such dreadful contradictions, that the moment must come in which the flow will cease to replace the ebb. The moment can arrive long before the Fascists will have united about them even half of the votes. They will not be able to halt, for they will have nothing more to expect here. They will be forced to resort to an overthrow.

But even apart from all this, the Fascists are cut off from the democratic road. The immense growth of the political antagonisms in the country, the stark brigands' agitation of the Fascists will inevitably lead to a situation in which the closer the Fascists come to get a majority, the more heated the atmosphere will become and the more extensive, the unfolding of the conflicts and struggles will be. From this perspective, civil war is absolutely inevitable. Consequently the question of the seizure of power by the Fascists will not be decided by vote, but by civil war, which the Fascists are preparing and provoking.

Can we assume even one minute that Hitler and his advisers do not realize and foresee this? That would mean to consider them blockheads. There is no greater crime in politics than that of hoping for stupidities on the part of a strong enemy. If Hitler cannot help being aware that the road to power leads through gruesome civil war, then that means that his speeches regarding the peaceful democratic road are only a cloak, that is, a stratagem. In that case it is all the more necessary to keep one's eyes open.

What is Concealed Behind Hitler's Stratagem?

His calculations are altogether simple and obvious: He wants to kill his antagonists with the long-run perspective of the parliamentary growth of the Nazis in order to catch them napping and to deal them a death-blow at the right moment. It is entirely possible that Hitler's courtesies to democratic parliamentarism may, moreover, help to set up some sort of coalition in the immediate future in which the Fascists will obtain the most important posts and employ them in turn for their coup d'état. For it is entirely clear that the coalition, let us assume, between the Center and the Fascists will not be a stage in the "democratic" solution of the question, but a step closer to the coup d'état under conditions most favorable to the Fascists.

We must Plan According to the Shorter Perspective

All this means that even regardless of the desires of the Fascist general staff, the solution can arrive in the course of the next few months, if not weeks. This circumstance is of tremendous importance in elaborating a correct policy. If we allow the Fascists to seize power in two or three months, then the struggle against them next year will be much harder than in this. All revolutionary plans laid out in advance for two, three or five years will prove to be only wrecked and disgraceful twaddle, if the working class will allow the Fascists to achieve power in the course of the next two, three or five months. The calculation of time in the polity of revolutionary crises, is just as in war operations, of decisive importance.

Let us take another, more remote example for the clarification of our idea. Hugo Urbahns, who considers himself a "Left Communist", declares the German Party bankrupt, politically done for, and proposes to create a new party. If Urbahns were right, that would mean that the victory of the Fascists is certain. For, in order to create a new party, years are needed (and at that it is not at all proved that the Party of Urbahns would in any sense be better than Thaelmann's Party: When Urbahns was at the head of the Party there were in no ways fewer mistakes).

Yes, should the Fascists really conquer power, that would mean not only the physical destruction of the Communist Party, but veritable political bankruptcy for it. An ignominious defeat in a struggle against bands of human rubbish—the many millions of the German proletariat would never forgive the Communist International and its German section. The seizure of power by the Fascists would therefore most probably nullify the necessity of creating a new revolutionary party and in all probability also of a new international. That would be a frightful historical catastrophe. But to assume today that all this is unavoidable, only genuine liquidationists are capable of. That is, those who under the mantle of their hollow phraseology are in actuality capable only of capitulating in a cowardly manner in the face of struggle and without a struggle. With this conception we Bolshevik-Leninists, who are called Trotskyites by the Stalinists have nothing in common.

We are unflinchingly convinced that the victory over the Fascists is possible not after their coming into power, not after five, ten or twenty years of their

Stalin Makes Party History to Order

In recent weeks the world has been enriched by two "theoretical works" of Stalin. There are two articles of the "Master" published in the Russian party press, dealing with questions of party history. One of them, which has appeared in the foreign official Communist press, deals with Lenin's attitude towards the pre-war Social Democratic Party of Germany and is a polemic against the article of Slutsky, a young Marxist historian. We have no room here to go into the material content of this polemic at the present moment, if only for the simple reason that we do not know the work of Slutsky. Here we call attention to two things. With unexcelled grossness and brutality, Stalin launches into poor Slutsky who dared, on the basis of documents, to consider possible an overestimation on Lenin's part of the S. P. G. (Kautskyans). This thought of Slutsky's is called by Stalin, who demagogically reduces the polemic to this question: Was Lenin a Bolshevik? Yes or no? Is there to be any doubt about Lenin's Bolshevism? The Bolshevism of Lenin is an "axiom" for Stalin, a dogma, just as the sanctity of some Mary is a dogma for the church. There is nothing to doubt about this, nothing is to be looked into concerning it, nothing is to be discussed; it must simply be believed.

It is clear that such a way of putting a question, for people whose every second word is "dialectics", is stupid and vulgar. Lenin was not a Bolshevik from his first days, while he still lay in his cradle. He developed himself in the course of all his revolutionary activity to the position of a Bolshevik. He was not "infallible", like Stalin and other priests and holy men, but made mistakes, acknowledged his mistakes openly in order to rectify them. It is curious that Stalin, wherever he speaks of the "infallibility" of the absolute "dogmatic" Bolshevism of Lenin, adds in parentheses "(the Bolsheviks)". This creates the appearance as though all the Bolsheviks were always at one with Lenin in all questions—we shall show below that this is wrong—and as though every Bolshevik, just because he was a Bolshevik, because it lies in the very essence of Bolshevism, was a Lenin. And just as little as one may entertain doubts about Lenin's Bolshevism or discuss the question, so is one prohibited to doubt the Bolshevism of the "only" Bolsheviks, the Stalinists, or even discuss it, least of all concerning the Bolshevism of Stalin—the Lenin on a higher level—who conceals his holiness behind a canonized, "embalmed" Lenin. Out with it! This doubting! These hypocritical, mendacious, priestly, jesuitical morals, which hit Marxism-Leninism in the face with a blackjack, are a phenomenon worthy of the degenerated Comintern, which every Communist will spurn.

"Scoundrelly" "trivial", "degenerated" in the words of Stalin, are both the article and its author, Slutsky, because the article is supposed to be "semi-Trotskyist" and its author a disciple of Trotsky. And with this we come to the reason why Stalin's article was written. Surely not out of scientific eagerness to secure historical truth. "I believe that rotten liberalism, which at the present moment enjoys a certain vogue among a section of the Bolsheviks (the editorial board which also gets its share, together with Slutsky), has pushed them along this path. Some Bolsheviks are of the opinion that Trotskyism is a faction of Communism, a mistaken one, it is true, committing no few blunders, even anti-Sovietist for that matter, but nevertheless a faction of Communism. Hence a certain liberalism towards the Trotskyists and those thinking like them." There's the nigger in the woodpile. "Trotskyism" is gaining an influence in Russia among the party members. Stalin is becoming frightened. He fears the "Trotskyist" truth. He is therefore giving the signal to the G. P. U. by articles and commands for a new reinforced annihilation campaign against the Left Opposition.

The second Stalin article is concerned with party history of the February revolution and the arrival of Lenin in Petrograd, and with Yaroslavsky. This period is exceptionally painful for Stalin himself and it is highly important that all the party comrades learn the "historical truth" about this affair.

Who would have believed it? And yet it is a fact! The Soviet journals accuse Yaroslavsky openly of having favored the smuggling of Trotsky's conceptions on the history of the Bolshevik party at the beginning of the February revolution into the books on party history of which he is in charge.

As everybody knows now (after the revelations of comrade Trotsky) the Bolshevik party at the beginning of the February revolution (before the arrival of Lenin) conducted, under the leadership of Stalin and Kamenev, a policy of confidence in the provisional government and supported a bloc with Tsereteli in the Soviets. Arriving in Petrograd, Lenin wrote his "April theses" which gave the party a completely different orientation, an orientation towards the winning of the revolutionary masses with a view towards the assumption of power by armed insurrection. For Lenin it was a question of "forgetting the reminiscences of the past", not to be bound by the old formula, outstripped by events, of the "democratic dictatorship of the workers and peasants", but to steer a course resolutely towards the dictatorship of the proletariat. That is what Trotsky called the re-armament of the party. This historical fact is undeniable and all the eye-witnesses of the February revolution, who left memoirs of the early moments of the revolution, establish the vulgar opportunism and social patriotism of the party under the leadership of Stalin-Kamenev. Of all these memoirs, those of Schlapnikov, who was in the leading center of the party from the very first days of the revolution in Petrograd, are the most convincing and authoritative. The memoirs of Schlapnikov constitute an invaluable document for any conscientious historian who wants to present a true picture of the role of the party in this period of February 27 up to April 3, 1917 (old style), that is, up to the arrival of Lenin in Petrograd.

That is just what the young Marxian historians, Slutsky and Volossevitch, did in their historical works. They based themselves upon the evidence of Schlapnikov and spoke of a "re-armament of the party" in April 1917. Another Marxian historian spoke of it right in the party history which appears under the exalted supervision of Yaroslavsky. This is where Yaroslavsky's sins begin. How did he let it pass? Has he not succumbed himself to Trotskyism? The whole Soviet press, from the Izvestia to the Krasnaya Gazeta is aroused by this scandal. Yaroslavsky is openly attacked and the demand is made that in the "next edition of the party history, sections calumniating the party be expanded" Stalin himself published his article in the Bolshevik in which he "reconstructs" the historical truth after his own manner.

The all-powerful apparatus of Stalin fears nothing so much as the historical truth. That is why it will lightly obey any commands of the Master and "expunge" all onerous sections from the history. But like all other historical falsifications, this one too will not succeed in concealing the mistakes and the crimes of the "organizer of defeats".

With the Opposition in Minneapolis

Recently a worker approached the League and applied for membership. He is sullen, shy, keenly observant, but not very talkative. He said he had just completed a 90 day sentence at the workhouse for participation in the February 25 Hunger Demonstration last year. He had been picked up by the police after the event as a "suspect", in reality as a hostage pending the arrest of the T. U. U. L. and party organizers of the affair. The breaking into the Gateway Meat Market on that date, the product of the party's "third period" adventure in Minneapolis, found the party bureaucrats unwilling to go through with the move for which they alone were responsible. When the three rank and file workers were arrested, Karl Reeve, Powers and Grecht, the erstwhile working class heroes on the party payroll, sneaked out of town. The party officially announced they had nothing to do with the affair and refused to participate in the defense of the workers fearing this would implicate it, and be used as prima facie evidence of the party's responsibility. All idea of working class solidarity was thrown to the winds. The workers of Minneapolis got a lot of secret satisfaction out of the daring act of the demonstrators literally refusing to starve and going into the store and "taking it". But chaos was felt at the manner in which the party shamefully deserted the workers arrested, tried and railroaded to the workhouse.

The flight of Reeve and Powers threw the party into a panic. For months no challenge was made to the edict of the Republican Mayor Kuhnze against all Communist assembly. The T. U. U. L.

headquarters on Hennepin was left open by the police perhaps for the purpose of trapping Powers. The Communist League headquarters, however, were raided twice and meetings broken up. Our headquarters were finally closed. To all appearances, the police department considered the Trotskyists as the more dangerous menace in the given situation.

In the workhouse, the I. L. D. machinery was again gunned up. Or was it deliberate sabotage and cowardice again? The I. L. D. lost a unique opportunity to exploit this local issue along with its national campaign. After all, nothing rallies local workers so much as a case they personally know about. Never for years has there been as good a case. Innocent, framed workers. The I. L. D. officially did nothing for the victims. A few friends brought fruit and cigarettes and very little of that. The boys felt the bureaucrats had betrayed them, and that their own comrades had deserted them. It rankled. They resolved never to be made scapegoats again.

After serving their sentence, one comrade dropped out altogether, one came back into the I. L. D. much "wiser" for the experience, and the third, after several months of thought and study of the situation, joined the Communist Opposition. In his own words he says, "I'm going to do what I can to help put the Communist party back on the right track."

SWABECK IN MINNEAPOLIS

After the successful banquet held last Saturday with comrade Swaback for the joint benefit of the Militant and the new Jewish organ of the Left Opposition, two public lectures were held: one on the Plight of the MacDonald government in England with lessons for the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party, which was held right in the 11th Ward P. L. P. headquarters, and the other on the role of the Left Opposition in the Present Crisis, held at the Labor Lyceum. Though the audience in both cases was not extraordinarily large, it was very attentive and interested in the message of the Opposition spokesman. The meetings were marked by serious questions and discussion from the floor, as well as by certain provocative heckling and speeches by the Stalinists, all of which gave comrade Swaback an opportunity to deal concretely with the questions raised. One party member reiterated the argument that the Trotskyists were "individualists" who would not abide by Communist discipline; and that furthermore, in the face of the mass work the party was doing, the Opposition did nothing but criticize the party. It was obvious to all after Swaback's answer that the very participation of party members in our meetings were a recognition of the revolutionary work the Opposition is carrying on, and that our constructive criticism and conduct in the W. I. R. and the Mooney conference, etc., was rallying increasing numbers of workers to our standard.

In addition, comrade Swaback addressed the Labor Lyceum Open Forum on the Manchurian Crisis and the Workers Open Forum on the Future of American Trade Unionism, the latter conducted every Sunday Afternoon, 3 P. M. at 1530 East Franklin Ave.

Nearly seventy dollars was raised from these meetings and a number of subscriptions to Opposition papers, especially to Unser Kampf, the new Jewish organ. We hope soon again to get a speaker from the National Center. C.

MINNEAPOLIS WORKERS FORUM

1530 East Franklin

Sunday, January 10th, at 3 P. M.

The next meeting of the Minneapolis Workers Open Forum will feature Carl Cowl who speaks on "Tom Mooney and the American Frame-up System". Last week's debate on the proposition "That Communism will emancipate the Working Class" between comrade Duane and Jean Spielman of the A. F. of L. aroused a great deal of interest among the workers. Even the capitalist newspapers carried notices of this event. 200 attended! The usual question and discussion period will feature the Mooney Forum meeting.

CORRECTION

In the article on the Workmen's Circle by J. B. (Militant 2-1-32) there is stated that the Patterson members of the W. C. issued a call which "was first published in the Jewish Day and, after a delay of three weeks, in the Freiheit." This is a technical error due to the wrong placement of the sentence. The call refers to that issued by Workmen's Circle, Branch No. 417, N. Y. It was this call which was published in the press, first in the Day, and then, after a delay of three weeks, in the Freiheit.

MASS MEETING

PHILADELPHIA—On SUNDAY JANUARY 10, 1932, at 8 P. M., a lecture on "The Economic Crisis and the Communists" will be given by Arne Swaback. The lecture will be held at OSTROFFER HALL, 943 No. FRANKLIN ST. The admission is free and everyone is invited. There will be a period for questions and discussion by the audience. The meeting is being held under the auspices of The Philadelphia Branch, Communist League of America (Opposition).

Swaback's Tour Results

KANSAS CITY—A successful mass meeting, with an attendance of 50 workers, was held in Kansas City on December 18, when comrade Arne Swaback spoke on the "Economic Crisis and the Communists". The talk was very well received and aroused a greater interest in the program and work of the Communist League (Opposition). The Stalinists, who are as a rule at the development of, as they call it, "A Trotskyist Center" in Kansas City, set to work to hinder the meeting. At first they boasted they would send their "big guns" to heckle the speaker but none of them showed up. But several party rank and file members did attend, despite the intimidation and order by the Stalinist bureaucrats not to attend the meeting. The meeting gave an impetus to the Opposition Open Forum which is soon to begin.

On the following Sunday night a banquet was held. A good time was had by all and a collection was taken up to aid in the work.

The study class in the Fundamentals of Communism is now well under way. The class, conducted by comrade Geo. Clarke, has ten members with good prospects for growth. Those wishing to join should get in touch with George Clarke, care of Buchler's Bookstore, 220 West 12th Street, Kansas City, Mo.

—GEORGE CLARKE.

CHICAGO, ILL.—

It was a hall packed to the doors that greeted comrade Arne Swaback yesterday as he delivered his remarkable lecture on "Trotsky's Views of the World Crisis". Despite the departure from the rule that admission was charged for this meeting, Redfield Hall, 30 N. Wells St., was packed with about a hundred workers present promptly on the hour announced for the meeting.

Comrade Swaback very ably presented the viewpoint of the Left Opposition, winning the applause of all present. He dealt with the perspectives for the crisis, the role of the Communist advance guard of the working class, and the debate of Stalinist policy. He spoke of the vindication of the policy of the Left Communists as expressed in the results of the class struggle and the world situation. He exposed the farcical denunciation of the "Long terms credits to the Soviet Union" slogan of the Left Communists by Stalinists and prophesied that before long these bureaucrats would have to eat their words and conform to the demands of life.

During the discussion period one lone Stalinist took the floor in a weak attempt to answer Swaback's arguments. As soon as he was through he left the hall and did not hear the scorching answer of comrade Swaback.

A good collection was taken, a good literature sale was reported by the literature agent and many new contacts were made with workers eager to get more information on Communism and the policies of our faction. It was the opinion of all comrades that this successful meeting will inject new pep into the work here in Chicago.

ism which have in this period been corrupted and dragged through the mire of Stalinist revisionism.

Comrade Swaback was the last speaker. He spoke on the problems of our movement stressing on the necessity for more activity and devotion on the part of all comrades. The comrades of the Left Opposition must realize that today they stand at the head of the whole Communist movement in Marxist clarity and training for the class struggle.

The very successful program proceeded into the early hours of the morning in unabated hilarity. Jack McBeth of the Liberal Science Institute, present for the occasion, displayed unusual genius in fun making.

Much credit for the gastronomic success of the affair goes to comrades Jim Economou and H. Judd who were in full charge of the kitchen. A collection of $27.00 was taken and presented to comrade Swaback to help strengthen our Militant.

OUR MIND IS UNCHANGED

As we announced several months ago, in an exclusive interview with our printer's devil, Kent, the name Revolutionary Age was proving to be too radical for the Lovestone faction. Despite the denial at that time, we stuck to our guns and we're glad of it. For we now have the official announcement that the Revolutionary Age is now to pass into an unlamented limbo so that its place may be taken by the more modest Workers' Age. Harmonious as this change is with the course of the Right wingers, we still stick to our old proposal. Our readers will doubtless recall it. We want it changed to the Victorian Age. Thus far, nobody has been able to advance a single reasoned argument against our proposal and we take that to mean that it is unassailable. In spite of that, we're satisfied with one step at a time. Slowly but inevitably, the name we proposed will yet wave coyly at the masthead of the Lovestone sheet. What does perturb us a trifle is that the name we proposed for the organization has not yet made any headway. We want the "Majority" group to be called C. P. L. A. (Minority Group), if for no other reason that political accuracy and clarity. As our readers may be sure, our proposals are never motivated by mercenary considerations—we want no money prizes—but solely in the sacrosanct interests of truth and justice. . . .

DEATH PENALTY FOR ANTI-IMPERIALIST AGITATION

HANKOW, (Fengprecor) Death to anti-imperialist agitators! This is the decree of the Wuhan military authorities posted throughout this city today. The Garrison Headquarters has issued a warning that "would-be law breakers" will pay with their heads for attempting to create disorders "that would develop into a diplomatic issue". The order is aimed against the outbreak of incidents involving foreign, particularly Japanese, nationals.

Decapitation will be meted out to agitators in Hankow, Wuchang, and Hanyang factories.

Public meetings and organization of societies are forbidden.

"Peace and order" are thus being maintained in the Wuhan area by Governor Ho Chen-chun, notorious White Terrorist.

These orders, duplicated throughout the area under Kuo Min Tung or other military control, reveal the precise extent to which the present "rulers" of China have sold themselves to foreign imperialism.

The Red Movement in Bulgaria

On June 21 last, the C. P. of Bulgaria obtained a big parliamentary victory. This victory is distinguished in part by the complete defeat of "Democratic Unity" (Zgovor), and in part, by the great number of votes that the illegal C. P. B. received.

The C. P. received 166,000 votes, while the socialist party received only 25,000 votes. The C. P. gained 32 seats, the S. P. got only 5 seats.

We can all still recall that in consequence of the election, the Tsankov-Liapchev government resigned and made place for the bourgeois opposition parties, the so-called "people's" bloc led by Malinov.

It could be foreseen that the proletariat had little to expect from the "democratic" people's bloc, by the fact that the latter did not promise even in the period of the election campaign, that it would abolish the notorious law "for the protection of the state" in case it came into power, nor grant a general amnesty or bring any sort of relief to the striving native proletariat in the field of social legislation.

In recalling the number of votes the C. P. obtained in the elections of April 22, 1924 (206,540) and those of the S. P. (22,404), we must admit that the loss of votes by the C. P. is relatively greater than that by the S. P.

The aim of these lines is to analyze the profound causes of this loss, as well as those for the decrease in the influence of the C. P. in general.

On the basis of a detailed and objective analysis of the situation of the C. P. of Bulgaria, we first want to declare that the loss of influence by the party is to be ascribed to the thoroughly false line and policies of the C. I. and therefore we permit ourselves to speak primarily of the general framework of the defeat of the Bulgarian proletariat in 1923, and in connection with that, to scrutinize the entire policy of the C. I. from the critical point of view of Marxism-Leninism.

Despite the official optimism, it is nevertheless a regrettable, a disagreeable and disquieting fact that the influence of the C. P. has been declining in practically all the capitalist countries, and that the proletarian masses are not being won over to Communism. In the eyes of the present leadership, this statement is regarded as "Trotskyism", "deviation to the right", posing a lack of confidence in the revolution. The simple mention of this fact suffices to merit the designation of "renegade". Nevertheless, we need above everything, a thorough analysis on our own part, in order to find the causes of this stagnation, or rather, this decline. The causes must be revealed and uprooted; this is the fundamental condition for the success of the proletarian revolutionary movement. The decline in the influence of the Communist parties of the capitalist countries, their inability to secure the support of the proletarian masses, all this is all the more deplorable and disquieting because it occurs not in a period of ebb, but in a period of general radicalization for the working class. In other words: precisely at the moment when the objective conditions for the victory of the revolution are maturing, the subjective factor is lacking and falling behind the possibilities that the situation offers.

Only open and pitiless criticism can serve as a remedy. The absence of it indicates the sickness. The only means of putting a stop to the disintegration, is the clearing of the road for criticism. In the first half of its history, the C. I. showed almost exclusively its positive side.

Under Lenin, the International gave the growing parties their clear and principled position. It elaborated the general principles of Communism, the fundamental lines of strategy, of Communist tactics and organization. Lenin was able to profit by the experiences in the struggles of the western parties, he was able to interpret them in a broad theoretical sense. He did not think it possible to invent the tactics for the other parties from the center, nor to outline and prescribe them to the smallest details.

The negative side became more and more apparent in the second half of the existence of the C. I., after 1923, after the death of Lenin and after the revolutionary waves in central and western Europe had calmed down. Then we witnessed the era of "Bolshevization". It consisted in the attempt to boast methods, forms and tactics artificially and schematically upon the European movement, completely neglecting the peculiarities in the class relationships of different countries as well as the necessity of adapting the proper general Communist principles to them.

This crisis in the C. I. was accentuated and prolonged by the formation of a bureaucratic regime inside the leadership which eliminates and is still eliminating mechanically every opportunity that arises and fails to profit by the experiences of the non-Russian struggles. Linked directly with this is the habit, now become deep-seated, to make the Russian factional struggles a general criterion for the tactical questions in the other parties, and to transpose them uniformly on the other parties.

The causes for the crisis are naturally not only of a personal character, although personalities play a role in them, and are not at all to be neglected. The absence of a man of Lenin's scope in the Russian party, counts, no doubt. But there are, of course, deeper roots to the matter.

It is responsible first of all, for the penetration of bureaucracy into the Russian party and its transportation to the other parties.

On the other hand, we must consider the difficulty of the sections of the C. I. in working out special ways and means of the proletarian revolution and its preparation in the different countries, which has been increased by the bureaucratically entrenched preponderance of the Russian party in the leadership of the C. I. that no longer corresponds to the moral preponderance of its leadership in international questions.

The inability to draw the lessons of the experiences characterizes the crisis of the Bulgarian Communist Party as well as that of the entire movement of the C. I. It is not a crisis of the movement itself, but of its leadership. The criticism of the past mistakes will result in the condemnation of the leadership responsible for these mistakes. The lack of a healthy, creative criticism which the present leaders fear, is accompanied by a deplorable moral stagnation, which under the mask of loyalty and under the mantle of mechanical discipline, sows disorder. As a consequence, instead of the mistakes being corrected, they create new mistakes. In order to justify intellectual and political shortcomings, all regard for truth has been sacrificed. Theories are built up not on the basis of vital facts, but for the purpose of covering up mistakes committed through ignorance or through empirical experimenting.

On the basis of these lines, which deal more or less with the International, we intend to speak, in our next article, of the crisis in the Bulgarian C. P.

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

Developments in Spanish Revolution

"The conservative classes of Spain," said Alcalá Zamora recently, "cannot be conservative; they are simply reactionary." This is true. As in all backward countries, the Spanish bourgeoisie is tied up with the most reactionary castes of the country. Its political torpor, its fear, which make it embrace the first cut-throat that comes along, or the arrogant fanatic of Lerroux like a shipwrecked man holding on to a plank, these are an irredeemable evil in our bourgeoisie. Señor Zamora's exhortations to come out of its present state are wasted. The evil has deep roots.

The Spanish bourgeoisie will disappear as a class without changing its characteristics. The structure of our economy, and consequently the role which Spain plays in world economy, fix a limited circle of necessity, within which our bourgeoisie must move. The contradictions of Spanish economy cannot be solved by the bourgeoisie and logically tend to become sharper. It is enough to see that after eight months of the Republic, and in spite of the declarations of the republicans, not only have the bonds which subordinated Spain to world capitalism remained, but they have even drawn tighter. The Republic has not made the least change in the internal structure of the country. Nothing is more natural, then, since the same state of affairs continues, than that its consequence should keep on manifesting themselves. Our bourgeoisie will continue to be, while it exists, among the most reactionary in Europe.

In reality the Republic changed nothing, but retained the same state of affairs. The activity of Maura and of Alcalá Zamora, the same before as after the change of regime, was a continual exhortation to their clans to convince it of the necessity for a change; and in spite of the notable success which they achieved, the bourgeoisie could not be calmed down until it saw itself protected by a regime of force.

Overthrow of Monarchy Inevitable

The monarchy had reached a situation which could no longer be sustained. Since the coming of the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera it had been evident that monarchy and dictatorship would fall together. The forces which the monarchy exerted at the last moment to avoid being uprooted with the dictatorship could not be successful. Their responsibilities overtook the dictatorship could not be successful. Their responsibilities overtook them alike. The immense majority of Spain felt that the problem posed was a constitutional one. The bourgeoisie, for its part, had a special interest in not moving the question off this plane. It posed in the first place the question of responsibilities, not with the purposes of demanding retribution, but to prevent the revolution from exceeding strictly political limits.

The monarchy could not at that time resort to a regime of force—the dictatorship had just collapsed for lack of a base—nor did it have within itself a democratic solution. The most conservative solution was therefore to unload all responsibility on a regime for which there was no remedy, and to weaken as much as possible the consequences of its fall. It was the duty of a consciously-guided movement not to let itself be deceived.

Nor was there any call to be deceived as to the meaning of the Republican-Socialist combination. Apart from the fact that in all its activity before the change of regime it has displayed a consistent counter-revolutionary line, the combination as an historical phenomenon was nothing new. In all countries there have occurred political conditions which have tended to blur the class struggle under the excuse that the revolution interests various classes. Certainly—but it interests them in opposite ways. For the bourgeoisie, the important thing in a revolutionary situation, and the thing that determine its maneuvers, is the fear of being tied up by the proletariat; for the proletariat, the interest of the revolution is the occasion which it offers to impose its will on the bourgeoisie, to subjugate it, and suppress its class domination.

At the distance of a few months, it seems incredible that the working class could be hallucinated by the Republican-Socialist combination. All the weakness, where it was not conscious complicity, of the leaders of the revolutionary working class, stood out sharply on this occasion. In spite of the ambiguity of their phrases, and the abundance of promises did not hesitate to make statements of a most alarming character to the working class. If the delay of the Republican-Socialist combination in coming to a struggle did not suffice, the declarations of some of its eminent members could not leave the least doubt as to the policy which the combination was to pursue. On April 9 Manuel Azana made the following special statement for "Workers' Solidarity": "It has been agreed that the participation of the workers will not turn aside the political revolution, by changing it into a social revolution. Besides, what they call the Communist danger is no reason for resigning ourselves to the present regime and letting it continue."

(Ah these words, if properly understood, have more than one meaning? No: it is clear that the leaders of the C. N. T. took advantage of the meaning which they had for the revolutionary masses influenced by anarchism. The aversion to Communism, which the leaders of the C. N. T. tried so hard to maintain, was in this case a source of deception for the workers themselves. The revolutionary workers who were against Communism repudiated it as a working-class plorable echo in the working class. The socialist and anarchist leadership of our workers' movement, which had delivered up the whole revolution to the bourgeoisie, made its faults still worse on the change of regime. If the socialists and anarchists, for separate reasons, immediately deprived the proletariat of any class action, they devoted themselves immediately to presenting as a victory what was only the result of their mistakes.

On the proclamation of the Republic, the working class received nothing but poison from all sides. "At one stroke, and with dizzying speed, Spain has placed itself at the head of Europe and perhaps of the world," said Workers' Solidarity on April 16. It took all the vulgarity of anarchism to interpret the situation in such a manner. What a grotesque meaning have certain words of Workers' Solidarity today!

"Our attitude is one of full expectation and hope. Even if the opposite may seem to be the case, the political perspective of the moment represents a good promise for the working class" (April 17). "We are convinced that the blow which has been struck at Spanish reaction will throw into the abyss of death the fascism of Europe and America" (April 18). The leaders of the C. N. T. gave the workers an interpretation which was the

A Series of Articles on Spain

Beginning with the next issue, the Militant will commence the publication of a series of articles on the present situation in revolutionary Spain, by Max Shachtman, editor of the Militant. Comrade Shachtman has just returned from two months in Europe, part of which was occupied with a visit to Spain. In both Madrid and Barcelona, he had the opportunity of speaking with prominent and authoritative spokesmen of the socialist, anarchist, syndicalist, Catalanist and Communist movements, and to view the general situation at close range. The series of articles will deal with the economic conditions of the workers under the republican regime, the possibilities of a socialist government, the struggle in the trade union movement between the conflicting political tendencies, the interesting dispute developing between the anarchists and the syndicalists in the National Confederation of Labor, the situation in the Communist party, the Maurin group, and the Left Opposition, and so forth. Our readers are urged to watch for these articles every week and to call the attention of other workers to them.

tendency. But when the bourgeoisie talks of "Communist danger" it does not refer to a struggle among tendencies, which it generally neither understands nor distinguishes, but to the working class all together, to the danger of a social revolution.

Change in Spain Reactionary

The bourgeoisie, without losing its fears, was abandoning the monarchy in proportion as the combination kept lessening the distance between monarchy and the revolution. Finally the rapprochement of the two camps was so close that in view of the municipal elections of April 12 the bourgeoisie politicians, who were defending their class against the monarchist entrenchments, understood that all resistance was useless and harmful. If the Republic was installed in Spain almost unanimously it was because the bourgeoisie saw the possibility of effecting the change almost without losses. The pacific and original manner in which the change of regime was effected in Spain proves the profoundly reactionary character of the change. In reality it was the monarchy that was saved. Neither the interests which the fallen regime sheltered, nor its most representative men, suffered a major damage. The whole monarchy became republican to save itself. Even the king conducted himself, in a way, as a sympathizer.

Moreover, if the change of regime as it was realized was the natural result of the deeply reactionary downward slope which the revolution had taken, at the very beginning of the change the bourgeoisie found an excellent opportunity to emphasize to the full the reactionary character of the Republic. The fact that the Republic had been installed without violence and as a result of a few elections, provoked throughout the country the greatest democratic confusion ever recorded in history.

A revolution which was pacific because it was no revolution, but the most perfect maneuver that the bourgeoisie could have executed in the face of a revolutionary situation, found the most de-opposite of the truth of the Spanish revolution. The one thing that was not struck down in Spain was reaction. The monarchist elements scarcely suffered punishment from the Republic. On the other hand, the working class, when it began to show itself as such, was the object of the most brutal repression. On the 1st of May, that is, a fortnight after the proclamation of the Republic, the repression began. In Barcelona and in Bilbao the police force was aimed at the workers.

The promptness with which the Provisional Government called the Constituent Assembly was in response to the need of profiting by the prestige which the Republican-Socialist combination enjoyed. The halo thus created assured it the monopoly of the Assembly. It was in the interests of the bourgeoisie that the Republic was fixed up by means of the combination, which also made the electoral law. Things were so organized that all groups apart from the combination could scarcely influence the progress of the Assembly.

The distinguishing feature of the combination has been the complete subordination of the Left wing to the Right, which makes the organization even more deceptive. When the elections were held, the working masses and the middle class of our country were being radicalized. Within the combination, this was reflected in the growth of the Left wing, and above all, in the Socialist Party, which is the most numerous group. Still, in the Assembly, the internal mechanism of the combination was put into motion, and then we saw that the one who gave orders was the Right wing.

The Assembly began to play a most indecent farce. The bills presented were almost ultra-Left. In the course of the discussions they were constantly mutilated. If at the last minute there still remained anything that the right wing considered dangerous, Señor Alcalá Zamora would intervene and "create clarity." These results could not be justified by the composition of the Assembly, since the Left elements were in the majority; they were explained by the manner in which the Assembly functioned. The Lefts said, "Since this Government is a mixture of tendencies we must submit, we must work out compromise formulas." In the name of formulas of agreement, we notice that although there is a left majority in the Assembly, these lefts are politically impotent.

The left elements of the combination are only the tools which the right uses for its own advantage. For this the Republican-Socialist combination was created. If it had not fulfilled this function, the Right would have dissolved it. At all difficult moments, the coalition was in danger of being broken up. At the time when the religious question was being discussed, for instance, if the socialists had defended the point of view of the projected Constitution, it would have won in the Assembly, and all the rights, including the radicals, Maura and Zamora, would have undertaken an open fight against the Constitution and the Assembly.

The deceptive role which was represented by the elements of the Left created the necessity of compelling the socialists to form a homogeneous Government. This slogan, given out by us, was poorly understood even by the Communists. The Workers' and Peasants' Bloc called it reactionary. Trying to adopt a revolutionary position, the Bloc gave out a slogan which seems a joke; it announced itself in favor of a Government of Pestana-Vallina-Peiro.

The progress which the bourgeoisie has made are shown by the fact that now it dares to take off its mask. The same bourgeoisie, which took such pains at the beginning to cloak itself in socialism and radicalism, now feels it necessary to get rid of the subaltern personnel. It is natural that the latter should resist the abandonment of its privileged position, and propose coalition Government; so long as the Assembly exists, the reaction will govern through a coalition Government. The short space of time left for the Assembly is the last concession that the bourgeoisie makes to his assistance.

The political liquidation of the Left, of which we can speak as if it were an accomplished fact, was accomplished, not by the revolutionary offensive of the working class, but it was the bourgeoisie that got rid of this tool after having used it to the full. The bourgeoisie has made a step forward, and if the situation demands, can come back to using successfully bourgeois radicalism, since no revolutionary force has arisen to take its place, since it has not been liquidated in a revolutionary manner. The revolutionary liquidation of the bourgeois left and of socialism must be carried out now, taking advantage of its political decadence, not letting it—deceive the workers into trying out its denigrating radicalism as an opposition.

Communism, which, we can say, has not figured or known how to figure in the revolution, must make up for lost time by a broad policy of unification of the working class. In the new phase of the class struggle, without fraud or concealment, the unity of the labor movement, the union of all forces, will be the firm base on which the offensive against the reaction must support itself, and the only base one can bring the working class a sound revolutionary leadership. Now that the new Communist bureaucracy has done its best to convert the Soviets into a fetish which the masses feel to be out of reach, the Factory Committees, even if they cannot fill the function which the Soviets did in Russia, must nevertheless be the place for the united front of the workers.

Under the Banner of Marxism

Opposition in England

Party Members Form Nucleus to Fight for Leninism

On December 19 of last year, a group of members of the Communist Party of Great Britain who have been active in it for years, met in London to constitute formally the English section of the International Left Opposition.

The absence of such a formally organized and active group of Oppositionists in England has always been felt acutely in our ranks, not only because of the general need of extending the influence and strength of the Marxian wing in all countries, but because in England specifically the official Communist party has, in relation to its strength and to the magnificent possibilities for revolutionary growth that the situation has offered, outdone itself to pile defeat upon error and error upon defeat. More than ten years of official British Communism have elapsed today without the party having yet made a deep impression upon the proletariat. The striking decline of British imperialism has barely, if at all, been accelerated by the revolutionary activity that the British party should have displayed. The unexampled movement of the British workers in the coal and general strikes of 1926 simply swept over the English party without depositing anything but the thinnest layer of new strength upon it, a layer which, moreover, it promptly proceeded to lose. From the disgraceful record of the first and even the second Labor government, the party has been able to make only the smallest minimum of capital among the working class. Even now, when a section of the British workers are being driven by the contradictions of capitalism, driven by the hundreds to join the party, indicating by the flow to Communism which takes place in spite of the Stalinist bureaucracy that the revolutionary standard is capable of attracting the most advanced workers—even now, the party acts largely as a sieve into which the hundreds of new Communist workers come only to drop out in almost equal numbers after a brief stay.

The grave crisis of the ruling class and its institutions is convulsing the latter in every one of its parts. And in this process, such institutions as the Labour party and the Independent Labour Party show themselves to be very quickly affected. In both of them, and particularly in the last-named, there is a growing discontentment with the leaders and their policies. Especially in the I. L. P. are there now tremendous possibilities for winning thousands of good revolutionary militants who are in its ranks. But in face of these possibilities, the Communist party, held in the strait-jacket of Stalinism by its Ruskis and Pollitts, merely skims the very thinnest surface and disdainfully ignores the real opportunities which are offered it.

With the British situation as a whole, and with the position of the British party, we shall soon have occasion to deal in greater detail. But even these brief and sketchy comments, together with what is now general knowledge about the state of affairs, demonstrate plentifully the need and the prospects for growth of a well-knit section of the Left Opposition in England.

Small as our young British section is at its commencement, the Left Opposition has been significantly fortunate in winning to its banner a good group of active militants who do not seek in the ranks of our movement a safe refuge from the class struggle, as have many in the past who sought to cover up their own retirement from the revolution with the prestige and the great tradition of our movement. On the contrary, our English group is composed of party members who are not only well known for their activities in the movement but whose adherence to the Opposition is a continuation on a higher plane and in an organized manner of a struggle against bureaucracy and opportunism which they have conducted, under other forms, in the recent past of the party.

Every one of the comrades who came together to constitute the group—with perhaps one exception—is a member of the party and, without fearing the consequences which the Stalinists nowadays impose upon the struggle for the ideas of Marx and Lenin, they are determined to carry on the fight within the party and, at all events, as a faction of the Communist party. By this alone, the English Opposition describes a clear line of demarcation between itself and those dilettantes and children of fantasy who have, in England, sometimes taken the name of the Opposition, for a thousand and one reasons, but not for a single one which justified the assumption. On the fringes of the movement in England—as everywhere else—are a number of tiny little sects, stowing hopelessly and in quiet isolation in the stale juice of their own superiority; individuals and individuals; in short, opportunists, do-nothings, sectarians of all kinds who have painted themselves up with the colors of the Opposition in the expectation that it would not only obligate them to nothing serious but that it would relieve them of a slashing criticism and separation from the Left Opposition. Of this too we shall have another occasion to speak.

The group has decided to issue a bulletin immediately, in preparation for the printed paper to come. The group, which was constituted with the aid of a representative of the International Secretariat who was present decided to establish relations with the latter body immediately.

New Trotsky Pamphlet Coming

WE ARE ABOUT TO GO TO PRESS! with a new pamphlet by comrade Trotsky. It is entitled: GERMANY—THE KEY TO THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION—SHALL FASCISM REALLY BE VICTORIOUS? This latest work of the leader of the Left Opposition fulfills the most burning need of the moment for the revolutionary movement of the entire world. It analyses in clear and distinct strokes, the problems facing Communism and offers the Bolshevik solution to them.

The Communist International, the vanguard of the whole international working class is approaching a decisive historical task in Germany. Every month, every week, every day brings us closer to the critical moment. In 1923, the defeat of the German proletariat inaugurated a sweep of reaction that affected the working class of every capitalist country and served as a brake on the stormy advance of the post-war revolutionary movement. Today, we are confronted with a similarly decisive situation in Germany.

The forces of Hitlerism, the prospective butchers of the German workers, are continually growing. World imperialism, seized in the grip of an unprecedented economic crisis, is casting ravishing and greedy glances at the Soviet Republic in the East. These two processes are not divorced from one another. It lies in their very character for each to aid and abet the another.

In the meantime, the German working class remains divided. The social democrats still have a free hand in their deception of the workers. The Stalinist leaders of the Communist party, only yesterday the bold prophets of the "third period", are overcome with panic by the growth of the Fascists. They are falling into passivity, acquiescing helplessly and resorting to futile ejaculations. The situation is not lost yet, but the German Communist party, and with it the whole Communist International, is in danger of committing a blunder as tremendous in its consequences as the defeat of 1923.

Every Communist, every serious revolutionary worker must consider it his duty to pay the closest attention to what is now going on in Germany. Every conscientious proletarian fighter must keep his eyes peeled, use the utmost objectivity in his judgment.

In his new pamphlet, the leader of the first Red Army, the closest co-worker of Lenin, is appealing to all the worker Communists. What he has to say is of extraordinary historical importance. Every member of the Communist party, every sympathizer of Communism who is sincerely attached to the cause of the revolution, must consider it his duty to obtain a copy of the latest work of Leon Trotsky and to read it carefully. The fate of the world revolution is at stake. Let no genuine revolutionary stand aside. Every worker and Communist must get a copy 10c per copy; 7 cents in bundles of GERMANY—THE KEY TO THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION. PROLETARIAN PARTY SPLIT

Engels once wrote that every workers' party must necessarily develop in a process of internal struggle, according to the dialectical laws of development in general. This observation is again called to mind by the factional struggle now taking place in the ranks of the Proletarian Party. It is a sign of vitality that is well worth watching. For over a decade this sectarian offshoot of American Communism devoted itself to a tranquil observation and "explanation" of social phenomena. The depression in the American labor movement during the period of prosperity, and the indifference of the workers to revolutionary propaganda which ensued from it, created special conditions for the existence of such a group. And this was further facilitated by the errors and exaggerations of the official Communist Party. The pseudo-Marxist policy of Keracher and Co. was a complement to Pepperistic adventurism. Thus a number of revolutionary workers were maneuvered onto a side-track. Everything was quiet in the Proletarian Party. Its leadership waited it off from the class struggle and from the fierce disputes which raged within the general Communist movement.

By that state of affairs could only be temporary. The accentuation of the class struggle in the country, and the great conflicts over principle which have brought the world movement of Communism to a crisis, have posed questions which can no longer be evaded. Controversy is sweeping through the Keracher party like a tornado, making up in fury for its long postponement. Almost overnight the Keracher group of leaders, who ask only for peace and quiet, have been confronted with a stormy internal struggle. Following the national convention of the organization, where criticism was smothered and all the burning questions of the moment were evasive opportunism, an opposition has come to life and is waging a militant struggle on a national scale. The opposition is publishing its own bulletin and has even gone so far as to project a national conference. A split appears to be the inevitable outcome of the conflict.

In fact, the split has already begun. The leaders of the Proletarian Party, who borrow so much in principle from Stalinist revisionism, have revealed themselves also as apt pupils of the administrative methods. The criticisms of the opposition everywhere are being answered, not with arguments but with expulsion. According to the "Proletarian Opposition Bulletin" six of the leading oppositionists in Chicago have been expelled and 25 members have resigned from the Party. "Members of the N. E. C. are being sent out on a witch-smelling and heresy-hunting campaign, with power to expel, suspend, or otherwise punish members, without the formality of a 'trial'. Three members have been suspended and one expelled in Elkhart, Indiana. The entire branch of 40 at Buffalo has been expelled. At New York and other places secessions have taken place.

The course of the opposition movement within the Proletarian Party remains unclear. It is quite obvious, from a reading of its campaign material, that the opposition has not yet undertaken to answer the main question which arises inevitably from its struggle against the leadership and policy of the party. That question is: Where are we going, and why? "Proletarian Opposition Bulletin" Number 2, which we have at hand, directs a sharp criticism against the bureaucratic regime within the party; it condemns the opportunist election campaign in Detroit, and insists on a struggle for immediate demands on the question of unemployment. On all these points the opposition is undoubtedly in the right as against the leadership. But when all is said and done these questions have a secondary importance. They are by no means an adequate armament for a real political struggle. The opposition must equip itself with an all-around platform. It must take a position on the basic questions of principle, and make its tactical deductions accordingly. Otherwise it will not be able to avoid a rapid disintegration. Such a fate will threaten it immediately.

One thing at least may be said with certainty; the opposition cannot stand alone as an independent movement. Having made a decisive break with the sterile circle of Keracherism—and this is a sign of its vital proletarian impulse—the opposition confronts the necessity of attaching itself to the living movement of Communism. This is the first and most pressing implication of the revolt. With which faction will the new grouping affiliate?—that is the question. Those whose seek to evade that question, who hold up the prospect of a "fourth" faction, can only deceive and mislead the movement. That is only the Keracher policy on a small scale; and the present upheaval is, in the first place, a sign of the utter bankruptcy of this policy. The fact that a part of the insurgent elements in New York and other places have already gone over to the Stalin faction, without waiting for the movement as a whole to clarify its policy, is a warning against temporizing and delay with this fundamental problem.

To save the new movement, or at least a substantial part of it, from this fate is the task of the serious Communist elements within it. Keracherism is only a weak sprout of Stalinism; the ideology at bottom is fundamentally the same. A transfer of affiliation from the Proletarian Party to the Stalin faction signifies nothing more than an organizational secession and a capitulation in principle.

Every tendency to limit the opposition to the secondary tactical points is a preparation for such a debacle. A serious study and consideration of the great principle questions, and the adoption of a precise attitude toward them, are now indispensable for a fruitful outcome of the revolt in the Proletarian Party.

BOMBS FOR NEW YEAR'S

It looks like a big year for the bomb and dynamite racket, if one can judge by the spectacular start that has been made by the people who specialize in it. The new year was ushered in with the loud explosion of a bomb in Pennsylvania, and by still noisier propaganda about other bombs which were found or planted or imagined in various parts of the country. Connected with this was the inevitable hue and cry about a conspiracy of the Communists, the anti-fascists and other radicals. The bombs—it is claimed—were addressed to a number of the leading fascists of the country. Of course, none of the Mussolini agents were injured. They never are. The miraculous escape of the intended "victims" in these affairs is as unending as the change that the radical workers are the guilty parties.

Nine times out of ten—or, better, 99 times out of a hundred—this is the real meaning of the "discovery" of bombs and dynamite: to lay the ground for an attack against the workers and to railroad some individuals as an example. This is American labor history. And the Mussolini regime has introduced this "American plan" all over Europe in the fight against the anti-fascist movement. If we take the New Year's hubbaloob together with the "dynamite plot" in the New York harbor there is every ground for the assumption that a new offensive against the workers, introduced with a series of typical frame-ups—is in preparation.

The Daily Worker speaks of the latest bomb scare as the prelude to an attack on the Communist Party, and limits its concern and protest to that. If the new machinations take on real proportions a blow at the Party will undoubtedly be the objective. But the specific point of attack in the present instance seems to be the anti-fascist movement; and the New York harbor affair is aimed at the Tidewater Boatmen's Union. For our part, these circumstances do not in the least mitigate the danger nor the necessity of fighting the conspiracies. We are on the side of any worker, or any workers' organization, regardless of its political complexion, in such a situation.

Communists make a fatal error when they limit their protests to cases of direct attack against their own party. Such questions must be approached from a principle, that is, from a class point of view. There is practical wisdom, also, in this attitude. The Communists cannot fight successfully alone against an onslaught of the capitalists. They need the support of the working class. The more readiness they show to join in the defense of any workers' organization under attack the stronger become their own claims for similar support, and the more readily will they receive it.

—J. P. C.

"The working men have no country. We cannot take from them what they have not got. Since the proletariat must first of all acquire political supremacy, must rise to be the leading class of the nation, must constitute itself the nation, it is, so far, itself national, though not in the bourgeois sense of the word."

The Workers United Front against Fascism

rule, but now, under the given conditions, in the coming months and weeks. Thaelmann Considers the Victory of Fascism Inevitable

A correct policy is necessary in order to achieve victory. That is, we need a policy appropriate to the present situation, to the present relationship of forces and not to a situation that may develop in one, two or three years, when the question of power will have been decided for a long time.

The whole misfortune lies in the fact that the policy of the Central Committee of the German Communist Party, in part consciously and in part unconsciously, derives from the recognition of the inevitability of a Fascist victory. In fact, in the appeal for the "Red United Front" published on November 20, 1931, the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany, starts out with the idea that it is impossible to vanquish Fascism without first defeating the social democracy. This same idea, Thaelmann repeats in all possible shades in his article. Is this idea correct? On the historical scale it is unconditionally correct. But that does not at all mean that with its aid, that is, by simple repetition, one can solve the questions of the day. An idea, correct from the point of view of revolutionary strategy as a whole, turns into a lie and at that into a reactionary lie, if it is not translated into the language of tactics. Is it correct that in order to destroy unemployment and misery it is first necessary to destroy capitalism? It is correct. But only a hopeless fool can draw the conclusions therefrom, that we do not have to fight already today, with all of our forces, against these measures with the aid of which capitalism is increasing the misery of the workers.

Can we expect that the Communist Party will in the course of the next few months defeat both the social democracy and Fascism? No normally thinking person who can read and calculate would risk such a contention. Politically, the question is posed in the following manner: Can we successfully repel Fascism in the course of the next few months, that is, with the existence of a greatly reduced, but still (unfortunately) very strong social democracy? The Central Committee replies in the negative. In other words, Thaelmann considers the victory of Fascism inevitable.

Once Again: The Russian Experiences

In order to express my thought as clearly and as concretely as possible I will come back once more to the experience with the Kornilov uprising. On August 26 (old style) 1917, General Kornilov led his Cossack troops and one irregular division against Petrograd. At the helm of power there stood at that time: Kerensky, lackey of the bourgeoisie and three-quarters an ally of Kornilov. Lenin was still in hiding because of the accusation that he was in the service of the Hohenzollerns, on the same accusation, I was at that time incarcerated in solitary confinement in the Kresty Prison. How did the Bolsheviks proceed in this question? They also had a right to say: "In order to defeat the Kornilovade we must first defeat the Kerenskade." They said this more than once, for it was correct and necessary for the entire further propaganda. But that was entirely insufficient ground not to put up a resistance on August 26, and on the following days against Kornilov and to prevent him from butchering the Petrograd proletariat. The Bolsheviks did not for that reason content themselves with a general appeal to the workers and soldiers to break with the conciliators and support the red united front of the Bolsheviks. No, the Bolsheviks proposed the united front struggle to the Mensheviks and the Social-Revolutionaries and created together with them common organizations of struggle. Was this correct or incorrect? Let Thaelmann give me an answer to this question. In order to show much more boldly, how matters stood with the united front, I will cite the following incident: Immediately upon my release from solitary confinement, after the trade unions had put up bail for me, I went directly to the Committee for National Defence, where I discussed and voted decisions regarding the struggle against Kornilov with the Menshevik Dan and the Social-Revolutionary Gotz, the allies of Kerensky who had imprisoned me. Was this correct or was it wrong? Let Remmele answer this question for me.

Is Bruening the "Lesser Evil"? The social democracy supports Bruening, votes for him, assumes the responsibility for him before the masses—on the basis that the Bruening Government is the "lesser evil". The Rote Fahne attempts to ascribe the same view to me—on the basis that I expressed myself against the stupid and shameful participation of the Communists in the Hitler referendum. But have the German Left Opposition and myself in particular demanded that the Communists vote for and support Bruening? We Marxists regard Bruening and Hitler, together with Braun as component parts of one and the same system. The question, which one of them is the "lesser evil", has no sense, for the system against which we are fighting needs all these elements. But these elements are momentarily involved in conflicts with one another and the party of the proletariat must take advantage of these conflicts in the interest of the revolution.

There are seven keys in the musical scale. The question which of these keys is "better". Do, Re or Sol is a senseless question. But the musician must know when to strike and what keys to strike. The abstract question as to who is the lesser evil: Bruening or Hitler—is just as senseless. It is necessary to know which of these keys to strike. Is that clear? For the weak-minded let us cite another example. When one of my enemies sets before me small daily portions of poison and the second, on the other hand, is about to shoot straight at me, then I will first knock the revolver out of the hand of my second enemy, for this gives me an opportunity to get rid of my first enemy. But that does not at all mean that the poison is a "lesser evil" in comparison to the revolver.

Where Lies the Mistake in the Present Policy of the German Communist Party

The misfortune is, that in the Central Committee of the Communist Party there are many frightened opportunists. They have heard that opportunism consists of a love for blocks, and that is why they are against blocks. They do not understand the difference between, let us say, a parliamentary agreement and an ever-so modest agreement for a struggle in a strike or in the defense of workers' printshops against Fascist bands. Election agreements, parliamentary compromises concluded between the revolutionary party and the social democracy serve, as a rule, to the advantage of the social democracy. Practical agreements for mass action, for purposes of struggle are always of use to the revolutionary party. The Anglo-Russian Committee was an impermissible type of block of two leaderships on one common political platform, vague, deceptive, binding no one to any sort of action. The maintenance of this block at the time of the General Strike, when the General Council assumed the role of strike-breaker, signified on the part of the Stalinists, a policy of betrayal.

No common platform with the social democracy, or with the leaders of the German trade unions, no common publication, no common action, no common life and death for the working class. We must force the Social Democracy into a Block Against the Fascists

Communism or Fascism in Germany?

We cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of the developments that are now unfolding in the class struggle in Germany to paraphrase the warnings contained in the recent studies of comrade Trotsky: Unless the leaders of the Communist Party of Germany make a sharp turn away from their present attitude, the fate not only of the German revolution but of the international working class will be catastrophically determined for a long time to come. It is toward the end of imposing the execution of this turn that every class conscious worker, every Communist militant, and above all the fighter in the Left Opposition, must direct all energies at the present moment. Everywhere, at every meeting, in every revolutionary organization, the workers must be made aware of the terrific situation which is being created. Every opportunity must be taken to arouse the Communist workers in particular to the need of acting as revolutionists, that is, of intervening in the spirit of internationalism, of demanding that the course of the German Communists shall be steered towards victory over Fascism instead of towards an ignominious defeat and annihilation.

The official Stalinist press, with that national self-centeredness which has characterized it in recent years, pays little or no attention to the German events. Brief and boastful dispatches, dealing with trifling episodes, are their sole contribution to the burning problems that cry out for solution. True to all the best traditions and teachings of revolutionary Marxism, we, on the other hand, are putting the question as it must be put if victory and not defeat is to be the outcome of the stirring battles that are imminent in Germany.

This second contribution to the question by comrade Trotsky which is printed here is not our first word and will not be our last. Every opportunist, every revolutionary worker concerned with the triumph of our great cause, will henceforward place all emphasis on the subject which is so richly and so instructively illuminated by our exiled leader. The task of defending and advancing the interests of the militant proletariat has fallen once more to the little group of Marxists organized in our ranks. Great historical battles, like the Russian revolution, and now like the German struggle, are infallible touchstones. Let us prove equal to the test.

be sure, it is painful to have to argue such A. B. C. questions. I t is said, very sad indeed, when musicians like Remmele, instead of distinguishing between the keys, stamp with their boots on the keyboard.

It is not a Question of the Workers Who Have Already Left the Social Democracy But of Those Who Still Remain With It.

The thousands upon thousands of Noskes, Weills, Hilferdings, prefer, in the last analysis, Fascism to Communism. But for that they must once and for all tear themselves loose from the workers. Today this is not yet the case. Today the social democracy as a whole, with all its internal antagonisms, is forced into sharp conflicts with the Fascists. Our task consists of taking advantage of these conflicts and not of uniting the antagonists against us.

The front must be directed against Fascism at the present time. And this common front of direct struggle against Fascism, involving the entire proletariat, must be utilized in the flank attacks against the social democracy, which are for all that no less effective.

It is necessary in fact, to show complete readiness to make a block with the social democrats against the Fascists in all cases in which they will accept a block. To say to the social democratic workers: "Throw your leaders aside and join our 'non-party' united front", means to add just one more hollow phrase to a thousand others. It is necessary to be able to tear the workers away from their leaders in reality. But reality today is—the struggle against Fascism. There are and doubtless will be social democratic workers who are prepared to fight hand in hand with the Communist workers against the Fascists, regardless of the desires or even against the desires of the social democratic organizations. With such progressive elements it is obviously necessary to establish the closest possible contact. At the present time, however, they are not great in number. The German worker has been raised in the spirit of organization and of discipline. This has its strong as well as its weak sides. The overwhelming majority of the social democratic workers will fight against the Fascists, but—for the present at least—only together with their organizations. This stage cannot be skipped. We must aid the social democratic workers by deeds—in his new and extraordinary situation—in testing the value of their organizations and leaders at this time, when it is a matter of average social democratic worker—can say to himself: What the Communists propose is completely indispensable in the struggle against Fascism. On this basic condition it is possible to pull the social democratic workers along with us by our example and to criticize their leaders who will inevitably serve as a check and a brake. Only in this way is victory possible.

A Good Quotation from Lenin.

The present day epigones, that is, the thoroughly bad disciples of Lenin, like to fill up their gaps on every occasion that offers itself with—often entirely irrelevant—quotations. "For the Marxists, the question is not decided by a quotation but by means of a correct method. If one is guided by correct methods, it is not hard to also find the fitting quotations. After I had drawn the above analogy with the Kornilov insurrection, I said to myself: We can probably find a theoretical explanation for our block with the conciliators in the struggle against Kornilov, in Lenin. And actually, here is what I found in the second part of volume XIV of the Russian edition, in a letter of Lenin to the Central Committee, written at the beginning of September, 1917:

"Even at the present it is not our duty to support the Kerensky Government. That would be unprincipled. Someone asked: then we are not to fight against Kornilov? Naturally, we are. But that is not one and the same thing. There is a limit to this. It is being transgressed by many Bolsheviks who fall into "conciliationism" and allow themselves to be driven by the current of events.

"We shall fight, we do fight against Kornilov but we do not support Kerensky, we are uncovering his weaknesses. The distinction is very delicate, but highly important, and must not be forgotten. "Wherein does the change of our tactics, after the Kornilov insurrection, consist?"

"In this, that the forms of struggle against Kerensky vary. Without diminishing our hostility against him even by one note, without taking back one word from what we have said against him, without rejecting the task of overthrowing Kerensky, we say: We must calculate the moment, we will not overthrow Kerensky at present. We approach the question of the struggle against him differently and namely: by explaining the weaknesses and vacillations of Kerensky before the people. (who are fighting against Kornilov)".

We are proposing nothing different from this: complete independence of the Communist organizations and press, complete freedom of Communist criticism, the same for the social democracy and the trade unions. To allow the freedom of the Communist Party to be limited (for example, in the manner of the entrance into the Kuo Min Tang) only despicable opportunists are capable of. Our place is not among them.

There is nothing to take back from our criticism of the social democracy. Nothing to forget of all that has been. The entire historical account, including the account for Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg will be presented in time, as we Russian Bolsheviks also presented it finally to the Mensheviks and Social Revolutionaries as a general accounting for the baiting, slander, imprisonment and murder carried on against workers, soldiers and peasants.

But we presented our general account to them months after we had utilized the partial accounting between Kerensky and Kornilov, between the "democrats" and the Fascists—and at that in order to repel the Fascists with all the more certainty. Only thanks to this circumstance, were we able to be victorious.

When the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany adopts the position expressed in the lines of Lenin quoted above, the entire approach to the social democratic masses and the trade union organizations will change with one blow: Instead of the articles and speeches which are convincing only to those people who are already convinced without them, the agitators will find a common language with new hundreds of thousands and millions of workers. The differentiation within the social democracy will proceed in rapid tempo. The Fascists will soon begin to feel that their tasks consist not only of defeating Bruening, Braun and Weill, but in taking up the open struggle against the entire working class. On this plane, a deep differentiation will inevitably begin within Fascism. Only by this road is victory possible.

But it is necessary to desire this victory. In the meantime, there are among the Communist functionaries many cowardly careerists and bureaucrats who hold on to their little posts, to their income and more than that,—in their skins, very dearly. These creatures are inclined to sprout ultra-radical phrases underneath which is concealed a wretched and despicable fatalism. "Without a victory over the social democracy it is impossible to strike against Fascism", say such terrible revolutionaries, and for this reason . . . they are getting ready their passports.

Worker-Communists, you are hundreds of thousands, millions, you cannot leave for anywhere; there are not enough passports for you. Should Fascism achieve power it will ride over your skulls and spines like a frightful tank. Your salvation lies in merciless struggle. And only unity in struggle with the social democratic workers can bring victory. Make haste, worker-Communists, you have very little time left.

Bankers and Jobless Relief

The Tammany Government Machine Is Whipped into Line

For many years, the large banking interests, reported to be led by J. P. Morgan, have been attempting to force through a higher fare on the New York City subway systems (I. R. T. and B. M. T.). All the methods so typical of modern business practice have been used in their endeavor. For many years the people of this city have been bombarded with statistics as to how they would benefit by a higher fare, with a complete tabulation of the fares paid in other cities, of the relationship between the standard of living and the price paid for a subway ride, etc., etc. Now a final effort is being made this time, after all the years of preparation, the workers of the city can already begin to discern the smaller slot of the turnstile made to accommodate a thin ten cent piece.

All the subways in the city were built by the city government. After completing them, they were turned over to the private companies for operation. The important provisions of the contracts were: (1) the right of the city to recapture after due notice, and with due compensation; (2) the five cent fare; (3) the payment to the city of certain sums for its original cost—the payments to begin only after a minimum profit had been set aside for the company.

Increased Fare Fight

It was not many years after the original contracts had been drawn up, before the companies began to fight for an increase in the fare. It must be understood that the clause pertaining to part of the profit to the city was easily done away with. The individual capitalist never cares to share his profits with anybody else, even in his own class. Subsidy companies were organized, enormous rentals paid for property leased—all for the purpose of keeping the rate of profit well below that minimum above which part of the profit would have to be shared with the city government. This they have succeeded in doing to a great extent.

As regards raising the subway fare the task was a more difficult one. No political grouping dared take up the bankers' proposal. The issue might have been great enough to swamp any political machine out of office. The bankers bided their time; now they are ready to strike.

The bankers against the Tammany machine! How paradoxical this sounds. Yet there is an element of truth in it. The Tammany politician looks upon the taxes paid into the city treasury as rightfully belonging to him. During times of prosperity the actual business men, real estate owners and bankers of the city raise no violent protest against "normal graft". After all, the Tammany machine is behaving rather well in keeping down the workers and protecting private property. However, during times such as the present, we begin to see strong protests being raised against the grafting politician, who continues to handle the "public funds" as he was taught to by his predecessors.

Cutting Down Relief

It is the bankers and large industrialists, however, who have the final say in this squabble for the diminished booty. Curtail expenses; decrease the budget. This is their war cry. Bond flotations, their weapon. The city administrations are quickly brought into line. The first thing to be chopped off is anything but the most meager sort of unemployment relief. Detroit, where some in the local government "held out" for a little better relief, was soon brought into line. The New York banks have now refused to float the necessary bond issues to tide the city over its temporary deficit.

New York City is at present feeling the lash of the whip held by the Morgans and Otto Kahn's. The whole thing started with a law that forbids the comptroller (treasurer) of the city to sell any short term bonds below par, or at a rate of interest higher than six percent. Ordinarily, should New York City bonds fall a little below par, the comptroller can raise the interest rate on the issue to be floated, thus enabling him to sell them at or above par. The city government is constantly borrowing on short term loans to tide it over until the taxes fall due. Last September the city borrowed at an interest rate of less than two percent. In the middle of December the rate to the city, for a flotation during that month, was five and one half percent, bringing it dangerously near to the 6% limit. During the past few weeks however, the New York City bonds have been depressed heavily. They are now selling below par. One need not look far for the guilty one. Short term government bonds usually remain in the direct control of the bankers. The city now needs $90,000,000 to cover its current expenses. The bankers have agreed to advance the money (float the bond issue) only if—the city agrees to curtail expenses.

The first thing hit at was the "home relief agencies". Part of the $90,000,000 was to go for the unemployed, "relief". Already, the stations have shut down, leaving the almost 1,000,000 unemployed here, with no aid whatsoever.

The Bankers' Idea

The bankers have a second idea in mind; they were quite frank about it—put all city enterprises on a paying basis, raise the fare on the subways. Now their time has arrived. Those who pay the fiddler call the tune. The tune is to have as its only note the clink of a ten cent piece.

The approach that will be made we might even try to predict. The politicians who have the "interests of the people" at heart—were forced to accept the increased fare by the bad bankers, who threatened to cut off the unemployment relief. Furthermore, they will say, the city as a whole will benefit, for they say nothing at the present about recapturing the lines. The probability is for a rise in the fare, followed not by a taking over by the city of the existing lines, but rather by the handing over to the old companies of the new subway built.

This is the picture of capitalist government; a sewer of vice, graft, intrigue and counter-intrigue. Only a working class revolution can sweep away the whole rotten mess.

QUESTIONS AND DISCUSSION

ADMISSION: 25 Cents

Unemployed Workers Admitted Free

Auspices: New York Branch Communist League of America (Opposition)

Is Stalin Preparing New 1923 in Germany?

What is happening in Germany? What is the position of the Fascists? Where does the German Communist Party stand and what does it propose to do?

These questions, of such vital importance to the militant working class, and an answer to which it cannot even expect to find in the capitalist press, it now also fails to find where they should be: in the columns of the official Communist press.

The Advance of the Fascists

The Fascists continue to make rapid progress which is compelling recognition from all the sections of the bourgeoisie. The Hitlerites gain in arrogance with every new accession of strength. Bruening is finally compelled to bring into his councils the Austrian adventurer and beg him to return from the Reichstag which the blackshirts left, so that a presidential election may be avoided by an arbitrary decree to hold over Hindenburg at least until the "present disturbed situation is calmed". And Hitler, grown more cocksure with his recent successes, refuses the outstretched palm, and together with Hugenburg makes clear the determination of the Fascists to press forward until the issue is joined decisively.

Hitler does not merely have his heart set upon the conquest of power—the aim of every class party—but feels that the moment is swiftly approaching when the die will be cast. Bolshevism or Fascism—there are no other ways out for Germany right now. Towards socialist emancipation or black, long-enduring reaction—no other road is open out of Germany's present impasse. And while Hitler presses forward, the leaders of the German Communist Party are buying into the future by providing themselves with passports and visas for a quick departure when the storm breaks loose!

Bruening is giving ground to the Fascists. The social democrats, by their despicable cowardice, by their disarming of the workers, are leaving the doors wide open to the Hitlerites. The latter have thus far received no decisive check; on the contrary, their ranks are approaching a point in strength where no further gain can be expected by "legal" methods, where the unceasing conflict of interests must come to a violent solution.

And what does the Communist party say? What is it doing? From the Daily Worker, one learns absolutely nothing on these points. Every few days an inch or two of type is thrown into its columns to inform the reader that the German party has formed a few more nuclei and gained a few more hundred members. But from its columns not even the most careful reader can glean the fact that the fate of Germany is now hanging in the balance; not only of Germany, but of Europe.

New York Banquet Feb. 6

To Greet «Unser Kampf» and Three Returned Comrades

Arrangements are now being made for a banquet in New York on Saturday, February 6, which every Left wing militant will want to attend. The banquet, given by the Communist League (Opposition), will be a joint affair with all our Jewish comrades and friends, for the purpose of greeting the first issue of Unser Kampf (Our Struggle), official organ of the Left Opposition in the Yiddish language, and of welcoming back three of our leading comrades who have just returned and who will speak at the banquet. They are comrades Albert Grotzer, who has just returned from a trip to Europe during which he stayed for a number of weeks with comrades Trotsky at Kadikoy; Arne Swaback, who has just returned to New York with an enthusiastic report of the growing strength and influence of the Left Opposition throughout the country wherever he had meetings on his lecture tour; and Max Shachtman, who has come back from a trip to Spain, England and France. All these comrades will give their impressions of what is going on in the various parts they visited and the banquets will find it of tremendous interest.

Definite arrangements for the hall and the program have not yet been completed, but all friends of the Left Opposition in New York are urged to keep Saturday, February 6 open on their calendar. Further details will appear in the Militant—watch for them.

Japs Subsidize Russian Whites

Hire Semenov, Notorious Cossack Adventurer in Mongolian Drive

The Chamberlain incident has been officially closed. Though reluctant at first, the Japanese government has finally bowed in apology to the all-powerful American imperialism. To be sure, the conflict of imperialist interests in the Far East is by no means over. There is a good deal of bickering going on around the proposed invocation of the Nine Power Treaty by the United States and the Japanese are just as alert as before on that point.

The Nine Power Treaty is supposed to guarantee the "administrative integrity" of China and through that, the policy of the "open door" to all the Western Powers. Against the contention of the Americans that by their invasion they are transgressing the provisions of that treaty, the Japanese reply that quite on the contrary, their sole aim of intervening in Manchuria is just precisely to preserve that "administrative integrity" of the country and to make the policy of the open door secure! Active, aggressive interest in the Japanese adventure is flagging for the moment. But the Nipponese are hardly started in their march. Instead of adventures with peasant armies, the Chinese Communists must concentrate on rallying the city proletariat without which it will not be able to crush the Kuo Min Tang and successfully drive out the imperialist invaders.

At one point of the process now unfolding, the interests of the Chinese masses and those of Soviet Russia will reveal their close interconnection with especial sharpness. To face such a situation confidently, it is necessary to boast less and to pay more attention to the actual course of development of the struggle.

Having pretty firmly established their hegemony by means of puppet governments in Manchuria, the Mikado's generals are slowly but consistently forging ahead, in the direction of the Great Wall on the one hand, and in that of Jehol and the other Mongolian provinces, on the other. Due to the interference of the other capitalist governments, the Japs have not been able to increase their reinforcements in Manchuria as rapidly and as freely as they would like. Consequently they have been suffering considerable losses as a result of the inevitable and severe guerrilla warfare carried on more or less successfully by the natives in a land unfamiliar and hard Military campaign, the Japanese government is clearly keeping an eye on the possibilities that might offer themselves to anti-Soviet moves in the near future.

The immediate objective of this new alignment will no doubt be the subjugation of all of Mongolia under the Japanese yoke. The link between the present Jap expedition and their future designs is the People's Republic of Mongolia, a territory on which the Ataman is already prepared to advance.

Developments in the Orient almost always bear a slow and drawn out character broken by violent jerks. But eruptions of a political character are not subject to conditions of the soil. And these self-same slow processes in the Japanese-Chinese-Soviet tangle are indisputably generating just such an eruption in the immediate future.

For the working class to meet such an event adequately it is absolutely necessary to continue to stress the community of interests between the Soviet Union, the world proletariat and the oppressed colonial peoples. The greatest watchfulness is required of the Soviet government to maneuver for the foreign invaders.

The Daily Worker refers to these bands of guerrilla fighters as "Red partisan detachments" in connection also with high-sounding reports of more sweeping victories by the Chinese "Red Army". What greater proof the Stalinists have for this contention than for the contention—for example—that Father Cox's "army" represented the American unemployed we do not know. But then again, irresponsible and lavish boasting has ever been the bane of unprincipled political groups and of the Stalinized Comintern in particular. How sincere and interested workers are to be able to distinguish between friend and foe, between progress and retreat, how judge on the basis of experience what their revolutionary tasks are, the bureaucrats of the official Communist party and their confusing press are very little concerned about. As they say, so will they reap.

Semenov At Work

Harnessed by the difficulties on their path the Japanese are resorting to other methods. A dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune on January 12 reports that the notorious Russian White Guard general, Gregory Semenov is engaged in a movement to "effect the independence of the vast territory of inner Mongolia with the sanction of Japan". The dispatch says further that Ataman Semenov "is known to have received pay from the Japanese for several years". The Cossack general claims he can raise an army of 50,000 former czarist troops as well as 100,000 Mongolian cavalrymen.

Condemn M. N. Roy to Exile

Manabendra Nath Roy, Right wing Communist affiliated to the Brandler group internationally has been condemned by the British imperialists in India to 12 years of deportation to a penal colony for "waging war against the king". The imperialist knot is determined to insure its holders against the seething revolt of the Indian masses no matter in what channels it flows.

Unbridgeable differences separate ourselves, the International Left Opposition from the Right wing liquidators of Communism. But we do not for one minute hesitate to aid in their defense when they are under attack from the open class enemy.

Stalinists Disrupt Mooney Confab

The apathy which prevails in the Illinois coal fields has been lifted to some extent by the campaign under way to demand the release of Tom Mooney. For this issue, the miners are evincing a readiness to struggle. Conferences have been organized in Staunton and Belleville. Plans are being laid and pushed for conferences in other mining centers.

These conferences are largely the result of the efforts of local militants cooperating with the St. Louis branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition). The line of these conferences is based upon Mooney's August 20 appeal and the Opposition's endorsement of this appeal (Militant, 9-5-1931). It stresses the united front as the key to the problem of uniting the workers in a struggle to force Mooney's release and the release of all class war prisoners.

The Opposition delegates fight resolutely in these conferences for this policy. All attempts to exclude the I. L. D., the C. P., and the party organizations are resisted by our delegates. On the other hand, our delegates, while supporting the party's resolutions and themselves introducing resolutions against the Illinois criminal syndicalism law, are equally resolute in fighting the attempts of the Stalinists to divert the conferences along the lines of a fight against criminal syndicalism in general.

What has been the party's policy in these conferences? Caught unawares by their organization, the Stalinists limited their participation to long-winded speeches and general attacks upon all non-Communists and especially against the "counter-revolutionary" Trotskyists. But this policy acted as boomerang. Their slander discredited only themselves and by contrast with the policy, sincerity and activity of our delegates, increased the prestige of the Opposition in the eyes of the miners. It goes without saying that we use the advantage which accrues to us to redeem from discreditation the ideas of Communism.

After several months of their futile policy, the Stalinists realized that more "decisive" measures were required to wreck the campaign and to undo what had already been accomplished. On Sunday, December 27, they descended on the second session of the Staunton conference en masse. They packed the conference with delegates mobilized from Springfield, East St. Louis, and even Chicago. On one pretext after another they interrupted the proceedings with their irrelevant speeches and slander. The A. F. of L. delegates voted with their feet. Delegate after delegate left. The result is best expressed perhaps in a letter from one of the local militants who has participated in all the struggles of the Illinois miners since before the war.

"It was either we control or we smash... I don't believe that more than one local remained in the meeting. I too left in disgust." (Why this militant and thousands more are not in the ranks of the Communist movement, and more specifically in the party, is all too clear.)

The plan for protest meetings which the conference's Executive Committee worked out, was killed. The conference in Staunton is now a shred. The miners have turned their backs on it. Whether it can be revived is a question. The Opposition must and will attempt it. There is no other road except to condemn Mooney to lifelong imprisonment. The Opposition will continue to fight for a united front, with the I. L. D., the party and all Left wing organizations included. What will be the policy of the party? Will the party rank and file continue to tolerate this policy of slander and wreckage?

Trotsky's 'History' to Be Out Soon

We have just been informed that the first volume of the "History of the Russian Revolution", by comrade Leon Trotsky will be off the press and ready for sale on February 27. This gigantic work written by the organizer of the insurrection will be complete in two volumes, the second of which will appear about the 1st of June of this year.

Volume one begins with the February revolution and deals with the period up to June 1917. The second volume continues from this period up to and through the October insurrection and the Bolshevik seizure of power. The books approximately 500 pages each, will contain many photographs and maps. Max Eastman translated both volumes from the Russian. They are published by Simon and Schuster Company and will sell for $4.00 a volume or both for $7.50.

Marine Defense Meet

Hundreds Gather to Protest «Dynamite Plot» Frame-Up

On Thursday evening, January 7, a mass meeting in defense of Jack Soderberg, Thomas Bunker and William Trajer, victims of the harbor bosses' "dynamite plot" frame-up was held at Webster Hall. Over 500 workers attended the meeting, which was held under the auspices of the Marine Workers Defense Committee.

For the first time in years, New York workers belonging to various political tendencies met together, swayed by a feeling of genuine working class solidarity in the face of the vicious class enemy.

Comrade James P. Cannon, of the Communist League of America (Opposition) was the first speaker at the meeting at which Carter Hudson, chairman of the Marine Workers Defense Committee presided. Comrade Cannon eloquently presented the case of three defendants, pointed out the political background and the purposes behind this latest attack of the capitalist class and appealed to the workers present to support the Marine Workers Defense Committee and its efforts to repel the designs of the bosses in this case as in others by a frank and real united front.

Other speakers included A. J. Muste, of the Conference of Progressive Labor Action, who pledged the support of his organization to the defense and its willingness to cooperate with the Committee; Ben Gitlow of the Lovestone group, who made an appeal for funds for the defense; Walter Starret of the Road to Freedom Anarchist group and Carlo Tresca, editor of Il Martello, who cited similar frame-up cases in the history of the American working class.

All speakers were well received. Despite the manifold political shades and colors, all appeared to be united to prevent the capitalist class from taking advantage of the dissensions within the working class for their own ends. The meeting represents a commendable attempt to close the ranks in warding off the blows of government oppression of workers and workers' institutions. As such it will undoubtedly call forth more and bigger meetings and manifestations of the same sort in the future.

The official Communist party and the I. L. D. were conspicuous by their absence. But many rank and file party comrades sat in the audience. The absolute necessity of action in cases such as that of the three marine workers will not fail to awaken the workers, Communist and non-Communist, to proletarian solidarity. We hope that rank and file pressure will lead the party and the I. L. D. to realize the mistake of their passivity in this case quickly. For the sake of the working class as a whole, as well as for that of the party. Such mistakes are dearly paid for. The force of united working class defense is irresistible. It is bound to overcome all obstacles.

The first Marine Workers' Defense meeting has started the drive. It is up to every class conscious worker to contribute his bit to the fight for the release of Soderberg, Bunker and Trajer. Let no one stand aside.

ROSA LUXEMBURG

On the Anniversary of Her Assassination by the German Social Democrats

A generation of Communists standing on the shoulders of Lenin needs little originality to detect the theoretical shortcomings of Luxemburgism. But history is something more than a factional football. Memorable in dialectic and intensity, the struggle of Rosa Luxemburg against the opportunism of the most powerful party machine in pre-war Social Democracy has indisputably entered the life-stream of the Communist International.

Rosa Luxemburg never ceased to collaborate with the Polish movement from which she sprang, returning to her native Warsaw during the revolution of 1905. But as well as formative influence, her main sphere of activity was the German Social Democracy in whose problems she first intervened on the occasion of the revisionist offensive on Marxism.

Imperialism and Social Democracy

Its state unification achieved, Germany in common with Western capitalism, after 1870 experienced a phase of expansion due to the opening of the world market and colonial exploitation. As a result, the bourgeoisie could profitably pursue the strategy of concessions to the upper crust of the working class. The Social Democracy had never been altogether free of an element of petty-bourgeois illusion; at the union of the Eisenach and Lassalle factions in 1875 Marx's criticism of the Gotha program fell on deaf ears. Later the Erfurt Congress (1891) did adopt a program which though defective especially in its political demands, was generally speaking a recognition of scientific socialism. Once the repressive anti-Socialist law of Bismarck collapsed, a Right wing, confounding the interests of the proletariat as a class with the favored position of the labor aristocracy, began to maneuver for "practical politics." The pioneer of this tendency was Vollmar, whose pamphlet "The Isolated Socialist State" (1878) unmistakably anticipated the Stalin theory of socialism-in-one-country. Vollmar combined nationalism with reformism, his agrarian proposals stirring Engels's deepest indignation. In Vollmar's wake, the Schippels and the Helms advocated the voting of military budgets, protective tariffs and the like.

Bernstein's Revisionism

The classic exponent of revisionism was Edward Bernstein, whose "Socialist Fundamentals" (1899) was a complete rupture with Marxism and a confession of the faith of the Fabians. Within the Marxian breast dwelt two souls, he contended, the one evolutionary-reformist, the other revolutionary-utopian. Bernstein undertook to purge Marx of the unscientific entanglements of Hegel and the political romanticism of Blanqui. For dialectical materialism he substituted the categorical imperative of Kant; the labor theory of value he supplemented with the marginal utility of Boehm-Bawerk. The contradictions of capitalism do not lead to economic catastrophe and social revolution. The growing middle class, the democratization of capital and diffusion of ownership by the joint stock corporation are tendencies to disprove the prognosis that the concentration of industry is accompanied by the centralization of wealth. The beautiful credit system, the efficient trusts and modern communication facilities eliminate the cyclical crisis. In a word, here is an idyll of an organic capitalism painlessly evolving towards socialism, over an unending road of reforms, under the spell of a social-democratic majority in the Reichstag. The dictatorship of the proletariat is an apocalyptic vision. The movement is everything—the goal is nothing.

Bernstein's sources are obvious, a re-visionary hash of Louis Blanc, Proudhon, Lassalle and the miserable "Katheder-sozialisten." While Kautsky, the official guardian of orthodoxy still maintained an ambiguous silence, Rosa Luxemburg forcefully insisted that theory and practice could not be divorced without fatal consequences and that revisionism would replace class struggle by class collaboration. If goal without movement is utopian, movement without goal is surrender to bourgeois liberalism. The every-day demands have significance only as they are linked up with the conquest of political power. Reforms are by-products of class struggle; they cannot basically change the character of the relations of production. So far from being the political lever of socialism, parliamentarism is the historical form of the class rule of the bourgeoisie in its struggle with feudalism, and is already decadent. The workers must rely on their own mass action. The whole economic lore of Bernstein is the generalized view of imperialism. Parliamentary cretinism and the inevitability of gradualness have been dealt shattering blows by the epoch of wars of revolutions. Between economics and politics there is no automatic reflex action. Ideology is only one of the elements of the superstructure. When she wrote "Opportunism has been knocked on the head," Rosa Luxemburg was unduly sanguine. The huge bureaucracy of the party, trade unions, cooperatives proved decisive. At every important turn, the Central Committee reigned but the Right ruled. At successive Congresses, the Right wing receded formally but in fact retained their positions. Marx and Engels had predicted that a split between the middle class and proletarian elements was inevitable but it was in Russia under Lenin, and not at the Dresden Congress that this operation was executed. Waging her battles against such an apparatus, Rosa tended to identify centralization with opportunism, and to depend on the elemental mass

The Precious Heritage of Rosa

The years that pass by since the cruel assassination which deprived us of her active aid do not serve to dim the luster of the great revolutionist that was Rosa Luxemburg. Her unflickering devotion to the historical interests of the proletariat sprang not only from the depths of her character but also from her exceptional understanding of the teachings of Marx and Engels. No mere closet ideologist, she flung herself into every battle of the German proletariat, one of which brought about her premature death. But she had already left more than enough behind her to insure an evergreen memory for the future. From what she taught so brilliantly by word and deed, the revolutionary movement still has much to learn, however the Marxian today may challenge some of the views she stood for. But this challenge will always be made soberly, objectively, and with the greatest regard for time and place. The genuine Marxian will be repelled by the dispiriting slanders of Rosa which are passed off as "criticism" by those who, while arrogating unearned authority to themselves, have not, in reality, the least right to reproach the one who at all times stood so far above them. We mean Stalin, who just recently sought to besmirch Rosa in the interests of his factional position, and Kaganovich and more recently the repulsive turncoat, Radek. Their calumnies make an objective estimation of Rosa's role more timely than ever. Maurice Spector's contribution in this issue has been conceived in this sense. —Ed.

viewpoint of the individual capitalist. The new developments in capitalism—credit, combination, etc.—do not cure but intensify the basic contradictions of anarchic capitalist production.

In pitiless judgment on revisionism, theory has been reinforced by Time, the greatest revolutionary of all. On the very heels of Bernstein's smug evangel burst the crisis of 1900, to be followed by another in 1907 and still another in 1914. As we write, the world is staggering under one of the gravest industrial and commercial crises in capitalist history, with the United States, the model country of trusts and efficiency, as deeply involved up to the hilt. During the late lamented "new economic era," bourgeois economists, journalists, engineers attempted to revive Bernstein's illusions in substance, if without their philosophical garnish, on American soil. "The most fundamental stabilization," wrote Professor Commons, "has been that of credit and prices through the cooperation of the banks organized in the Federal Reserve System." The American working class would derive its salvation from increased savings, life insurance and employee stock ownership. "The labor banks," declared the economic wizard Carver, "constitute the only revolutionary movement in the world." The Baltimore and Ohio Plan of union-management cooperation was tantamount to "industrial democracy."

The Struggle Against Opportunism. There is no doubt that theoretically revisionism was bankrupt from the outset. It completely failed to estimate the real qualitative changes that were taking place in capitalist society with the ad-movement spontaneously to correct the course of the party. "The only part to be played in the Social Democracy by the so-called leaders is that of the explanation to the masses of their function in history." Lenin too emphasized that the masses must gain their own political experience, that for victory the vanguard must muster millions but the role of the revolutionary social-democrat was that of a modern Jacobin bound up with the organized proletariat. Rosa relied too much on process, and tended to underestimate the importance of organization. It cannot be doubted that the conditions of the development of the Russian Revolution necessarily contributed to give Lenin his unparalleled insight into the problems of Marxism, itself the product of a revolutionary period. It must be accounted a defect, for example, of Rosa Luxemburg's polemics with the revisionists that she did not, in reply to Bernstein, take up the problem of state-power. Plechanov raised the question of the dictatorship of the proletariat at Brussels and again at the Amsterdam Congress (1904) but the Second International as a whole, and Kautsky its principal theoretician, completely failed to realize the significance of the problem. The reconstruction of the doctrine of Marx, based on the experiences of the Paris Commune, only the international revolutionary movement can and will solve the problems of the working masses. At the same time I believe we can and should unite for the defense of the Kentucky miners, as of all other political prisoners in the U. S. It took quite some effort on the part of myself and my co-delegate to induce the membership, because of the objection that there are too many defense organizations, to send delegates to this conference. They finally agreed to send us as observers and to bring back a report. Unless a sincere and honest effort should be made on the part of the leadership of these different defense organizations to consolidate all the forces for the defense of political suffer and the rank and file of the labor movement will not stand for that much longer."

How to Make the Kentucky Miners' Defense Really Effective

A conference for the defense of the Kentucky miners now on trial was held on January 6 at the Labor Temple. It was called by the General Defense Committee of the I. W. W. and called to order by a representative of this committee who appointed a chairman. The latter in turn called for the election of credentials and resolutions committees. While these committees were in session, the conference was addressed by James O'Neal of the Socialist party, Muste of the C. P. U. A. and a representative of the I. W. W.

The report of the credentials committee followed the speeches of the above gentlemen. Strange as it may seem, the Workmen's Circle branches predominated. Very few unions, about 6 or 7 in all, were represented. The other delegates represented either educational organizations or political groups like the S. P., the I. W. W., Industrial Union League, the Road to Freedom, etc. One of the delegates, representing a Workmen's Circle branch, wanted to know "why a section of the labor movement that has a big influence among the working masses, especially in New York, is not represented here at all." In answer to a question as to whom he meant he named the International Workers' Order, the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union, the I. L. D., the Communist party and its factions, the Communist League (Opposition) and the Lovestone group.

A Working Class Reply to Splitsters

"We did not invite any organization that will introduce friction into the conference," was the reply. Another delegate, also of a W. C. branch, took the floor and stated that "while I represent a fraternal organization and therefore non-political, I believe I speak the mind of the majority of my organization when I say we do not believe any more in the speeches of these 'gentlemen' that have addressed this gathering tonight."

We have seen their comrades in action, like Scheidemann, Noske and Zoergel in Germany, MacDonald in England, as to the destruction of the bourgeois state machine, was the work of Lenin. The Russian Revolution

The Russian revolution of 1905, for the first time since the Commune, shocked the West out of its parliamentary routine. The Russian proletariat marshalled every form of mass action, from the economic strike to armed insurrection. The mass political strike became a central subject of discussion. At first Kautsky welcomed the methods of the Russian revolution and took up a seemingly radical position towards the strike as a weapon in the immediate struggle for power. But when it became a question of applying the lessons of the Russian revolution to the struggle over the Prussian franchise he changed his tune. He was now for the old tested tactic of parliamentarism. "The elemental mass movement would produce unpleasant as well as pleasant surprises and development would again assume the catastrophic character of 1789 to 1871." The correct strategy was "attrition," to exhaust the bourgeoisie by trench-warfare.

Rosa Luxemburg's point of departure in these debates was the totality of the class struggle. She refused to recognize the legitimacy of any water-tight compartments between the party and the trade unions. She strenuously resisted the demands of the trade union bureaucracy for the "independence" of the trade unions from the party and their "neutrality" in the political struggle. At the Jena Congress of the Social Democracy it was decided to resort to the general strike if the government sabotaged the issue of the franchise. The reply of the Cologne trade union congress was to prohibit the "propagation and discussion of the general strike." A year later at Mannheim, the Cologne resolution was substantially ratified by the party Congress and the bureaucracy had gained a signal victory.

In the view of Rosa Luxemburg, the centre of gravity of the proletarian struggle lay in mass action, not in parliamentarism. She did not share the reformist conception of Bernstein and Hilferding who approved of the Belgian general strike of 1903 merely because it was an auxiliary action to a parliamentary objective. But once again she could not define the whole problem of the organization of the revolution at the time, and would likely have been regarded as mad or hounded out as anarchist and Blanquist if she had. In the words of Trotsky "a revolutionary general strike that inundates all the banks of bourgeois society became for Rosa Luxemburg a synonym for the proletarian revolution." A general strike does not yet decide the question of power but only raises it. For the seizure of power it is necessary to organize the armed uprising on the basis of the general strike. The danger of revolutionary fatalism, of the "tomorrowing attitude towards the fundamental tasks of the revolution" was exemplified by the Zinoviev-Kamenev-Stalin attitude in the Russian October and the Stalin-Brandier-Thalheimer capitulation to the line of least resistance in the German crisis of 1923. It should be mentioned that Trotsky adds that Rosa left the stage without having said her last word.

It was these discussions of the role of mass action that brought about the definite cleavage between the "Left Radicals" under the leadership of Rosa and the Kautskian Centre at the Magdeburg Congress in 1909. Kautsky openly proclaimed that the main danger in the party was no longer the revisionists but "the rebellious impatience of the extreme Left." (To be concluded.)

The Obsolete Craft System in the Railroad Brotherhoods

The extraordinary importance assumed at the present moment by the situation in the railroad industry makes a survey of the state of the trade union movement in this field of more than usual interest. Conferences continue to be held between the workers' "representatives" and the railroad magnates, and a cleverly organized newspaper agitation is being carried on, with the sole aim of reducing the wages and worsening the conditions of the workers. The problem of resisting this monstrous offensive is unbearably bound up with the question of how things stand in the railroad brotherhoods. In this latter field especially, our comrade A. E., an old militant of the Left wing, is a competent observer. The present article is one of a series which our comrade has promised to contribute.

One of the things which the railroad workers in this country need most is a new trade union structure. The present structural formation of the railroad unions belongs to the stone age of trade unionism. It is the most out-of-date, the most antiquated form of labor organization known.

The railroad workers are at present organized, or rather disorganized, into twenty-one different craft unions, as follows: 1. Engineers; 2. Conductors; 3. Firemen; 4. Brakemen; 5. Switchmen; 6. Telegraphers; 7. Signalmen; 8. Clerks; 9. Boiler-makers; 10. Sheet Metal Workers; 11. Machinists; 12. Carmen; 13. Sectionmen; 14. Stationery Firemen; 15. Train Dispatchers; 16. Sleeping Car Conductors; 17. Longshoremen; 20. Marine Engineers; 21. Masters, Mates and Pilots. The last three belong to the inland and coastwise water transportation in connection with the railroads.

At the head of each one of these 21 useless craft organizations we find literally swarms of overpaid bureaucrats whose combined annual salaries runs into the millions. All Brotherhood journals and magazines, including the Washington weekly, Labor, are under a complete stranglehold of these high salaried officials. The pages of the respective constitutions are littered with gag-laws of every description to protect the officials from organized criticism by the rank and file. These gag-laws are very effective in preventing needed organizational changes which would prove detrimental to the personal of officers' salaries, freedom of expression, etc. The main function of the local lodges is to collect dues and forward them promptly to their respective Grand Lodge Headquarters for enjoyment by the officials.

Bureaucratism and Class Collaboration

As might be expected from the above arrangement these craft officials advocate mutual admiration and cooperation between the representatives of organized capital and themselves as spokesmen for the railroad workers. The present Brotherhood officials know full well that they cannot protest and promote the railroad workers' interests against the well organized employers by keeping the workers divided into twenty-one separate organizations on the railroads. But these officials have allocated to themselves salaries which run from $6,000 to $15,000 a year, plus a most liberal expense account, and their work is easy. Their main tasks are: keep the "Reds" out of the unions; maintain complete control of all mediums of information inside of the Brotherhoods; keep enough gag-laws in the constitutions to forbid all other means of expression by the membership; keep on friendly terms with the railroad officials at the expense of the workers for the privilege of collecting dues from these helpless crafts.

The Brotherhood officials realize that they would not be able to maintain these weak and anemic unions without the consent of the railroad management. Hence the importance of maintaining friendly relations with them. This condition necessarily eliminates all possibility of a well organized struggle for better wages and working conditions, shortening of hours, etc. Strikes are only permitted on small individual roads as a smoke screen of false display of militancy, are called and then forgotten. The M. & N. A.; the Virginian Ry., and the Western Maryland strikes are typical examples of this farcical strike policy. The Watson-Parker Law is a deliberate attempt to abolish strikes altogether and is the fruit of joint action between the Brotherhood officials headed by Robertson and the railroad officials headed by W. W. Atterbury.

In the present move on the part of the railroads to cut wages in order to increase profits, as in 1921, the railroad workers will receive another concrete lesson on the price they have to pay for permitting a lot of overpaid official drones to chain them to an obsolete craft system of organization. (To be continued.)

SWABECK TOUR

SWABECK IN PHILLY

Comrade Arne Swaback spoke here on Jan. 10th. His lecture, "The Economic Crisis and the Left Opposition" was followed with the liveliest interest by the 40 workers comprising the audience. The presence of several C. P. members and sympathizers, as well as a few Lovestoneites, afforded our comrade an opportunity to broaden his subject matter to include all the most essential points of the platform of the Left Opposition. He dealt with the perspectives of the crisis; the effect of U. S. capitalism's home and foreign policy; the necessity of a worker's united front against Fascism in Germany; and reviewed the criticism by the Opposition of the policy pursued by the C. I.

The question period developed some lively discussion. Some of the party members left at this point, probably in fear of being inveigled into a free discussion. The questions covered topics upon which we have differences with the Stalinists and the Lovestoneites. Particular interest and sympathy was shown in our trade union and united front policies by most of the audiences.

This meeting was the first this year of a series of lectures under the auspices of the Philadelphia Branch on problems of the Communist movement, by our leading comrades of the Communist League in the East.

The previous night, a banquet was held as a reception to comrade Swaback. A good time was had by our comrades and friends, who came despite the bad weather. At both the banquet and the lecture a collection was taken to help our work along.

The study class in "Marxism" is proceeding very successfully. A new class "History of the Three Internationals" is being formed and will be conducted by comrade Morgenstern.

SUCCESSFUL PITTSBURGH MEETING

Efforts made by some of the petty bureaucrats of the Pittsburgh party organization to break up the meeting scheduled for comrade Swaback in this city on January 7 came to naught. The meeting was held at a Greek coffee house on Wylie Ave., the time set for 7:30. A good audience appeared among them about a dozen party members led by the Greek fraction who had previously served notice that they would come to break up the meeting.

A few minutes before the appointed hour the Greek fraction organizer took upon himself to open the meeting and to give a lecture. He endeavored to tread very softly on questions of dispute with the Left Opposition, however, struggling hard to emphasize that anyone who did not carry a card in the official Communist party could not speak in the name of Communism. In this manner it was expected to take the meeting away from the Left Opposition but it did not succeed. Rather it became, regardless of the Stalin organizers, a joint discussion affair.

As soon as the Greek party fraction organizer had concluded his speech, comrade Sifakis of the Left Opposition arose introducing the next speaker, comrade Swaback, asking the hearers to devote the same attention to latter. Swaback spoke without the slightest interference. Those who had come with the intention of interfering evidently found it better to listen. After this lecture those party members present asked a number of questions which gave comrade Swaback the opportunity to clarify further the issues of dispute. Meanwhile the Greek party fraction organizer, the leader of the "breaking party" slunk out of the place.

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

Revolt Brewing in India

Ghandi Holds Masses in Check by Reformist Maneuvers

Ghandi, V. Patel, J. Nehru have been arrested by the Indian authorities. As a protest, the cotton, the bullion, the piece goods, the seed and the stock exchanges in Bombay and other cities have been closed. The boycott against British goods is in full swing. Civil disobedience is the slogan of the nationalist leaders.

On the surface, the above incidents give a fairly comprehensive characterization of the present situation in British India. Strikes of workers are, as yet, not on the order of the day. The Hindu hartal or patriotic strike, still dominates the political scene. For the time being, the nationalist bourgeoisie still holds the reins firmly. The revolutionary masses are still spell-bound by the shrewd and soothing voice of the "Mahatma". And it cannot be doubted that the personality of Ghandi still represents an enormous factor in the political life along the Ganges.

A Shrewd Mahatma

In a recent interview with Parisian newspapermen, Ghandi expressed the opinion that in the event of "sudden" emancipation, a free India would not very well be able to dispense with a regular standing army. Yes, the Mahatma said this. The newspapermen showed questions on the saintly man and he answered nearly all with saintly patience and serenity. There was one question, however, which he evaded with the sleekness of an eel. That question was in regard to his attitude toward the Russian revolution. "I am too humble", the Mahatma replied to this question, "to pretend to omniscience. Consequently I must declare that I do not know what to think of the Russian revolution". The "Mahatma" did not appear pleased at all by the suggestion of a comparison between the Indian revolution and the Russian.

Would it be too rash to assume on the basis of all this that the great principle of Oriental ethics—non-violence—is in the last analysis, only a cloak for the fear the Hindu bourgeoisie has of the armed masses? Hardly. The Russian bourgeoisie (and the Spanish bourgeoisie in its turn today) shouted at the top of its lungs that its revolution was "bloodless" and covered its fear of the people with less effective, to be sure, but nevertheless just as guarded ideological ceremonies. The Russian bourgeoisie was faced with war times, that accelerated the march of events and with a resolute and firmly established working class party. Its end came rather swiftly. The course of the Indian bourgeoisie, which kowtows no less to the foreign imperialists, will probably, considering the times and more than that—the geographical situation of the country—be a much lengthier one.

The colonial character of India makes its revolution dependent to a large extent, upon the attitude, the aid rendered it by the British working class. In the course of events, the attachment between the seasoned proletariat of Great Britain and the youthful proletariat of India, which is historically inevitable, will no doubt develop into the determining influence in that country's future. For the present, however, both the British as well as the Indian workers are still to be found in the background of the scene. The further progress of the German revolutionary movement in Europe and of the Chinese in the Far East will, sooner or later, serve to set the former two into motion.

Signs of Militancy

In the meantime, a few signs of rising militancy are already visible on the periphery of the new movement. At Srinagar, a crowd estimated at 12,000 persons attacked the police station and liberated three prisoners. Despite the manifold assurances by the nationalist leaders that the masses would abstain from violent action, the British police forces have taken all possible precautions. The victory of India, Lord A. Willingdon, has unleashed a savage system of repression all over the country. Police and soldiery have been armed to the teeth. An ordinance has been issued outlawing all meetings of groups of more than five persons. The gentlemanly Willingdon, quite a hand with a cricket bat himself (the papers say) seems of late to have become an enthusiast of the native "lathi", applied by his troops with utter abandon to the skulls and bodies of demonstrators in the public squares. The British soldiery have recently been increased to fully 68,000 men, the native to more than 175,000. They are apparently expecting serious trouble.

Just how soon the activity of the masses will rise above the heads of their nationalist leaders, it is hard to tell. The Communist party, young and weak as a result of the Menshevik policies of Stalin-Bucharin in the Far East up to 1927 and due to the entire loss of revolutionary perspective since, is almost without any influence at all. The Garhi Kamgar textile workers and the railroad workers of the G. I. P., who have already made Indian history in the past, have not yet been heard from. But they are sure to figure more prominently in the near future. The lathi, after all, does not distinguish between the masses, it strikes and hurts them all. But it is not likely that the workers of India will long be fascinated by whatever it is that "Mahatma" Ghandi is spinning—in his cell or out of it. The workers, once they are started, will act, and act forcefully. For the Communists, the present situation in India represents an excellent opportunity to approach the masses, to build up their cadres and to consolidate their influence and their following for the more decisive struggles to come.

The Results of the Toronto Elections

The recent municipal elections held in Toronto have, in the shade of events of the past few months, gained a significance historic in the annals of Canadian elections.

The bourgeois candidates (in civic elections all candidates are "non-partisan"); they do not officially run on a party ticket; all agreed upon the fact that no major issues existed; that whoever was elected to sit at the City Hall would be on a program of better sidewalks, more sidewalks, and the insistence on stringent economy (naturally at the expense of working class relief measures). That there were 50,000 unemployed in the city, well, so long as they were keeping quiet at the soup kitchens and not demanding unemployment relief, they were not an issue. If 6,000 bailiffs' notices of evictions were issued, that was a sign that prosperity was around the corner. Wages being slashed, and factories closing down, throwing workers and their families upon the mercy of charity, that was not an issue for the civic fathers. As long as the working class and the dispossessed elements of the petty bourgeoisie did not organize for the betterment of their conditions, the bourgeoisie were quite content with the status quo, and intended to further confuse the masses with the spirit of civic duty.

The Communist Ticket

But the Dominion and Provincial authorities were more considerate of the interests of the hard working capitalists, and had taken measures a few months before by the arrest of the eight Communist leaders, and their trial and conviction to 5 years in the penitentiary. After overcoming the legal red tape they were released on bail until their appeal, and to the dismay of the authorities Tim Buck was nominated for the Board of Control, and John Boychuck (another of the defendants, with another comrade, were nominated for alderman. The Communist party now being an outlawed organization in Ontario, they ran as candidates of the Toronto Workers' United Front Conference. The main campaign was centered around Buck, the controlship necessitating a city-wide campaign and vote.

Buck, as the Communist candidate, naturally was the only candidate to bring out the working class issues; the need for relief and insurance at the expense of the state, and the fight against Section 98 of the Criminal Code, which suppressed the rights of free speech and assembly. At every election meeting Buck was received with tremendous enthusiasm; a Communist candidate was receiving sympathetic hearings and orations such as the bourgeois candidates did not receive. The press religiously kept a strict silence on the Communist campaign, not a word of publicity did they give it. A contract was entered into with the Daily Star, a Liberal (?) paper, to let Buck speak over its radio station, but after the Star realized they were acting as liberals in allowing this, the contract was immediately broken, the money returned, and an excuse offered that "under the circumstances, etc., etc."

A Safe and Sane Candidate

But there was a "labor" candidate in the field, and a very popular one. The social democracy may be proud of its sons; the Toronto branch, known as James Simpson, and the backing of all the newspapers and he received plaudits from all sections of the capitalist class for his wisdom, and especially his "safe and sane" labor policies. For him but one issue existed—to be re-elected to the Board of Control and taste further of the fruits of office. On the state of the reactionary Orange Order he was first choice. After working his way on the backs of the working class, he was no longer interested in its problems. Backed by a powerful press, and every means of agitation he was sure of election. To offset the influence of the Communist program the bourgeois concentration block put out Simpson as the man to look after their interests during the present period.

Election day, January 1st, was a day as dull and dirty as capitalism itself. A continual rain kept back many people from the polls, and especially destitute workers who could not clothe themselves properly.

Simpson, the labor faker, headed the list. Although the total number of votes polled was lower than last year, the vote of Buck doubled; the reactionary press lamented that "Tim Buck Communist, was the only one of nine candidates who increased his vote over last year. Despite his recent conviction on charges of membership in an illegal association and seditious conspiracy, he polled 5,974 votes, 2941 over his last year's figure of 3,033—an increase of 97 per cent." The two other Communist alderman candidates polled 505 and 758 votes each, both being higher than last year.

The qualifications for voting demanded that one be a tenant or householder; those whose taxes were in arrears were deprived of the privilege of democracy; thus the dispossessed workers were not able to vote. The votes for Tim Buck were votes of protest against capitalist reaction and for immediate unemployment relief. The thousands of people who applauded him, did not all vote for him; it was a spontaneous enthusiasm.

Government Repression in Republican Spain

The repression being carried on by the Republican leaders takes on forms that even Primo de Rivera and Berenguer never dared to resort to. Spaniards are being expelled from Spain. We of the Left Opposition are the favored victims.

A very striking example: Our comrade Jose Ramos Lopez is, to be sure, Spanish—the son of Spanish parents born at Buenos Aires, but a naturalized Spanish citizen. The Argentine police expelled him from that country as a revolutionist and as a Spaniard. Ramos came to Spain, to Sujo to live with his family. He is a Communist and one who stands up for his ideas. First he is arrested at Sujo, then at Cadiz, where he is held a government prisoner for three months. The governor of Cadiz promises him his release on the condition that he return to Sujo. A few days later, several "Civic Guards" and gendarmes come to the prison at six o'clock in the morning and seize our comrade. His protests are of no avail. The governor had promised him his release on that very day. But instead, he is thrown on board the steamer "Uruguay", leaving a few minutes later for the Argentina. No one was informed of anything until our Cadiz comrades came to the prison on their daily visit to comrade Ramos.

The bourgeois, reactionary Republic has committed another abominable crime. What sort of fate will Uriburu have in store for our comrade?

The bourgeois press has refused publication to our protests. The cynicism of the reactionaries is becoming more detestable and more criminal under the Republic than it ever was under the monarchy.

Liberty and Equality Under the Republic

A short time ago, the Spanish Catholics met at Valencia and held a mass meeting and demonstrations against the Republic. The workers who wanted to demonstrate against Catholic and monarchist reaction found the "Republican" authorities on the side of the latter. The Catholics and monarchists can speak and act against the Spanish people, only we are denied the right to propagate our ideas.

In Valencia also, I gave a lecture on December 14, which had been announced in advance. The governor refused permission to announce the meeting as one bearing a political Communist character and it had to be announced as an educational affair. The workers attended en masse. We had excellent success.

Other lectures were organized by the comrades in the various provinces. But when I had completed my lecture in Valencia, I was called before the chief of police who informed me that he would not authorize any more of my lectures and that I had committed an offense comparable to libel against Largo Caballero

Thaelmann's Belated Self-Criticism

The Leader of the German Communist Party «Examines» Some of Its Mistakes

For years the Stalinist Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany has been considering itself as infallible in its political decisions. But since a mistake remains a mistake whether it is recognized or not, the effects of the false line of the party leadership frequently lead to such dangerous moods in the party that it is frequently considered absolutely necessary at the top to undertake a "turn". This is thereupon motivated "theoretically" by the highest instances, and naturally a good deal of noise is made about the "Bolshevik self-criticism" with which it is done. The result which the "theoreticians" of the Central Committee then attain is usually this: The policy of the party leadership is "entirely right, but subordinate party instances have not understood how to carry out the errorless line correctly."

Thaelmann's Self-Criticism

Entirely of this type is the "self-criticism" with which Ernst Thaelmann occupies himself in the November-December double number of the Internationalist, where he writes to "establish a series of ideological deviations and political weakness, aye, even political mistakes in our revolutionary mass work". But in order to avoid even the appearance of wanting to criticize the line of the C. C. itself, he immediately adds that the mistakes were of course not committed by the whole party but were based upon an "insufficient political education of individual comrades and functionaries" or upon an "inadequate comprehension of the decisions adopted at international and German party congresses". These remarks of Thaelmann alone already adequately characterize the type of this "Bolshevik self-criticism".

But let us now examine more closely what the "leader of the C. P. G." says concretely in his article of 30 pages. Thaelmann discovers here that the struggle against the Prussian government has up to now not been conducted sharply enough.

"We must go further beyond this to the declaration that even in the ranks of the revolutionary proletariat, not without our being to blame, there were present at least sub-conscious moods to the effect that Braun-Severing were nevertheless perhaps a 'lesser evil' than a Hitler-Goebbels government in Prussia. Such an influencing of the revolutionary workers by the deceitful social democratic ideology, such remnants of social democratic thought in our ranks, are, however, as we must declare in complete agreement with the decisions of the XI Plenum, the worst danger for the Communist party."

Obviously, therefore, certain C. P. G. comrades arrived at the idea that a Hitler government in Prussia would act in an even more reactionary and anti-working class manner than the then Braun-Severing government. The party comrades in question surely did not mean by this that the S. P. policy of the lesser evil in parliament was correct. But they were of the opinion that the more dangerous enemy today is Hitler and that the party must therefore lead the main attack against him. For Thaelmann, however, such an opinion is "the worst danger for the Communist party!"

Further in the course of his "self-criticism", Thaelmann himself is obliged to admit that in the attitude of the party towards Fascism, great shortcomings came to light. He writes: "We yielded at least in part to the false theory of the 'inevitability' of the Fascist dictatorship under monopoly capitalism, or at all events, we did not sufficiently develop a sufficiently sharp struggle against this false theory, a theory which leads us off the road."

As an example of this, Thaelmann quotes from the September 1931 number of the C. P. G. paper, Der Propagandist, the following passage:

"A social democratic coalition government, which confronted an incapacitated, split-up, confused proletariat, would be a thousandfold greater evil than an open Fascist dictatorship, which came forward against a class conscious proletariat, determined to struggle and united in its mass."

By this is completely confirmed what the Left Opposition and particularly Trotsky have criticized most sharply for months: namely, that there are forces at work in the C. P. G. which not only consider the seizure of power by the Fascists as inevitable, but as downright desirable under certain circumstances.

Minneapolis Open Forum

Among the lecture arranged for forthcoming weeks at the Minneapolis Forum are the following:

All meetings, unless otherwise mentioned are at 3 P. M.:

Sunday, January 24, 1932: DEBATE:

"Socialism versus Communism". Speakers: O. P. Victorian, representing the Socialist Party against Carl Cowl representing Communist League of America (Opposition).

Sunday, January 31, 1932: "The Proposed Railroad Wage Reductions". Speaker: C. R. Hedlund.

All these lectures and debates will be held at the Workers Open Forum, 1580 East Franklin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn. The Admission is free.

"That the party leadership is now compelled to come out openly against these ideas only shows the extent to which such defeatist moods were already widespread in the party."

A whole section of Thaelmann's article is concerned with the too well known "theory" of the people's revolution, as invented by the party leadership in connection with the teachings on the "national and social emancipation". These slogans were raised in their day in order to win the petty bourgeois strata for Communism, in connection with which to mention nothing else, it was completely overlooked that the most immediate task of the C. P. G. must be not the winning of the middle classes but the winning of the majority of the proletariat. And it is precisely here that a slogan like that of the "people's revolution" is not only worthless but directly harmful, since it does not sufficiently emphasize the class standpoint.

Thaelmann himself is slowly beginning to perceive this when he writes in his article:

"Only when we win the proletarian majority for Communism can we realize the further tasks of drawing the allies of the proletariat from the middle classes into the anti-capitalist united front and thereby create the premises for the people's revolution of Marx and Lenin. Every smearing up of these fundamentals, every abandonment of the preliminary need of the struggle for our own class is a break with Marxism, a break with Leninism!"

But who raised this "break with Leninism" to the point of a "theory"? Nobody but the Central Committee of the C. P. G. itself, which, for example, in a resolution of January 1931, established the "people's revolution" as the "main strategic slogan of the party". Is it then to be wondered at if subordinate functionaries of the party thereupon apply this slogan as it should be understood according to this C. C. conception? Such a thoroughly good-believer of a functionary was A. E. who wrote, as far back as December 1930, in the paper Der Propagandist that "for the strategy and tactics of the proletarian revolution it is primarily a matter of winning the petty bourgeois strata for the proletarian revolution or at least of neutralizing them."

This was entirely in harmony with the line of the conceptions of the "people's revolution" then advocated by the C. C. and established officially as late as January 1931. Now—Thaelmann needed a whole year for this acknowledgment—it is suddenly established that the quoted conception of A. E. "has nothing more in common with Marxism and Leninism". Which is of course correct to the extent that the corresponding line of the C. C. really had not much more to do with Leninism.

(In passing: For A. E. to be treated as a scapegoat is especially harsh. Alexander Krel was at one time punished as an Oppositionist in Russia. In the German party, after a probation period of a year, he sought to earn his spurs by expressly separating himself from Trotsky's views at every opportunity, most recently in the question of the Spanish revolution. And he is just the one whom the Great Thaelmann has now sought out as the whipping boy!)

Finally, we cannot let pass unchallenged what Thaelmann has to say in his article on the question of individual terror. It would undoubtedly be correct for the C. C. to disassociate itself publicly from individual terror, but it is to fall into the other extreme when Thaelmann writes:

"Those workers who let themselves be misguided by the planned Nazi-provocations by defending themselves with the same methods of individual terror, are moving away, with regard to the methods of the proletarian struggle for freedom, from the fundamentals of Marxism-Leninism."

Taken literally, this means that henceforth the C. P. G. members are to be prohibited even from forcible defense from Fascist assaults. This is going much too far. Terror can only be broken by terror and it is just the "leader of the C. P. G." who should understand that under the conditions created by the Fascist acts of violence, one cannot act in accordance with the principles of the sermon on the mount.

In conclusion, let us point to still another observation Thaelmann made at the end of his lengthy article and which we can join with heartily:

"It appears that in spite of the great successes of our party, its theoretical level, the ideological-political level of our party work, is inadequate, and absolutely requires a fundamental improvement."

But the very next sentence, which qualifies the decisions of the leadership as "unobjectionable and correct", indicates that Thaelmann is not at all the man to undertake a genuine, serious self-criticism. Bureaucratic superficiality and fakers' autocracy are the essence of Thaelmann's article. There can be no talk whatsoever of a turn for the better. Such a one can, in general, not proceed from above; it must result from the pressure of the members themselves. The Left Opposition will support with all its strength every step of the party members in this direction.

DARROW AND THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The withdrawal of Clarence Darrow and Arthur Garfield Hays from all participation in the legal side of the Scottsboro case has called forth a chorus of praise from the bourgeois press. Darrow didn't like the agitatorial methods of the International Labor Defense. "You can't mix politics with a law case," he said. He would take part in the legal defense only on the condition that the I. L. D. keep out. The withdrawal of the famous lawyer on these grounds affords the brass check newspapers—whose attention was drawn to the Scottsboro case by the stormy agitation of the I. L. D.—another occasion to point a moral about the harmful effects of "Communist interference" in behalf of any victim of bourgeois justice. Liberal suitwells and middle-headed workers, whose thinking is done or them by the ruling class, are echoing this judgment.

Such arguments are not worthy of a moment's consideration. The I. L. D. was absolutely right in rejecting the presumptuous demands of Darrow and Hays, and the Scottsboro prisoners showed wisdom in supporting the stand of their defense organization. Any other course would have signified an end to the fight to organize the protest of the masses against the legal lynching; and with that would have ended any real hope to save the boys and restore their freedom.

There are people, of course—and too many of them—who hold a contrary view. But they are the credulous ones who have faith in the justice and fairness of the class courts. We rejoice at the blow that has been dealt to this servile and treacherous philosophy. It is true that the lawyers in question are celebrated in their trade. But from our point of view that fact only invests the calling of their bluff with a greater significance and merits for it a warm approval.

"You can't mix politics with a law case"—that is a reactionary lie. It is father to the poisonous doctrine that a labor case is a purely legal relation between lawyer and client and the court. It was under that sign—with the same Darrow in the leading role—that the McNamara and Schmidt and Kaplan were sacrificed, and the labor movement was dealt a blow from which it has not yet recovered. It was the influence of this idea over the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee which paralyzed the protest mass movement at every step and thereby contributed to the final tragic outcome. Not to the courts alone, and not primarily there, but to the masses must the appeal of the persecuted class and race be taken. There is the power and there is the justice. The affair of Darrow, the Scottsboro prisoners and the I. L. D. will help to inculcate this lesson.

UNITED FRONT PROSPECTS

The most noticeable single trend to be observed in the ranks of the more or less radical workers is the sentiment for unity of action. This sentiment permeates all the organizations to a considerable extent, and it corresponds to the needs of the day. As a consequence of this there is a great deal of unity talk to be heard. Some of it is a sincere expression of the workers' feelings and moods, some of it a bait to catch their attention. The effect of all the talk so far, has been negligible. The labor movement, including its radical sections, has not been divided and disrupted without profound causes. Talk alone will never bring about the desired unity in struggle. It may, and to a certain extent does, exert a retarding influence on the process. Every hypocritical argument, every dishonest maneuver in the name of unity works against its actual realization.

On the other hand, the increasing pressure upon the workers strengthens their impulses for a common front of struggle, and raises the issue ever more insistently. Concrete manifestations here and there of solidarity in action are to be seen. And these are the best gauge by which to judge the prospects for the formation of the united front of militant labor. From this standpoint, last week's mass meeting for the defense of the indicted marine workers has an exceptional interest. No single event in recent years has done so much to raise the hopes of the radical workers that a way can be found, despite all the differences between the various organizations and groups, for the radical workers to get together for a united fight against the class enemy.

This mass meeting, like the defense committee which sponsored it, was an experiment in co-operation on a single issue of the class struggle—the defense of persecuted workers. No one can deny that it made a good showing. The hall was packed to the doors and the sentiment for unity resounded in the applause which greeted speaker after speaker who dwelt on this theme. Militant unionists, communists, anarchists, syndicalists and socialists were represented on the platform as well as in the audience. The chief feature of the whole affair, and the one that determined its enthusiastic spirit, was the formal appearance of a united front. There is every reason for the partisans of the united front—among whom we belong, to regard the demonstration as a significant step forward.

It is no less necessary however, to see the short-comings and the weak sides of this first experiment. There were not a few members of the official Communist Party in the audience, but it was not represented on the platform. Despite invitations of the defense committee, the party and the I. L. D. withheld participation in this public demonstration of support for workers under prosecution. There are people who put this fact down to the credit side of the meeting. They want a united front—without the Communist Party. But that is absurd as well as reactionary. The workers supporting the official Communist Party constitute the strongest and most dynamic force in the radical labor movement. The progress towards a genuine united front, with power behind it, has to be measured first of all by the pressure developing within the party ranks in favor of such a policy.

The mass meeting for the marine workers in prison helped to consolidate the sentiment for the united front in the ranks of all the organizations which took part in it. In addition to that it had a value, as an object lesson, in stimulating these sentiments in the rank and file of the official party. This was probably its greatest significance.

of the whole of Europe, not excluding the Soviet Union. The danger of Fascism is casually referred to from time to time. Every time it is mentioned, it is falsely explained: For the Daily Worker, like for the rest of the Stalinist press, the "social-Fascists" are trying—no less!—to put Hitler into power, which is apparently unnecessary in view of the fact—according to the D. W.—that Brüning and his regime are already Fascist. But never yet has the Worker sought to arouse the party members or the militant workers in general to the acute danger. Never has it presented to its readers a clear statement as to what the German party leaders plan to do to stop the Hitlerite march to power.

And in truth it cannot do so because the German Stalinist high-priests look upon Hitler's capture of power as inevitable. Some of them write coolly that a Fascist dictatorship—our readers will find the exact quotation elsewhere on these pages—is a "lesser evil" compared to a social democratic coalition. All of them take the attitude that anything that happens is preferable to adopting the only policy suitable for the situation: the organization of the "united front" of the Communist and the social democratic workers—what the Left Opposition proposes.

Boastful Claims and Sorry Realities

Month after month now, the German Stalinists have been substituting bureaucratic boasting and self-content for a policy of vigilance and united action. "We are growing. The Fascists are at the end of their rope." After every vote cast since the last Reichstag elections, the German Stalinists have announced that Hitler has reached the apex of his strength. But the Hitlerites have continued to grow in spite of these prognostications. Their increases have far outstripped those of the C. P.: In Mecklenburg-Schwerin, in Brunswick, in Oldenburg, in Hesse, in Hamburg, in Bremen, and only last Sunday in the elections to the Lippe Diet, where the Fascists jumped from nothing to 9 seats, while the C. P. G. mover from one member to two. These electoral gains by themselves are far from fatal to the proletarian cause because, first, there is a "political limit" to such gains by the Fascists, and second, the issue of power will not be decided by these votes. Stifling the Labor Defense

In a previous article on the dangers, confronting the I. L. D. because of the mechanization of the organization by way of the "group system", it was said that this new plan of organization would deprive the membership of the enthusiasm for activities so much needed in order to carry on mass defense work. Only six weeks have elapsed since this was predicted and already there can be seen the correctness of this estimation. Fortunately, not all of the branches of the I. L. D. have as yet been reorganized on the group plan, but branches that have already undergone this "successful" operation show definite signs of regression. For example, the model branch of all branches in the district for membership, meeting attendance, sale of Labor Defenders and other propaganda literature, is now showing definite signs of disintegration and demoralization as a result of having been put through the process of the group plan.

The following are facts appearing on its balance sheet to date—meeting attendance ranging from 50 to 75 members immediately prior to its being reorganized into an underground form of organization, dropped to but 13 members attending the first meeting and 17 members the second meeting after its reorganization, and with a corresponding effect upon its general line of activities. To illustrate, the branch, which holds the record of having sold 800 Labor Defenders the month prior to the "operation", now is faced with the prospect of hardly reaching more than half of that quota for the current issue. The mechanical grip upon the branch is so choking the life out of it that even the organizer of the branch (a good machine man) realized the danger and stated at the last meeting: "I had my doubts about the group system from the very beginning and now we can see that it will not work."

A more glaring example is not needed to show the actual demoralizing effects the mechanical group system holds for the rest of the I. L. D., now in the process of reorganization. Judging by these first signs of results, we will soon be justified to use the very popular expression "the operation was successful but..."

The Swaback Meeting in Youngstown

On January 6, comrade Swaback spoke in Youngstown on the differences within the international Communist movement. The meeting was attended by twenty-five interested workers. Members of the S. L. P., of the C. P. and the Y. C. L. were present and participated in the discussion which followed.

A small group of Stalinists attempted to provoke a fight by a running fire of interruptions, but had to desist when they received no encouragement from the workers present. In the discussion period their leader asked for the floor, received it, and launched into a tirade of slander against Swaback and the Opposition in general. He concluded with an appeal to everyone to protest by leaving the meeting. A worker, indignant at this tactic, jumped to his feet and protested against such provocation. He said, "You were given the floor. Why don't you give arguments instead of slander?"

But as everybody knows, a Stalinist is not infrequently impervious to sense. The Stalinist general and his army of three left the meeting. A Y. C. L. member, despite all their exhortations refused to leave. He said he could see no harm in discussing the differences between the Opposition and Stalinism.

The workers were of the same opinion. For several hours, they asked questions and indicated by their opinions that here in Youngstown, the wall of Roman Catholic ignorance in which the party rank and file is kept, is breaking down. We will continue this work to demolish it completely and to reestablish the unity of the Communist vanguard.

THE SPANISH ARTICLES

Pressure of space in this number compels us to hold over the first of the series of articles on the situation in Spain, by comrade Max Shachtman, for the next issue of the Militant, where it will surely appear.

Announcement that Gov. Roland H. Hartley of Washington had granted a parole to O. C. Bland, one of the five remaining prisoners in the Centralia Armistice Day cases, was made a few days ago from the state capital in Olympia. At the same time the governor extended indefinitely the leave of Eugene Barnett, who was paroled last May to care for his wife, then facing a critical operation.

Friends of the prisoners are greatly encouraged by these developments. Some three years ago the governor received a petition urging their release from 3,500 residents of Centralia, which has only 3,000 registered voters. Eight of the trial jurors also have made affidavit declaring that if the court had permitted them to know all the facts in the case they never would have convicted.

Is Stalin Preparing Another 1923 in Germany?

The official leaders have followed one false and criminal policy after the other in recent years, swinging from a sterile and noisy adventurism to an equally clamorous and fruitless opportunism. In recent months, had they set themselves such an aim deliberately, they could hardly have done more to prejudice the interests of the struggle against Fascism. With Hitler advancing rapidly, the Thaelmanns, Remmeles and Neumanns not only shouted from the housetops that the "Social Democratic Party is the main enemy!", but entered into a vulgar competition with the Nazis to see who could outbid the other in playing on the nationalist prejudices of the petty bourgeoisie (the notorious "Program for National and Social Emancipation"). They not only repelled the social democratic workers, even those who were beginning to rebel against Wels, Stroebel and Co., by the thoroughly false cry of "social-Fascists" who must be driven out of the factories (and the "little Zoergiebeln" out of the playgrounds—literally!), but finally entered into a shameless support of the Fascist Prussian Referendum of a few months ago—an action which pleased and profited Hitler, on the one hand, and Wels on the other, but only brought disgrace to the banner of Communism.

Now, in the face of all the boasts of the immediate past, in the face of all the bragadocio and loud-mouthed radicalism, the Stalinists not only reject the imperatively needed united front with the social democratic workers, but are preparing to quit the field of battle without firing anything more deadly than a manifesto... from exile. No other construction can be put upon the policy and acts of the Thaelmanns. And a capitulation now would be a repetition of the Brandlerist surrender of 1923 with even more fatal consequences.

Days pregnant with great historical significance are ahead in Germany. False policies, obstinately maintained, will produce ruinous results. A change in time, resolutely applied, will eliminate much of evil that has been inflicted upon the movement in the past. From whom can such a change be looked for? From Thaelmann and Co. Hardly. Then from the Comintern, from Stalin? Again, hardly. What the "Master" thinks of the present situation in Germany, nobody is permitted to know. During the most stirring days of the Spanish revolution, the "leader of the world revolution" found nothing to say about the tasks of the Communists, or else no need of saying anything. The present German crisis once more finds the Communists without the benefit of Stalin's counsel. But its benefits would be more than dubious. For we already know—try to conceal it as he would—what Stalin advised the Communists to do under almost identical circumstances. In August 1923, on the eve of the decisive events in Germany of more than eight years ago—as the minutes of the 1926 Plenum of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union will testify—Stalin wrote his views on Germany to Zinoviev and Bukharin. We quote this extensive and illuminating passage:

What Stalin Once Advised

"Should the Communists strive for the seizure of power (at the given moment) without the social democrats, have they matured to this point—therein lies the question, in my opinion. Taking over the power, we in Russia had such reserves as: (a) peace, (b) the land to the peasants, (c) the support of the overwhelming majority of the working class, (d) the sympathy of the peasantry. The German Communists have nothing of the sort at the present time. To be sure, they have the Soviet state as a neighbor, which we did not have, but what can we give them at the present moment? If the power were now, so to speak, to collapse in Germany and the Communists seize it, then they will fall through with a crash. That in the best case. But in the worst case—they will be smashed to a thousand smithereens and set back. The matter does not lie in the fact that Brandler wants to "educate the masses", but in the fact that the bourgeoisie, plus the Right social democracy, would quite definitely convert the educational demonstration into the decisive battle (for the moment, they have all the chances for it) and would smash them. Surely, the Fascists are not asleep, but it would be better for us if the Fascists were to attack first; this would assemble the whole working class around the Communists (Germany is not Bulgaria). Besides, from all reports, the Fascists are weak in Germany. In my opinion, it is necessary to restrain the Germans and not to spur them on." (Our emphasis).

Every child now knows the results of Brandler's capitulation in 1923, the Brandler who hardly needed to be "restrained" (by the way, is not the restrainer, Stalin, today the sworn foe of... Brandlerism?). Today, in a more critical world ambience, capitulation without a struggle would have ever more far-reaching effects. Once in power, Hitler would not only be in a position to exterminate the flower of the German proletariat, but would inaugurate a prolonged period of reaction throughout Europe. And yet, the persistence of the Stalinists in their breakneck course, their refusal to adopt the proposals of the Opposition for a united front with the social democratic masses against the Fascist reaction, their inescapable responsibility for the division in the ranks of the proletariat which is confronted by the Hitlerites, is paving the road to power for the latter.

The Party Rank Must Speak!

The Thaelmann course, pursued with the approval of the Comintern, is traceable to Stalin, traceable as far back as 1923. This course is heavy with peril. It can and must be changed. The Communist workers can compel a change. The party members—not only in Germany, here too—must speak out loudly and demanding. We have no small squabble to settle here. It is about the "key to the international situation" that the Left Opposition, with comrade Trotsky at its head, is speaking now, the key which the Stalinists are allowing to slip from their hands. The party members must speak because silence now is a crime.

—MAX SHACHTMAN.

"Anti-militarist propaganda must be cast over the whole nation like a wide net. The proletarian youth must be systematically imbued with class-consciousness and with a hatred of militarism. This kind of agitation would warm the hearts and arouse the youthful enthusiasms of the young proletarians. The proletarian youth belongs to social democratic anti-militarism. It must, and will be won over if everyone does his duty. He who has the youth has the army." —KARL LIEBKNECHT.

WHAT IS FASCISM?

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER TO A COMRADE

I am writing you today regarding the question of Fascism. It would be well if you were to discuss three questions with the English comrades, since in this manner we can arrive at conclusions and definite views.

What is Fascism? The name originated in Italy. Were all the forms of counter-revolutionary dictatorship Fascist or not? That is, prior to the advent of Fascism in Italy.

The former dictatorship in Spain, of Primo de Rivera, is called a Fascist dictatorship by the Comintern. Is this correct or not? We believe that it is incorrect.

The Fascist movement in Italy was a spontaneous movement of large masses, with new leaders from the rank and file. It is a plebeian movement in origin, directed and financed by big capitalist powers. It issued forth from the petty bourgeoisie, the slum proletariat and even to a certain extent, from the proletarian masses, Mussolini, a former socialist, is a "self-made" man arising from this movement.

Primo de Rivera was an aristocrat. He occupied a high military and bureaucratic post, and was chief governor of Catalonia. He accomplished his overthrow with the state and military forces. The dictatorships of Spain and Italy are two totally different forms of dictatorship. It is necessary to distinguish between them. Mussolini had great difficulty in reconciling many old military institutions with the Fascist militia. This problem did not exist for Primo de Rivera.

The movement in Germany is analogous mostly to the Italian movement. It is a mass movement, with its leaders employing a great deal of socialist demagoguery. This is necessary for the creation of the mass movement.

The genuine basis is the petty bourgeoisie. In Italy it is a very large base—the petty bourgeoisie of the towns and cities, and the peasantry. In Germany likewise, there is a large base for Fascism. In England there is less of that base because the proletariat is the overwhelming majority of the population:

GERMAN OPPOSITION

On Sunday, December 13, the Enlarged National Committee of the Left Opposition of the German Communist Party (Bolshevik-Leninists) met with representatives from Saxony and Wasserkante (Hamburg) present. A more extensive representation from the provinces was not possible because of financial difficulties.

Organization Growing

From the reports on the state of the organization it could be seen that the Left Opposition, freed from sectarianism has experienced a gratifying development in the course of the past six months. In Wasserkante, the formerly small group has become a relatively strong faction of the party, consisting of party functionaries to the extent of two-thirds. This local group is developing a stirring political activity. Likewise, the Saxon organization can account for further progress in the party and especially in the Youth. The Southwestern district has developed a certain political activity in recent times. Especially in Bruchsal have our comrades understood how to realize the united front in practice. A unity committee of all the proletarian organizations has been formed which places the entire working class of Bruchsal in struggle against Fascism. Other localities of this district have been similarly worked upon. At the same time we have succeeded in forming in groups in the Ruhr district, in gaining new connections in Schleswig, Upper-Schleswig, the Rhineland, Magdeburg and in many other cities, and the possibility exists of forming new groups in these localities in the near future.

In Berlin, the Opposition has made very good progress. This is expressed primarily in the formation of faction groupings in a series of party wards. The work in the party will undoubtedly soon be crowned with greater success.

The growth of the Left Opposition may best be measured by the constantly increasing distribution of our literature. The editions of our pamphlets have doubled in size from time to time, and the edition of the latest pamphlet has reached the number of 15,000 copies. Most of the editions have already been completely or almost completely sold out; we are confronted by the need of issuing new editions. Our influence has risen enormously and we are not wrong in contending that in a very short time we shall gain strongly organizationally.

The weakness of our organization still lies in the insufficient organizational activity as measured by the present-day political requirements, as well as on the field of poor and slow accounting. In this connection, however, it should be observed that in spite of it the organization has managed its publications out of its own organizational forces.

Adopt Political Resolution

The main point on the agenda was the discussion on the political situation. A vigorously serious discussion developed in dealing with the draft of the resolution. Before all, it was a question of the immediate perspectives of the struggle in Germany and of the question of the struggle against Fascism. The united front as the central problem of the struggle against Fascism and its concrete application were especially the subject of the discussions. The draft of the resolution was unanimously adopted with supplementary additions. This draft is to be presented for discussion in the groups and serve as a preparation for the next conference.

Forward in Lenin's Way!

The Left Opposition Alone Carries on the Work of Il'yitch

Once again, the working class of Europe is facing a period of colossal historical opportunities. The world crisis of capitalism has produced a revolutionary situation in Central Europe. Communism is about to stand another gigantic test. Clarity, firmness, Bolshevik boldness are the demands of the minute.

And it is precisely at this time, that the memory of Lenin is alive as the revolutionary inspiration of all working class fighters. Lenin represents the victory of the Russian revolution, the flaming torch of the world revolution. It is to his glorious example that the militant proletariat turns at all moments of crisis, as a well of confidence, as a reservoir of revolutionary power.

Above all else, Lenin taught active realism in the class struggle. His was not a teaching of dead letters, but of living action. He analyzed, he divided his friends from his enemies, he calculated the right moment and the point of vantage and he struck. The dry and impotent formula of "social Fascism", the unrealistic conception of the "single reactionary mass" were unknown to him.

When Lenin arrived in the Petrograd of the February revolution, he did not find a working class ready to follow him blindly. His own disciples did not even grasp the grand sweep of his revolutionary ideas. He was not deceived by the trend nor by the particular stage of developments. He knew and he stressed that the masses can only learn from their own experiences, and he was determined to teach them, patiently but surely. Confident, intransigent and firm, he proceeded to carry out the task he had set for himself. Success met his resolute, but patient efforts.

What Lenin taught, the breath of life he breathed into the struggle of the proletariat for power, is today, unfortunately, entirely forgotten by those who usurp his place in the Communist International. The German Communist Party, the section of the vanguard of the international working class that is confronted with the greatest task of revolutionary action at the present is further away than ever from the road of Lenin. Its leaders are incapable of seeing the importance of the various factors in the situation. The ideological devastation brought about by Stalinism since the death of Lenin prevents them from mastering the political task of the moment: the unification of the working class of the country against the menacing and deadly attack of Fascism.

Lenin never stipulated the absolute necessity of the unconditional acceptance by the Russian working class of Bolshevik leadership in the remission of the Kornilov offense. In defeating Russian Hitlerism. He confidently joined in a united front with the social democratic workers and forced their Menshevik leaders to reveal their true colors. And he proved the superiority of Bolshevik leadership, defeating not only Kornilov, but the Kerenskies, the Tchekides and the Dams and Tseretellis with them.

Before the arrival of Lenin, the Russian party was also derailed, dragged into the conciliatory swamp by Stalin and by Kamenev. But the strength of the Bolshevik idea made possible a quick rearming of the party of Lenin and enabled it to pass through its internal crisis and to lead the Russian working class in triumph. The Bolshevik idea is not dead. The German Left Opposition, under the direct participation of Leon Trotsky, the co-fighter and the comrade of Lenin, is keeping the ideas of Leninism alive. The rearming of the German party is on the order of the day. Its glorious tradition dating back to the days of the Spartacists, to the stirring memory of its valiant pioneers, to Rosa and Karl, cannot fail to raise it to the high level of militancy of those days. The last word concerning the fate of the German working class has not yet been spoken.

The Stalinist epigones, rotten to the core and infested by the putrid theory of socialism in one country, are preparing to leave the German workers isolated in the battles to come. They want peace: the five year plan must first be completed. What is at stake is not only the five year plan, but the life itself of Workers' Russia. Stalin and his faction have been so entangled by their own mistakes, so disoriented by the policies of vulgar empiricism that they have lost all perspective. The alarm must be sounded. The situation must be saved. The Communist ranks must once more be awakened by the pungent, stimulating ideas of Il'yitch.

When Lenin first set foot on Russian soil in 1917, he addressed the following simple and strong words to the masses who had come to greet him:

"Dear comrades, soldiers, sailors and workers! I am happy to greet in your person the victorious Russian revolution, to greet you as the vanguard of the proletarian army of the world. . . . The hour is not distant when the peoples, answering the call of our comrade Karl Liebknecht will take arms against their exploiters, the capitalists. . . . The Russian revolution, achieved by you, introduces a new epoch. Long live the world revolution!"

The hour is not distant today, when the hosts of Lenin in Russia will have to answer the call of the hosts of Liebknecht in Germany. The Stalinist regime is revealing itself as an obstacle in the way of the world revolution, more sharply at the present than ever. The Left Opposition, with Trotsky, the closest collaborator of Vladimir Il'yitch Lenin at its head, is calling for clarity and action. It is sounding the alarm in time. To the German Communists, to the workers of Soviet Russia, to the proletariat of the whole world, the Left Opposition directs its voice the voice of Lenin. It is not yet too late. The German party is still capable of victory, of uniting the proletariat about it—for the defeat of the class enemy. Victory can come, will come in the way of the Left Opposition and comrade Trotsky, in the way of Lenin.

Lenin's Last Words to the Party

By the stability of the Central Committee, of which I spoke before, I mean measures to prevent a split, so far as such measures can be taken. For, of course, the White Guard in Russia was right when, in the first place, in his play against Soviet Russia he banked on the hope of a split in our party, and when, in the second place, he banked for that split on serious disagreements in our party.

Our party rests upon two classes, and for that reason its instability is possible and if there cannot exist an agreement between those two classes its fall is inevitable. In such an event it would be useless to take any measures or in general to discuss the stability of our Central Committee. In such an event no measures would prove capable of preventing a split. But I trust that is too remote a future and too improbable an event, to talk about.

"I have in mind stability as a guarantee against a split in the near future, and I intend to examine here a series of considerations of a purely personal character.

"I think that the fundamental factor in the matter of stability—from this point of view—is such members of the Central Committee as Stalin and Trotsky. The relation between them constitutes in my opinion, a big half of the danger of that split, which might be avoided, and the avoidance of which might be promoted, in my opinion, by raising the number of members of the Central Committee to fifty or one hundred.

"Comrade Stalin, having become General Secretary, has concentrated an enormous power in his hands; and I am not sure that he always knows how to use that power with sufficient caution. On the other hand comrade Trotsky, as was proved by his struggle against the Central Committee in connection with the question of the People's Commissariat of Ways of Communications, is distinguished not only by his exceptional abilities—personally he is, to be sure, the most able man in the present Central Committee, but also by his far-reaching self-confidence and a disposition to be too much attracted by the purely administrative side of affairs.

"These two qualities of the two most able leaders of the present Central Committee might, quite innocently, lead to a split; if our party does not take measures to prevent it, a split might arise unexpectedly.

"I will further characterize the other members of the Central Committee as to their personal qualities. I will only remind you that the October episode of Zinoviev and Kamenev was not, of course, accidental, but that it ought as little to be used against them personally as the non-Bolshevism of Trotsky.

"Of the younger members of the Central Committee, I want to say a few words about Bukharin and Piatakov.

Left Opposition in Appeal to Needle Trades Workers for United Action in Struggle

We are reprinting below a statement by our needle worker comrades, issued to all workers in their trade. Our comrades have represented the views expressed therein consistently and repeatedly at various public meetings and gatherings of the N. T. W. I. U. The statement is a recapitulation, in precise and concrete form, of the position of the Left Opposition in the needle trades situation. —Ed.

Fellow Workers and Comrades:

Again we are nearing the day when we will have to take the cudgels against the bosses: the dress manufacturers, contractors, jobbers, for a better living.

The agreements, as bad as they were, expire. The bosses are preparing to cut further into our earnings. For them the expiration of the agreements, is a signal for concerted action against our conditions—for us the expiration of the agreement must be a call to arms against their enslavement of the dressmakers.

We learned enough from the past to be ready to repulse and defeat the wage-

They are, in my opinion, the most able forces (among the youngest), and in regard to them, it is necessary to bear in mind the following: Bukharin is not only the most valuable and biggest theoretician of the party, but also may legitimately be considered the favorite of the whole party; but his theoretical views can only with the very greatest doubt be regarded as fully Marxist, for there is something scholastic in him (he never has learned, and I think never has fully understood, the dialectic).

"And then, Piatakov—a man undoubtedly distinguished in will and ability, but too much given over to administration and the administrative side of things to be relied on in a serious political question.

"Of course, both these remarks are made by me merely with a view to the present time, or supposing that these two able and loyal workers may not find an occasion to supplement their knowledge and correct their one-sidedness.

Dec. 25, 1922

"Postscript: Stalin is too rude, and this fault, entirely supportable in relations among us Communists, becomes insupportable in the office of General Secretary. Therefore, I propose to the comrades to find a way to remove Stalin from that position and appoint to it another man who in all respects differs from Stalin only in superiority—namely, more patient, more loyal, more polite, and more attentive to comrades, less capricious, etc. This circumstance may seem an insignificant trifle, but I think that from the point of view of preventing a split and from the point of view of the relation between Stalin and Trotsky which I discussed above, it is not a trifle, or it is such a trifle as may acquire a decisive significance.

Hitler Prepares to Strike

Stalinist Leadership Impotent in Face of Impending Struggle

Behind the social volcano of present day Germany, there is unfolding a political scene that has many elements of a farce in it. And that is not at all strange. Times of revolution, days pregnant with human convulsions, always show up the ruling classes and political personalities as a whole in all possible and impossible shapes, like a refraction in a mirror. So it was in the Russia of 1916-1917 with the buffoonery of the Rasputin and the equally risible counter-play of the liberal bourgeoisie. So in Spain since last April, with the solemn comedy of the "Workers Republic" and the trials of the "responsibles". In the current uncertain political situation, before the masses have had the opportunity to have their say, we are witnessing a similar scene in the Reich.

Hitler and the Weimar Constitution
Hitler is defending the Weimar Constitution, the barge of glory of the "criminals of November 1918"! Answering the appeal of the Weimar Centrist: Bruening to agree to an avoidance of popular elections by extending the term of President Von Hindenburg by Reichstag decree, the new defender of Weimar and constitutionalism just bubbles over with indignation:

"The Weimar Constitution, he says, 'is the legal basis of the German Republic. Article 1 states that Germany is a republic deriving all power from the people (sic). Article XXI states that the President shall be chosen by the entire electorate.

"To substitute the Reichstag's verdict for the people's voice would be a manifest contradiction to the Constitution. . . . Our self-respect alone, here Chancellor, obliges us to decline your proposition to agree to the prolongation of President Von Hindenburg's term of office by a two-thirds majority of the Reichstag".

Thus spoke Hitler, whose legions are already lying in ambush, ready to throttle the working class—that same "people". No further bargains with the vacillating parties of the "democratic" bourgeoisie. Tenseness marks the moment. The high praetorians of the German master must put up a front of resoluteness, of intransigence. They know what that soon they will have to strike. And they are not underestimating their enemy.

Why Hitler Promises Private Debts Payment

The Austrian adventurer also knows, that in that battle the aid of the foreign powers would be indispensable to him. And that accounts for the other face of the farce: Hitler reassuring the international capitalist that private debts will be paid, while the "greatest German diplomat since Bismarck", namely the clericalist Chancellor bluntly declares that reparations will not be paid.

The leader of German Fascism is no fool. He realizes very well that a fulfillment of his "traditional" policy would mean isolation for a government of the "Third Reich". And isolation is just precisely what he fears most, no matter how much the clownish Feders prate about—antarchy. To crush the German proletariat tomorrow, Hitler will not hesitate for one moment to embrace his "arch-enemy" of today.

And, to be sure, that is just the direction the foreign policy of the Nazis is taking. In the same document addressed to Bruening, the National Socialist chieftain, in taunting his bourgeois opponent, remarks:

"Only when Germany can offer something, will she be given something".

For Attack on the Soviet Union

What Hitler wants to offer the world bourgeoisie, is no secret. He wants to offer it, a defeated and spineless proletariat, a Germany that will take the lead in the inevitable imperialist offensive against the U. S. S. R. That is the devil's bargain that Fascism is ready to conclude. And that is the basis on which the French, the British and the American robber governments will agree to meet it half way.

A huge slaughter is being prepared for the working class of Germany, for the workers of Soviet Russia. Doubtlessly, the understanding of this immediate danger is growing among the masses of the affected countries. The will to fight is rising. But misfortune of misfortunes: the leadership is not at its post. It is acting the role of the slacker. At a time in which the ground is out beneath the feet of reformism by the events themselves, the revolutionary leaders, the official Communist party finds itself unable and impotent, fails to rally the resolute and determined masses of proletarian fighters for the unpostponable struggle against the armed and arming class enemy. The Thaelmanns and the Renneuels and all of their sorry ilk dabble in sterile theories, attempt to theorize themselves out of their hard pressed position. The Stalinist incompetents offer nothing, absolutely nothing, to bring the workers into motion. They are much too occupied in covering up their own tracks. . . .

Thaelmann & Co. Prepare For Capitulation

Unfortunately, the shakiness, the spinelessness of the official leadership is also sowing apathy and helplessness into the ranks of the Communist workers. In a series of articles in the New York Evening Post, H. R. Knickerbocker, one of the more reliable and more independent of the bourgeois newspapermen, writes from Berlin:

"I asked a German Communist: What will you do when Hitler comes in?"

We will try, he answered, to get the social democrats to declare with us a general strike and run Hitler out the way the general strike ran out Kapp in 1919."

"But," I objected, "Kapp took the government by force and the social democrats were clear in their minds that as democrats, they had to defend the democracy. The social democratic government in 1919 itself declared the general strike. Will the social democratic leaders go with the Communists now to declare a general strike if Hitler comes to power legally?"

"Not much hope," he admitted.

"You have 6,000,000 Communist voters. It only took 50,000 Bolsheviks to make the Russian revolution. I know the conditions are entirely different. But why can't you 6,000,000 oppose Hitler by force?"

"We haven't got the guns," was the sententious reply. "The Soviet Union is not ready for a German revolution. We think if Hitler comes in he will run the country down so fast that by next autumn we can take power."

"But Hitler will then have all the guns."

"Yes, Hitler will have the guns. . . ." It is not amiss to bring the above quotation in its full length. For it is a revelation of the real state of mind the criminals of the Stalinist faction with the national-limitedness of their perspective, have managed to produce among their rank and file. The bourgeois reporter too, does not fail to see the situation clearly and the questions he asks are certainly appropriate. The workers of Germany are being deserted in their struggle by the usurpers of leadership in the German Communist Party and the Soviet Union. Thaelmann and Company are capitulating under the pretext that the social democracy influence in the working class must first be wiped out. In the meantime, the Nazis are laughing up their sleeves. Weakness, indecision, cowardliness on part of their enemy is just what suits them most. They are preparing to seize all the guns.

Fascists Prepared For Struggle

Knickerbocker tells us in the same article that he asked a National Socialist: "What will you do when you get power?" "He might have launched a long discussion of the party program," he says, "but his only reply was: 'Keep it.' The Fascists are not theorizing now. They are preparing for action. And action, decisive and determined, is the only thing that will save the working class. Elsewhere in the present issue of the Militant we are publishing a document of our German sister section. In it, the German Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists) propose a concrete, brief and clear program of action to the Communist Party of Germany. It is worth while studying. Every member of the American party, every conscientious Communist ought to read it carefully and draw his conclusions. Time flies. It is necessary to act. The duty of every revolutionist is clear. Let their voices be heard everywhere. The present course of the Stalinist leadership must be stopped if the working class of the world is to avoid disaster.

New Trotsky Pamphlet Out

As we got to press, we receive the news that comrade Leon Trotsky's new pamphlet Germany—The Key to the International Situation will be out on sale beginning Wednesday next. The pamphlet is in three sections. It consists of the original work, entitled "Shall Fascism Really Be Victorious?", the article "For a Workers' United Front against Fascism," and an appendix bringing a document of the German Left Opposition.

Whoever want to know the Communist solution to the question: "Communism or Fascism must avail himself of a copy of this pamphlet at once. The price is 10 cents per copy, 7 cents in bundles of five or more.

A Review of the Recent National Tour

The Sweep of the Economic Crisis; Its Effects on the Revolutionary Movement

A tour of the country today reveals particularly the stark picture of the realities of unemployment. Cities like Chicago and St. Louis, one can say, are taking on a desolate appearance. The Illinois government itself admits 1,049,000 unemployed in the state, or 15.2 per cent of the total population. Yet everywhere the signs of a live vibrant unemployment movement of a mass character are quite absent, although a number of councils have been organized in the various cities. Throughout the official party there is an immense turnover of membership. As many as join the party ranks, pressed by the realities of the crisis, leave it again in just as large numbers. As a matter of fact most of the new recruits leave its ranks after a very brief sojourn. Upon the party this turnover is making its indelible imprint.

In the Left Opposition branches this is not the case. We are gaining new members slowly, the new recruits remain in our ranks, but our members are still small. What then becomes of these many "visitors" to the party ranks? Most of them take leave again because of being repelled by the existing bureaucracy or specifically by its blundering mistakes. Some of them learn a valuable lesson in the process and come toward the Left Opposition. A few become so disgusted that they are browbeaten back into their former apathy, but most of them unquestionably remain within the movement, sympathetic to Communism. In this sense the movement as a whole has certainly experienced growth. But within the party itself the ideologically low level is particularly apparent. The political life within the units is reaching zero.

In the Illinois mine fields this condition is reflected as well as is also the fact of the party's failure to employ the united front policy. Compelled by the power of job control concentrated in the hands of the union officials, and by the agreement reached between the John L. Lewis and John H. Walker cliques, the U. M. W. now they again all back in the U. M. W. At the expiration of their agreement in April. But testifying to the opportunities which have been available is the fact that in several local sections progressive elements still have considerable influence. The National Miners' Union is non-existent in that field. Its attitude of boycotting the rebel movements and its failure to meet them on a united front basis brought this result.

Meetings in the Mine Field

Naturally we presented this criticism at our meeting in St. Louis, Ill. Present were the party organizer in the mine fields with some of the party members. In the discussion they had very little to say about this question, the organizer had something else in mind. He asked the direct question: "Do you support the hunger march to Washington?" The answer was in the affirmative. He then, after first voicing his agreement with our general analysis of the capitalist crisis, attempted to prove that our position was the opposite. In support of this contention, he quoted the following from our open letter to the party on the unemployment question: "It is false to center the unemployment program, and the activities and demonstrations, around the deceptive opportunist petition campaign to Congress. . . . For us it became quite easy to verify, not only that this was still as correct as when written, but also that the hunger marchers themselves declared that they did not come to Congress to present petitions but to make definite demands. The audience present voiced no doubt of our further statement that the workers will obtain only what they are ready to fight for."

St. Louis Crowd Responsive

The city of St. Louis has very little of a revolutionary movement or of Communist activities. Naturally our Left Opposition branch there is small. Still, a splendid meeting gathered for our meeting. In fact we were greeted by the hearty applause of a typical American audience composed of workers who start again a movement for unity. If the Right wing will reject our plea, if the Right wing will refuse a conference for a united strike, then all the dressmakers will know whom to blame for the division in our ranks. We will then proclaim louder than ever: The Right wing bureaucrats DO NOT WANT UNITY with the Industrial Union which represents the most militant section of the dressmakers. Both unions must be recognized as bona-fide organizations. On this basis.

We propose that:

1. The N. T. L. W. U. should send a letter immediately to the Joint Board of the I. L. G. W. U. proposing a conference to draw up demands and to elect a General Strike Committee, representative of both unions, each union reserving the right for freedom of criticism.
2. This letter to be printed in thousands of leaflets in a number of languages to be distributed among the wide masses of the dressmakers with a call to them to force the officialdom of the I. L. G. W. U. to accept our proposals.
3. A joint shop conference to follow which would definitely consider and sanction all conference proceedings and decisions.
4. A huge Joint Organization Committee to be organized of both unions with every worker who is ready and willing to help eligible to participate in the evidently had so far had very little contact with the Communist movement but nevertheless had received one object lesson from the capitalist crisis. A couple of Stalin supporters took exception to our views, but it came in the form of merely repeating old slanders of Trotsky always having been a menshevik. Unfortunately for the objectors, a person who evidently had strayed in by accident very fervently took up the cudgels for the capitalist system which was under indictment of the whole audience. And despite our efforts to make the distinction clear, it quite naturally turned its scorn almost equally against all three objectors in common.

The Tour Further West

In Kansas City we met a different kind of opposition. The party functionaries spared no efforts to keep the workers away from our meeting. Members from the unemployed councils were warned to stay away. Those who had distributed our leaflets were labeled "dangerous to the working class". But there was no evidence that the workers took that very seriously and those party members who came to our meeting greeted the first remarks with a snicker, soon became attentive and listened very carefully.

In both of these cities there are good opportunities for the movement in general and for the Left Opposition. Our units, however, are as yet weak numerically, a condition which we must, of course, endeavor to overcome. In this respect comrade Clarke, who went to Kansas City to stay for a period, is doing good pioneer work. Our St. Louis branch is taking up much more effective work. Perhaps there could be no better tribute to this fact than the panic-fear with which the party bureaucrats have gone about destroying the Mooney united front movement which was beginning to develop in Southern Illinois particularly through the assistance of our St. Louis branch.

Minneapolis Movement Growing

In this respect we have had similar experiences in Minneapolis. There, our members have for years been deeply rooted in the labor movement and established real prestige for themselves among progressive and Left wing workers. Naturally our members would be of serious account in a Mooney movement actually organized on a united front basis. Because of this, the petty party bureaucrats worked overtime maneuvering to keep our branch representation out. By a little trick it was accomplished at the first conference, but with the result that all representation, outside of the party and its auxiliaries, dropped near the vanishing point. This, however, can soon be remedied and the Mooney movement reborn.

Our Minneapolis branch had not less than four public meetings arranged for the tour with a banquet thrown in for good measure. But it occurred just during the period of the Christmas holidays which to an extent accounted for the fact that these meetings were not as large as they should have been when organized by a live and strong branch. Nevertheless the elements mostly attracted were those with a militant record in the local labor movement. Because of that, the discussions following each lecture became very thorough and fruitful.

A portion of the Minneapolis stay became devoted to the problems of our branch and its function. It has succeeded in adding quite substantially to its ranks. Its activities are generally organized in a thorough manner, particularly centering in the trade union field. Just now it is renewing its efforts to put more active life into the local railroad council to organize a fight against the pending wage cuts.

Excellent Meeting in Chicago

The Chicago Left Opposition branch made one important step forward in acquiring permanent headquarters. It has become a place full of life, meetings and study classes take place regularly and generally speaking, quite successfully. For our tour, one public meeting was held at the headquarters and one in the down town section. The latter proved highly successful. It attracted a good-sized audience and brought out so many questions which in sum and substance amounted to almost a full review of the Left Opposition platform.

This branch has some recent gains to its credit, particularly among young workers. Those comrades who a short time ago were expelled from the Y. C. L. because of their fight against the system of bureaucracy have continued their logical development and adhered to the Left Opposition platform. They are now active members of the Chicago branch, comrade Satir is already busily engaged teaching other young workers. While there have been periods of a certain let-down in active work carried on by this branch in the past, its future prospects of steady growth are already quite well assured.

Winding Up in the East

In the Eastern section, we held public meetings in Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Youngstown. In the latter city we will henceforth have a functioning branch. It begins its activity with small numbers, but that is no deterrent; it has been the history of our whole movement including those branches which are today very lively. In Cleveland we have also taken steps toward the formation of a branch. When we reach the point of recording the gain of a few young recruits in that city, a live existence will be assured.

The efforts made by the little party bureaucrats in Pittsburgh, to break up our meeting and by similar individuals in Youngstown to create friction, our readers already know, came to naught in a rather inglorious fashion. In all of the meetings there was a good sprinkling of party members present, at several instances asking questions and participating in the discussion. Throughout the tour good collections were made to aid us in further activities. As one example in this respect, we might mention that from seven comrades alone, in Boston a total contribution of $50.00 was made.

All in all the tour brought splendid results. First, in again bringing forward in public meetings the Left Opposition views of problems of the class struggle. Secondly, in strengthening our branches everywhere and lastly, our branches foremost, in knitting our organization as a whole more closely together.

A Set-back for Stalinism . . .

On Jan. 18, I was asked by my Local Union to give a report on the Marine Workers' Defense Committee. At once the chief leader of the T. U. U. L. took the floor and made a motion that my report be delayed. His reasons were: that their delegate was not present and from what information they had so far, the committee should be withdrawn. He was followed by one of his lieutenants who also spoke in favor of withdrawing from the Committee. I was granted the floor next. I explained, that since their delegate had only attended one of these three meetings, he could not give much of a report, and that I was asked by the Committee because of his absence and lack of interest to have the L. U. send another delegate in his place. Therefore I urged that action be taken immediately. The membership which is now familiar with the case, became uneasy. They could not understand the dishonest maneuver of these two would-be revolutionary leaders of the T. U. U. L., refused to entertain the amendment. An appeal from the decision of the chair was demanded. The vote was taken and guess what happened—out of about a hundred and twenty-five (125) members, about eighteen (18) belonging to the T. U. U. L. eighty-eight (88) voted for hearing the report immediately and five (5) voted to postpone it. I must say that I can hardly find words to express my gratitude to those members of the T. U. U. L. whom their conviction forbade to raise their hand with the five (5) allies of the hangman. We also owe a certain amount of respect to those members who claim they are not familiar with the case. Yet as workers, rather than to throw their lot in with the hangman they abstained. Now came my report. In order to clear up some of the misunderstanding, I had to quote the statement from the Daily Worker mentioned in some of the T. U. U. L. members' protest. They were ashamed of their own quotation. I stressed the work of the Defense Committee and also read off the letter from the I. L. D., in which they now offer to defend the Marine Workers.

I did not even have to re-appear when some members shouted "Brother chairman, I make a motion to donate them another fifteen dollars and to substitute the one delegate". The chairman again refused to entertain the motion. Instead he picked up the constitution and started, "In the name of . . . I declare this meeting adjourned." No sooner had he finished when two members had jumped on the platform and tried to take the gavel away from him to reopen the meeting.

A free-for-all was in full swing and in ten minutes another "third period" had taken place. Casualties were as follows: compound fractures of two chairs and three tables legs, a few minor scull bruises. The peace treaty is set for January 21. And now a few words on the chairman. He helped to "make history" for our L. U. He placed upon it the blackest spot of any of his forerunners. Never in its darkest days had a chairman of this Local taken such action. And now, to prevent any such recurrences we have to recall him and elect a new chairman at our next meeting. Should the T. U. U. L. whose battle he fought, and who supported him in exercising his "legal" rights under our constitution to adjourn the meeting, feel that we are doing them and the workers in their camp an injustice by this more they can again exercise their legal rights, by appealing to the District Council or General President Huthcheson.

Resurge of Mine Struggles

Miners Learning, Gathering Forces for Coming Fight

Reports from the mine fields tell of a reestablishment of the influence of the U. M. W. A. in recent months. This organization, controlled to the point of strangulation by the abominable Lewis machine for years was considered to be on its last legs only a short time ago. Due to the splitting up of the advanced militants among the miners, the Stalinists allowing the "progressive" fakers a free hand by their narrow and bureaucratically limited policy, the U. M. W. A. because of its job control is being looked upon by many miners as the only organization left for them.

The new influx of membership into the union will undoubtedly revive the Left wing within it and open up real possibilities for militant action among the miners on a nation-wide scale. In view of all these developments and in view of the approaching international convention of the U. M. W. A., the article by comrade Allard published below is especially interesting and important. More articles by the same comrade and by other comrades in the mine fields will follow. —Ed.

The district convention of the U. M. W. A. was held soon after the rank and file movement in Illinois had been decisively defeated by the Lewis-Walker-Op-platform and tried to take the gavel away from him to reopen the meeting.

A free-for-all was in full swing and in ten minutes another "third period" had taken place. erators and Department of Justice combination. Scores of plain and simple unionists had been rounded up and grappled and jailed because of their so-called "sympathies" with the Communists. It is a fact that the rank and file movement wanted the alliance of the Communists but the official party blantly refused, condemning the movement as a betrayal. It was several weeks before the anger of the rank and file could be overcome and gradually we were able to convince the miners that there was a difference between the "Communism" of the official party and the "Communism" of the Opposition. The result is that today the miners know a great deal more of "Trotskyism" and its differences with the false teachings of Stalinism. If we were not able to make greater organizational gains in the struggle it was because of the numerical weakness and the difficulties of going out among the "raw material" and showing them the differences between the factions. This problem, I assume, is universal. But still, it is a bigger problem among the American workers, due to their political backwardness.

Causes for Retreat

We may summarize the struggles of the Illinois miners under the leadership of the rank and file, their weaknesses and failure to capture the union, as follows:

1. The rank and file leadership was weak in understanding the most elementary problems of the working class—therefore it was virtually without a program.
2. Hordes of opportunists, disgruntled fakers, swarmed into the movement contaminating the healthy proletarian base. To see our party controlled by elements that do not understand the need of united action under the circumstances.
3. The combination of the reactionary forces of the U. M. W. A., the bosses and their government. These forces drove back into "line" nearly 35,000 miners who had through their local unions endorsed the rank and file office.
4. The official party's hostility and stubbornness in demanding the unconditional control of the rank and file movement. The party refused to be a minority. Of course, this is the general program of the U. M. W. A. and there is nothing new in the outrageous manner they gave help to the enemies of the Illinois miners. To me, this was the most tragic experiment in the labor movement.

The present situation in Illinois is surely heading toward another movement that will be fought bitterly. The contract expires March 31, 1932. The Illinois district represents the last semblance of absolute job control in any mining field in the country. We can go farther by saying that it is the last section of the American unskilled working class that has job control. The union is at stake. The miners' organization in this state will not be fighting for better conditions, nor to hold what it has, but it will fight for its very rights to exist as a union. The leadership of the union surely is not very much concerned, as most of the present staff "have accumulated wealth and are 'independent'."

Conditions are horrible. The plight of the American working class is well felt by every revolutionist. There is no need to dwell on that here. It is highly significant, however, to point out the fact that the national government in a public statement says that the American Red Cross has changed its policies relative "to an act of God" and is "appropriating" money to aid the bituminous miners. The State Committee on unemployment also emphasizes the "dire need of the bituminous coal miners". This is not an accident or an unrelated incident. Whether the coal miners' conditions are worse than those of the rest of the American working class is not the question that concerns the capitalist class. It is of supreme importance, however, that the coal miners have a strong tradition of struggle. And since the Wall Street crash and even prior to that time, some section or other of the industry has at one time or another been involved in bloody guerrilla warfare. That is the dynamite that strikes fear into their hearts.

The Miners' Educational Leagues

In Franklin County, over 20 local unions are affiliated to a Franklin County Miners' Educational League. This is a duplicate of the Stanton Sub-district organization. It holds meetings regularly in various mining towns every Sunday. The benefit of this organization is great. The topics are always of interest to the miners. The thinking of the miners is stimulated and raised to a higher level. The tolerance towards Communists is excellent and every form of political philosophy is permitted expression. This minority right is in line with our program and is receiving great sympathy throughout the whole union. A general Left wing program has been adopted to present before the international convention. Resolutions on the Soviet Union Criminal Syndicalism, Unemployment restriction of length of time in office abolition of the International Executive Board, numerous revisions of the constitution such as that reading "share of our products" to "the full social value of our products", etc., etc. are some of the things the Educational Leagues have adopted and sworn to fight for in the International gathering. This Left trend has been brought about by the prevailing conditions, naturally, but also by the great pressure of Left Opposition comrades and other class conscious militants in the field.

ON THE QUESTION OF THE STATE

A comrade from Bethlehem writes to the Militant that Communists, sympathizers and Left wingers still inquire on the attitude of the Communists toward the question of the State. They further ask what is the position of the Left Communists. The comrade inquires: "Is the aim of the Communists, after a successful proletarian revolution, the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat, to continue to build a State?"

In reply to the comrade, it can be stated that the views of the Communists relative to the State, or government, are definite and specific. The early and modern leaders of scientific socialism or communism have answered clearly all that is involved therein. The first to do so were Marx and Engels in their historic "Socialism—Utopian and Scientific", which comprises a section of his larger work, "Landmarks of Scientific Socialism (Anti-Duehring)".

Class Society and the State

The Communists see in the State an organ of domination of one class in society over another. Till the advent of power by the proletariat in the Soviet Union, the State had always been an instrument of power of a ruling and exploiting class over the mass of exploited people. This has been the situation in all preceding class societies: slavery, feudalism and today capitalism. Modern capitalism in its stages of growth, and largely even yet, expresses itself through the parliamentary—allegedly through the methods of "universal" suffrage—form of government. But already, in its imperialist epoch and its decadence or decline on an international scale—it is resorting to another form of domination or dictatorship, that is, the Fascist dictatorship, which, among other things, shows more plainly the bankruptcy of the economy of capitalism today and compels it to resort to special repressive forms to maintain, somehow, capitalist domination.

The Communists understand that the State is but the outgrowth of the existing social and class relations which arise out of the conditions of production and distribution of the means of existence. This is so under the Soviets in the period of the proletarian dictatorship, even as in capitalist society itself. No Communist desires a State or repressive organ for its own sake. But unlike the Anarchists and Syndicalists, they know that the mere denial or negation of the State and its role, does not do away with it.

The Proletarian State

The proletarian State, the Soviet Union, too, is an apparatus of one class against another. The proletariat has succeeded the bourgeoisie as the ruling class, and, in alliance with the peasantry there, protects the interests of the useful producers and endeavors to eliminate all forms of exploitation and exploiters. Soviet rule is the highest form of democratic procedure yet developed. It is not a parliamentary form, after the manner of capitalism but, in the main, an industrial form or the political expression of the masses.

The dictatorship of the proletariat, in Russia in the form of a Soviet Government—Workers' Councils—represents the transition form between capitalist society and the final establishment of classless—hence governmentless—society, that is: Communism. The Soviet state strives for the complete elimination of all forms of capitalism and capitalists, petty or large. At the same time, as one of its outstanding achievements, the Soviet government assists in the establishment of the social and economic functions of the working masses. So long as classes in one form or another exist, a governmental apparatus or State will exist. Its final elimination or dissolution can only be the result of a long process in which the useful producers—workers of brain and muscle—finally establish all the necessary bases of social production and distribution, without any kind of exploiting factors or remnants, and thereby develop a condition wherein no form of governmental apparatus is required. In other words, to paraphrase Marx and Engels, the administration of men (government) is to be replaced by the administration of things, that is, the administration of the processes of production and distribution or the establishment of a social and industrial commonwealth in which political government, as we understand it now, becomes wholly unnecessary. Society will function through social and industrial forms. On this question Daniel De Leon, the American revolutionist, has made great contributions which have been attested to by Lenin.

Regarding the gradual elimination of the State, Engels has described the process as a withering away or vanishing of the State. Our readers can find voluminous material on this and kindred questions in Lenin's brilliant work, the "State and Revolution", Trotsky's "Terrorism and Communism", Marx's "Criticism of the Gotha Program" and other works. The point of view of the Left Opposition is simply expressed therein.

The Soviet Government Today

There remains nevertheless the situation in the Soviet Union today. That Stalin and Stalinism have to a large degree converted the Soviet apparatus into a bureaucracy which less and less represents the basic historical interests of the proletariat, does not do away with the fundamental fact of the necessity for the proletariat to create a State, a Soviet government, for its own ends. Stalinism has abused the proletarian State, has made a mockery of proletarian democracy in the Communist party, in the Soviet government, in the unions, etc., but despite the terrible abuses, despite the usurpation of powers by the bureaucracy, the Soviet government remains a WORKERS' STATE. Despite all that happened, the Left Opposition has full faith in the regeneration of the Communist party of the Soviet Union and the Communist International. The vigilance and understanding of the worker-Communists and proletarian, led by the

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

ROSA LUXEMBURG

The differences between Centrists and Left crystallized another stage in the existing debates on the significance of imperialism. The right wing openly demanded "equal rights or our industries in the colonies" (Quesset at Chemnitz Congress 1912). To oppose colonialism was utopian, Luddites smashing machinery. Kautsky defined the Centrist position in the Neue Zeit (1912). Imperialism is the endeavor of an industrial capitalist nation to annex agrarian territory. As such it is only one form of capitalist expansion. From the "economic viewpoint" there were tendencies towards the formation of an all-embracing world trust, a super-imperialism that would eliminate competition and struggle. He urged rapprochement with the sections of the bourgeoisie who were in his opinion not interested in imperialism, to be achieved by the advocacy of the policy of disarmament and the United States of Europe under capitalism.

For Rosa Luxemburg, imperialism was not merely a policy preferred by a narrow clique, but the last phase of capitalism, pregnant with revolutionary consequences. The limitations of this article preclude the detailed discussion her views merit as set out in her vigorous "Accumulation of Capital" (1912). It must suffice here to state that she conceived the problem of imperialism to be a problem of the realization of surplus value and not of monopolist exploitation under finance-capital, as Lenin sees it in his well-known brochure. She takes as her point of departure the criticism of the diagrams in Marx's second volume of Capital. Dealing with the reproduction of social capital as a whole, she indicates the manner by which capitalism achieves a certain equilibrium between the two great sectors of economic activity (a) production of means of production (b) production of articles of consumption, and is enabled to absorb the ever-growing mass of commodities. These diagrams, Rosa proceeds, are a theoretical fiction and misleading to boot. If capitalism could profitably realize its surplus value within its own framework, how account for the fact that production outstrips consumption, and explain the fact of the struggle for markets and colonies. There would be no objective impediments to capitalist accumulation nor any immanent necessity of the social revolution.

Marx's analysis is based on the assumption of an all-inclusive capitalist world with but two classes, where in reality it functions in a non-capitalist environment. It is to this latter "third person" that capitalism must turn to market its surplus. Imperialism is the political expression of the process of capital-accumulation in its struggle for the rest of the still unoccupied non-capitalist territory and is thereby a new lease of life for capitalism and its gravedigger at the same time.

The theory of Rosa is open to serious objection, on both theoretical and empirical grounds. Undeniably, as a matter of historical fact, capitalist development does proceed by the systematic extension of its base. To extricate itself from its internal contradictions every national capitalist turns to the reserves of the world market. Lenin had occasion to advert to the problem of the external market in his polemics against the Narodniki (populists) and the legal "Marxists". The conditions that give rise to the foreign market are not the impossibility of realizing a profit, abstractly considered, but extended circulation of commodities and the tendency of capitalist production to the growth of the productive forces break down the old regional and state barriers. Production is anarchically carried on for an unknown market, resulting in the disproportional development of the various branches of industry and recurrent crises of over-production. The higher organic composition of capital, technical progress, leads to a fall in the rate of profits. The fusion of banking and industrial capital known as finance-capital, which arise under conditions of the concentration of production, seeks to counter-act this tendency by means of monopoly, in the home market by protective tariffs, abroad in the struggle for markets and colonies for the export of capital (raw materials, cheap labor, cheap land). War is not merely the armed conflict for the annexation of agrarian territory but the struggle of monopolist finance-capital for the repatriation of the world market, in other words the contradiction between the productive forces matured for a socialized world economy and the nationally limited, capitalist methods of appropriation.

Rosa Luxemburg's theory has certain points in common with Kautsky's as Lenin's has with that of Hilferding. She could explain the seizure of a backward agrarian region but how would she explain the lust for Lorraine or Belgium? She seeks to establish absolutely objective barriers to capitalist development by her conception of "third persons" but the fact is that the contradictions of capitalism lead to proletarian and colonial revolutions while the greater part of the world is still composed of "third persons". Her theory does not throw into necessary relief either the national or colonial problem.

The clouds of the coming war were rolling up ominously. There is no lack of documents of the pre-war socialist opposition to imperialism. The best known resolutions emanated from the Stuttgart (1907) and the Basle (1912) Congresses of the Second International. At Stuttgart, Rosa Luxemburg introduced the amendment on behalf of the Russian and Polish delegations. There was never a word breathed in these resolutions of "national defense" as a justification for socialist truce with the capitalist state in the event of war, which did not prevent the traitors later from covering up their enlistment on the side of God and Kaiser with quotations from Marx, Engels and Lassalle, referring to 1830, 1848. Officially the International pledged itself to utilize the war crisis which was characterized as a product of the imperialist struggle for markets, to the overthrow of the capitalist system. The outbreak of the war confirmed beyond a doubt that opportunism was the forerunner of social patriotism. The virus of adaptation to the legal and constitutional conditions of the bourgeois state had rotted the very foundation of the international. Rosa Luxemburg had entertained more than a premonition when she uttered the warning note at the party Congress of 1910, "we thunder against militarism in time of peace but when war really breaks out . . ." The reference was to the seizure of Chinese territory by German imperialism. And later when she attacked the official leadership for its passivity in the Morocco crisis (1911). In the acid test of 1914, Kautsky hastened to lend additional "justification" to the socialist rogues with his inimitable thesis that the International was an instrument of peace, not war.

The Left wing stood by its guns. Together with Karl Liebknecht who had roused the chauvinist fury of the social democratic Reichstag faction by his refusal to vote the war credits, Rosa Luxemburg began the work of the underground and illegal organization that led to Spartacus and the split in the social democracy. When she was released from prison, together with Karl Liebknecht, she organized and participated in the never-to-be-forgotten heroic war demonstrations in Berlin in 1918, for which they were immediately imprisoned.

It was at that time that Rosa produced her brochure "The Crisis in the German Social Democracy" under the pseudonym Junius. Lenin in Switzerland greeted it cordially as by and large an excellent work of Marxism. But in the interests of the ideology of the future Third International which in his mind was already clearly projected, he submits certain of its views to keen though comradely criticism. He considers it a defect that social opportunism as a distinct current is not directly opposed to the current social patriotism as an explanation of the betrayal and collapse, thus leaving the problem of the split in the International dangerously open. He also takes exception to the thesis that in the era of unbridled imperialism no more national wars were possible. In this imperialism war it was true that Russian imperialism stood behind Serbian nationalism. But it was wrong to dogmatize. The wars of the French Revolution were national in their inception and became imperialist under Napoleon. The imperialist Seven Years War between France and England led to national wars later (imperialist war is of course possible on the basis of serfdom or primitive capitalism). If all wars are to be branded as reactionary it would afford an objective basis for pacifist and disarmament illusions and militate against the struggle of the workers and the colonial peoples. Finally he criticizes Junius' selection of the 1848 slogan that the best means of national defense was the united German Republic to be achieved by class struggle. This was in place as a watchword of the bourgeois democratic revolution against feudalism. But the slogan now must be the conversion of the imperialist war into civil war for the realization of socialism.

The response of Rosa Luxemburg to the October revolution could never be in doubt. She was no stranger to its problems. When the character of the future Russian revolution was debated at the London (1907) Congress of the Russian social democracy and Lenin defended the position of the Mensheviks, Rosa Luxemburg along with Lenin represented the viewpoint of the Bolsheviks. Her formula for the bourgeois democratic revolution in Russia coincided with Trotsky's the dictatorship of the proletariat supported by the peasantry. The Mensheviks attempted to build up a difference of conception between that formulation and Lenin's. But the latter himself in 1909 wrote "the formula 'proletariat supported by the peasantry' remains entirely within the bounds of the very dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry." Of the November revolution

Rosa wrote: "Whatever a party could muster in a historical moment of courage, energy, capacity of action has been completely accomplished by Lenin, Trotsky and their comrades. Their October insurrection was not only the actual salvation of the Russian revolution but also rescued the honor of international socialism". In the posthumous work on the Russian revolution published by Paul Levi, she submits certain policies of the Bolsheviks to sober criticism. Her friends Warski and Clara Zetkin say that she had revised these views and had not intended the document, written in prison, for publication. That is very likely but in any case history has proved that her criticism was substantially incorrect. Thus she failed to distinguish between the strategic aspects of the agrarian problem and the problem of a collectivized rural economy. She took a position on the national problem that resembled Bucharin's later: that self-determination under capitalism was unreal. Only socialism could realize the self-determination of peoples. Similarly her views on the red terror the monopoly of legality by the Communist party, the dispersal of the Constituent Assembly. She would in all likelihood have been compelled to modify these views in the light of a more intimate study of the problems of the dictatorship. Some of her criticism of Lenin's policies however which completely missed the mark might be applicable to the seamy sides of the policy of the Stalin epigones.

In 1918 came the revolt of the Kiel sailors and soldiers of Berlin. It opened the prison doors. The socialist traitors attempted to persuade Wilhelm to stay to the last. Failing to guide German capitalism into the channels of a constitutional monarchy they yielded to the idea of bourgeois republic. Their hatred of Bolshevism outmeasured everything else. They particularly feared Spartacus which had constituted itself as a separate party with the slogan of All Power to the Soviets. Noske, surrounded by the Hohenzollern generals, unleashed the white terror. The Spartacists were shot down by the thousands in bloody civil war. Rosa and Karl were murdered in the most bestial fashion. Her body in a disfigured condition was dragged up months later from the Spree river.

German menshevism and the bourgeoisie has triumphed. Vae Victis! But the spirit of Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht marches on in the millions of German workers who today are again confronted with the problem of power. The day of the reckoning with the social democracy approaches.

Documents of the German Left Opposition

We are reprinting below excerpts from several documents of the German Left Opposition, which appeared a few weeks ago in their organ "Permanente Revolution". With firm Communist conviction, our German brother section raised its voice in warning and made positive proposals for a change in policy to the Central Committee of the German Communist Party. The ideas of the Left Opposition rest upon the experiences of the great Russian revolution. Despite persecution by the state and the bureaucracy, despite calumniation and repression, these ideas are irresistibly forging ahead. They are bound to become the common property of all revolutionary workers.

TO THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE C. P. G.

Dear Comrades:

Victory is possible, victory is probable, everything must be done to assure it. Only in this manner can revolutionaryists pose the question.

The question of the victory over Fascism in Germany is also the question of the fate of the U. S. S. R., regardless of whether it is considered from the economic, the political or the purely military point of view. But that means that so as to be able to assure the future of socialist economy in the U. S. S. R., the Soviet Union must stake all its strength on the victory over Fascism of the European revolution with which it is inseparably linked. This alone can be the strategic line of the Communist party.

The C. P. G. must adopt a position of departure that rests upon irreconcilable and ruthless struggle against Fascism, for the purpose of destroying Fascism in the inevitable and open struggle for the conquest of power.

The united revolutionary class action of the proletariat must be organized against the victory of Fascism.

This can be realized only when all revolutionary forces, no matter in what camp they stand at the moment, unite for this common action that stands on the order of the day. We know full well that the premises for such an action are extremely unfavorable. But in spite of this, the C. P. G., as the historically chosen organization must in view of the seriousness of the situation make the attempt to realize a genuine fighting unity of the working class. To this end, we submit the following proposals:

The C. P. G. is immediately to approach all political groups, trade unions and workers' organizations who declare themselves prepared to fight against Fascism, with the aim of a common appeal for the formation of a Joint Council of Action against Fascism. This appeal must contain:

1. The creation of Committees of Action consisting of representatives of factories, trade unions, political groups and other workers' organizations. It is of the greatest importance, that all the existing tendencies in the revolutionary working class of each locality actually be represented in the Committees of Action.

2. The Joint Council of Action is to be constituted at a congress of delegates from these Committees of Action in the entire country, which should be convoked without delay. This congress is to represent the proletarian concentration against the concentration of the reactionaries.

3. The congress must be organized in advance as the proletarian counter-parliament in the event of a Fascist Reichstag, or against an extra-parliamentary or parliamentary Fascist government.

4. The congress must solve three tasks concretely:

- (a) the preparation of the general strike to prevent the seizure of power by Hitler;
- (b) the formation of one common, non-party workers defense corps;
- (c) the elaboration of a common minimum program with regard to the next steps to be taken by the Committees of Action.

Under a correct leadership, such a defense action contains all the necessary elements with which to lead the proletariat, in view of the objective possibilities described above, not only against Fascism, but to the overthrow of the bourgeoisie as a whole.

Such a policy is possible only after a radical change in the course of the party. The experiences of the French C. P. speak an unequivocal language. Despite the "third period", despite the ultra-Left trade union tactic, despite "social Fascism" and similar slogans, the party has been forced by the pressure of objective conditions and partly also, on the basis of sound proposals made by the Left Opposition, to change its course radically. (See the proposal to the Socialist Party of France for common action on the second ballot, the Parliamentary Congress for the establishment of trade union unity). It is high time to draw the consequences in Germany and to re-establish the unity of all genuine Communists.

We declare emphatically that, despite profound differences in a whole series of questions we will support with our innermost convictions and without any reservations, every step undertaken by the party in this direction with all our strength and that we are completely and entirely at the service of the party in any instance whatsoever.

With Communist greetings,
C. P. G. (BOLSHEVIK-LENINISTS)
The National Committee,

Shachtman Lectures at Opposition Forum

On Friday, January 14, comrade Max Shachtman spoke at the Labor Temple on the impressions he acquired during a four weeks' stay in Spain. An audience of about a hundred workers listened attentively to comrade Shachtman's description of the miserable conditions of the Spanish workers, the betrayal of the Spanish social democracy, the impotence of the syndicalists and anarchists and the criminal blunders committed by the official Communist party under the direction of the Comintern led by Stalin.

Comrade Shachtman brought back heartening news of the growth of the Spanish Opposition which has now more than a thousand members, and of its fight for the unity of the Communist ranks. Significant was the fact that comrade Trotsky was extremely popular with the Spanish workers, that editions of his pamphlets were literally vended up. In Spain, as elsewhere the workers despite the slanders and lies of the Stalinists refuse to believe that Trotsky and the Opposition are counter-revolutionaries.

The struggle of our Spanish comrades carried on under much greater hardships than we face here must be an inspiration to us to double and redouble our efforts to regenerate the American Communist party and to reunite the Communist vanguard.

A Correction

Due to unforeseen technical difficulties, the leading news article in our last issue, entitled "Japs Subsidize Russian Whites", appeared in garbled and distorted form. Unfortunately, the necessary corrections could not be made in time. But we shall come back to this subject dealt with in this article in the immediate future, in more extensive form.

—THE MILITANT.

The Fascist Danger and the Need for a United Front of the Proletariat

When Azana became President of the Council of Ministers after the resignation of Maura and Alcala Zamora there were many who interpreted the change of ministry as an evolution to the Left. Maura went so far as to say that the new government was "typically petty-bourgeois" and to put it on a level with the Kerensky government. We, on the contrary, from the first moment maintained that this solution of the crisis meant a step forward in the direction of the big bourgeoisie and of its bloc with the socialists.

"In reality," we said in the third number of "El Soviet", which was confiscated by the governor of Barcelona, representing the so-called "Kerensky government", "the real master of the situation is Lerroux, that is, the big bourgeoisie. Still the time has not yet come to take off the mask, to take over completely the reins of power in the name of those who see in Lerroux, as he said in his speech at Santander, 'the lifebuoy in which the shipwrecked man sees the hope of salvation'."

The facts have proven, and keep proving, that our evaluation was correct. On the adoption of the "law for the defense of the republic" there followed a policy, continually more aggressive, of repression against the working class and of systematic strangulation of the democratic revolution. Nourished by the weakness of the working-class organizations, the incapacity of the anarcho-syndicalist leaders of the C. N. T., who have learned nothing from experience, and the absence of a strong Communist party, the bourgeoisie keeps consolidating the ground which it has gained, and lying in wait for the opportune moment to upset the democratic cart and to install its unmasked dictatorship.

The Socialists and Democratic Illusions

Today this is not possible. Democratic illusions are still quite alive among the petty-bourgeois masses and a large part of the working class. The bourgeoisie finds it necessary to maintain these illusions temporarily, making use of a political force which is not completely discredited among the masses, and by its name at least, represents a guarantee of radicalism. This political force is the socialist party, whose leaders show themselves disposed as usual to serve as auxiliaries to the exploiting class.

Still, to form an exclusively socialist government would be a risky adventure. Inevitably it could do nothing else than continue the policies of the bourgeoisie, and the socialist party would discredit itself irretrievably in the eyes of the working masses. With it, the bourgeoisie would find itself deprived of one of its most important reserve weapons. The socialists, who are fully aware of this, are horribly afraid of taking over the entire responsibility for the state power, and declare themselves for a concentration government, over which they should preside. Largo Caballero was in a hurry to state that such a government, by its very composition, would be unable to realize the party program. Yet, according to the declaration of the Minister of Labor, "the party, having made greater renunciations than any other for the welfare of the republic, will accept this sacrifice too for the 'national interest'."

Under these circumstances the socialists, free of all responsibility for the policies of the government, will contribute to maintaining democratic illusions among the masses and will make it possible for the bourgeoisie to consolidate its position and to prepare, behind the socialist screen, a genuine Fascist dictatorship. The Azana government was the first step in this process; the government presided over by the socialists will be the second.

Lerroux, the Spanish Millukov

The events of the last few days fully confirm this evaluation. While public opinion is being prepared for a Largo Caballero government, and the alertness of the masses is being put to sleep, Lerroux, in an interview given to the editor of the reactionary Madrid journal "Ahorra", expressed the opinion that the socialists in power, "far from being a difficulty" would be "prudent collaborators". In a few truly classic words, stripped naked, without reserves—the class character of the regime: "I can assure you," he said, "that I am realizing the prophecy which I made years ago when I said, (too emphatically, as some thought), 'I will govern'. Now I can say that I am governing, since government and not the power". Lerroux One can have the power and not the government. One can have the government and not the power. I have the government and not the power", Lerroux is the representative of the big bourgeoisie, the Spanish Millukov; the workers must not forget this.

Let them not forget, too, that the leader of the "radical" party is no platonic individual. When he entertains the masses on the tambourine of the "socialist government", Lerroux is making serious preparations, not only to govern on the political stage, but to take over the power, to become the direct instrument of a bloody dictatorship of the Fascist type.

The constitution of the nationalist party, "Young Spain", announced recently, is the first important step in this direction. Its organization, based on a militia of 500,000 men, who are to "wear a distinctive costume with the attributes of the legion, a gray-green shirt and a collar of the same color", is modeled on Italian Fascism. The warning to abstain from joining, made to "the timorous and cowardly, and those who are not capable of facing all the dangers of a bloody battle", show clearly what are the intentions of the promoters of this new organization.

The proletariat would commit an error which might have fatal consequences if it does not give this fact all the attention which it deserves and fails to see in the announced intention of this group more than a mere manifestation of boasting.

It is more than probable that "Young Spain" will fail to recruit the 500,000 men which it needs to put out the democratic revolution for good and to crush the proletariat. Still they can become an imposing force tomorrow. The worst thing we can do is to close our eyes to this incipient danger. In 1920, and even in 1921, the Italian revolutionists looked with disdain on the Fascists, whom they saw as nothing more than "bandit gangs" without real force. These "bandit gangs" took the power at the end of 1922 and dragged along with them the large petty-bourgeois masses, these same masses who had followed the socialists and who, disillusioned by the downfall of the proletarian revolution, threw themselves into the arms of Mussolini.

Are there factors in Spain which are capable of favoring the development of a strong Fascist movement? There are beyond a doubt.

Whither, the Party Bourgeoisie?

The first factor, and the most important, is the petty bourgeoisie. As in Italy, the urban and rural petty bourgeoisie constitutes the immense majority of the population. Because of the very role which it fulfills in the economic life of the country—dependence on big capital—this class is incapable of carrying out its own policies, and constantly vacillates between the big bourgeoisie and the proletariat. To win it over, or at least to neutralize it, is a task of fundamental importance for the cause of the revolution.

After the ruin of the great working class movement of 1917-1920 it supported in fact the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera. Still, since this experience did not free it from the burdensome load which weighed down on it, nor improve its situation, it developed toward republicanism. With the fall of monarchy and the proclamation of the republic, the petty bourgeoisie gave free rein to its democratic illusions and hopefully followed the demagogues of the left. Still the illusions are disappearing, and these great fluctuating and indecisive masses find themselves irresistibly drawn to that social class which offers a clear and concrete program, and has the unshakable determination to put it into practice.

That class can only be the big bourgeoisie or the proletariat. The big bourgeoisie has this program: the crushing of workers' organizations, the consolidation by fire and sword of the domination of capital. The instrument for the realization of this program is being forged by Lerroux and his "Young Spain". Nothing is easier than to attract the disillusioned petty-bourgeois masses with this program, conveniently seasoned with a good dose of demagoguery. Let us not forget that, at the beginning, Italian Fascism declared itself anti-capitalist and republican.

Still, there is a second factor, no less important: the proletariat, which has a unique opportunity to give definitive battle to the bourgeoisie and to take the power. The objective circumstances could not be more favorable to such an end. But subjectively it is disarmed. From a trade union point of view it is divided: the leaders of the U. G. T. collaborate openly with the bourgeoisie, and those of the C. N. T. either fall into a reformism which fully equals that of Largo Caballero or into adventurism (the Peiro-Pestana group) or into a bloody and profitless putsch.

ANOTHER DEFEAT IN KENTUCKY

The conviction of William Hightower and the sentence of life imprisonment is the second heavy defeat suffered by the miners and the entire working class of America in the Kentucky murder trials. These are no mere law cases. The courtroom, during these historic trials, is an arena of the class struggle. In reality, although not formally, the right of the workers to organize is at stake. The whole prosecution is designed to victimize men for asserting this right in action and to intimidate others by the ferocious "justice" measured out to the victims.

The attention of the entire working class ought, therefore, to be centered on this courtroom spectacle in Kentucky; the chief "witness for the defense" he compelled to hear and to heed. But such a movement is not to be seen or heard. The judicial hirlings of the coal operators grind out the convictions and prepare others in an atmosphere of undisturbed security.

A purely legal defense, however competent, unless it is reinforced by a determined and clamorous agitation, presents no serious obstacles to the railroad of a working class militant. This can be laid down as an axiom extracted from the record of the class struggle in America. Whoever has illusions about this, whoever wants to confine the defensive action of the workers to the presentation of legal evidence and the collection of funds for lawyers' fees, is at best, a harmful, if well-meaning, fool. It is high time to appeal these cases to the working class. A nation-wide action of the workers is an indispensable obligation which they owe to the defendants and to themselves.

The chief obstacles in the way of effective protest action of the masses are the disunity in the labor ranks, and the partisan disputes which take no account of fundamental class interests. This deplorable circumstance is expressed in the obscene factional quarrel over the case between the Stalinists and the I. W. W. They have acted like tradesmen hanging over private property. The Daily Worker prints not a single word about the trials and conviction of Jones and Hightower. By that deliberate silence they take upon themselves a part of the responsibility for the outcome. In all this the Stalinists are true to themselves, for it is their mission to soil and discredit the banner of Communism. The conduct of the I. W. W. officials is no better. They content themselves with the fact that the hated Communists have nothing to do with the defense. Any scoundrel of a lawyer is welcome at their defense conference, but not the delegates of a Communist organization. In the self-satisfied contemplation of this victory over the factional foe they lose sight of the defeat suffered by the class and the basic reasons for it.

The life-sentences in Kentucky are warning signals of a furious offensive against the awakening labor movement. The laboring masses, attacked from every side, robbed of their standards and deprived of their rights, have no way out but to fight. They must find the way to fight unitedly, as a class. "An injury to one is the concern of all"—this glorious motto of the Knights of Labor must be revived and inscribed on the banner of the workers once again. Differences and disputes over methods and theory—which are unavoidable in the process of clarification—must not prevent unity and solidarity in the common fight against the class enemy. If the conscientious workers in all camps will dedicate themselves to this principle and fight for it they will soon find the way to sweep the disrupters aside and create the conditions for the united front of labor. Then they will be able to halt the defeats in Kentucky, and elsewhere, and transform them into future victories.

A SORRY ADVENTURE

It is just about a year since Weisbord, having failed to convince us by argument, set out to prove by example that he alone possessed the secret of organizing a mass movement and steering it on the straight revolutionary path. If we still remain skeptical it is not because his adventure has been devoid of interest or because he failed to make contributions of a certain kind to the movement in general. You have to give him credit for trying. He didn't prove his own case, it is true, but he proved something else. What his exploits lacked in the heroic quality they made up in a unique humor that was all the more infectious because of its apparent unconsciousness, like the comic act of a sad-faced clown. Therefore we maintain, against those who want to cross him off as a total loss, that the man has his uses. Revolutionists remain human, all too human; we need diversion and amusement. We live perilous lives, beset with griefs and difficulties, and one who can make us laugh is not to be utterly scorned. A brief account of the life and deeds of Albert Weisbord during the past year is justified by this consideration.

As the world knows or ought to know, the herculean endeavors of Weisbord have recently culminated in a split of his organization. From this we learn that the total membership of the mass movement—at the time of the split was thirteen people. Out of these thirteen, six seceded or were expelled, leaving a net membership of seven in the parent organization, including Weisbord himself and his immediate family. Thereupon—it is alleged—some members of the split-off faction, who had never belonged to any organization before and whose sole instruction in revolutionary ethics had been imparted by him, made an unholy visit to the headquarters and carried off some books. Weisbord announced this depredation in a characteristic manifesto and submitted it to the whole revolutionary movement as the question of the day.

We are not in favor of burglary and larceny and it is easy to incite us against practitioners of these arts—principle in this matter being reinforced by personal grievances. We were just on the point of passing judgment on the alleged culprits when Weisbord forestalled us by an appeal to other authorities. The incomparable revolutionist took his whorem comrades and pupils to court and there prayed for the justice that had been denied him. And then, to make sure that this lesson in Marxism would not be restricted to the defendants, the judge and the court attendants, he published a letter in the New York Forward explaining his action. He went to court, he said, on the advice of Roger Baldwin. That ought to satisfy anybody who is satisfied with Roger Baldwin as a moral, legal and political authority. Moreover, he protested, it was a civil suit and not a criminal case which—as they say in Missouri—is a distinction if not a difference.

So what can we do now? We have never yet testified against anybody in court and cannot go as witness. We are also barred by ethical scruples from expressing any opinion which might prejudice the case of the defendants. And besides, if it is a matter of law, cannot the seceding faction claim minority rights in the property? We have heard of cases where minority groups of stockholders sued for an accounting and division and were granted it. We raise here also a hypothetical legal question: Suppose the defendants plead insanity and cite as proof that they were still suffering from the influence of Weisbord at the time of the alleged offense? It would be a cruel judge indeed who would turn a deaf ear to such a plea.

One may think that these performances would be enough for one man for one year—or for a life-time. But no, the comic resources of our hero are inexhaustible. On top of all this—to round out the year, so to speak—Weisbord addressed a letter to the Communist League proposing that we get together and talk things over with a view of unity. This proposal he blandly informed us, is designed to be a "bridge" to the Communist League. But he is separated from us in such a way that a bridge can hardly be the medium of connection. What this fellow needs is a ladder or, better yet, a rope.

—J. P. C.

The Proletarian Party Opposition

After a decade of existence as an expelled group from the Communist party, the Proletarian party is now proceeding through a period of internal struggle and split. The element that made up the P. P. pivoted around a section of the socialist party of Michigan as part of the Left wing majority expelled by the Socialist Executive Committee minority. And now the P. P. is repeating the process on a smaller scale with the Keracher minority controlling the apparatus, expelling the majority. All the bureaucratic methods of the socialists or Stalinists are used by Keracher and Co.

This party, after a decade of existence as a sect devoting its time to theory—theory that now proves to the majority of its own members to be void of living Marxism, can only exist as a counterparty to bookshelf "activity". The deep world crisis closed in from all sides on this placid condition causing internal motion that broke through the isolation. The first convention in Detroit was a replica of the Stalinist methods of proceeding over the disputed questions: on the analysis of the crisis, the trade union question, immediate demands, unemployment, etc. The revolt from this position of "theory" reacted to its opposite of "mass work" in a hope of breathing new life into the P. P. The P. P. Opposition comes from a party of activity. While we were a minority expelled by the bureaucrats who did not allow our position to reach the party, the P. P. Opposition now constitute the majority of this party. This explains to an extent the reason they swing to "mass activity" and their accusations that the Left Opposition are too "theoretical and too much concerned with the Russian issue" but this does not justify or give them a Marxist base for their action—quite the contrary.

The split in the P. P. is national with the Left, through expulsions and withdrawals, holding the majority over six units and contacts throughout the country. The base of the Left is in the headquarters city and here it faces the greatest internal contradictions as well as the greatest possibilities. They have an open forum two block from the P. P. headquarters with a weekly attendance of over 200 while the P. P. has declined radically. Before the P. P. Opposition could organize itself nationally, Cleveland and New York had moved into the official Communist party. The Chicago P. P. Opposition can say this shows weakness on their part and dismiss it at that but facts prove it only reflects the weakness of the national center of the P. P. Opposition and disintegration will claim the rest unless drastic steps are taken at once to correct their international perspective.

Since the party fastly chopped off part of Cleveland and New York we should ask, where do we catalog the R. P. and Opposition among the Communist cur-

This is the first of a series of articles on the situation in Spain by comrade Max Shachtman who has just returned from a visit to that country.—Ed.

The social democrats throughout the world beat the drums mightily for their Spanish colleagues when, a few months ago, the prominent socialist parliamentary leader, Luis Aragoistain, speaking for the Constitutional Committee, presented the committee's report to the Cortes at Madrid which incorporated into the fundamental law of the land the proclamation that Spain was henceforth a "democratic republic of the workers". Not even a genuine republic of the workers could be expected to perform miracles for the proletariat after an existence of a handful of months. But the least that one can demand is that the political regime guides the destinies of a republic so lofty in intention should give some indications that it plans to improve the status of the class whose republic it announces itself to be. Or if not that, then at the very least, it should not stand very much in the way of any endeavors the workers themselves may make to ameliorate their conditions. By even such a simple and empirical test, the new "workers' republic" of Spain has already proved to be one of those cruel deceptions with which the bourgeoisie has always fed those over whom it rules.

What do the conditions of the Spanish workers actually look like, now that Alfonso Bourbon has been driven from the throne, his henchmen dispersed, and the republic proclaimed?

The Conditions of the Workers

The far from revolutionary International Labor Bureau of the League of Nations places Spain, in a recent survey, at the bottom of a list of some dozen representative European countries, with regard to the standards of living of the working class, lower in the scale than some of the classic countries of misery in the Balkans and the Baltic states.

With the Spanish peseta now equal to less than nine cents in U. S. coin, the industrial workers average about 8 pesetas a day which means that on the basis of a 48-hour week, the Spanish worker would average something like five dollars a week. In Valencia, the workers average from 9 to 10 pesetas a day. In Madrid, the capital of the country, which has relatively few industrial workers, the building trades workers, the most highly-paid in the city, get anywhere from 13 to 15 pesetas a day. The metal workers in Vizcaya, probably the most highly paid in the country, receive from 15 to 17 pesetas a day. Workers in the famous textile mills of Barcelona get about 10 pesetas a day, while women workers in the same mills will average but half of that wage. In Saragossa, where the cost of living is somewhat higher than elsewhere, a painter will earn 8 pesetas a day. In the smaller city of Palencia, building trades workers like masons, carpenters and painters receive only some 6 to 7 pesetas. Day laborers in the cities may get an average of 7 pesetas a day, often less.

But these are not the worst by any means. Agricultural laborers not only have a highly seasonal employ, but when they do work in the fields they will get from 3.5 to 4 pesetas a day, and in some districts as low as 2.5 pesetas a day (about twenty cents a day in U. S. coin), together with their board and the highly doubtful pleasure of sleeping in barns and stables with the live stock. In Madrid, I saw a sight which can only be compared with the very worst days of the sweat-shop industries of New York's forgotten East Side. In a room of a communal family flat, a half-dozen young girls, not one of them out of her teens, were crowded together, at work, making waists, with no ventilation and the most meager illumination. These children—most of them were that, literally—get 2.5 pesetas for eight hours of work, but since they work "a day and a half" each day, or 12 hours, they carry off the magnificent pay of 3.75 pesetas at the end of each back-breaking, eye-tearing day. Such a sight is far from unique in Madrid; the system is quite widespread. And what must conditions be in the less modern sections of the country?

Such a wage standard is better understood when the reader learns that a rather modest meal at a very modest restaurant costs two pesetas. A dozen eggs are three pesetas. The housing conditions of the average worker are positively wretched. The home of one of our most active militants, representative of the average, consisted of one room, probably 12 feet by 7, illuminated —if one may say so—by an air-shaft window four feet square, with miserable sanitary facilities, and permission to use the communal kitchen for cooking. The average worker lives in similar flats, containing four families, who are distributed in five rooms, one of which serves as the joint kitchen. The comrade I speak of paid the average rent for the one room—forty-five pesetas a month.

The misery of unemployment

For those who are fortunate enough to have work, life is still "bearable", so to speak. But what about the unemployed? With a magnificent gesture, the Republican-Socialist coalition government has introduced the 8-hour working day. It cost it little, since most of the workers had already acquired that standard. In some cases, the law made conditions worse by lengthening the working day. But of what value is the 8-hour working day to those who cannot find work for one hour a day?

Unemployment in Spain at the present moment is terrific and the consequences are almost indescribable. Industries are paralyzed, there is an acute financial crisis, the peseta continues to career along the downward path. I was reliably informed—accurate statistics are unavailable—that between forty and forty-five percent of the industrial and agricultural workers, some 1,000,000 of them, are completely unemployed, while another twenty percent are at work only part of the time. In Vizcaya, they say, there is not a single worker who is employed for a full week at a time, and this in a section whose mining, metal and building trades industries make it proportionately more important, industrially speaking, than Barcelona itself. When the situation was not quite so acute, the municipalities would give free food to the jobless. Now the food is not only of a greatly inferior quality, but many of the municipalities are confining the food rations to those who are "natives" of the town. That is, only those workers who are actually born in the town may taste of the thin bounty of the "workers' republic".

Misery and suffering march in the train of this situation, which has even more dramatic and sensational results. Prostitution, an inescapable curse of capitalism under all conditions, rages like a pestilence. The streets of Madrid, for instance, literally run with these unfortunate like a great sore. The "utaes", or payroll holdups, which were brought to an end by the Primo de Rivera dictatorship, are becoming frequent occurrences again, just as the individual pillaging and pilfering of stores by desperate jobless workers is on the increase: here as everywhere, poverty is the nesting place of crime. Along the most magnificent streets of Madrid, on its Broadway—the Gran Via—one sees innumerable groups of four silent men, each holding a corner of an extended white cloth into which the passer-by sometimes throws a copper which is to appease the fierce hunger of the unemployed worker before whom the national constitution so eloquently proclaims "his" republic. So that the sensibilities of the bourgeoisie shall not be made to suffer, and in order that the miserable realities shall not too rudely reveal their disharmony with the farcical constitutional phrase, cities like Barcelona and Bilbao have formally prohibited the "four with a cloth" from begging in the streets. But mendicancy is still widespread, in spite of the prohibition. Along the Ramblas in Barcelona, infants, as wild-eyed and raggedly clothed as any of the Russian "homeless waifs" over whom the world bourgeoisie and the social democracy love to make such a horror-stricken to do, infants and their elders by the hundreds are engaged, either professionally or by economic compulsion, in the degrading business of begging.

The Two Revolutions

—But was your workers' republic any better at the outset? One can hear the retort of all manners of social democrats and their apologists. The comparison of the Spanish "workers' republic" with the Russian proletarian dictatorship at ter the Bolshevik revolution, even the casual one, does not speak a single word in favor of the former of its artificers. Unlike Spain, the Russian workers proclaimed their republic after three years of the most horrible and exhausting war known to history, a war in which the flower of the Russian working class and peasantry was driven to the slaughter by a depraved royalty and a cynical semi-feudal militarism, and decimated by the millions. The Russian revolution took place amid the economic ruin brought about by capitalism, a heritage which it has not yet been able to throw off completely. The Russian revolution saw the light of day at a time when half or more of it was occupied by hostile foreign troops, ravaging the country and locking out the Russian government from occupation of some of the most essential industrial and agricultural regions. The Russian revolution was almost coincidental with the establishment of a strangulating economic blockade which sought—and for a time succeeded—to cut Russia off from the life's blood of the world market.

Yet, in spite of these enormous differences, quantitative as well as qualitative, which constituted such mountainous obstacles to the progress of the Russian workers' republic, one may say without exaggeration that the Bolshevik regime gave the working class and the peasantry infinitely more in one week than the Socialist-Republican revolution and regime have even thought of giving the Spanish workers and peasants in the whole nine months of their existence.

At the very outset, the Bolsheviks established a workers' control of production which was a veritable control, and not the class-collaborationist burlesque which the Socialist minister of labor, Caballero, has so solemnly presented as a gift to the employers under the guise of benefiting labor. At the very outset, the Bolsheviks gave the peasants the land for which they hungered by simply expropriating the large landowners and the church something which the Spanish bourgeoisie and their socialist assistants will never think of doing anywhere but on paper, if there. The disestablishment of church and state in Russia was a trenchant reality and not the elaborate farce that has been played in Spain, where the church continues to have a stranglehold on the country's industries and agriculture, not in its own name so much—it has yielded in the form—as in the more legal name of its known adherents.

In a word, the difference between the two revolutions and the two republics they produced is the difference between the proletariat in power which crushes the bourgeoisie and their social democratic guardsmen, and the bourgeoisie in power which, with the aid of its social democracy, crushes the proletariat. However extensive the advertising campaign which the international social democracy is carrying on for its Spanish colleague, this fundamental distinction cannot be covered up.

Unemployment and Communism

On February 25, 1931, 400,000 workers in the United States according to the Daily Worker demonstrated for Unemployment Insurance. Compared with the demonstration of the year before, this showed a great decline. The Daily Worker claims 1,250,000 workers in the March 6, 1930 demonstration. This tremendous decrease was hailed by Browder as an advance (Daily Worker, March 6, 1931).

On the basis of this "advance", Browder on March 12, in the Daily Worker, motivated a turn from the fight for Unemployment to a system of organized beggary.

This in part is what Browder wrote: "Where the city authorities reject the demands for the relief of specific cases of starvation—the council must set up a food collection committee which will undertake food collections from the larger capitalists and corporations of the locality, particularly in those institutions where the unemployed were formerly at work. When the committee is unable to get food from the corporations and large capitalists they shall then begin to solicit small merchants and the petty bourgeoisie generally, calling upon these elements at the same time to join the Unemployed Council in demanding relief from the government treasures and in demanding unemployment insurance nationally."

This "fight" for relief reached its highest expression in a recent New York demonstration in which a worker carried a placard, reading: "We want more, not less relief."

Browder's strategy, as could have been foretold by a pioneer, ran its course without results. By the end of the summer of 1931 it was clear to all that competing with capitalist charities for pennies does not advance the revolution. The fight for Unemployment Inurance had lapsed; the struggle for relief was equally unsuccessful. The crisis was still deepening; the misery of the masses was greater and more widespread. Bourgeois demagogues were threatening to take over the leadership of the movement for relief and Unemployment Insurance. At this point, the party decided to revive the fight for Unemployment Insurance.

Its first assault on capitalist greed was the National Hunger March. This was organized around the slogans of a resolution adopted by the Executive Committee of the T. U. L. on October 3. On the basis of this document the revived fight for Unemployment Insurance is taking place. It is important to understand exactly what this resolution proposes with regard to unemployment. Has the party learned from its mistakes? Does it repudiate the opportunism of Browder and Co.?

If the party's efforts to win Unemployment Insurance demonstrated anything, they demonstrated that the party could not unite the masses around the slogan of unemployment insurance alone. There is no question that Unemployment Insurance is what the masses need to alleviate their misery and to serve as a bulwark against strike-breaking. It is true that under certain conditions the workers will fight to Unemployment Insurance, but it is also true that the party failed to build a broad movement of employed and unemployed workers for it.

One reason, of course, is the stifling bureaucratic regime in the party and its organizations which drives away thousands of workers sympathetic to Communism. Bureaucracy played its part but it is not decisive. The basic reason is to be found in the illusions of the masses. The masses are not yet convinced that "prosperity" will not return. They still believe that the crisis will lift, bring in work for them. They do not understand that we, like England, will now be blessed with a permanent army of unemployed. The masses think in terms of work. Unemployment Insurance is predicated upon the permanent unemployment of large sections of the working class. For these reasons, the American workers are slow to fight for Unemployment Insurance. — STAMM.

On the German Situation

An Appeal to all the Communist Workers by the National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition)

The danger of Fascism in Germany has not diminished. On the contrary, while the Communist have registered a number of important advances, they have failed to absorb even those social democratic workers who have left the standard of their party, and the Fascists have been striding forward with seven league boots. It should now be clear to all that the Hitlerite hordes are deliberately preparing themselves for the seizure of the state power. Their strength multiplies. All the recent elections show a distinct and threatening shift to the right from all the bourgeois parties. The bourgeoisie is staking upon the victory of Fascism as the counter-revolutionary issue from the terrific crisis in which it finds itself. The big bourgeoisie press of the countries bordering upon Germany, like France, is already preparing to "reconcile" itself to a Hitler regime.

WHAT WILL DECIDE?

But Hitler's march to power has not yet been crowned with success. His victory or his annihilation will be decided by the relationship of forces, and primarily by the course which the German Communists will pursue in the coming months.

The German Communist Party, to this day, has adopted a false policy. It has not yet followed the course which would successfully exterminate the Fascist danger.

Following the last Reichstag elections and for many precious months thereafter, the party leadership lulled the masses into a false security with its baseless assurances that Fascism had reached the height of its power. The events that followed every such boastful assertion brought new proofs of the advances of the Hitlerites.

Instead of steering firmly towards winning the socialist workers, the Stalinists engaged in a vulgar and reactionary competition with the Fascists, servilely copying their slogans, seeking to outbid Hitler in nationalist demagoguery, and sinking to the most abysmal depths of "National-Bolshevism".

Then, when the reactionary monster had grown to a size which compelled the whole working class to look at the situation with alarm, the party leaders dragged the Communist masses through the mud of "red referendum" in Prussia, which not only heightened the wall between us and the socialist workers, but added new fuel to the fires of Fascism.

To all this, the confusion was worse confounded by the theory finally developed, in blatant contrast to yesterday's boasting, that the victory of Fascism was inevitable. The fact that in the October 1923 crisis, Stalin himself declared that the seizure of power by Fascism was even preferable to an attempt at power by the workers, does not justify the policy of Thaelmann and Co., but serves to illuminate the source of its inspiration.

THE RUINOUS THEORY OF STALINISM

Under the pressure of the increasingly acute crisis, of the discontentment of the masses with the party policy, and of the hammer-blows dealt this theory by the Left Opposition, the theory of "inevitability" is now being formally and hypocritically thrown overboard, the scapegoats found for its advocacy in the approved bureaucratic manner and the traces thus covered up. But unfortunately, in all their practices, in all their "subsidiary" theories, and by the personal conduct and preparations being made by the party leaders, it is clear that the party course is still directed towards a capitulation before the advance of Hitler. We still hear that the Brüning regime is practically Fascism; that Brüning is no different from Hitler. With the thoroughly false dictum of Stalin that the "social democracy is a moderate wing of Fascism", with the equally disastrous theory and practice of "social Fascism", the party leaders still contend that for the crushing of Fascism, it is first necessary to liquidate the social democracy. Such a standpoint means that Fascism is to be allowed to come to power while the Stalinists are engaged in "liquidating the social democracy"—an aim which they will not attain with their present course.

Not daring to defend publicly the theory of capitulation, and incapable of meeting the criticisms of the Left Opposition, the Stalinists, beginning with Stalin himself, are laying a smoke screen to cover up their indefensible standpoint and to divert attention from the real needs of the hour. Instead of dealing objectively with the proposals made by comrade Trotsky, supported by the international Left Opposition, for a united front to prevent Fascism from coming to power, a new campaign of calumny and falsehood has been launched, initiated and approved by the central Stalinist bureaucracy. "Trotskyism", killed a hundred times, has now been "re-discovered" in the highest instances of the Russian party. "Semi-Trotskyist" deviations are being revealed in the German and French parties. From Moscow itself, the flat lie is being circulated throughout the bourgeois and Stalinist press that "Trotsky has gone over to the German social democracy"; that "Brüning, by the intermediary of Kautsky, is going to give Trotsky a visa to Germany".

We warn the Communist workers that these lies, these criminal and light-minded diversions, are desperate maneuvers of a bankrupt bureaucracy which can discuss and argue on Marxian-Leninist strategy and tactics only by slanders and police concoctions. The issue cannot be settled in this way. Fascism will not be destroyed by lying about the Left Opposition and its leader, comrade Trotsky.

WHAT A FASCIST VICTORY MEANS

A victory of Fascism, which threatens in Germany, means—if Italy teaches us anything—the crushing of the Communists, the social democratic workers, their trade unions, their press, their centers—in a word, the complete and bloody extermination of the whole working class movement.

A victory of Fascism would mean the reactionary, counter-revolutionary solution of the present crisis, not merely for the German bourgeoisie but also for the bourgeoisie in other countries, including the United States.

A victory for Fascism would break the spinal column of the Communist International at its strongest point outside the Soviet Union—Germany. It would be a direct and immediate threat to the very existence of the Russian workers' republic.

The Left Opposition, contemptuously rejecting the liquidators' standpoint, does not believe in the inevitability of the Fascist victory in Germany. On the contrary, we are deeply convinced that the united strength of the German proletariat, assisted by the international working class, can smash the Fascists without great difficulty and prevent them from coming to power.

But for this, the Communists must have a correct policy, which means, in Germany, a radical and genuine change of the present course of the party. Not bureaucratic maneuvers which leave nothing essentially unchanged, but a breaking of the strangling chains of the theory of "social Fascism" and a turn towards the real united front as Lenin's Comintern taught it.

The German social democratic workers, who number millions and who hate Fascism with all their heart, who will not reconcile themselves with Hitlerism as their leaders will in a crisis, must be won for the united front against Fascism. The Communist party, as comrade Trotsky, and the Left Opposition have advocated, must put to the German social democracy and to the reformist trade unions the proposals for a united front to resist the advance of Fascism. Only in this way, which puts their leaders to the wall on a concrete, burning issue, will the masses realize that the Communists alone can lead them in the struggle for liberation and for the defeat of reaction.

ACT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

If the official party leaders miss the opportunity which is still before them, if they persist obstinately in their pernicious course, if they allow Fascism to come to power without organized resistance, the revolutionary workers the world over will hold the Stalinists directly responsible for the inevitable catastrophe that will ensue.

The times are pregnant with great events, with victory or defeat. The right road may still be chosen. The Communist workers in the ranks, here as well as in Germany, must speak out. They cannot arrange their passports to flee to safety from the consequences of a Fascist victory. It is up to them alone to act and to turn the course of the Comintern in the right direction. The Left Opposition, conscious of its duties, is ready one more to join with the party to arouse the proletariat to action, and in Germany it must act before it is too late. Let every Communist worker reflect carefully! Do not permit yourselves to be swayed by slander and falsehood. Demand an accounting now. Today, the decision is still in your hands for it is not yet too late. Tomorrow, it may have passed into the historical records of a great catastrophe!

Japanese Invade Shanghai!

War Threatens in the Far East and against the Soviet Union

As we go to press, the wires are still humming with the latest dispatches of the Japanese seizure of Shanghai. Battles between Japanese and Chinese troops are in full blast all over Shanghai, the native part of the town, and Japanese reinforcements keep on marching toward the scene of the fighting. After 13 hours of fierce skirmishes and air raids, one report says, the occupation is not yet completed. But one thing is certain: The crux of the Sino-Japanese conflict is already here.

Undeclared Open War

The minions of the Mikado have been steadily proceeding southward for weeks ever since their first easy successes in Manchuria. This time, China proper is the object of the imperialists' operations. The game of the Japanese has been to lop off one territory after another, while protesting against breaches of the treaty of 1915, while declaring the absolute altruism of their motives. At this rate, the official declaration of war ought to come just about at the time when the Nippon capitalists are ready to sign the peace treaty.

So far, the other imperialist powers have shown extreme restraint and caution in dealing with the hardly delectable demarches of their Oriental competitor. In such a heated atmosphere as the present, even the fact that several American warships have been ordered to Shanghai, appears to be a mild form of indignation. But it would be foolish to think that this has been so because of their good will, or because of pacifist scruples. Nothing is further removed from that.

The reason why the Western powers are refraining from prompt and drastic action to curb their yellow brother-under-the-skin is that the present world situation is as combustible as a powder magazine. Unemployment driving millions to a choice between extermination and bitter, uncompromising struggle. Germany on the verge of social eruption. Unrest in Poland, class fighting in Spain, turmoil in Austria, Hungary and the other central European states. That is what the capitalist world is faced with today. A "working agreement" for the time being, or at least an "entente" is the most natural thing to expect among the various national master classes. The throttling of a social conflagration and the victorious subjugation of the fortress of the world revolution—Workers' Russia—is the immediate and common objective of all the powers that be.

Anti-Soviet Advances

The Rengo News Agency (Japanese) reports the seizure and operation of the branch line between Harbin and Changchun of the Chinese Eastern Railway by Japanese train troops! Add to this the planned invasion of Jehol valley and Mongolia by the notorious Russian White Guard general, Ataman Semenov, an adventurer definitely known to be in the pay of the Mikado's government, and you have as arrogant a provocation against the Soviet Union as can possibly be hatched up. The signal for an attack against the light-house of the international proletariat is being given in the East.

The government of the Soviets is watchful and cautious. And in a situation such as this, it must be. But, if we are to believe quotations from Pravda and Izvestia in the capitalist press, the stress is being put altogether and exclusively—for the present, at least—on the danger at the Eastern frontier of the U. S. S. R. That danger is hardly to be underestimated. It can and probably will serve as the spark of a round attack.

But, for a revolutionist with open eyes it cannot help being clear that the real and the main danger is in the West. Developments in the Far East generally drag, must drag, because of the physical character of the land, because of the lack and inadequacy of transportation facilities, because of natural difficulties. Should Fascism, however, succeed in crushing the German proletariat, and thereby pave the way for a combined effort of imperialist reaction, this menace would increase at a furious tempo. On the Western frontier, the position is entirely the reverse. A few weeks of successful military operations by the European imperialists would place in their hands the Ukrainian granary and the heart of Soviet industry. Not to speak of depriving the Soviets of the aid of its most powerful and most valuable ally, the European and more immediately, the German proletariat.

Chinese Experiences Not Forgotten

That is what every Communist worker to whom proletarian Russia, to whom the world revolution is dear, must keep in mind. This is what the Russian worker, especially, must keep in mind. And it is precisely for this reason that the policy of passivity and inaction of the Stalinist leadership of the Russian Communist Party and of the Communist International in this situation is criminal and treacherous.

It was these same people, once masquerading as intrinsically doctrinaire whose principles do not allow them to force struggle agreements against German Fascism upon the social democrats (the "social-Fascists")—who were responsible for the slaughter of the flower of the Chinese proletariat by Chiang Kai-Shek in 1928-1927. Then, under the banner of the Martynovist bloc of four classes. All the futile and empty shouts of the Stalinist press about the "Chinese Red Army" and the "powerful Chinese Soviet Republic" (Daily Worker 1-29-1931) cannot cover up the fact that the impotence of the oppressed Chinese masses in the face of the imperialist aggressors today is the retribution for the crime of 1925-1927.

All Out On February 4!

The Left Opposition, under the leadership of comrade Trotsky issued its warning then. It is warning the party now. Only an acute turn of policy in the Communist International, only an immediate reorientation toward the old Leninist line of international proletarian action can save Soviet Russia, can prevent the pillage of the downtrodden of China, liberate the working class and the oppressed colonial peoples from the yoke of capitalism and imperialism. Enormous dangers are facing the workers of the world and tremendous possibilities for successful action are opening up for them. Every day, every hour, every minute was being—can bring unforeseen consequences at this stage of developments.

The official party is calling upon all workers to voice their protests against the Japanese invasion of China at the nation-wide demonstrations on February 4. Let all workers, all revolutionists turn out in mass at these demonstrations. Let every Communist bring pressure upon the party leadership to wake it up to the danger in Germany as well as to that in the Far East. Let every sincere revolutionist help the Left Opposition bring back the Communist party, the vanguard of the working class, to the Leninist path, to the path of proletarian victory.

—SAM GORDON.

Utilize Feb. 4 Meets to Build Jobless Movement

There will be another unemployment day with nation-wide demonstrations for unemployment relief on February 4th. It should receive the undivided support of the working class everywhere. But it is imperative that it become more than just one other demonstration.

Can it become more than that? We believe it can. There can hardly be any question that with a real substantial section of the millions of unemployed workers actually and seriously participating in a movement for relief it can. But that is essential. Under all conditions the workers will obtain nothing more than they can take themselves and certainly not more than they are seriously ready to fight for.

All the demands—and the pleas—so far made by the army of unemployed have been rejected with scorn by the Hoover administration and similarly by the state and municipal governments throughout the country. Whether the governments were Republican or Democratic made no difference whatever. The capitalist class as a whole feels itself sufficiently strong to confine the unemployed millions to the charity crumbs which they have seen fit to set aside. And sufficiently strong to overcome their fears of a rebellion from those they so haughtily scorn. Maybe, though, they are wrong in this feeling of security. It is certain at least that a real serious and determined movement would soon make them change their mind. It would soon bring the unemployed masses within reach of obtaining actual relief.

Possibilities for Movement Growing

But there is not yet such a serious movement. It would be foolish for Communists to close their eyes to this fact. It is precisely because of this that such mountebanks, official dispensers of dope, as the Pittsburgh Catholic priest, Father Cox, can step on the scene and rally thousands of unemployed upon a program of pleas to congress. The purpose of his appearing is, of course, to act as a preventive for a real movement by leading the attention off into such futile channels. But a movement learning to know that the workers will get only what they are prepared to fight for would leave no room for such quacks.

Failures Should Be Recognized

The Communists lead whatever fighting unemployment movement there is. The official Communist party is by far the main factor in this. It therefore also carries the main responsibility for the opportunities not being utilized. As the objective conditions mature further this responsibility becomes heavier and the party failures become real obstacles in the way. Its failures have been apparent in the slogans presented in its attitude of approaching the unemployment situation mainly as a field for maneuvers and advertising stunts. Its failure has been apparent in the utter lack of efforts for a class education, in the bureaucratic methods of restricting the movement as well as in pursuing a course opposite to the one of uniting the workers in action. This, of course, is all inherent in the policy and methodology of the Stalin agents everywhere.

The direct results to the organized unemployment movement, whatever there is of it, have been that the councils lead a precarious existence out of proportion to the possibilities available. Their scope is restricted by bureaucratic division of the workers and elimination of all who do not submit to the mechanical party control which is imposed upon them. They do not sufficiently attract the workers and those who join, come and go.

Some Practical Steps Proposed

It would be a good beginning for the party to consider rounding out its demands for unemployment relief by adding the practical slogans which can appeal to the broad strata of the workers, including those now employed. We have in mind, as we have often emphasized, to add to the slogan for unemployment insurance also the ones of "six hour work-day without reduction in pay" as well as the slogan for "extension of long term credits to the Soviet Union." That it would offer better possibilities for the building of an actual movement can hardly be disputed.

It might also be appropriate to propose to the party that the unemployment demonstrations be no longer conceived purely as objectives and means of advertising but on the contrary to be conceived primarily as an integral part of agitation and organization activities to build a movement. The demonstrations themselves will not become effective unless actually sponsored by a serious movement. Not until then will the capitalist class and its government pay serious heed to the demands made.

It certainly should be in order now also to really begin to remove all the bureaucratic restrictions from the unemployed organizations. At present there is no broader appeal to the working class than the one concerning the various measures for unemployment relief. Around this the greatest extension of elementary class unity could be attained. It should ring out to all workers organizations regardless of how reactionary their leadership, as well as to those entirely unorganized. On this basis serious efforts could be made for working class unity of action.

But above all it should be necessary to pursue a thorough method of class education. That is not to be content with merely what directly and immediately concerns the spontaneous movement but rather to proceed from that to teach the workers in regards to the far more serious problems they must face to reach their revolutionary goal.

None of these proposals, however, can be approached with the method of bureaucratic maneuvering and playing with a movement. They require first of all the attitude of serious minded revolutionists.

—A. S.

The Recent Outbreaks in Spain

"The old world is burning at both ends." In the Far East, the imperialist lust has mounted to the head of a Japan rendered desperate by the crisis that has eaten into its vitals and it has plunged into so violent and unashamed a conquest of prostrated China that only a spark is needed to set off an international conflagration. In Germany, the death rattle of capitalist mingles with the noise of Fascism's sabres and the distant rumble of a proletarian reply.

Now in Spain, the workers—headless and unled though they are—are again displaying a fighting disposition, a vigor and a resourcefulness that offer magnificent possibilities for shortening the interlude between the democratic and the proletarian revolutions. The resurgence of the strike movement, particularly in Catalonia, Andalusia and Vizcaya, is especially heartening in view of the preceding period of depression that set in the working class right after last year's series of heavily defeated strikes led and mismanaged in classic syndicalist style by the head of the National Confederation of labor (C. N. T.). At the same time, the events which have just occurred, during which a number of municipalities were apparently taken over by the workers and the Red flag hoisted, give ground for some concern for the immediate future of the movement in Spain: the silver lining has a cloud.

The distance that separates us from Spain and the thoroughly unreliable reports of the bourgeois press make it difficult to evaluate and to analyze last week's events in proper detail. But a general knowledge of the Spanish situation and the most recent copies of the revolutionary press that have arrived, make it possible to give a momentarily adequate picture of what is going on. Bureaucracy in the R. R. Brotherhoods

This is the second of a series of articles on the conditions of the railroad workers. The first appeared in the Militant of January 16, 1931. Further articles will appear in subsequent issues.—Ed.

In our first and previous article on the Railroad Brotherhoods, we pointed out that the railroad workers in this country were kept divided into twenty-one separate craft organizations by swarms of overpaid craft officials who kept themselves in control of the unions in typical bureaucratic fashion. In the articles to follow we will take up more in detail the results which naturally flow from such an arrangement and point out to the railroad workers, and workers in general, that under present industrial conditions the craft form of organization is not only useless but extremely expensive to its members.

At the conclusion of this series of articles we will submit a few recommendations which, we hope at least, will furnish some material for a program, around which to organize that growing minority in the railroad unions who believe that Labor Unions were instituted for an entirely different purpose than to merely furnish a fat meal ticket for a lot of unnecessary officials.

The Brotherhood Bureaucracy

The Labor bureaucrat and the craft union are closely related and both of them are products of the times through which we have been passing, namely, the era of capitalist expansion and development. Workers can only learn through experience and the railroad workers are no exception to this rule. The experience which the railroad workers have had up to the present time has not been able to produce anything but a craft system honeycombed with overpaid officials.

For the past seventy years, a period through which all of the present twenty-one railroad unions were developed, railroad transportation has gone through an almost unbroken era of expansion. Through this period of railroad development the workers, although always poor, were generally kept busy. They worked seven days a week as a general rule and also overtime. As a matter of fact, about 1913, a law was passed to prevent them from working more than sixteen hours per day. During this period the craft system and the craft officials filled all the needs the workers required of them. Because the workers are kept busy, although their hours are long and their wages low and their demands of the capitalists through their unions are usually very modest. And also during the periods of industrial expansion, employers are able to give the workers a concession now and then to keep them fairly satisfied. But these "good old" times of steady work and overtime are practically gone. Problems are piling up before the railroad workers, as well as before workers, in general, which the craft union and the craft bureaucrat cannot solve for them.

Unemployment, wage-cuts, speed-up and loss of working conditions are now staring the railroad workers in the face. And as we are now dealing with the Brotherhood bureaucrats we will look into what they have done or rather failed to do to meet these conditions which the railroad workers are now confronted.

Since 1921, when the railroad workers took their first pay cut after the war, the role of its leadership has been an unbroken process of betrayals. In 1921, in spite of a nearly 100% strike vote to resist the cut, the leaders accepted it with the excuse, "that we cannot strike against the government" and this in spite of the fact that the Roads had already been returned to private management. In 1922, eight of the lowest paid crafts received a second pay cut. Seven of those crafts forced their officials to resist the cut with a strike. Grable, the $14,000 a year leader of the section men was able to hold his organization in check regardless of its vote to strike. So Grable together with the bureaucrats at the head of the other eight higher paid crafts kept their membership from interfering with the smashing of the Shop Crafts by their employers.

Lovestone Splitters Call for Unity

The Lovestone faction has once more put forward an appeal for the "unity of the Communist movement", in a letter addressed to the official party, to itself, and to the Left Opposition. Such an appeal costs the Right wingers nothing. To Lovestone and Co. it is a purely journalistic gesture which obligates them to no retreat from the positions to which they have been advancing for the past two years and more, but with the aid of which they hope to cover up or excuse the course they have followed up to now.

The solemn hypocrisy of the Lovestone appeal is unexcelled. The leaders of the Right wing, who expelled the Left Opposition from the party without the remotest pretense at a democratic discussion, who sought to train their followers in the art of the blackjack and brass knuckles as the sole means of dealing with the "counter-revolutionists", who violently disrupted our meetings by thuggery, assaulted our comrades physically, and even burglarized our offices, whose sole contribution to date to the discussion between us and them has been to lie and misrepresent now blithely call upon us to join hands with them to "achieve unity in order that all the Communist forces may be united in one powerful Communist party".

Furthermore, what sort of horse-play is it with the highly important and serious problem and slogan of Communist unity when the Right wing chiefs invite the Left Opposition to "achieve unity" on the basis which they very "cleverly" calculate will automatically exclude us from a united party? At the meeting to celebrate their unity appeal, Gitlow, speaking in their name, set down the bases upon which Communist unity was to be attained, and included in them one which called for the unconditional defense of the workers' fatherland. Without wasting a moment on Gitlow's deliberate falsification of our standpoint, on what basis then do the Lovestonites conceive that we are to be invited to join in a "re-united Communist party", particularly when they have not, to date, repudiated their action in expelling us from the party which they at one time controlled?

The whole affair smacks of that cheap and petty-fogging kind of maneuver which is so characteristic of Lovestonian high politics, which is neither conceived nor executed with any spirit of responsibility or seriousness. Matters become even clearer when the "appeal" is examined in the light of the recent past and the relationships between the Right wing liquidators and the Communist movement as a whole.

At just what moment was Lovestone struck with the burning need of unity of "all the Communist forces"? Up to the present time, the course that he and his colleagues have pursued, has been one of the unity of all the anti-Communist and reformist forces against the Communist party. It is precisely this course, which has become a stench in the nostrils of every honest revolutionist in the country and has lost Lovestone whatever little support he ever had in the Communist ranks, which the recent "appeal" is intended to cover up. But the trick will not work.

Were Lovestone and Co. working to "bring about Communist unity" by proposing and actively working for the liquidation of the National Miners Union, the National Textile Workers Union, and the Needle Trade Workers Industrial Union, working for this end in collaboration with all shades of reformism? Was it for "Communist unity" that Gitlow, Zimmerman and Co. went to Paterson as the agents of Muste, and the fakers of the United Textile Workers Union in order to smash the Left wing movement—a job which was facilitated for them, as we pointed out, by the criminal blunders of the Stalinists? Is it for "Communist unity" that Zimmerman, the Right wing spokesman in the reactionary needle trades unions, unites with such notorious labor skates as Levy and reactionary anarchists as Bluestein—to mention but two cases—for the purpose of combatting the Communists? In a word, do the Lovestonites expect the Communist workers to take their "Communist unity" appeals seriously when they have demonstrated so incessantly that their conception of it is a united

Nothing Done to Rebuild the Unions

Since 1922 practically nothing has been done by the Brotherhood officials to rebuild the unions. In spite of the millions collected in dues, in spite of the thousands of salaried officials on the Brotherhoods' payroll, regardless of the fact that the leaders were well provided with both men and money, they have done nothing in a concerted way to organize and educate the railroad workers. Instead of rebuilding the unions and getting them to amalgamate towards an industrial union the leaders tried to build Banks and Investment Companies. The net results of these financial ventures were to the effect, that the members paid for a costly lesson to learn that their leaders knew as little about successful investments as they knew successful labor leadership.

In the next article we will deal further with the condition in which the railroad workers find themselves in the face of unemployment and wage cuts as a result of a bankrupt leadership.

Unemployment and the Party

For us, it is axiomatic that we must continue to fight. What we must do, is to add to the slogans of Unemployment Insurance and relief those practical slogans which, while answering to the needs of the workers will appeal to them in terms of work. Such slogans exist. They are principally: the slogan of the Six Hour Day, Five Day Week with no reduction in pay and the slogan of large scale, long term credits to the Soviet Union. In addition to their applicability to the present condition of the working class both at home and abroad, these slogans have precisely that quality which is so necessary in the present circumstances.

The Six Hour Day, Five Day Week, entirely possible with the high development of American industry is slowly winning the approval of sections of the American working class. It appears reasonable to them and a means of relieving unemployment, by cutting down the working day and week and putting men to work. It is urged even by sections of the capitalist class. These gentlemen intend, of course, that the six-hour day shall be accompanied by a corresponding cut in pay. We propose that there should be no wage cut. The workers will decide. If the party were to take up this slogan and launch a movement around it, it would penetrate all sections of the working class and stir them into motion to realize it.

The "work" aspect, so to speak, of the slogan of credits to the Soviet Union is no less valid. Increased trade relations with the Soviet Union as a result of a movement led by the party organized along the line elaborated by comrade Trotsky in his pamphlet "World Unemployment and the Five Year Plan", would result in concretizing the interest of the American workers for the socialist solution as expressed in the Soviet economy, and would alleviate unemployment here by opening factories now closed. For these slogans the workers will fight.

All these considerations together lead to the conclusion that the Six Hour Day should be the central slogan and that together, these three slogans constitute the essentials of a program on which the masses, both employed and unemployed can be united in a powerful movement. This is the program of the Opposition.

Unfortunately, the party does not see the problem in this light. The Dec. 3rd resolution of the T. U. U. L. Executive Committee affirms again that unemployment insurance must be the central slogan: "We must strive to organize the unemployed into the Unemployed Councils—with the demand for unemployment insurance in the center." Although the demands for a seven hour day and trade relations with the Soviet Union are included they are not conceived as levers to unite the masses and set them in motion. This is obvious from the method laid down to overcome the separation of the "unemployed movement" from "the red union movement".

This unity is to be affected as follows: "in order to abolish these weaknesses it is important during times of strikes to draw the unemployed into the strike committees, into the mass picket lines, and on the other side, to place in specific shops concrete demands regarding the unemployed. For example, the re-birthing of laid-off workers, etc." But what if there are no strikes; are the movements not to be united? On this question the resolution is silent.

It is apparent that the party still conceives the fight for unemployed insurance as a movement primarily of the unemployed. This is borne out by the organizational forms by which the resolution proposes to carry out the party program on unemployment. On this subject the resolution says, "The basic form of organization of the unemployed council is the neighborhood council, elected by the workers in the neighborhood, unemployment agencies, soup kitchens, etc." Thus, no doubt, will be the purest form of the united front from below. There is no mention here of uniting the employed and unemployed. This makes a mockery of the resolution's declaration that, "These organizations (of the unemployed) must be organized on the united front basis". Nor is this distorted conception of the united front redeemed by adding at the very end of the section dealing with this question, the sentence, "All the unemployed councils have representatives of employed workers." It is not explained in the resolution how the employed workers who have already signified their refusal to enter the existing mechanically controlled, narrow councils are to be brought into them.

The program of the Opposition proposes that the unemployed councils be genuine, broad united fronts consisting of representatives of organizations of workers of all political or no political tendencies, as well as unemployed workers from agencies, etc. This, of course, is possible upon the basis of a correct program and a regime of working class democracy in the councils. The Stalinist version is now too well known. It is anathema to workers in the A. F. of L. and out of it. On this score, the resolution is silent too. This silence is an ominous sign. It signifies that the policy of expulsion for holding non-Communist and anti-Stalinist views will continue. On such a basis there can be no united front.

It is plain that the party's program on unemployment and the organizational forms it proposes are essentially the same as those with which it has failed to unite the masses for unemployment insurance. There is, therefore, no need to repudiate the opportunism of Browder and his former policy. On the contrary, it whitewashes them. "The present developments do not require a change in policy."

The Stalinists are preparing another defeat for the fight for unemployment insurance. The results will be disastrous. The despicable demagoguery of the Pittsburgh Reverend, Cox, is a warning that if the Communists do not learn how to lead the fight for unemployment insurance, all sorts of rift-raff will divert movement into channels harmless to the capitalist class.

Against this danger and for the correct policy, the Opposition will continue to fight. For this, it has been created. It calls upon its comrades in the party to fight shoulder to shoulder with it for the six-hour day, unemployment insurance, credits to Soviet Union; for genuine united front unemployed councils; against bureaucracy, for working class democracy in the councils; for the unity of the Communist vanguard.

'Father' Cox Gets Free Hand in Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH, PA.

Pittsburgh, the center of three of the greatest basic industries: coal, iron and steel, has yielded to the masters fabulous profit wrung from the sweat and blood of the toilers exploited in these mines, mills and factories. Pittsburgh was always considered "the barometer of capitalist economic conditions." To-day this great industrial city still continues to be a barometer but a barometer of an entirely different nature. It now gauges the revolutionary perspectives of this country. The mines are shut down, workers striking, mills and factories practically silent, and thousands upon thousands of unemployed workers idly roam the streets, driven by desperation of hunger and fear of eviction, to resort to begging, charity, petty pilferage, suicides, and—Father Cox. All this in the "land of Mellon", a city synonymous with wealth and prosperity and—the "Coal and Iron Police".

It is appalling to note the number of men, women and children who come to the door begging for food and clothing. They tramp in from the near-by mining and mill towns surrounding Pittsburgh, driven by the pangs of hunger and destitution, abandoned by the coal and iron barons since there are no more profits to grind out of them. What more fertile soil could the holy, flag-waving Father Cox find in which to fulfill his "sacred" mission as a Messiah for the workers? This man whose breast is filled with "pure altruism" for the victims of this capitalist brutality and who is prepared for ever greater and unselfish and un-sparing efforts in the interests of the unemployed, even if the reward be but a presidential candidacy. His popularity continues on the increase daily with his public soup kitchens where hundreds and hundreds of helpless, discarded workers are fed soup, coffee and bread, his "Hunger March to Washington," his "Shanty Town," speeches over the radio and on January 10th as a climax, the mass demonstration at Pitt Stadium in which 70,000 workers, men, women and children assembled to voice their protests against their miserable conditions.

The sight of a soup kitchen is quite familiar to all of us these days but a "Shanty Town" such as exists in Pittsburgh, "the workshop of the world", is a new kind of home for scrapped workers of industry, a real eye sore and a rotten ulcer upon this decaying society.

Upon an open lot, in the rear of Father Cox's church, located at Liberty and 17th St., is found this modern mode of living for unemployed workers when the bosses can no more use them to extract profits. Little shacks, the size of out-houses, slapped together from every conceivable kind of refuse material, from a piano box to old chicken crates, and rusty old iron beds as weights to keep the roofs from flying away when a wind blows. Gas pipes, sewer pipes, etc., act as chimneys. The workers roam about idly, insufficiently clad, half starved and on their faces an expression of complete abandonment. They look forward only to the pitiful handout that may come through this benevolent underhanded politician whose only object is to beat political capital out of the misery of these jobless workers.

In the face of such scenes of working class misery it is only natural to want to know how the Communist Party of Pittsburgh, the vanguard of the working class here, is handling the situation with regards to Father Cox and unemployment.

Chicago Stalinists Disrupt Conference

A "broad mass United Front Conference to fight against Criminal Syndicalist Laws" was held here in Peoples' Auditorium by the I. L. D. last Sunday.

It was in every respect a "united front" of the present day Stalinist variety. All the I. W. O., I. L. D., Unemployed Councils and sundry organizations of the Communist party were there. There was also present comrade Frank Buckley, delegate representing the Communist League of America (Opposition). Joe Tash was chosen by the bureaucrats to deliver the main report to the Conference. He talked. He told the audience that the bosses are fighting the workers. He admits at the same time that he does not know so much about the Criminal Syndicalist laws themselves. He also warns the audience against the "Trotskyites" whom his keen eye perceives in the hall. He said that this small group of "renegades" was sure to advance a project for a united front with the fakers of the A. F. of L.

Comrade Buckley immediately took the floor and attempted to refute the lies of Tash, stating correctly the Leninist united front principle that workers organizations, irrespective of political tendency, must be organized into a fight against the capitalist class on such specific issues like Criminal Syndicalism, which could undoubtedly rally behind it large sections of workers, even those who for the present may even be against Communism.

No sooner did comrade Buckley sit down when Bill Gebert, D. O. of the party takes the floor. His face was red and blue. His eyes rolled violently in their orbit. The gleaming white of his eyes could be seen in the back of the hall and might have furnished an excellent target for Colonel Prescott's men at the battle of Bunker Hill. He fumed and stormed and the froth dripped from his mouth.

While ordinarily it is difficult to understand Gebert when he talks, under this pathological condition it was almost impossible. However, piecing his words together here and there, we heard such choice bits of slander as "Ray Edmundson, Illinois mine faker, ally of the Trotskyites." He also attacked Gerry Allard as stool-pigeon. Saying that he appeared as witness against him in the Benton, Ill., hearing and testified that the National Miners' Union in Illinois was a strike-breaking organization.

From this he generalized the term stool-pigeon to apply to the whole Left Opposition. Pointing with his finger at comrade Joseph Giganti, delegate from the Italian Workers' Club, he called for mob action. Without even a chance to utter a word in answer to the cowardly attack, Giganti was pounced upon by a bunch of hoodlums and forcibly ejected from the hall. He pointed also to Buckley in the same manner, but out of respect for his huge size, the hoodlums were more cautious in handling him.

The meeting then dragged on for several more hours. It was a successful Stalinist united front and the delegates all went home deeply imbued with an object lesson in the "ideological" methods of the present party leadership.

STATEMENT OF THE CHICAGO LEFT OPPOSITION

The crying need of the hour is unity of our class forces to fight the bosses' offensive, but once again the criminal action of the Stalinist bureaucrats scatters our forces. They again demonstrated their deadening influence upon our Communist party at the Sunday conference to fight the Criminal Syndicalist Laws.

They not only ejected comrade Frank Buckley, delegate from the Communist League after he spoke on the Leninist United Front but also forcefully ejected comrade Joe Giganti delegate from the Italian Workers' Club. This action came after Bill Gebert, the D. O., stirred up the lesser bureaucrats with a speech in which he said there are stool-pigeons and counter-revolutionists in the hall and pointed to these two comrades. Much resentment and protest was shown to this action but the well oiled machine moved on and a dead and dry conference of about 200 went on.

The membership must resist such anti-working class action by the bureaucrats. The bureaucrats cannot throw out the representatives of the most revolutionary wing of Communism without at the same time closing the door to the broad strata of workers moving in the direction of Communism. Scores of such examples can easily be pointed out but one of the latest in Chicago is the Mooney-Harlan Conference of two months ago which promised a bigger and broader one in December. It is long past due and nothing has been done to mobilize the workers for Mooney who still rots in jail while the reformers and politicians are taking advantage and making a football out of the case.

The uneating of the Left Opposition through fear and inability to withstand out Marxist criticism at the same time carried with it the construction of a huge unnatural wall between the class. Morgenstern and Goodman are sentenced in Pennsylvania for Sedition and their representative in Chicago is denied the right to speak, when he calls on all to unite to fight the Criminal Syndicalist Laws and for its victims.

We call upon the workers and sympathizers to work for a broad united front movement, to fight for the release of class war prisoners and against the Criminal Syndicalist laws and support the I. L. D. in this work as far as it will go.

What is missing are mass organizations, such as the Soviets, which assemble the whole working class and become the instrument of the insurrection and of the seizure of power. Above all, there is missing a strong Communist party, without which victory is impossible. If the working class is conquered without a battle or after a heroic but ineffectual push, its defeat, its passivity will favor the evolution of the petty bourgeoisie to the right and will permit the bourgeoisie to lead upon it in striking a death-blow against the proletariat. Under these circumstances, Fascism will find a magnificent basis for its development.

This perspective is possible, but not inevitable, far from it. The working class must keep it in mind in order to foresee all the dangers, and to attack the enemy more surely and more decisively. The situation is clearly a revolutionary one. The capitalist class is more aggravated from day to day. There is no solution. The bourgeoisie keeps consolidating its position in a desperate effort, but stumbles over unheeded difficulties in trying to consolidate them definitely.

It tends to gain time by constituting a government presided over by socialists. This working class must take account of this and not give the bourgeoisie a moment's breathing space. In revolutionary periods such as those in which we are living, events develop with extraordinary speed. The revolutionary consciousness of the masses progresses similarly in geometric ratio. What is missing is a party to concretize this revolutionary consciousness into precise formulas and organize the masses for action. This party does not even exist, although there is potentially an intense Communist spirit in the country. The working class must be given this indispensable instrument for its emancipation. A great revolutionary proletarian party must be forged, uniting all the Communist forces which exist in the country, and giving it a clear and precise program. Only in this way can the Fascist danger be averted; and the Spanish proletariat, allied with the peasants, can advance with a firm and sure step on the road which leads to victory.

The possibilities of success in the struggle against the Fascist danger and in the constitution of a strong Communist party will depend principally on the ability to put an end to the trade union split which has torn apart the working class of our country.

In this sense, the Communist party is called upon to fulfill a role of the very first importance, by struggling implacably against the chronic splitters among the anarchists and the U. G. T., by proving in practice to the proletariat that it desires unity, and by an ardent struggle to attain unity.

Unfortunately, the Party in this field has followed a fundamentally false policy, which culminated in the famous Seville Conference and in the constitution of the Reconstruction Committee, which created a deserved unpopularity among the Communists in the C. N. T., and has deepened the split still further. Three or four months ago the Party, faced with the open collapse of its trade union policy, announced a "turn". It gave up the splitting tactics, which had produced such miserable results, and announced the transformation of the Reconstruction Committee into a Unity Committee.

The Spanish Communist Opposition greeted this "turn" with satisfaction, as it was the same thing as an implied recognition of the accuracy of its criticism; at the same time, it encouraged the Communists to prevent the turn announced by the party from remaining on paper, which there was reason to fear from the persistence with which the party stuck to some of its fundamental mistakes.

"As far as the trade union policy is concerned," said the Central Committee of the Opposition in the open letter addressed, with this purpose, to all members of the party, "the symptoms are even more disturbing. Concrete propositions for a united front have been made to the C. N. T., but the Reconstruction Committee continues to function, and even after the circular of the Political Secretariat announcing the turn in the policies of the party, has published various manifestoes over its signatures. If the wishes of the Executive Committee are sincere, it must prove it in practice. The members of the party must impose their will in this direction on the leaders."

Our fears were more than justified. The party, far from orientating itself sincerely toward unity, emphasized its policy of division. This is the reality, the more so as it tries to present itself on the outside, formally, as the most resolute defender of unity.

Its decision to call a so-called "Trade Union Unity Conference," using as in 1925 (!) the Federation of Working Class Organizations of San Sebastian, can only lead to a second edition, revised and enlarged, of the Seville Reconstruction Committee, that is to say, to the creation of a third central body.

It is evident beyond a doubt that only an insignificant minority of trade unionists will participate in this conference, and that the great organizations of the C. N. T. and the U. G. T. will not send delegates. Under these circumstances, can the conference produce any other result than a new split?

The experience of the last few years shows that this road is not the most desirable one to reach the unity so ardently desired; that with unity conferences and proposals for fusion congresses, absolutely nothing is accomplished. Unity must be achieved from below, after passing through the phase of the united front. The struggle against the bosses' offensive, the problems presented by the revolution, have shown clearly before the eyes of the working class the necessity of coordinating and unifying its forces. Otherwise, it will be hopelessly crushed by the enemy, and the bourgeoisie, allied with the landlords, will accomplish once and for all the destruction of the revolution.

There is not a single worker, no matter how little conscious he is, who does not understand the necessity of forming a single front with the comrades who work with him in the same factory, in the same shop, in the same mine. The Factory Committee, elected by all workers of the same class without exception, whether or not organized in trade unions, or belonging to the C. N. T., or the U. G. T., or whatever their political affiliation may be, offers them the effective possibility of realizing their unity in action. The struggle for unity must therefore be begun from below, by undertaking an energetic campaign in favor of the constitution of Factory Committees throughout the country.

Once unity has been achieved in this way from below, the working class, impelled by the very logic of the struggle, will reach the conclusion that it needs, not yet, the united front, but unity from the viewpoint of organization, on a national scale. This road is apparently slower than that of the fusion congress which is favored as the first and last step, but in reality it is much faster, and above all, infinitely more effective.

The struggle for unity has, besides, other invaluable advantages pointed out already by us in the past. In the first place, it offers the proletariat a magnificent occasion to counterpose the revolutionary control of production, exercised by these Committees, to the project for so-called "workers' control" worked out by Largo Caballero, which is only a concealed form of class collaboration.

In the second place, in the course of development of revolutionary events in our country, the Factory Committees can serve as a powerful stimulus to the appearance of Soviets, those irreplaceable organs of the proletariat.

Let us therefore abandon the empty propaganda for trade union unity and those efforts which, like the conference planned by the party, only deepen the split, and let us work actively and resolutely for real and immediate unity in action of the working class, by driving forward with the greatest energy the creation of Factory Committees.

Barcelona, Nov. 27, 1931

—ANDRÉS NIN.

In Bulgaria

On the afternoon of October 11, 1931, a bloody dispute took place in the courtyard of Philippopol Prison among the political prisoners—all of them comrades who have fought and suffered for the cause of the proletariat. This quarrel, called forth by factional differences, of opinion and by reciprocal insults deeply shook the sentiments of the working-class circles.

The press of Stalin's tools—Echo, Workers' Action, etc.—was filled with declarations and protests of prisoners of the Stalinist faction. Our excellent comrades, at the head of whom stands the noble and steadfast D. Gatchev, sentenced to death like so many other Oppositionists, were treated in these declarations as a herd of bandits, as a gang of fascists, enjoying the approval of the prison warden, against whom punishment and removal were demanded. The followers of Stalin, who has not desisted from shooting, imprisonment and deportation of people of the rank of Leon Trotsky and Christian Rakovsky, are all alarmed over the incidents in the Philippopol Prison. They are calling for the intervention of bourgeois justice and are endeavoring to bring decisions of inner-party disputes.

In this, just as all the other lackeys in the rest of the world, they are treating their opponents of the Opposition as traitors, or as tools of the bourgeoisie and of Fascism. They have neither the courage nor the ability for a free and honest struggle to compare both methods; that of Lenin and that of Trotsky which assured the proclamation and the entrenchment of the revolution in Russia, and on the other hand, that of Stalin and Molotov, who are subjecting all the acquisitions of the great Russian revolution, both the ideological as well as the organizational ones, to an international danger by enfeeblement, destruction and demoralization.

More than that; the political prisoners, poisoned by the Stalinist optimism, who are nevertheless our comrades, in the same class and in the same struggle, go as far as to issue—before the whole working class of the country, before the entire world proletariat—in the Stalinist press, which could find not a single word of fraternal conciliation, and reciprocal toleration, this declaration: "It will be impossible to prevent new attacks upon us, bloody conflicts are inevitable." And since the Stalinists are in the majority, it is quite apparent that a new bloody attack is being organized against our comrades, which is already now prepared psychologically and justified in advance.

Whom do these tragic quarrels serve? Comrades! On both sides, come to your senses! Can't you sum up sufficient moral strength to rise above these altogether too primitive methods of struggle, of application for a judgment from the authorities of our class enemies? Are you going to show yourselves incapable of rising to the level of proletarian ethics? Can you not find the strength for this by respecting the views of your

A Letter to a Comrade by Leon Trotsky

Dear comrade:

I will try to express my views on the questions raised by you as briefly as possible. From the first, I had considered the disintegration of the Brandlerist faction as something absolutely inevitable. A revolutionary faction which has no doctrine, no general conception of the world situation, no elaborated strategic principles, is doomed, as a cross between Communism and social democracy, to a hand to mouth vegetation and cannot withstand the convulsions of the present epoch. Brandler and Thalheimer, the "leaders" of the international Right wing opposition called us "sectarians". Now, when we do possess a certain amount of cadres and begin slowly to grow, these alleged representatives of mass action find themselves in the midst of complete disintegration. Half of the leaders want to join Stalin, the other half Seydewitz. When Messrs. Brandler and Thalheimer take the part of yes-men with regard to everything that goes on in the Soviet Union, that does not prove at all, that they are blinded by nature or that they have been dazzled by the wisdom of the Stalinists, but much rather, that they do not care a snap what happens in the country of the October revolution. Up to February 15, 1928 Brandler and Thalheimer repeatedly said: The Opposition's program of industrialization and collectivization is a utopia. Beginning with February 16, they immediately approved the new program of Stalin which was only a caricature of our own. One can more readily understand why it is that the Stalinists, under the immediate pressure of difficulties and contradictions which they are incapable either of overcoming or even of understanding, are engaged in changing their position sharply and in taking refuge behind lies, but it is really repulsive to see these two Berlin peewees constantly saying yes and yes, without taking any part at all in the affair outside of their fervent desire to be appointed to high functions. And the fact that the Right wing opposition tolerates the likes of them in its midst, nay, at its head, is in my eyes very characteristic of that organization.

We, the Left Opposition, are weak. We are growing slowly. But we are patient. The cadres of the Comintern consist either of completely used up, formerly revolutionary, elements or of neutral hirelings. The Marxist tradition has been broken. What is sailing now under the flag of Leninism is only a mishmash of the most heterogeneous elements, cemented by blunt Stalinist ignorance. The authority of the October revolution has become an obstacle to revolutionary development. That is the dialectic of history: reason becomes nonsense, October revolution becomes Kaganovich. Under such conditions, how can the Marxist tendency be expected to move forward at express speed? In order to master the international situation, its turns, changes, etc., a certain theoretical level is required, or at least, a certain amount of political experience. The masses can only approve of us, insofar as our views withstand the test of events and are confirmed by them. Example: Our small German organization is making a serious step forward precisely because it is holding its own in this eventful situation, while the Brandlerites are forced into bankruptcy.

Com. St. believes, according to what you say, that there are unreliable, confused and even discrediting Cantonists among us, especially in Austria. It is true, in Austria there exist, to be sure, not four but—insofar as I have been informed—two groups who count themselves as members of the Left Opposition, both of which we are, however, for the time being, allowing to take their course outside of the framework of our organization because just now we lay more weight on quality than on numbers. Numbers only make up the real mass, when the cadres maintain themselves by their quality, that is, by their ideas, and methods. When will the great successes come? That I cannot tell you. The Left Radicals remained a small minority in the German social democracy for years. The Zimmerwald Left consisted of single comrades from various countries, and they were not—as comrade St. very well knows—not as the best: a young Norwegian poet, the confused Hoeglund from Sweden, Julius Borchardt, etc. But the doctrine was solid, the orientation firm, the methods correct, that is, appropriate for the epoch. And out of this small group, the Third International arose. To be sure, through the intermediary of the October revolution. Great revolutions always consume whole generations, and that is just the case now. To a certain, but only to a certain degree, it is necessary to begin anew at present. In this, the most important task is to preserve the continuity of the revolutionary-Marxist, that is—in our epoch, of the Bolshevik idea and to transmit it to the younger generation. The confused Cantonists, who "discredit" us will be hurled aside. One should choose one's path according to the fundamental, determining, objective factors and not according to the subjective impressions of one group or another of followers of the revolutionary tendency. Engels once wrote to Bernstein somewhat along these lines: "We (i. e. Marx and Engels, naturally) remained in the minority all our life and were quite comfortable at that." I do not mean to say by this, that we should make this our aim. In my life, it also happened that I was among the majority. But all those who constantly rave about the "masses" and the "majority" never actually attain it, at least not for revolutionary ends. The masses are not won over by a special mass technique, as Brandler and Thalheimer conceive of it—in this field, the trade union fakers are sky-high superior to them—the masses are won over in our epoch, full of events and crises, only by a clear revolutionary, social conception.

The further development of the German situation will be decisive for the international labor movement, and in the first instance, for the Comintern. Should the German proletariat be victorious—this can only happen by the greatest tension of all the creative forces latent in it—then the dictatorship of the empty and brutal Stalinist bureaucracy will immediately fall, great ideological struggles will be solved, the Left Opposition will have a fruitfying effect on the renovation of the labor movement in Germany and in the entire world. Should the German proletariat be defeated by the Fascists, then all will be over with the Comintern and possibly also with the Soviet Union. For the world proletariat, that will mean a set-back for long years to come. Under these tragic conditions, the Left Opposition will take over the task of continuing to expand the Marxist idea, but certainly no longer within the formal framework of the Third International. We have a long run perspective. The events can accelerate our development, even give it a feverish pace. All the better! We are, however, also prepared to carry on propagandistic and educational work for long years as "secretarians", in order to prepare the yeast for the future.

With best Communist regards,
L. TROTSKY.

EDITORIAL NOTES

FATHER COX

While unemployment increases daily and the suffering and misery accumulates to the explosive point the militant movement of the workers around the issue completely fails to keep pace. The unemployment movement shows many signs of regression, or at best marks time. This is the price of false and inadequate policies and bankrupt leadership. In the face of such a contradiction the way is opened for all kinds of charlatans to get the attention of the hungry masses. The situation is made to order for them, and those who show skill in the work of deception have the capitalist press for a publicity machine. The most conspicuous and successful of these traffickers in human misery that has yet appeared on the scene is the Catholic priest of Pittsburgh, Father Cox.

The exploits of this clever sky-pilot are crowding the legitimate workers movement out of the daily news. While this can be attributed, in part, to more or less deliberate policy of the capitalist press, it must be admitted that his methods and program have a superficial attraction for many workers. He stole the thunder of the Communists with his "hunger march" to Washington and, from all reports, made just as good a showing. He demands "immediate relief," government appropriations and similar measures, which have a practical sound and make a certain appeal to the desperate workers who are staggering under the heavy blows of the crisis. This is indicated by the attendance of fifty thousand at his Pittsburgh mass meeting. It is not altogether out of question that his project for a national convention at St. Louis should arouse widespread hopes and attain a measure of success.

One thing is incontestable: The intolerable burdens of unemployment are arousing millions who can no longer bear them in silence. They are moving with irresistible force toward some form of expression. Whether it will be a fighting program or a compound of reformist and religious illusions, whether it will be led by revolutionists or demagogues—this remains undecided. It is not written anywhere that the workers, in the first stages of their awakening, will take the road of militant struggle. Neither is it precluded. The policy and methods of the party are the deciding factor in this question. The conditions work in a progressive direction, but the leadership fumbles every time and turns the movement back.

Time is vitally important. Every error and every delay increases the danger that the course of the movement will be turned aside. The spectacular successes of Father Cox are a sharp warning of the reality of this danger.

ATTACKING THE MARINE WORKERS' DEFENSE

The attack on the Marine Workers' Defense Committee in the Daily Worker of January 25th is a continuation, under a new form, of the policy of the party and the I. L. D. in this case since its inception. The attack is shifted from the prisoners to their defense committee, but at bottom the attitude remains the same—treacherous disregard for the fate of the prisoners and concern only for the factional interests of this corrupt and degenerated clique. The attempt to disrupt the defense on the very eve of the trial is an act of collaboration with the prosecution no less than was the statement of the Daily Worker on the day after the arrest more than two months ago. If the conspiracy to railroad these workers is defeated—as we trust it will be—it will also be a defeat for scoundrels who, in the name of Communism, have done and are doing their best to deprive the prisoners of the solidarity, support and defense that is their due. When the Communist workers finally call these scavengers to judgment their reckless sport with the lives of labor prisoners will not be the least count in the indictment that will condemn them forever.

When Soderberg, Bunker and Trajer were first arrested their friends appealed to the I. L. D. for aid. This appeal was rejected; this organization, which is maintained by the revolutionary workers for such purposes, refused even to send a lawyer to visit them in jail, to hear their story and to inquire whether they were being mistreated. The Daily Worker on November 18th disavowed the men and denounced them as they lay helpless in the hands of the third-degree torturers. Said the Daily Worker on that date: "Soderberg, secretary of the Tidewater Boatmen's Union, whom the capitalist press calls a 'Red,' was expelled from the Communist party for being a suspicious element and also from the Marine Workers' Industrial Union for disruptive and anti-working class activities. Trajer, Reilly and Bunker were expelled from the Marine Workers' Industrial Union as bad elements." And to this, the Young Worker added: "Soderberg is a stool pigeon."

Now, when the case is already on the calendar for trial they come forward and offer a "class struggle defense." What kind of a defense did they offer in the days after the arrest when defense was desperately needed? Nobody stood in their way. The initiative was taken by others only because they would do nothing—noting but denounce the prisoners and leave them to their fate. For this reason also the Marine Workers' Defense Committee was formed at the request of the defendants. The I. L. D. and the Party were invited to participate, to send speakers to the mass meeting, to help in the organization of a united front of labor for the defense. All this they refused, and the work went on without them. Now they come forward to protect the prisoners from the "betrayal" of the defense committee which did the necessary work which they refused to do or help in doing.

This eleventh hour discovery of the merits of the case by the Daily Worker has not occurred without reason. It bears testimony to the effective work of the defense committee in popularizing the issue and it indicates the pressure brought against the bureaucrats by the Communist workers who were ashamed of the things done in their name. But the new approach to the case shows a cynical contempt for the intelligence of these workers. They will stand for a great deal—as the continued existence of the Stalinist-bureaucratic domination—but they have not forgotten the record this bureaucracy has made in the case of the marine workers, and they will not forget it.

In order to refresh their memory and to put all the issues clearly before the workers the defense committee has decided to issue a statement giving an account of its work and policy. This statement, which will adduce documents and facts on every point, will deal another blow to the disrupters and thereby strengthen the defense of the persecuted workers facing trial.

A PROGRESSIVE TENDENCY

The draft of a program published by the Opposition group of the Proletarian Party gives further confirmation of the progressive tendency represented by the new group. The document leaves a number of the most decisive questions unanswered, but in spite of this limitation—which is easily understandable in a group that has only recently taken shape—the programmatic statement of the Opposition gives a fairly clear impression of the nature of the revolt against Proletarian Party leaders who lived too long, in peace. The faction fight—or, more correctly, the split—in the Keracher organization is a fight of revolutionary workers against a sterile and conservative clique.

The sections of the program dealing with unemployment and the trade union question show the strong sides of the opposition as compared with the Keracher official faction. On both these points, so vitally connected with the daily work in the class struggle, the opposition group shows the impulse to break out of the sectarian passivity, garnished with high-sounding pseudo-Marxist talk, which has characterized the Proletarian Party from the beginning. The progressive and revolutionary tendency of the opposition in this regard is undoubted.

It must be noted however that this characterization applies mainly to its program on these points as compared to the official policy and practice. The formulations of the opposition are by no means adequate, and they are lacking somewhat in theoretical motivation. From this the danger can arise of an uncritical plunge into "mass work" for its own sake and the ending of the whole movement in a swamp. If this is defended as a necessary reaction to the "pure theory" of the Keracher group, it must be remembered that it was not the preoccupation of the Proletarian Party with theoretical questions, but the shallowness and falsity of its theories, that determined its isolation and its futility.

The paramount problem of the American labor movement—the prerequisite for its development on the revolutionary path in the next period—is the consolidation of a firm cadre of political vanguard fighters, that is, of revolutionary Marxists. In this task the clarification of theory takes first place. The specific weight of even a small group of this character will be far greater, and its influence on events in a rising wave of class struggles incomparable more decisive, than a hundred amorphous "mass movements" which leave aside the fundamental problems for future consideration.

The formation of the cadres of the vanguard need not be contrasted to the mass movements, but their formation is the condition for the revolutionary effectiveness of the latter. If the opposition group of the Proletarian Party sees the thing this way its revolt against the dead routine of Keracherism can become the starting point for an important contribution to the Communist movement. We hope for a fruitful collaboration with them on this line. The best way to begin this collaboration is to conduct a frank discussion of all the important questions.

The Recent Outbreaks in Spain and their Meaning

which will surely be amplified and confirmed by later information.

"Law for Defense of Republic"

The republican-socialist coalition which took over the government with such elaborate promises for the welfare of the masses and took such deliberate pains to proclaim Spain a "democratic republic of the workers," has not failed to reveal in action its brutally anti-labor character. Not only has it not succeeded in solving a single one of the problems posed by the democratic revolution, but it has steadily instituted regulations and procedures which have steadily increased the discontentment of the workers. The focal point of the rift between the masses and the ruling class it has brought to power has become, to a great extent, the infamous "law for the defense of the republic" and the existence of the equally infamous "Guardia Civil" which is maintained to enforce the draconian measures of the law.

Before the adoption of the law, and now "legally" under the law, hundreds upon hundreds of active militants have been arbitrarily arrested and detained without trial or indictment. The system of "detenciones gubernativas" (arbitrary governmental detention), carried over from the Republic, has been carried over under the dictatorship. Characteristically, under the dictatorship this vicious system was declared against by such present-day authorities as Azana, Prieto, Marcelino Domingo; one of its most ardent opponents under Primo was Galarraga, who today permeates it just as ardently in the capacity of Director General of Security in Madrid. Just as under Primo and Berenguer, working class papers are now administratively suppressed by the minister of the interior or his representatives. Frete Uno and Mundo Obrero, organs of the Communist party, have been suppressed or harassed. In Catalonia, the civil governor, Anguera de Sojo, completely suppressed the weekly paper of the Left Opposition, El Soviet. The powerful daily paper of the C. N. T., Solidaridad Obrera, has been seized regularly, particularly since it passed into the hands of the anarchists.

Trade union and political centers of all sorts have been closed by the authorities in the most high-handed manner. Just in the short period of the writer's visit to Spain, the press reported the shutting down of the C. N. T. (anarchosyndicalist) unions in Cadiz; the illegalization of the anarchist-controlled railroad workers' union in Malaga; the outlawry of the autonomous building trades union in Bilbao, led by the Communist party and the Left Opposition; and—with the tacit consent of the three socialist leaders who are in the coalition cabinet—the closing up of U. G. T. (socialist unions) and even Socialist party centers in their stronghold, Estremadura.

In one strike after another, the government—the Madrid center as well as the Catalonian Generalitat, has intervened openly on the side of the employers. The Civil Guard, cordially despised and hated by virtually the entire population, has been used time and again to crush strikes, to beat up demonstrators, and even to fire-point-blank into workers' meetings. All these measures and acts are now elevated to the plane of constitutional law by the new "law for the defense of the republic," voted by reactionaries, socialists and even Macia adherents, which puts more arbitrary and dictatorial power into the hands of the minister of the interior than Primo ever presumed to take! All this by the grace of the socialist ministers and with their benediction.

The Arnedo Massacre

The flames of resentment in the ranks of the working class, which were reduced to a smoldering glow, while back, now seem to have flared up again. From what can be gathered by reading the most recent periodicals, the recent strike outbreaks were precipitated by a horrible massacre of workers in Arnedo, province of Viscaya. Rights into a crowd of defenseless workers came the rifle fire of the Guardia Civil, with the result that besides the many wounded, there is now a toll of ten dead men, women and children, among the latter a fifteen years old boy.

Throughout the country it appears that this was the final straw.

The accumulated hatred of the Civil Guard, which symbolizes oppression, arbitrariness and police brutality to the Spanish workers and peasants, spilled over in all parts of the country. In one section after another, general strikes of protest against the Arnedo massacre were called some for 24 hours some for two days, some for an "indefinite period" in San Sebastian, later throughout Vizcaya, and, as recent press dispatches in-dicade, throughout Andalusia and Catalonia. Everywhere, the popular demand was raised for the dissolution of the Civil Guard. The republicans and socialists in power, cavalierly oblivious of their solemn promises before the fall of the monarchy to abolish the black-hatted bandits of the Guard, promptly proceeded to send comrades of the same Guards to suppress the strikes with all the ferocity for which they are notorious.

Despite the militancy of the strike movement, which sporadically and spontaneously went so far as to take over control of local municipalities, it is clear from even the meager press reports that it has been driven back by the concentration. And, with the present state of the movement, nothing else could be expected.

The fatal weakness of his movement is its leadership and outlook. Practically everywhere, it is under the domination of the C. N. T. leaders, either of the "pure" syndicalist brand or of the "pure" anarchist brand. Practically everywhere, the actions are consequently precipitated without genuine preparation, with the vaguest, least practical, most "idealistic" aims, without national coordination, without foresight as to the results or the means provided for resisting an agile, mobile, well-directed and centralized bourgeoisie and its apparatus of suppression. The inevitable result is that the anarcho-syndicalists, contempt for the state, are completely discredited and checkmated when the "social myth" of the state turns up at every corner and confronts the heroically confused workers with serried ranks of trained Civil Guards bayonets fixed and rifles leveled.

The concern which every revolutionist must feel over these events is over the fact that the petty-bourgeois ignorance and prejudices of the anarcho-syndicalist leaders resulted in dress parades of an unprepared and undirected working class against a thoroughly fortified bourgeoisie, unnecessarily exhausting the forces of the workers, bleeding them slowly in futile skirmishes, preaching the superiority of primitive guerrilla warfare when only the strategy of centralized war is applicable, practicing the theory of sporadic advances and disorganized retreats under the fatally erroneous impression that it is the bourgeoisie which will thereby be weakened. The continued precipitation of premature and unprospective mosquito attacks, accomplished by taking unwisely advantage of the just resentment and militancy of the masses, means that the anarcho-syndicalists are stretching out Spain's "July days" into weeks and perhaps months. It constitutes a terrific threat to the real progress of the Spanish proletarian movement.

The other side of this situation is the "blipshersin permanence" of the Spanish Communist Party. We have often pointed out the veritable crimes against the revolution which the Stalinist bureaucrats have committed in the Spanish situation. Each acute situation only reveals this horrible fact more glaringly.

In K. C. Opposition

Our first open forum held Monday, January 18 marked a real success for the Kansas City Left Opposition and speaks well for our future work. About sixty workers, among whom were a dozen or so party members, participated in a very lively and interesting meeting on "Why Trotsky was Deported from Russia." The speaker, George Clarke, elaborated on the basic difference between the Left Opposition and the Stalinists; told of the ruinous consequences of the centrist zigzag in the Soviet Union and described the fatal disasters in the international resultant from the non-Marxian theory of "socialism in one country." The talk was well received by the audience. During the question period the party members were quick to seize the opportunity for questions and discussion. But as usual most of the time of their discussion was occupied with easily refutable slanders. The only half-way serious arguments were old ones, viz: "Trotsky wants to rob the peasantry" and "Neither Stalin nor Kalinin could be centrists since they had been in jail and Siberia for their activities." To these the speaker's replies appeared to satisfy most of the listeners.

On Sunday, January 17, at the Negro Organizing Club comrade Clarke spoke to an audience of approximately 100 Negro workers on the "Economic crisis, Communism and the Negro." The remarks on this subject seemed to have struck a sympathetic chord among the Negroes gathered, for the hall fairly rang with applause at the conclusion of his speech. This is the second Negro meeting in Kansas City in which the Left Opposition has explained the revolutionary idea. We hope to continue propagandizing Communist theory and practice among the black workers of Kansas City.

Auspices: Communist League of America (Opposition)

The light-hearted gambling with the problems of the movement, ignorance and ineptness, the stage juggling with the burning trade union question which results in the absence of any decisive Communist influence in the powerful C. N. T.—or the U. G. T., for that matter—has made it possible for the anarcho-syndicalists to debilitate the working class without encountering effective resistance from the Communist forces in the principal mass organizations. So much invaluable, irreplaceable time has been lost by the antics of Stalinism! So much more time threatens to be lost unless a turn is made!

The pitiful attempts of the Stalinist press to cover up the bankruptcy of Ballejos, Adame, Trilla and Co. in Spain, deserve a word. Taken completely unawares, the Daily Worker clamored for days about "eight towns" having "declared the establishment of a Soviet Republic!" Such abysmal ignorance about "establishing Soviet Republics" is to be expected from the bourgeois press... and from Stalinist dungeons. Then we learn that "the workers of Spain are turning in masses to the revolutionary leadership of the Communist party"

(D. W., 1-23-32). Unfortunately, this big mouthful is miles distant from the truth, if only for the reason that these same journalist-manufacturers and their Spanish colleagues have done everything they could to keep the masses from the Communist party.

The Daily Worker is not alone. The current issue of the Workers Age, which contains an outraged article by Gittlow against the bluffs and exaggerations of the Daily Worker, does an elaborate piece of bluffing on its own hook. It informs us of the "wide-spread revolutionary uprising under the leadership of the Catalonian Communist Federation (the Right wing group of Maurin and Co.) and the syndicalist unions". That the syndicalist unions are leading the movement is undoubtedly true, but no more. The story about the leadership of Maurin and Co. is nothing but bluff, pure and simple, manufactured entirely out of a typewriter and a piece of paper. The revolution in Spain is still on the order of the day. It is only necessary to understand the dangers it faces, and to overcome them in a serious, Marxian manner.

—MAX SHACHTMAN.

Book Review:

Lassalle. By Arno Schirokauer. Translated by Eden and Cedar Paul. The Century Co.

Of all the figures in the labor movement since the beginning of the era of scientific socialism, none stands out so romantically and haughtily as does the figure of Ferdinand Lassalle. He has not only been biographed by so eminent a critic as Georg Brandes; but he has even been transplanted into the fictional pages of no less a novelist than the great Victorian, George Meredith, who painted Lassalle with the cellophane coating of fiction around him as Alvan, the Jewish firebrand and reformer, in his novel "The Tragic Comedians." And as a "tragic comedian" he has been admired and parlor-gamed over by ever so many well meaning intellectuals, liberals and romantic socialists.

That he should have been taken up by bourgeois intellectuals of his time and after is hardly to be marvelled at. Consider a boy born of Jewish parents—with decided semitic features—rising to the point of confounding the aristocracy, and what's more, the rising bourgeoisie (whom he evidently hated more) up to the great Bismarck, himself. With ingenuous argumentation that resembled more the haggling of some ancient Talmudists than the Dialectics of anybody, he stands up in court and defends the notorious Countess Hatfield. A defense which lasts well on to a decade and culminates in making him the darling of the "haute monde."

The "haute monde" of '48 and in Lassalle a noisy and forceful, if at times, illogical leader. He electrifies with his speeches. He crushes with his denunciations. He even writes a book and a pretentious drama in blank verse. The book is on the Greek philosopher, Heraclitus and it is written not so much to enlighten anybody as to lay a philosophic background for his aggressive behavior. Nothing is too much for him. He is the eagle. (He says so, himself). All the time he is making love to one woman or another. Love and action are inscribed in letters of fire on his spiritual coat-of-arms. He is as helpless without the one as the other. And so the draft caused by his running from the political scene to the bed-room never ceases until the bullet from a pistol shot in a duel over his lady-love, the comely Helen von Donneges, (would he have loved her a week hence?) lays him low.

Now in the sense that the book deals with these situations which are by now a legend in the ranks of the radical intelligentsia, it is a better book than any that has gone before. Certainly the Donneges affair which has been made so much of by other commentators has here been minimized to its proper proportions. The book in general is written with a gusty savor that somehow does manage to recapture the personality that was Lassalle. The style is rapid—hasty—and in keeping with its subject. So much for the formal aspects.

But the social democratic bias from which the author writes can never for a moment be mistaken. With all the painful efforts to be objective the bias stands out like a pair of bow-legs in a Ziegfeld chorus. The Marx-Lassalle disagreements are explained from the personal point of view. To a bourgeois intellectual or social democrat, a disagreement between two people of different political opinions is always personal. If Marx differs with Bakunin and Lassalle, it is placed directly to personal jealousy, by these gentry, or to some disease. If Lenin differs with Plechanov and Martov—he is jealous. If Trotsky disagrees with Stalin—it's a personal issue for power. These creatures see everything through the refraction mirror of their own petty-bourgeois souls. And so Marx's and Engels' dislike and distrust of Lassalle is placed right at the door of personal jealousy. It need not of course be stressed here that the political differences between Marx and Lassalle are barely skimmed over or entirely neglected. Marx's criticism of Lassalle's Gotha Program is not even mentioned. But then, what can you expect of a social democrat, and a social democratic intellectual, at that!

One more point. In the concluding remarks of his biography, Mr. Schirokauer gives himself over to reflecting upon the career of a man who not only died once but three times. Lassalle is dead. His work is dead. His (?) International (the first) is dead. But our biographer sees a faint light gleaming. He argues thus: The chief bone of contention between Marx and Lassalle was the matter of National vs. International Socialism. To put it in modern terms, between Socialism-in-one-country and the Permanent Revolution. Now the spirit of Lassalle, the spirit of the first International (a good international is a dead International nowadays) is coming up over the horizon. For have we not got Socialism in one country in Russia? And are we not instituting a variation of National Socialism right here in Germany, now?

Thus we find, at last, another fore-runner of Stalin and Stalinism. Action—no matter how wrong so long as you're doing something; as against action through theory when the opportune moment arrives.

—M. GTN.

A Communication

We have received the following statement for publication. It is of especial interest because it expresses a growing resentment among class conscious workers against the habit of making the defense of class war prisoners a factional football, whether this be done by the Stalinists, or as in this case, by the I. W. W.—(Ed.)

Comrades:

The following is a resolution unanimously passed at our last meeting: "At our Special Meeting held on Jan. 15th, 1932, at Aristocrat Hall, 69 St. Marks Place, our Delegates reported about the Conference for the Defense of the Kentucky Miners, called by the General Defense Committee held on Jan. 6th, 1932 at Labor Temple, 14th St., and Second Ave., New York, N. Y.

"We endorse the stand taken by our delegates to invite all other Labor organizations, regardless of their political beliefs, to join in the defense of the Kentucky Miners as well as of all political prisoners. We believe—as our delegates—that in order to make the struggle really effective, labor must unite all its forces in the struggle against the oppression by the ruling class.

We express our hope that the Conference for the Kentucky Miners Defense will make an honest attempt in that direction"

We hope that you will give publicity to this resolution.

Fraternalty yours,

The Railroad Wage Cut

From the protracted negotiations for a new railway wage agreement, the millionaire magnates have emerged victorious. But that they accomplished only by the cunning servility of those with whom they negotiated—the union leaders. These rogues accepted the 10 per cent wage-cut while the 1,500,000 railroad workers were not consulted.

It would be difficult to expect any other outcome in view of what happened since the negotiations assembled several hundred local union chairmen in the Chicago conference. According to one chairman who was present, only speakers designated by the official union hierarchy could obtain the floor. The standing refrain repeated by these worthless early and late was the one: "You will have to accept a wage cut." That spelled defeat in advance.

The New York Times says, in commenting editorially upon the great good which is to accrue—not to the workers—but to business in general, to the insurance companies and to the banks which have more than $4,500,000,000 invested in railway issues: "Union leadership has sacrificed an immediate advantage in order to obtain a larger objective." No, the leaders sacrificed nothing, not even their honor for such they never had as long as they occupied their official positions. The sacrifice is all on the part of the workers. To them it will mean a lower standard below the $2.88 per day which is now reported to be the average earning of all railroad workers, counting both employed and unemployed. The railroad owners on the other hand will receive an additional plum of $215,000,000 to further line their pockets during the coming year, during which this reduction is of remain in effect. These servile, cringing union officials served them well indeed.

The railroad magnates could easily give glib promises of "reciprocity" to the demand for the recalled employment stabilization advanced by the union officials. This promise is just as meaningless as the manner in which the demand was proposed was futile. The promise offers only to endeavor to increase employment whenever practicable. And, of course, with the magnates now pleading inability to meet the payroll because of diminishing returns, this will never be practicable. But after all, as far as the union leaders are concerned they never intended their proposed "stabilization" schemes to be taken seriously. For them it served only as a smoke screen to hide their failure to heed the need of fighting workers—namely to secure the six hour day. A serious fight for this proposal would at least have served as a warning upon the railroad magnates that the workers are deeply concerned about finding some means of alleviating the ravages of unemployment and heavy lay-offs due to the advance of labor saving machine technic.

The railroad companies won this skirmish; but their real objective is a far greater one. They have now begun definitely to come to grips with the railroad unions and they will be certain to lose no opportunity to continue in pursuit of their objective to impose more wage cuts, to gradually undermine the position of the unions in preparation for their final destruction—if possible. This present wage cut was imposed even without the employers having to stop to utilize the rignamories of the arbitration machinery provided by the railway labor act. If it had been the case of a wage increase the workers would surely have been at least compelled first to run the whole gamut of this complicated machinery. But that is what it is for. To function as a brake upon the workers; to be at the service of the employers and to be entirely set aside or ignored when the employers feel themselves sufficiently strong to do so.

To the workers one important lesson should remain in respect to this phase of the matter. There should never again be any reliance placed upon arbitration machineries or proceedings. The workers can obtain only what they can actually take; what their position of organized strength will force the employers to give into.

What were the heavy compelling arguments which the railroad magnates marshaled to convince all and sundry? It was primarily their plea of inability to maintain earnings in face of the heavy competition from bus passenger transportation and from freight haulage by trucking. It is very true that new modern, and in many respects more competitive means of transportation is to a large extent superseding railroad service. But this does not in the least supersede the dividends collected by the investors in railroad securities because it is the same bondholders in each case. As a matter of fact the existing bus lines are practically all owned by the railroad companies, as for example the Greyhound owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Union Pacific system and the Chicago and Northwestern having their net of bus lines in the Western territory and so forth. The truck hauling is also rapidly being gobbled up by the roads.

The railroad owners thus clip the coupons and pocket the profits from practically all of these means of transportation. But for the railroad workers the situation is an entirely different one. They have been hit, in addition to the wage cut, with heavy unemployment, and lay-offs to the extent of about 700,000 being eliminated during the last decade. Many more are on a part time working basis. Their exclusive craft position in the higher brackets is entirely gone. They face an entirely new perspective for the future.

A Class Approach Necessary
The railroad workers are being reduced from their exclusive craft position. They are now in a more direct sense on an actual class level. Their problems are ever more becoming bound up with that of their class. Only an approach, no longer from the exclusive craft position, but from a class position can hope to begin to approximate a solution. In this sense there is a gigantic change in perspective.

It means new and enormous tasks for their unions and to this we will again return in a future issue. One may say there is some slight ray of hope for future prospects in the fact that in these recent negotiations representatives of all of the unions were brought together and acted together despite the fact of the sell-out by the officials. These latter are, of course, not only still wrapped up in the exclusive craft position of the past, but as much as ever functioning purely and simply as agents of capitalism within the ranks of labor. Hence in any consideration by the railroad workers of future problems one thing at least remains axiomatic. A struggle for conditions, a struggle to maintain or to improve their standard of living, can be carried on only hand in hand with the most determined struggle against all traces of domination by these capitalist agents.

The capitalist offensive against the working class is still in full blast all along the line. It calls for the most determined resistance. Meek submission will only bring new and more ferocious attacks. The railroad workers have an organization, divided and split up along craft lines, repeatedly betrayed by their leaders, but nevertheless a powerful organization if brought into action. It is certainly incumbent upon the railroad workers to endeavor to lead in this resistance. But this requires a fighting program.

New Developments in Far East

Western Imperialists Register Protests as Japs Hold on to Booty

While Japanese warships are continuing to bombard Shanghai, at the same time hanging martial law over Nanking and laying waste the Chinese Woosung fortresses at the mouth of the Whangpoo River, the imperialist government at Tokio is tenaciously clinging to every inch of ground it has seized since the start of the Manchurian adventure.

The brigand powers of the West have quite naturally become alarmed over the enormous advantages gained by their Eastern rival during the last few months. Under the sanctimonious mask of the Pact of Paris—the United States, of course, leading—four powers drafted a "peace formula" pretending to have the interests of pacifism at heart, but whose sole aim was to create a check to the successful robber activities of the Japanese competitor.

Was it a strange that Tokio refused to accept the now famous "Point 5" in the peace formula—"to settle all outstanding controversies between the two nations"? It was, as a matter of fact, to be expected. Japan considers the "outstanding controversy" in Manchuria settled. And Tokio said as much, slyly offering a "satisfactory" apology for the Chamberlain incident, replacing the naval command at Shanghai with the more acceptable Admiral Nomura and deftly withdrawing her troops from the U. S. "Marine Zone". Interference with her already well established conquests, she will not, however, tolerate.

With the exception of a few ultra-jingoist papers, notably the Hearst press, American "public opinion" is hardly inclined to kindle the war spirit; against the imperialism of the East just yet. The present line-up of the powers is hardly a stable one. France, of late one of the instigators of the Japanese adventure, Great Britain, the traditional ally of Japan, are hardly to be counted on. Their interests are not at one with those of Wall Street. But England does need the aid of American finance for the time being. That explains her role as mediator in the present tension.

A flare-up in the current Far Eastern tangle is not excluded. But the relation-ship of forces we are witnessing now, will have to go through a rather sharp transformation, before matters come to a head. In the meantime, the outcome of the class conflict in Germany remains, as before, of decisive importance to all turns of world politics. And it is interesting but sad to note that this determining factor is left altogether out of sight by the official Communist press, which instead, indulges in all sorts of tortuous acrobatics around those poor "growing contradictions", which they are unable to understand.

The 17th Conference of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union is meeting in Moscow. There was a time when the Communist Party of the Soviet Union justified its leading position in the Communist International by far more than the fact that it possesses state power. That was in the Leninist period, when it was the veritable leader of the world proletariat.

Today, when the flames of social conflagration are spreading from West to East and from East to West, the Stalinized C. P. S. U. has nothing more to offer the international working class at a Conference—than the latest figures on the Five Year Plan. (To which we shall yet come back!) The oppressed and plundered masses of China, the starved and restless proletariat of Germany, are waiting for a word from the Soviets, from the land of light. Stalin has nothing to say to them.

The workers of the world will not forget this. The workers will begin to demand an accounting. It is to take care of this task that the International Left Opposition under the Leadership of Leon Trotsky is preparing itself.

«Reconstruction Finance Commission» Ruse

The latest patch to our threadbare capitalist society is being applied. They are now announcing the birth of the "Reconstruction Finance Corporation". Not so many months ago the bankers themselves, at the pronounced initiative of the president, created the National Credit Corporation for the purpose of aiding the little banks. Admittedly, it has been of little aid. Now, a bigger and broader plan is being put in effect, the creation of this "p.m.ch." specifies a two billion dollar fund to be raised through the sale of bonds ($500,000,000 to be subscribed to by the government) which money will be used to loan money to banks' advance money to the railroads to cover maturing bonds' aid to over-mortgaged farmers' and similar transactions, the essential nature of which is the "thawing out", for the present holder, of "frozen" and perhaps even worthless paper. The success or failure of the entire scheme can be established only after a survey of the entire banking situation today.

About three years ago the first rumblings of the present crisis could have been detected by the trained ear—from the ever lessening pounding of the tap hammer, as fewer and fewer rivets were driven home to secure the girders in the many buildings that had been shooting up. Beginning with the construction industry, the wave of depression rolled ever onward, from industry to industry, until now even the mighty banking system of this country has begun to wobble and grow dizzy with the constantly mounting list of casualties.

There are in general three types of banks (aside from Investment Houses, Insurance Companies' Personal Loan Societies, etc.—that have many functions similar to those of banks). They are (1) Mutual Savings Banks—Bovary Savings (2) Commercial Bank—National City (3) Private Banks—J. P. Morgan. The first two concern us primarily. They are the ones that hold the meager savings of the "well-to-do" worker and small business man. They are the banks that act as the support of the industrialist from the moment of the purchase of his raw materials until the time he secures the returns on the finished product. These banks are the ones that falling will add a heavy blow to the attempts of the capitalists to rise from their present prostration. These are the banks that the Reconstruction Finance Corp. is to aid.

THE IMPORTANCE OF BANK STABILITY

For savings banks the almost total, and for commercial banks the overwhelming bulk of the liabilities (money the bank owes to other people) are to the depositors. Thus the recent statement of the National City Bank shows out of a total liability of $1,800,000,000, the sum of $1,400,000,000 under the item of deposits. This grand sum came from industrial and commercial concerns who are constantly depositing and withdrawing money to transact their business. On the side of the assets we find a similar item: "short term loans" (for circulating capital) of $912,000,000 out of a total assets of $1,858,000,000—the largest single item recorded. A failure of a commercial bank means the throwing of a monkey wrench into the wheels of all the business that was transacted by the concern having deposits there, increased unemployment and misery. The failure of a saving bank, although not having the direct effect upon business in general as that of a commercial bank, brings within its train the pauperizing of all the depositors, who particularly during times of crisis look upon the few dollars saved during the seven or eight years to tide them over the present lean years. More so than the bankruptcies of ordinary industrial and commercial houses' bank failures—because of the wide spread tentacles of modern financial capital—although also an effect of industrial crisis, add new fuel of a most highly inflammable nature to the economic catastrophe.

The importance to Capitalism of a sound financial system cannot be underestimated. It is for that reason that they have been so quick to apply any remedies that they hope may relieve this growing infection. The R. F. C. is but one of many of the most grandiose ones of all. There are the Mutual Aid Plan of the New York State Savings Banks; there is the National Credit Corp.—but as even the bankers admit, they have not been of much help. Of the present scheme, all that can be said is, that although it may succeed in helping through the coming few months the smallest and weakest of the banks, no too great bank ability can be secured with it.

THE TRENDS TO BE COUNTER-BALANCED

The present bank crisis hinges on many important trends. The Federal Reserve System though its rediscounting power of short term loans helps the banks to overcome the failure of the industrialist to make good on his loans. The R. F. C. was created for the purpose of counterbalancing those features of the bank crisis—those of a long time trend. (1) The collapse of the real estate market (2) The sharp drop in railroad bonds. (3) The defaulting of the European and the South American countries. (Aside from the increase in stock holdings, accompanied by their subsequent decline in value). The act has as its avowed intention the alleviation of any weaknesses displayed by the banks as a result of the first two of the tendencies enumerated above. Of course this will at the same time lessen the effect of the defaulted foreign bonds.

The importance of these trends upon the bank situation can be easily observed by a glance at the asset side of the large banks of the country. Thus the Bovary Savings Bank, the largest savings bank in the country, lists out of the total assets of $535,000,000.

Mortgages $294,000,000
Railroad bonds 94,000,000
The books of commercial banks would also list large bond holdings. The complete collapse of the real estate boom of the prosperity era brought with it a consequent depreciation of the value of a goodly percentage of all mortgages. The totality and depth of this shrinking away of values can be gathered, to a slight extent, from a recent survey of mortgage bonds throughout the country. Of a total of ten million dollars outstanding, (Continued on page 4)

STATEMENT OF THE MARINE WORKERS DEFENSE

The case of Soderberg Bunker and Trajer, the marine workers indicted in the New York "dynamite plot", is on the calendar for trial and the whole conspiracy will soon be unfolded before the court. At this moment of deepest peril for the indicted workers, when the question of their liberty or imprisonment is about to be decided for many years to come, the defense committee, which was formed at their request and which has conducted the struggle from the beginning in their behalf, turns again to the working class with an appeal for solidarity and support.

All the work of the committee has been carried on under the slogan of unity and solidarity, for we have been convinced that the united support of the workers is the best defense of the men on trial and the strongest safeguard against another frame-up tragedy. For the same reason the committee, which is comprised of delegates representing various organizations and many diverse views, has refrained from all controversy and has endeavored to concentrate attention on the single issue of the defense of persecuted workers in the court of the class enemy.

Through no fault of design of the committee the whole public discussion of the case has not been maintained on this level. Attempts have been made to divert the defense movement on the eve of the trial by the International Labor Defense. These attempts at disruption have been furthered by an article in the Daily Worker of January 25th, which falsifies facts and jeopardizes the interests of the defendants at the time of their greatest need.

It becomes imperative, therefore, to reply to these attacks and bring out the truth of the situation with facts and documents. An exposure of these disruptive attempts, as a form of assistance to the prosecution is at present a necessary means of defense. From this point of view, a chronological statement of the facts of the case is herewith submitted. This bare statement of the case as it really stands will suffice to enable the honest workers of all camps to judge the disrupters and call them to order.

THE WORK OF THE DEFENSE COMMITTEE

The first and most important answer to the accusations against the Marine Workers Defense Committee is the record of its work. Coming together for the defense of persecuted workers, who were deserted and without any other means of defense, the committee succeeded in securing able counsel to look after the legal interests of the defendants; it brought the case to the attention of the labor movement through systematic publicity work, distribution of leaflets, speakers before organizations and a public mass meeting. It succeeded in uniting in a common fight, organizations and groups of conflicting tendencies and views on a broader basis than has been seen for many years.

In harmony with the wishes of the defendants, the committee dedicated itself from the very beginning to the principle of the united front of labor against the frame-up system. On that basis it invited every important labor organiza-

BUILD OPPOSITION PRESS!

By April 1, an important addition to the Left Opposition press in America will make its appearance. That is to be the publication of the first issue of our theoretical organ, THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST REVIEW.

Undoubtedly this will be greeted with genuine enthusiasm by our sympathizers and supporters everywhere.

We have already made some valuable additions to the Left Opposition Press. The beginning was made with the Youth organ, the Young Spartacus, next followed in rapid succession the Left Opposition organ in the Greek language, Kommunistes and the Jewish language paper, Unser Kampf. These are here to stay. We can now announce the most important addition to our coming theoretical organ. With that, our press will receive its necessary rounded character and equip us with a powerful instrument for the regeneration and rebuilding of the Communist movement as originally conceived and founded by Marx and Engels and again restored by Lenin and Trotsky in common with their Bolshevik co-workers.

Never before in the history of the world revolutionary movement, we can say with emphasis, have there been such fateful and deep-going problems facing it as just now. We are entering a truly decisive phase of the epoch of capitalist decline and world revolution. The part the Left Opposition must play is extremely important.

But this effort to more fully equip ourselves for the task imposes a very serious duty upon us. Before us yet remains the job of building the Left Opposition press into the powerful and effective instrument it should be. Our platform is unassailable, but it must be translated into reality. The first step is to further build our press. However, we condition the appearance of our theoretical organ on the date set upon the support to be given by our comrades and sympathizers. We expect you to help build the Left Opposition Press!

The «Uprising» of Nov. 7 -- by L. Trotsky

In the campaign now being conducted with increased vigor against the Left Opposition, a considerable place is devoted to the question of the uprising of November 7, 1927. In his "historic" article Stalin places this "uprising" in the foremost position as the main evidence in favor of the policy of reprisals against the Bolshevik-Leninists. When the best revolutionaries are subjected to the most frightful injuries and to acts of violence in the solidarity of Verkhne-Uralsk: when they are forced to resort to hunger strikes in order to defend their most elementary human rights: when they are being fired upon without warning: when Bakovsky and hundreds of others crowd the places of deportation; when the veritable flower of the party is destroyed, incarcerated and choked off; when Stalin has Butov choked to death and Blumkin shot by Yagoda—all this is explained not by the fact that the Left Opposition has not recognized the theory of socialism in one country? that it did not agree to the bloc with Chiang Kai-Shek and that it rejected today the capitulation before Hitler! No! The bloody reprisals are explained by the fact that the Left Opposition is supposed to have made an attempt at an armed uprising four years ago. All the organs of the various sections of the Comintern have once more reminded their unfortunate, systematically deceived readers of it.

Organization Notes

Active Militant builders we have but entirely too few. If there were more, it would soon tell in a serious way on our subscription list. As it is, only the efforts of the few keeps it growing, but growing very slowly. Yet we have no doubt that there will soon be more comrades joining the ranks of the Militant builders.

For a couple of months there has been no account in these columns of this phase of our activities. That is not due to a standstill but merely to the absence of the Secretary on a national tour. Henceforth, we shall again render a regular account. We include among the builders none of these readers who merely send in the subscriptions or renewals for themselves but only such who make sufficient efforts to secure subscriptions besides their own. Such are those listed below with the number of subscriptions turned in since January 15, 1932:

BUFFALO P. P. OPPOSITION INDORSERS LEFT

By invitation of the Buffalo Proletarian Party Opposition! comrade Swaback spoke at a Lenin memorial meeting arranged by 15 members on Jan. 24th. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Workers League of Buffalo. It had a fairly good attendance, listening attentively to the speaker's elucidation of the historical role of the great world revolutionary leader. Quite a few members of the official Communist party were among the audience.

As could be expected, this latter fact very much helped to enliven the discussion which followed the lecture. Not so much by virtue of the arguments presented by the party members who took the floor, as they presented only the old-time slanders and condemnation of the Left Opposition with the Workers' League coming in for a good share. No, the enlivening part was attained rather in the opportunity this gave to the speaker to further clarify for the audience many of the disputed issues within the Communist movement.

On the following evening comrade Swaback spoke before the branch membership. Due to its recent expulsion from the Proletarian Party, it naturally faces a number of problems in common with the rest of their expelled Opposition comrades. On these problems, the whole of the discussion centered until late in the night. The members present asked numerous questions from comrade Swaback which together with the answers given helped considerably in making the Left Opposition views clear to them. From the inception of their opposition to the Proletarian Party regime these Buffalo comrades have recognized that they cannot remain isolated or independent of the main currents of the Communist movement today. Their sympathies very early and pronouncedly turned toward the Left wing. They are now making a serious effort to get away from the state sectarian attitude which prevailed in the Proletarian Party, but they have no illusions that the mere orientation toward mass work can substitute for the real task of building of the revolutionary cadres. While they have taken active part in common with the efforts of their opposition center to help in the creation of an unemployment movement it is their intention to press on for a definite orientation of revolutionary views. They fully recognize the validity of the question: "Whose views—Left, Center or Right—will the Proletarian Party Opposition accept and to which of these currents will it adhere? They agree that this question must be put first on the agenda and their answer was already given unequivocally in this meeting—to the Left Opposition.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Our second forum was even better than the first. More than seventy people were present. The majority of them were party members and sympathizers. Comrade Clarke spoke for an hour and a half in an exposition on the causes of war; the conflict between the imperialists in the Far East; the danger of a war against the Soviet Union; and the problems of the Chinese revolution. Not one person left the hall before the lecture was concluded and there was very little uneasiness noticeable. The Stalinists were evidently impressed with our program—not once in the whole course of the presentation and summary did they heckle or interrupt. Although they dissipated themselves in slander, calling Clarke a "skunk" and other very high-minded commendations, and one worker proclaimed in a hysterical voice that made the windows tremble, that he was with the C. I. right or wrong, first, last, and always, our program seems to have sunk in. After the meeting they eagerly took the Militant and there is no doubt but that they will be present next Monday.

Last Thursday comrade Clarke also spoke on invitation, before one of the unemployment councils. He was very favorably received—in fact he has been invited to another council. It appears that the local Stalinists, through blundering negligence and arrogant bureaucracy have alienated and antagonized these councils in which there are several party members, who feel the same way about the abuse of the bureaucrats. There seem to be excellent opportunities for us but nothing can be said definitely about the outcome.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

On Sunday, January 31, comrade Albert Glatzer spoke at an open meeting held by the Philadelphia branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition), on his visit to Trotsky, and the present international situation.

There were fifty workers present who listened to an account of Trotsky's famous and illegal deportation, and his exile in Turkey. Comrade Glatzer spoke at some length on the present international political situation. He dealt par-

For A Fighting Unity of the New York Food Workers

What is the situation in the Food Workers' Industrial Union? Was it in the interests of the Left wing movement to split away from the A. F. W. U.? Are there any results in organizing the unorganized? All the same time the membership of the union must ask themselves why the third year of the crisis the union finds itself totally incapable of defending the interests of the starving unemployed of the industry. Why the union is unable to give any advice as to what to do with those hundreds who are coming here for it? Why it is equally incapable of defending even those insignificant few who accept its leadership and go on strike, as in the Crusader Cafeteria? At the last convention of the union, Obermeyer, its national secretary, said: "We must recognize the fact that we should not have been so much in a hurry to split away from A. F. W. U."

What he meant is that the Left wing should organize itself better before it undertook the split. Therefore recognizing the mistake, so to say, organizationally. The officials of the union still refuse to recognize its suicidal stupidity for the movement in the industry as a whole. The half-truth becomes still more criminal because it keeps the awakening workers from a correct estimation of the real situation and thereby from a possibility to exert their pressure on their adventurist leadership.

THE MISTAKES OF THE PAST

Once for all it must be stated, not in a half way confession, but in a real Communist manner, that the split was a mistake, that without full recognition of the fact and all three devastation it has brought, no correct policy can be adopted, and do way out of an unbearable situation can be found. The truth allowed on the organizational facts only leaves a rat hole for sneaking back into the "company unions" (A. F. W. U.) so that those who are there shall not be called "social fascists" any more, but it is certainly not a starting point for the adoption of a correct policy as to how to reach the unorganized, how to fight for the unemployed. At the same time that policy certainly cannot point out the way how to reach such a unity of action for the workers in the food industry, which would give prestige to the Communist party and Left wing movement. And if the bureaucrats high pressure of the "third period" brought with it the split of the food workers' organization; if that split together in the "united front from below" played havoc with the Left wing movement and at the same time crippled those unions who remained entirely at the mercy of reformist misleaders; then it is all the more the duty of the C. P. and F. W. U. to issue the slogan of trade union unity.

Comrade Trotsky, in his article on the question of trade union unity, writes in relation to the united front that his is the only way that one can prevent the reformists and above all their Left wing agents from opposing to the practical task of the class struggle, the formal slogan of unity. And precisely if the policy of the genuine united front is one of the means of liberating the workers from reformist influence by confronting the reformist leadership with concrete task of struggle for immediate demands, then the revolutionary significance of that struggle if initiated by the Communists and Left wing under their influence can serve at the same time as a basis for the slogan of unity, for amalgamation, for creating one union in the industry. As comrade Trotsky in the same article points out "it would be a thorough mistake to oppose the policy of the united front to that of the unity of the trade union organizations."

Without such a revolutionary, Communist policy, all the talk of the bureaucrats of the F. W. U. of organizing the hundreds of thousands of slaves in the packing industry, in the food factories' restaurants, bakeries, the grocery clerks—will remain futile talk. And the active members of the union must begin to understand that all the good work that they are trying to do: making the union function according to the departmental system, improving the function of the grievance committee leading small but militant strikes etc. cannot be anything in itself. That alone will not extricate the union from the position it was forced to by the "third period" bureaucrats and by the policy of "united front from below". These activities can only be a necessary improvement of the organization in preparation for the policy advanced by the Left Opposition in the trade union movement as a whole.

There must be put an end to all that kind of stupid talk as that of the representative of the Central Executive Committee at the convention about using two lists, one of the united front of the rank and file, (the "united front from below"), a distortion denying the genuine united front, and the other list, of organizing the unorganized. Objectively, it means a continuous playing into the hands of all kinds and species of reformists together with the harm that kind of policy brings with it.

I. L. D. In Boston

BOSTON, MASS.

Three months after the Mooney Conference in Boston, what are the achievements of the committee organized at the conference? What has been done to rouse the broad masses to tear open the gates of San Quentin and liberate Tom Mooney?

Without a doubt, the significance of the case together with its recent developments presented the Left wing with golden opportunities. Has the Left wing availed itself of these opportunities? So far as Boston is concerned we can say emphatically, no.

The October 25th conference called by the I. L. D. blew up like a bubble in the air. At the conference our delegates correctly pointed out the necessity of broadened activity and warned against the dangers of being satisfied with merely calling conferences. The assembled delegates received our remarks well while the apparatus-men tried to distort those remarks and prepared to fall into their usual state of lethargy.

Despite the fact that a number of the delegates pledged their utmost activity which, if carried on with the sincere cooperation from the leaders, could have developed a strong movement, the "leaders" found no time to call meetings for several weeks after the conference. In all the three months of its existence only three meetings were called and those were very poorly attended. At each meeting, the delegate of the Boston Left Opposition stressed the importance of reaching the workers and organizing them, of visiting organizations on behalf of Mooney. A number of organizations were visited by our delegate. But what was the result? After the third meeting of our committee one had no organization to bring a report to.

Weeks have passed since the last meeting of the Mooney Committee. The executive committee does not function at all, or at least the present writer, who is a member of the executive, does not know of its activity. Not a single mass meeting was called to organize the masses for the release of Mooney. Not a leaflet was printed to bring Mooney before the eyes of the masses. And all this in the face of the greatest opportunities present!

With the significance of the case, with the latest developments in the case, with the Walkers and Rolphs once again unmasking the face of the master class, the Left wing should be able to rally the workers to its banner. Yet when an official of the I. L. D. is asked why no meetings are being called, she tries to get out of a difficulty by answering that no one can be gotten to come to meetings. Such an answer, however, calls for another question. Why? The answer is that the true reason for such a lamentable situation is that the I. L. D. instead of carrying on as a mass organization, has isolated itself from the masses. The Stalinist machine is satisfied to limit the I. L. D. to a handful of selected Stalinists and blind followers who, right or wrong, will carry out their master's will. The next must follow. The few "true worthy" I. L. D. members are already so overburdened with the many tasks of the other Left wing organizations that they simply cannot attend all of the meetings—with the results described above.

How much longer can this go on? Is Tom Mooney to suffer the consequences of Stalinist stupidity practiced by the I. L. D. or are its leaders going to wake up to the sense of genuine united action for his release? Can the leaders of the I. L. D. who called the conference be satisfied that they have now fulfilled their duty to Mooney as representatives of the revolutionary movement? If there is a red spark in their hearts and minds these leaders will say with determination, "No, not until we have organized a genuine united front as called for by Mooney in his August 20th appeal will we have fulfilled our revolutionary duty and carried out the will of Tom Mooney!"

The Struggle of the Railroad Workers

This is the third of a series of articles on the conditions of the Railroad workers. The other two have appeared in previous issues of the Militant. More are to follow in subsequent issues. —Ed.

Already in the early part of 1931, it was becoming clear to even the casual observer of the developments on the railroads that wage cuts were looming up on the industrial horizon for the railroad workers.

Wage cuts always follow in the wake of industrial depressions, which result from the inherent defects in the profit system of production. Even in 1930, production was slowing up and many roads were reducing their working forces. But at any rate, with the beginning of 1931, it should have been clear to any one calling himself a labor leader that unless certain energetic organizational steps were taken to strengthen and solidify the railroad workers, wage reductions and further loss of working conditions would soon be knocking at their doors.

However, the best time to build and strengthen the labor unions is under so-called capitalist "prosperity" or when workers are not losing their jobs by the millions through lack of work. The Brotherhood leaders had a splendid opportunity to do this from 1923 to 1929. During this period there were nearly one million men and women employed on railroads, who did not belong to the Brotherhoods. And, in spite of the enormous resources which these leaders had at their command, practically nothing was done to get these workers into the unions. There were millions of dollars available in the Brotherhood treasury for the printing of handbills, leaflets and circulars, to put periodically into the hands of every railroad worker in the United States and Canada, telling him or her of the importance and necessity of joining the unions. In addition, the leaders had the Brotherhood journals and the weekly paper, "Labor", for their use and control. These publications reach many railroad workers in every railroad terminal in the country.

Brotherhood Officials Too Busy Enjoying their Big Salaries to Organize the Workers

In addition to the printed page with which to reach the workers, the Brotherhood officials had literally thousands of individuals on the Brotherhood payroll, such as assistant presidents, vice presidents, general and special organizers, general chairmen, (several thousands of them) business agents and legislative representatives, who managed to hang on to the payroll most of the time. Then we have B. M. Jewell at the head of the railway department of the A. F. of L., a department which does not exist except on paper.

With all this money and personnel at their disposal, the Brotherhood leaders could have put on a real organizing campaign in every railroad terminal within the jurisdiction of the Brotherhoods. They could have coupled up the organizing campaign with a concerted wage movement to shorten the day without a cut in wages and to raise the minimum wage level in the railroad industry to the Five Dollar a Day mark. This program would have attracted thousands of lowly paid workers and also many of the higher paid workers who were beginning to lose their jobs on account of income-saving machinery installed by the railroads.

The Brotherhood officialdom have had and have now at their disposal enough money and men on permanent salaries, to hold union meetings at every railroad center, on a united and concerted scale for the purpose of organizing and amalgamating the railroad workers. The necessity of One Union of railroad workers, instead of twenty-one should be explained and advocated at every meeting. And if the leaders would do this, instead of fighting and obstructing amalgamation at every turn, it would be possible to hold an Amalgamation Convention within one year and there to launch an Industrial Union of Railroad Workers.

But instead of using the Brotherhood's money and press to put on an organizing and amalgamation campaign, the Brotherhood bureaucracy has been busy "selling" the useless and expensive Craft System, with its useless and overpaid leadership to the railroad workers. The "Grand" Chiefs have been assisted by general organizers and general chairmen to see to it that nothing took place at local or union meetings which would be against the interests of the bureaucrats. "Lame ducks" have been appointed as special organizers at $16 per day (the usual rate) to serve mostly as administration henchmen and stool-pigeons and to help keep the "Reds" out of the unions. Both men in the locomotive cab are now engineers. The man on the Left side has been an engineer for years. Still, two organizations are maintained in the Brotherhood and general organizers are kept on the job by both unions to pull members from one union into the other. As a matter of fact, the only interest that these $15,000 a year labor skates have in working men is to collect dues from them and to keep them satisfied with things as they are.

While this article is being written, January 28, an extra is appearing in the streets announcing that "Rail Workers Accord: Shush for One Year," as a headline. Although it may require one or more special articles to properly discuss and explain this gross betrayal of the leadership we wish to point out right here and now, that the railroad workers were never given an opportunity to either accept or reject the wage cut. The Brotherhood officials decided this for them. The excuse the bureaucrats advance for accepting this wage cut is as foolish and silly as the one they gave for accepting the last wage cut in 1921.

—A. E.

The Recent Wage Cut

The railroad workers have taken a 10% cut and once more the folly of the bosses is paid for by the workers. Already the effect upon other industries has been felt: wage cuts are the order of the day in all parts of the country. The railroads through their committee informed the workers that the only way out of the impasse was a wage cut, and properly so—from their standpoint, if it is the path of least resistance. And up to the present, with the labor funkies of capitalism, their contentions have proven correct and will be proven wrong only when the railroad workers take things in their own hands; when the policy of class struggle replaces the policy of class collaboration.

The lack of planned railroad construction, the increased competition from other means of transportation and the turbulence of the present crisis has driven the railroads in a tight corner. This cannot be denied. However, its admission merely proves our general contention: that the anarchy of capitalist production must be replaced by socialist planned economy which is only possible by establishing a workers' dictatorship in the United States. On the other hand, even if we confined ourselves to the figures presented by the railroad magnates we can show that they do not stand upon economic foundation but rather upon the foundation of the force of the capitalist dictatorship and its liars and fakery.

Mr. Willard, in the Chicago conference, said that despite the reduction of operating expenses many roads face bankruptcy because they cannot meet the fixed charges of 1931. He says the fixed charges for 1931 are 695 million dollars, but only 784 million dollars is available, which only leaves 89 million total net income. Because of this, the interest on the funded debt alone was 495 million. This is just some more statistical fakery. To whom does the interest go if it does not go to the capitalist class, no matter what section it is. Is not this 49 million, to say nothing of the 784 million, obtained, part of the capitalist surplus robbed from the railroad workers? And further, how do they figure this? In relation to the variable capital? No, of course not, they figure their profits in relation to the total watered stock. It is true that in times of crisis much water is squeezed out but this is only partially the case with the big roads.

So long as the workers are not organized properly, are not under class struggle ideology and have the type of railroad leaders they do, the capitalist will find easy pickings. We know the capitalist can sell below value and still make profit and we know the capitalist class in their offensive against us, in the crisis, have been striking at strategic points: the steel workers, the railroad workers, the increase of the number of political prisoners and of deportations. These moves and particularly the railroad workers' wage cut are of vital importance for the living standard of the whole class. The capitalists of America are tightening up on the home base in order to prepare for greater onslaughts on the world market against rival imperialists, in the struggle for the redvision of the earth. Are we going to stand by idly while this tremendous international conflict is in the making. No, all signs point to an increase of class battles in the United States. —HUGO OEHLER.

Amter Speaks on the Radio

What can be done by a revolutionary working class leader to develop class consciousness when the capitalist class places its press at his disposal was taught us by Marx—"as contributor on the leading Anglo-American newspaper, the 'New York Tribune', at which I have now been engaged for eight years—" (author's preface to Critique of Political Economy); by Lenin on numerous occasions; and more recently by Trotsky, particularly in his statement in the Manchester Guardian, reprinted in part in the N. Y. Times of April 13, 1931 under the title "TROTSKY SAYS SOVIET POINTS WORLD PATH." How a working class "leader" can misuse the same opportunity to sow confusion in the working class was demonstrated by Stalin in two interviews he gave to representatives of the New York Telegram and New York Times toward the end of 1930.

A FATAL INTERVIEW

Last week, Amter, faced with a choice between these methods, strove mightily to emulate his master, Stalin. It is true that Amter was not interviewed. He spoke over the radio. It is no less true that Amter is not Marx, nor Lenin, nor Trotsky. This he fully confirmed again by his speech.

The occasion of the broadcast was a dinner given by the Association for Better Citizenship, Inc. attended and addressed in addition to Amter by Rudolph Spreckles, the financier, Chas. Solomon, of the Socialist Party, and Wickersham of the commission bearing his name. To this strange position had life brought Amter; from directing gangs to break up Opposition meetings to speaking over the radio at a patriotic dinner together with financiers and a social fascist! We do not wish to be misunderstood. We believe that it is correct to utilize such opportunities to speak to sections of the working class. We have nothing in common with those party supporters, misguided by Amter and Co., who call Trotsky a "counter revolutionary" because he writes for the capitalist press. We base our judgment of the speech or writing not upon the place of its appearance but upon its content. From this point of view Amter's speech spelled confusion.

THE CAPITALIST SOLUTION

Spreckles' as his contribution to the Association's program of "systematic enlightenment of better citizenship" proposed, among other things, as a solution for the misery of the working class, a tax on short sales on the stock exchange, a tax on the export of capital to provide an unemployment insurance fund; and prohibition! Solomon gave a polite, innocuous and abstract exposition from the socialist point of view of the class struggle. It could have been given in toto ten years ago so little relation did it have to the realities of the present international and national situation. Nor did Solomon offer any solution except a description of what Socialism is! Wickersham who followed Amter and was the last speaker launched into an eulogy of the physical grandeur of "our country". As he was completing his lyric of patriotism the entire broadcast, having exhausted its allotted time, was cut off. We are therefore unable to comment on Wickersham's proposals for a way out of the crisis.

Against the bankruptcy of Spreckles and the empty abstractions of Solomon, a Communist presentation would have stood out in the listening workers' ears like a clarion call on a dark night. In our opinion Amter should have made a short statement of the extent and depth of the workers' misery in the present crisis, followed by a brief explanation of its causes and a concise outline of the Communist solution. He should have mentioned the various capitalist attempts to solve their crises by wars (what about the war danger and the U. S. S. R.) And then he should have emphasized that the only solution was an international proletarian revolution, that in preparation for it we must fight unitedly against the sweeping capitalistic offensive, for immediate demands such as the six-hour day, credits to the Soviet Union, unemployment insurance. His conclusion should have explained the role of the Communist party in this struggle for immediate demands today, and for the overthrow of capitalism tomorrow and how it is distinguished from the socialist party.

AMTER FAILS MISERABLY

But this is precisely what Amter did not do. He began by attacking the diners. Having "vanquished" them, he called upon the unemployed workers to "join the Communist party which fights hunger." Similarly he called upon the employed workers to join the Communist party to fight wage cuts and upon the Negro workers to join the C. P. to fight for social, political and economic equality. He denounced "Walker's open, shameful submission to the bankers of Wall Street". At this point he was indistinguishable from a Republican Party demagogue of the type of, let us say—congressman MacFadden. And so on and so forth he rambled without plan.

A non-Communist worker listening to Amter would have come away not a whit enlightened as to what Communism is, what the Communist party stands for, nor how it proposes to fight hunger, wage cuts, lynching, deportation. Nor would we have suspected that the American Communist Party is a brother section of the German C. P., which is facing a critical historical moment, upon whose success or failure in uniting the masses against Fascism depended to a large extent his own fate. Neither would he have dreamed that a war is brewing nor would he have been enlightened on how to fight the war danger.

To the objection that Amter could have in ten or twelve minutes give an exhaustive analysis of the entire world situation, we can reply: Marx, in writing the program of the First International was forced to present his ideas in such a manner that his conclusions, which for political reasons he could not include, would follow inevitably in the mind of the reader. But, as we have already pointed out—Amter is not Marx.

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

Terror against the Greek Opposition

ATHENS, GREECE

The capitalist regime of Greece is carrying a reign of terror against all revolutionary workers and is concentrating its efforts especially to exterminate by all means at its disposal, the comrades of the Opposition (Archio-Marxist-Bolsheviks) on account of their valiant activities in the front ranks of the class struggle.

Now that the edifice of the capitalist system of Greece is enfeebled by the acute economic crisis, the bourgeoisie of Greece are desperately trying to suppress every workers' resistance by exterminating the vanguard of the proletariat, the Communists. They imprison them for many years in dark cells, and they deport them to desert islands, and very often apply terrorist measures, as in the case of our comrade Theodore Baboucoupos.

Comrade Baboucoupos has been a member of the Archio-Marxists for the last two years and has participated with all the Archio-Marxists of Athens in the demonstration that the party called on Omonia Square to celebrate the 14th anniversary of the Russian revolution.

The Rizospastis, the Stalinist organ in Greece, merely reported the arrest of a few Archio-Marxists, and later mentioned our comrade as a hero, inferring at the same time that he is a member of the Youth League, the Pali Ton Taxeon, organ of the Left Opposition, in its issue of December 29, 1932, prints a letter sent by comrade Baboucoupos from his bed in the Municipal Hospital.

We bring his letter in full below:

"To the Communist Organization of Bolshevik-Leninists (Archio-Marxists), Comrades,
As is known, I was arrested with another member of our organization, comrade Coton for the events of the 14th anniversary of the Russian Revolution during the demonstration at Rotzi lair by the lackeys of Charalambidi, who followed us about and they sentenced comrade Coton to three years imprisonment and two years deportation and myself to one and one-half years imprisonment and two years deportation.

"They threw me and 7 other Archio-Marxists into the cave that the bourgeoisie calls 'reformatory' and they began our extermination by applying the archaic methods of the 'Holy Inquisition'. What to describe most, I don't know... the more I try to think of it the dizzier I get. Later on, when I'll overcome the danger hanging over me, I'll write you in detail.

"The last 'scene' took place because we protested against the suppressed measures as a means of punishment, they forced us to run like horses around the prison-yard.

"When we refused to run, the bestial guards knocked us down unconscious and then they placed our feet into the frog bars, beating us for hours at a time until our feet began to bleed of the wounds and only fatigue exhausted our hangmen. I was left within the prison without a doctor's care for ten days and my foot became sore. When my comrades and myself protested we were told: 'I have not got anything' and when the pollution progressed and the gangrene rotted my foot and threatened my very life they brought me here and cut off my foot and at present I am struggling with death.

"Another question that I wish to pose is this: The Rizospastis attempts to present me as their own comrade. I declare that I denounce the Rizospastis and the Stalinists and that I was and I'll always be a Bolshevik-Leninist (Archio-Marxist).

"The life of our comrades in the prisons is in danger. The state is planning assassinations. Fight for general amnesty! Fight to save them!

With comradely greetings,
Theodoros Baboucoupos,
Municipal Hospital."

The Crimes of the Capitalist prisons must be brought to light!

Our comrade Baboucoupos is struggling with death. This horrible crime shall not be left without consequences

HISTORY MADE TO ORDER - ala STALIN

We must come back once more to the article by Stalin in the revue Proletarian Revolution, in which the General Secretary of the Russian Communist Party violently attacks the "rot en liberalism" which exists among the Communists with regard to "Trotskyism."

What is the reason for all this world of Stalin's? The "chief of the world revolution", proclaimed as such by all the bureaucrats, who dare not deny their master anything, and celebrated as such at all official occasions and by the entire Stalinist international press—what has he to fear from "Trotskyism" which has been crushed and annihilated for years? And moreover, who are those rotten liberals who have introduced the Trotskyist poison into the history of the Russian party without his knowledge?

STALIN CREATES A HISTORY OF APOLOGETICS

In his leisure time, whatever it is granted to him by the affairs of state, Stalin has taken the trouble to go over the history of the revolution and the Russian party. Imagine his surprise to see that in almost all the publications conducted by people who are loyal to his own person, his role as leader of the Russian party ever since the first weeks of the February revolution (before Lenin's arrival in Russia), he has not been presented in sufficiently laudatory terms! Certain historians said, for example, that immediately upon his arrival in Petrograd, Lenin found it necessary to radically change the orientation of the Bolshevik party led by Stalin and Kamenev up to that time.

Others, like Slutsky, even went so far as to employ the term "rearming" of the party used by comrade Trotsky in his history of the Russian revolution, to designate the April Theses of Lenin and the

for the bourgeois class. All the horrible tortures, all the crimes which Greek capitalism pursues in order to exterminate the victims of the proletarian struggle must be brought to light. A committee of workers and intellectuals must be formed to visit all the prisons in which revolutionary workers are detained and undertake a broad and thorough investigation and bring to light all the criminal activities of the capitalist organs against the imprisoned and deported revolutionary workers.

The Victims of Capitalist Atrocities Are In Danger

The assassins of comrade Baboucoupos refuse to give even medicines. Comrade Baboucoupos is the victim of the cannibalism of the watch-dogs of the capitalist regime, and is in a critical condition. The fever fluctuates between 30 to 40 degrees centigrade.

Following the amputation of his foot, two wounds were opened up on his shoulders and one on his arm.

During the last few days a new bag of pus has formed on his other arm. It is possible that they may have to open this, too. Our comrade is passing grave moments and the doctors openly express their fears.

Characteristic of the hostility of the capitalist regime is the criminal indifference that the administration of the Municipal Hospital shows toward the condition of our comrade.

His food is miserable, medicine are refused him. The comrades collected money among themselves for the purchase of medicines. The Labor Defense does not follow at all the condition of our comrade and has neglected to meet his needs.

The Stalinists do not allow any discussion at the I. L. D. Branches on this question in order to conceal the fact that he is an Archio-Marxist.

Many workers' organizations have protested vigorously against the Czarist methods.

The Leather Workers, the Cigarette boxmakers and Lithographers, Stevedores, Hotel Workers, I. L. D. Branches of Tombras' Salonika, Neopoles, etc., Needle Workers Union, and Cafe and Confectionery Workers Union, are among these.

False Strategy -- False Tactics

Dangerous Perspectives

Just as a proletarian revolution in Germany would open up a new epoch for the revolutionary proletariat, Fascism in Germany will open up a new epoch of reaction in Europe. A victory for Fascism would lead to the last attempt of capitalism to postpone its impending downfall for decades through the destruction of the proletarian movement.

A victory for German Fascism means war against the Soviet Union. An alliance between the Soviet Union and the other imperialist countries, France not excepted, in a campaign for the annihilation of the Soviet Union is more than probable. Should it come to that, it would mean that the social revolution would be made impossible for an entire epoch.

Does that mean, that there is no way out of this situation? To maintain this would be pessimism and would signify a complete surrender of the faith in the inner forces of the proletariat. Should the Comintern and the party change their strategy and tactic, were the Soviet Union and the Red Army to actively take their stand as the organizing forces of the German revolution, Fascism will not even reach the threshold of power.

To allow Fascism to get as far as the threshold of power, that is to permit them to enter a coalition government, means to clear the road for the full seizure of power by Fascism. To believe that the right moment for an action against Fascism is the time of its "exposure" in a coalition government with Brüning—only people who are planning to dodge the enemy and to capitulate are capable of. At the moment Fascism enters the government, the signal will be given for a struggle against the proletariat. The only answer to that is the proclamation of the General Strike. That is the point of time at which the defensive of the working class begins, which is transformed in the course of struggle into the offensive. The General Strike will deal the Fascist bands their first blows and open up the mass struggle against the bourgeoisie. Its outcome will be neither Fascism nor a Brüning.

The moment the united front of the proletarian class is established in the course of struggle, the real disintegration of Fascism begins.

Nearer to the social democratic and trade union masses! This is the burning slogan of the moment, if the struggle is not to end in a defeat united front with the S. P. G. and A. D. G. B. (Trade Union) organizations is the command of the hour.

—PERMANENTE REVOLUTION
(January 1932)
(To Be Continued)

A Letter from Germany

HAMBURG, GERMANY

As you probably know, I have joined the party in Germany and they are beginning to suspect that I am a "Trotskyite". At the last meeting, I defended the line of the united front and denounced the "Red Referendum". I asked why it was that we (the C. P. G.) are not gaining all the S. P. G. votes that they are losing. There was a leading comrade from Hamburg present. He said: "We definitely do not use the united front from above, for only opportunists will go into a united front with the social Fascist leaders; we make only a red united front from below."

NO UNITED FRONT!

On my objection that I did not mean the kind of united front made in England at the time of the General Strike or in China with Chiang Kai-Shek and the Kuo Min T'ang, but to officially offer the S. P. G. and the trade union, without binding our hands in any way, a fighting united front, side by side, against the Fascists, as the Bolsheviks did in 1917 against Kornilov's cossacks, he replied very weakly: "This is a different situation; there was an immediate demand of crushing Kornilov's army. Our main enemy is now the S. P. G., who tolerate everything that Brüning or the capitalists didate". He wanted to talk with me alone later on, but never said a word about it again. He admitted that they had a big fight in the Central Committee about the "Red Referendum" but he said it was from a tactical point of view, a question regarding the moment they will be able to mobilize the masses and that they had to take such a vital issue out of the hands of the nationalists and Fascists to make it a red one (sic!).

I just heard, at a functionaries' meeting to which I was invited, that this comrade from Hamburg will come down again to organize the group here and that I am going to be a functionary with plenty to do.

The activity of the party group here is very low, they have not had a membership meeting for more than two months. Theoretically they are so backward that they don't even know the most fundamental teachings of Marx and Lenin.

If you pick up a party paper or pamphlet nowadays, you are sure to find some kind of a polemic against Trotsky and the Left Opposition. This is a good sign. It shows that the Left Opposition with its Marxist-Leninist understanding is taking root in Germany too, and it is sure to be necessary, for a great deal depends on the L. O. in the immediate future.

WINNING S. P. WORKERS

I am also often participating in discussions with social democratic workers and they are still an influence here, as strong as ever. Their influence is not shattered at all, as I should be by the Communists, what with the continual open betrayals of their leaders. I am doing my best to win them over to the C. P. G. or at least to make them friendly to the party.

I hope I'll be able to do some good work here before I get bounced, but then of course, I am going to devote myself entirely to Opposition work. I hope that things will start rolling over very soon and that the proletariat will come out as the victor. We've got some tough work ahead of us for the next few weeks and months.

—BILL (V. B.)

The "Uprising" of Nov. 7th. 1927

WHAT REALLY HAPPENS?

What really happened on November 7, 1927? Naturally, the Opposition also participated in the demonstration of the Tenth Anniversary. Its representatives marched together with their shops, factories, institutions of learning and Soviet institutions. Many Opposition groups carried their banners in the general parade. It was with these banners that they left their shops and other institutions. What sort of counter-revolutionary banners were they? Let us recall them once more:

1. "Carry out the testament of Lenin!"
2. "Direct the fire toward the Right—against Nepman, Kulak and bureaucracy!"
3. "For genuine workers' democracy!"
4. "Against opportunism, against a split—for the unity of the Leninist party!"
5. "For a Leninist Central Committee!"

Workers, employees, soldiers of the Red Army, students and pupils walking side by side with the Oppositionists who were carrying their banners. There were no clashes. Not a single worker with a sound mind could interpret these banners as banners directed against the Soviet power and the party. Only after several individual factories had joined the general current of the demonstration, did the G. P. U. send out special divisions upon instructions from the Stalinist secretariat to assault the demonstrators who were carrying their banners peacefully. After that several clashes took place, consisting entirely of attacks by the divisions of the G. P. U., who tore their banners away and heaped blows upon them. A selected group of Red Army commanders broke down the door of Smilga's quarters and forced their way in, on the balcony there were hanging the banners of the Opposition and the portraits of Lenin, Trotsky and Zinoviev. This, then, was the uprising of November 7, 1927.

The slogans: "For workers' democracy", "Against Nepman, Kulak and Bureaucrats!", "For the unity of the party!", were considered—naturally not by the working masses—but by the Stalinist apparatus as counter-revolutionary. Nevertheless, at that time no one of the apparatus people dared as yet to speak of an armed uprising. Such an invention would have seemed altogether too shameless and insolent in the eyes of the participants in the demonstration. When more than a year after Trotsky had been exiled by Stalin, the G. P. U. accused him of preparing an armed uprising, it was not with regard to the demonstration of November 7, but something quite new, which the G. P. U. could not, however, refer to by name. After the exiling of Trotsky, this accusation was not repeated by anybody. Stalin did not dare introduce it into the press. The very memory of it disappeared, went up like smoke.

Only when the facts began to fade from memory, did the Stalinist school of falsifications begin to spread the legend of the attempted uprising of November 7. The fact that this legend has, to a certain degree, become the central point of the campaign, is politically significant. That proves that the real actions of the Bolshevik-Leninists do not appear to be "crimes" in the eyes of the masses of workers and party members. Stalin actually complains that despite the eight years long campaign "Trotskyism" is still being regarded as a Communist tendency inside of the party! For his policy of reprisals, Stalin needs some basis of support that lies outside of the real activity of the Left Opposition. This basis of support, he tries to find in the police myth of the rising of November 7, 1927. Even if we had no other signs, this fact alone would suffice for us to say: the personal dictatorship of Stalin and his plebeian regime are in a bad way, in a very bad way!

A RED HISTORIAN DARES QUOTE LENIN

Another historian, Volosovitch, did not merely content himself with narrating the historical events already known universally from the testimony of John Reed (Ten Days That Shook The World) or from the memoirs of Shliapnikov on the February revolution and the shameful role of Stalin in that period. Volosovitch also attempted to analyse the facts and the political positions adopted in the past by the Bolshevik party, to draw the logical conclusions flowing therefrom. Here is what the Pravda (12-17-1931) says about him: "The 'historian' Volosovitch 'proves' (this plethora of quotation marks is the Pravda's own brand of irony—M. M.) that Lenin in 1915 did not pose the question of building socialism in one country. Volosovitch distorts the history of the party in the Trotskyist manner by opposing the tasks of the world revolution to the question of the complete possibility of building socialism in one country, as it was posed by Lenin (our emphasis—M. M.). In falsifying history and in slandering Lenin, Volosovitch writes that for Lenin 'the question is not posed from the point of view of the growing over of the bourgeois revolution into the socialist revolution but solely from the angle of the fundamental Bolshevik slogan of the given period, notably, that of the transformation of the imperialist world war into a civil world war. Consequently the question of building socialism in our country does not even enter' (Third Edition, page 84). Volosovitch even goes further. He declares that 'even when this growing over (mentioned above) becomes an established fact, the question of building socialism in our country alone while the other countries remain capitalist, is not a question for the present' (Page 85)."

THROUGH TEN EDITIONS
And Smilga, the author of the article in the Pravda, cannot contain his wrath any longer, concluding: "And it is these smuggled Trotskyist gods that Volosovitch offers to the reader under the cloak of quotations from Lenin, 'profound meditations, etc.' This unhappy censor will still have to affirm with great bitterness later on in the same article that what is most revolting about the whole affair is the fact that 'these smuggled gods have gone through ten editions'."

Stalin's article in the Proletarian Revolution was not only a manifestation of impotent wrath in the face of historical truth, it was also a decree for all the state publishing houses to make a complete revision of everything relating to the history of the Bolshevik party and

TORONTO—

Our Toronto comrades have recently begun to unfold activities which speak very promisingly for a real growth of the Canadian Left Opposition in the near future.

They are among the most active participants in the Open Forum being conducted by the Toronto Workers' Club, at which comrade Maurice Spector lately gave a successful lecture on "Lenin-Luxemburg" during the course of which discussions of a more comradely nature than has been the custom for some time took place, with leading members of the official party taking part in them.

The Toronto party is also involved right in the midst of the struggle against the government reprisals against the Communist Party of Canada, which goes under the name of the "Repeal Section 98 Movement". Delegates from the local branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) were seated at the conference called by the party's defense committee and the Opposition's proposals and views for carrying on this work are gaining a ready ear, some of them already adopted and bringing good response. Articles dealing with the exceptionally interesting developments in the "Repeal Section 98 Movement" will shortly appear in the Militant.

A STATEMENT OF THE MARINE WORKERS' DEFENSE COMMITTEE

tion, party, group and tendency to participate in the common work on an equal basis. The committee now contains representatives of two Communist groups, the C. P. I. A., the I. W. W., the Young People's Socialist League, trade unions, Anarchist groups and other organizations. The I. L. D. and the Communist Party are absent only because they refused specific and repeated invitations to participate.

That record alone, made in the face of many difficulties in a few weeks' time, could stand as a refutation of any attack against the committee. But there is one more accomplishment, and the most important one of all: The Marine Workers' Defense Committee established the fact that no worker, no matter how obscure he may be, who falls into the hands of the class enemy shall be deserted and left without means of defense. Those who try to infringe this principle and deny assistance to a persecuted worker—as the Communist party and the I. L. D. did in this case—will find a defense movement arising spontaneously without them. This is the greatest significance of the work of the present committee and its strongest appeal to the honest workers of all organizations.

HOW THE DISRUPTERS ACTED AT THE TIME OF THE ARREST

When the Daily Worker comes forward in its issue of January 25th with the statement that the defense committee has a policy of "betrayal of the class struggle and of the defendants particularly," it invokes a reminder of its own policy and conduct, and that of the I. L. D. in the case. The people who now proclaim themselves the only champions of the defendants, who offer to "defend" them even against their own committee spoke in a slightly different manner in the days following the arrest—when Soderberg, Bunker and Trajer were helpless in the hands of the police without influential friends' money, attorneys or any means of defense. Here is what the Daily Worker wrote on November 18th, two days after the arrest:

"Soderberg, secretary of the Tidewater Boatmen's Union, whom the capitalist press calls a 'Red,' was expelled from the Communist party for being a suspicious element and also from the Marine Workers Industrial Union for disruptive and anti-working activities. Trajer, Relly, and Bunker were expelled from the Marine Workers Industrial Union as bad elements." At the same time the Young Worker stated: "Soderberg is a stool pigeon."

Then, when personal friends of the accused men went to the I. L. D. for aid, it was refused. The I. L. D. refused to have anything to do with the "renegades," the "suspicious elements," the "stool pigeons," the people who had been "expelled from the Communist party." And from Nov. 18th until Jan. 25th, the Daily Worker never mentioned the case by a single word! It requires a supreme cynicism and an unbounded contempt for the intelligence of the workers for those who made such a record in the case to come now two and one-half months later, on the very eve of the trial and pose as the only real friends of the prisoners. They come too late!

THE UNITED FRONT POLICY OF THE DEFENSE COMMITTEE

The Marine Workers' Defense Committee was formed only after the I. L. D. and all other defense agencies had refused or failed to intervene. It was formed at the express written request of all three defendants who had no other means of defense and nowhere else to turn. The first nucleus of the committee, at its first meeting, adopted a policy of united front and invited all elements in the labor movement to join and cooperate. In its broadcasted statement on the case, published in various papers and in leaflet form, it stated: "It is the aim of the committee to broaden its membership to include representatives of all tendencies in the labor movement." On that line it sent invitations to the Communist party and the I. L. D. On December 5th, on December 18th, and again on December 28th, it addressed letters to the I. L. D. asking for cooperation in the struggle to arouse the whole labor movement for a united fight. All these invitations were ignored. The request for a speaker to represent the I. L. D. at the public mass meeting was unanswered.

THE ATTEMPT TO DISRUPT THE LEGAL DEFENSE ON THE EVE OF THE TRIAL

Rejecting all appeals to help in the organization of the workers' solidarity movement, the I. L. D. resorted to an insidious campaign, through its lawyers, to demoralize the prisoners and induce them to change counsel at the last moment. Taking advantage of statements of the prisoners that they wanted the help of the I. L. D. as well as that of all other organizations—which was likewise the policy of the committee—the I. L. D. lawyers tried by every means to induce the prisoners to sign a statement repudiating their defense committee and the legal counsel employed by it and to turn the case over to them.

When the nature and seriousness of the charges against the marine workers is taken into consideration—charges of having committed specific crimes which carry a penalty on conviction of as much as forty years in prison, with an agent provocateur and perjured evidence to combat which requires the most thorough and skillful legal preparation—one must be appalled at such a criminal maneuver. To propose the discharge of able counsel thoroughly familiar with the case and prepared by weeks of patient work to conduct the trial, and substitute new lawyers whose specialty is minor cases in the Magistrate's Court—is that not playing with the lives of men? Is it any wonder that the prisoners who would be glad to have their help if it were given in good faith, recoiled again, this infamous proposal with the bitterest indignation and refused to talk with them any further?

It was in answer to these machinations that all three defendants sent their telegram to the mass meeting and declared: "We reaffirm our fullest and unswerving confidence in the committee handling our defense and appeal to all workers everywhere to give the committee its fullest cooperation and assistance." On the basis of that express declaration of the prisoners themselves, which is only a restatement of what they have said on every occasion when the matter was called into question, the defense committee resolves to continue its work and calls on the I. L. D. to cease its disruption.

THE FRAUDULENT ISSUE OF "CLASS STRUGGLE DEFENSE"

Condemned by their record in the case from its inception, their dishonest maneuvers repulsed by the prisoners, and their own rank and file members protesting against their policy—the disrupters seek to justify themselves with a final argument. They want "all workers and workers' organizations to fight this case along class lines, along the lines of mass defense." This argument against the Defense Committee is just as false, just as dishonest, as all they have said and done in the case. The Defense Committee has worked from the beginning to convince the workers that this case is an issue of the class struggle, and by no means an ordinary criminal case. Its chief activity has been to organize the united front of labor to protest against the frame-up and defeat it. It was for this aim that the cooperation of the I. L. D. was requested in written form three different times. But instead of cooperation to build a united mass movement of the workers' the I. L. D. offered unqualified lawyers to replace the counsel already retained. At the eleventh hour they promise a workers' mass movement, and begin with an attempt to disrupt the movement that has already been organized while they kept silent. Their own statement in the Daily Worker testifies to the effectiveness of this movement. When they say in this statement that the "International Labor Defense considers this case as a direct attack upon the workers in the marine industry" they are only repeating what they learned from the publicity material of the Defense Committee. What they have yet to learn is that all workers have a common interest in repulsing the attack and that they must fight unitedly to that end.

The Defense Committee appeals to the honest workers of all sections of the labor movement to join and support this united fight and condemn the attempts to disrupt it. If Soderberg, Bunker and Trajer do not stand alone before the court, as they stood in the first days after their arrest, it is due to the principle of labor solidarity which called the Defense Committee into existence. Labor solidarity is the best, and—in the final analysis—the only real defense of persecuted workers who fall into the hands of the class enemy. Those who violate this principle, who put narrow factional interests above it, who seek to disrupt the movement, organized on that basis, are acting against the interests of the class. A defeat of these disrupters will be a victory for the class and for all class war prisoners, now and in the future.

Build a stronger movement of workers' solidarity for the imprisoned marine workers!

Defend all class war prisoners regard- less of their views or affiliations! Collect funds to help the defense of Soderberg, Bunker and Trajer!

three billion would have to stand a loss of approximately 42%; two and one-half billion losses of 18%. The merchant and worker unable to pay the high rents of 1928 and 1929, the real estate owner unable to pay the interest on the mortgage and the same with the farmer; the bank unable to pay its depositors. This is the picture presented.

In the field of railroad bonds the situation is exactly as serious. More than 70% of all railroad bonds are held by banking and similar institutions. The severe decline in the net income of railroads, dropping from $1,284,000,000 in 1929 to the low of $324,000,000 for 1931, brought about a consequent decline in the railroad bonds. In 1931 alone, it says nothing of the sharp decline of the last few months of 1930, railroad bonds have experienced a decline of 25 to 50 percent. Of course there are various remedies that are being experimented with now, to increase railroad income. Namely: the rate increase recently granted, will succeed in bringing in an additional profit of $100,000,000; the second, if put into reality, another $200,000,000; while the amount of bond interest not being earned now is estimated at $75,000,000. The holder of railroad bonds and securities might put much hope in these prospective increases, were it not for the realization that very little replacing of fixed capital, very little of necessary repairs to locomotives and cars has been done during the past year. Were the actual balance sheet to be drawn, it would be much worse than it now appears; for money that should have been used for replacement purposes, has been used for dividend purposes to the stock and bond holders. The proposed savings of $300,000,000 is already being balanced against replacement of worn equipment. Only a substantial increase in the total haulage of the railroad of the country can return to them a portion of the income of the prosperity days. This increase in haulage is dependent upon a general improvement on the business situation as a whole.

The third unsolvable factor is the defaulting on both the European and the Latin-American markets. The vastness of this item is impossible to determine, but when we consider the countries defaulting—countries in which the American banker has been investing his funds for the past decade, an inkling of the size of the canvas can be obtained. In a recent statement of the Chase National Bank, it was pointed out that approximately 3 1/2% of the total resources of the bank consisted of German credits (with Germany on the verge of defaulting). Adding to the above the loans to the S. A. and European defaulting countries, brings the total to a far from negligible item on the asset sheet. A general all-around, world wide refusal to pay, as seems to be imminent, would seriously impair the condition of the American banking institutions.

The above are the conditions that the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corp. is to remedy. Even the leading financiers of the country are very skeptical as to its value. "Sixty billion dollars in values lost during the past three years cannot be repaid by two billion." The Annalist of January 15, 1932 uses the phrase "There is no real remedy for this depreciation in security value, except the restoration of earning power." In referring to the recent measure they say, "the business depression cannot be cured by such measures." Recognizing the truth of the above statements, one must search elsewhere for the explanation of the creation of this present Corporation.

A DOLE FOR BANKERS—STARVATION FOR WORKERS

The bill has been described as a "two billion dollar bill to relieve bankers' mistakes." The explanation of the above is easily seen by a careful reading of the measure as passed. The initial capital is to consist of $500,000,000; the remaining 1 1/2 billion is to be made up through the sale of bonds, but and this is the all inclusive but, "the said obligations are to be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to interest and principle by the United States," by the government. In other words, the U. S. government has agreed to buy two billion dollars worth of depreciated and worthless paper from the banks and railroads. The proper title for the measure should have been "The Bank Subsidy Bill of 1932".

All this by itself is nothing new. Big business repeatedly attempts to secure the aid of the class as a whole for its own particular enterprises. The whole campaign to dump the reparations into the Atlantic revolves around the question of aid by the capitalists' government to a particular group—the bankers. The present plan has exactly a similar character.

The latest patch has been applied to our industrial and financial system. Two billion dollars have been diverted from the taxes to aid the bankers and railroads in their present "sore plight." Although the measure may have a temporary effect, "there is obviously no real remedy for this depreciation in security values except the restoration of earning power." The trend out of the present crisis must occur in the industrial field, in the field of manufacture. Without a pick-up for industry as a whole one can expect to begin hearing before long of a

Spain's Bourgeoisie on the Offensive

This is the second of a series of articles on the situation in Spain by comrade Max Shachtman who recently returned from an extended visit to such centers as Madrid and Barcelona.—Ed.

Have the workers gained politically from the establishment of the Republican-Socialist coalition government which came into power after the overthrow of the monarchy last April? What rights have they been accorded? To what extent do these "rights" conform with the high-sounding phrase "the democratic republic of all the workers" which the socialists had incorporated into the fundamental law of the land?

An Atmosphere of Suppression

The visitor to Spain is immediately impressed with the fact that the most rigid control is exercised by the police authorities not only over foreigners but even more so over the native born. Spain is the only country on the continent, except Fascist Italy, known to this writer where there is a passport or document examination in the course of a trip in the interior of the country. Passport control at frontier countries is a matter of course everywhere, but in Spain the traveler who makes a trip from one interior city to another has an official going down the length of the railway carriage demanding his documents. We traveled with one of the comrades from Madrid to Barcelona, two cities well within the frontiers of the country, but we had scarcely got under way when a police official, accompanied as usual by the evil-looking Civil Guards, approached us and asked for our documents. My comrade's revolutionary "notoriety," (he has been arrested 29 times now!), gained us both the dubious honor of being accompanied all during the voyage by the agent, who kept pacing in front of our compartment till we reached Barcelona, casting the most suspicious glances at us all the while as though to prevent us from making the slightest move to disturb the law and order of the country from the vantage point of a train car. While representatives of the most reactionary section of the foreign bourgeoisie receive the undisturbed hospitality of the government, foreign Communists have not only been arrested, but, as in the case of some Communist members of the French Chamber of Deputies who came to Spain, have been transported to the border of Spain for deportation. Under Primo de Rivera, practically every labor organization, regardless of its form or activity, was suppressed or declared illegal. The only exception to this rule was the Socialist party and its organizations, for the simple reason that the sanguinary dictatorship enjoyed the collaboration of no less a personage than Largo Caballero, party leader, secretary of the socialist trade union center, and councillor of State under the monarchy. The advent of the republic has not brought about any appreciable change in this respect. The labor organizations exist at all as yet is due solely to the fact that the bourgeoisie, in forsaking the monarchy, was compelled to give a formal recognition to the militant labor organizations which had broken through the dictatorial repressions of Primo and of Berenguer in the months before the fall of the latter. But now the rights which the working class and peasantry gained for themselves by sheer force in the early moments of the republic are being cynically abolished by a reactionary bourgeoisie in power which is taking no chances on allowing the workers the democratic political rights which were originally promised them.

Legalizing An Organization
Under the republic today, all organizations, whether trade unions, political parties, chess clubs, sports associations or sewing circles, must "legalize" themselves if they have 10 members or more. The statutes of the organization must be presented in advance to the Director of the Ministry of the Interior, who will then issue a license. This is a new scheme to restore confidence and return prosperity. To the millions of unemployed workers, the government's refusal of the slightest aid. But to the financial oligarchy it is prepared to lend its entire machinery. As the coadjutor of American capitalism, WIN Rogers, intimates: The government is always ready to help those who do not need it—those who do, the working class, will have to wrench it from them in the course of the struggle against capitalism for its eventual overthrow.

General of Security (roughly, the equivalent of our police chiefs), or to the governor of the province, and if that worthy grants the required permission, a formal meeting is called eight days later, at which the organization is formally constituted. At this meeting, two police officials must be present for the purpose of supervising the procedure and taking notes for their reports to their superiors. If the meeting formally approves the proposed statutes and the officials of the organization are elected, a report is then turned in to the "Seguridad", together with the names and records of every officer, and then—only then—is the organization "legal"; we hasten to add, providing all of this has been approved by the authorities. Every meeting, regardless of whether it is a public mass meeting or a closed business meeting of an organization, must receive the O. K. of the authorities before it can be held. A local trade union cannot call its own members together to discuss its internal affairs without permission from the "Seguridad" which also has the right (and exercises it) to send a detective and a uniformed policeman to attend the meeting for supervisory purposes and to make a report. Even the Socialist party, which has scores of representatives in the Cortes and three ministers in the cabinet, must apply for permission to hold a public or private meeting and have them attended by police! A regular branch meeting of the Madrid local office of the Opposition which I attended was also graced by two plain clothes men, who made no secret of their business, listened to the proceedings with great attention and made copious notes. At both ends of the street on which the meeting place was located, were stationed four Civil Guards and two regular police—quite an escort of honor for the business meeting of the Madrid Opposition! The Russian Okhrana could do no better.

We have already had occasion to write about the Spanish court system in relation to workers. The abominations of "governmental detention," despised so heartily under Primo, are carried over today into the republic without the slightest change. And carried over mostly unaltered, the regime of the very men who fulminated so violently against the system when the dictatorship applied it. The outstanding example is Galarza, the Director-General of Security in Madrid; others, like Azana, the president, Prieto, the socialist minister, Domingo, "the man to the Left of the Left," could be mentioned. Workers may (and are) arrested without charges placed against them. They can be held without either charges or being brought to trial. They can be kept in prison for years without "due process of law."—That is the system of "governmental detention."

Just as the workers have not gained the real right: to organization so little have they gained the right to strike. In 1926, Primo created the so-called "comités paritarios," or parity committees, which were composed of one representative of the workers, one of the employers and the "impartial" government chairman—compulsory for every industry. This scoundrelly law was elaborated and approved by his councillor of State, Caballero, and only the socialist unions (U. G. T.) and the Catholic unions approved it; the anarcho-syndicalist C. N. T. would have no part of it. These "parity committees," which virtually crippled the right to strike, are still in force today, at least to the extent that the workers recognize them.

The Government and Strikes

When the workers go out on strike in spite of the strangulating class collaboration committees, they meet with the violent, organized opposition of the government. The same people who today occupy some of the most important posts in the state once did all they could to foment strikes and disturbances under the monarchy; today they drown them in blood if necessary. During the famous national telephone strike of more than six months ago, directed at the American trust which holds the mono-

Resolution of Marxian Y.C.

The resolution below was passed unanimously at the Marxian Youth Club, on Sunday January 31. The reason for its issuance is evident from its contents.—Ed.

1. The Marxian Youth Club has received a letter from Welsbord making accusations against one of the former members of his organization who is now a member of the club.

2. In view of the fact that Welsbord has taken his case against this worker to the capitalist court, we consider it beneath the dignity of a workers' organization to consider the charges at the same time they are pending there.

3. We condemn this appeal to the capitalist courts as a violation of the ethics of the labor movement and as a far greater offense even than the one charged against the worker in question.

We demand that Welsbord withdraw his case from the capitalist court. Only by that can he gain the right to appeal to any workers' organization. When that is done, the Marxian Youth Club will consider the accusations and pass judgment on them.

—MARXIAN YOUTH CLUB

poly, the government and its Civil Guard were to be found exclusively on the side of the employers. In Madrid, the telephone exchange was completely occupied by the Civil Guard. Each scab repairman who went out, was accompanied on the truck by four Civil Guards, armed to the teeth and ready for business. The same story can be told about any other strike. Nor do they stop at "giving protection" to scabs. The instances are piling up when the Civil Guard has fired point blank at strikers, killing and wounding men and women and even little kids.

Now, with the adoption of the "Law for the Defense of the Republic," the situation becomes worse. Merely to quote from its provisions will give an idea of how the shades of Bismarck and the Russian Czar must envy the reactionism of their successors. The following are considered as "acts of aggression against the Republic and as such liable to the present law":

"4. The indirect provocation or incitation to commit acts of violence against persons, things or property for religious, political or social motives.

"5. Every word or gesture of contempt for institutions or organizations of the state.

"6. Strikes not announced eight days in advance, unless there exist other intervals designated in the special law; strikes launched for motives other than questions of work and those not having been preceded by arbitration or conciliation."

Punishment is indicated in the second article: "The direct authors of the acts enumerated in paragraphs 1 to 10 of the preceding article, as well as those who will have incited them to commit them, may be deported or banished for a period no greater than that of the validity of this law, or have imposed upon them a fine up to the maximum of 10,000 pesetas."

A Dictatorial Power

In the third article, we read that "The Minister of the Interior has the power to: 1. Prohibit public meetings or manifestations of a political, religious or social character when, by reason of circumstances, it may be assumed that their unfolding may disturb the public peace. 2. Dissolve centers or associations considered as inciting to the realization of the acts enumerated in article 1 of this law." And article four informs us that the application of the law is confided exclusively into the hands of the Minister of the Interior.

The results of the application of such a monstrous piece of ultra-reactionary legislation may well be imagined. The reactions of the workers and peasants to the law, of the workers and peasants who retained so many of their illusions in the "republicanism" of the bourgeoisie, are increasingly satisfactory from the revolutionary point of view. The bourgeoisie, by the adoption of this law and by its subsequent application, is manifestly on the offensive. It is aiming at the complete suppression of any independent working class movement, of reducing the proletarian and peasant movements to the subterranean, illegal level to which it was depressed under the rule of Alfonso and Primo de Rivera.

Even before this law—voted by the socialists and Catalonians as well as by the bourgeois parties!—but especially after it, the repression has been accentuated. Scores, perhaps hundreds of Communists, are in prison now. When I was in Barcelona, the editor of the C. N. T. daily paper, Solidaridad Obrera, the anarchist Felipe Alai, told me that in Barcelona alone there were more than 200 members of the C. N. T. imprisoned, and more than 1,000 throughout Spain. The number has undoubtedly increased since then, especially after the recent revolutionary events.

—MAX SHACHTMAN.
The third article will deal with the Socialists and the question of a Socialist government in Spain.—Ed.

CORRECTION

In the article by comrade Maurice Spector on Rosa Luxemburg, which appeared in the Militant of January 23, several unfortunate mistakes crept into the proof, which require rectification.

In the paragraph beginning with "The response of Rosa . . .", the sentence reading "When the character of the Russian revolution was debated at the London (1907) Congress of the Russian social democracy and Lenin defended the position of the Mensheviks (1), Rosa Luxemburg along with Lenin represented the viewpoint of the Bolsheviks . . ." should, of course, read: ". . . and Plechanov defended the position of the Mensheviks, etc."

The sentence at the beginning of the last paragraph, should read: "German menshevism and the bourgeoisie had triumphed," not "has triumphed." —Ed.

N. Y. Dressmakers Strike

Workers Unity against the Common Enemy Imperative

In the New York dressmakers strike, now on, the crucial issue is that of working class unity. But it will be attained only with a policy based upon that objective. And so far the exact opposite is the case.

Every working class action constitutes part of the historical laboratory testing the program and policies of the revolutionary party. No evasion of fundamental duties, no emasculation or counterfeiting for these duties, however cleverly proposed, can circumvent this test. Its results will only be new confusion and strengthening of the enemy's hands. That completely holds true also in this instance in the needle trades market.

How do matters stand in this strike? Last Monday the Left wing, the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union, issued the call. Obviously that was in accord with the policy of the official Communist party leadership which controls the union. For some time the union under Right wing control, the International Ladies Garment Workers, has been preparing for a strike and has made such a decision with the actual date not yet set. This decision, of course, is the direct result of pressure from the rank and file leadership. In the center of the demands of all workers stands the abolition of the sweatshop, improvements of the standard of living, enforcement of the reduced work week, and insurance for the unemployed. These demands are made by the workers upon their common enemy.

The condition of two unions existing within the needle trades is not one originating today and cannot be changed at will. To that extent the workers are naturally and of necessity divided. But it is precisely because of this condition that the problem of working class unity has become the crucial issue. For this reason the only policy of the revolutionary party which can stand the test in this situation is the one which is founded upon the united front of all workers involved in the conflict. This policy, which, in other words, is a fundamental duty of the revolutionary party, the Stalinist leadership has constantly evaded. It has constantly followed the opposite direction. It has pursued a course which culminated in a complete emasculation of the united front policy, in the establishment of a counterfeit—the so-called United Front Committee—which does not at all proceed from the two unions as its base. It does not provide a bridge for unity in strike action of the two unions but rather a preventative. Therefore it must be said unequivocally that in the crucial issue of working class unity, the policy of the official party leadership completely fails the test.

There need be no illusion of the strike intentions of the Right wing union leadership. They have gone as far as they have only under pressure from below. All past experiences prove its treacherous role and fully justify the most severe indictment. It would be foolish to expect it to have reformed today. Within this union, the Lovestone group occupies a peculiar position, though one quite in accord with its general orientation. Does this group now demand from the I. L. G. W. that it immediately decide upon the strike date in common cause with the workers of the industrial union who are already out? Do they take up the fight for a united front of all the dressmakers within that union? There is no evidence of either. Despite all of their clamor of participating now in a progressive movement the fundamental fact remains that when they unconditionally returned to the folds of the Right wing controlled union, they deserted the Left wing and all it stands for.

It is a well known fact that the Right wing leadership have with every possible means resisted all efforts for a workers' united front. That they will continue to do so need not be doubted for one moment. But their views and policies are not determined by the revolutionary party, nor is it responsible for them. Its responsibility rests exclusively with its own policies for which it must render an account to the working class as a whole.

It is true that the official party leadership has made progress from its one time position of the industrial union members staying at work while the members of the I. L. G. W. were out on the streets. But this progress is miserably small and far from sufficient in the present much more exacting situation. The requirements are much greater than that. The rank and file pressure for struggle has vastly increased. So much so that the Right wing officials are compelled to heed their demands.

But let us again recall the exact situation today. The workers of both unions are in a direct conflict with the common class enemy. It represents the immediately threatening danger. Its defeat is the common objective. Can that be accomplished separately at all, or are the possibilities better when united? Certainly the latter. Could the two unions, one following a Left wing policy, the other a Right wing policy, be completely united at once? Hardly. That will most likely proceed through several conflicts. But for the common strike objectives, for a practically identical set of demands and for the defeat of a common enemy, a united front could and should be established. There will be objectors, saying: the Right wing leadership are the out and out emissaries of capitalism. To this we answer: that is completely true, but how can these emissaries be defeated except by the unity of the workers. In a united front, the Left wing would, of course, not for one minute cease its criticism of nor its fight against these Right wing capitalist finkies.

If the Communists should not endeavor to unite workers who should? Does a call upon those workers in the I. L. G. W. to leave their established union bring unity? No, experience has shown that this is not the way. Another course must be found and the direction for that course is clearly indicated.

By far the largest section of the organized dressmakers are in the I. L. G.

Unemployed Workers Admitted Free
Auxiliaries: New York Branch Communist League of America (Opposition)

W. The N. Y. I. U. is a minority; but the Left wing spirit is by no means crushed within the former. Yet it is a matter of two distinct organizations; two movements. In this situation, the party leadership can square its responsibility to the working class only by sincerely and genuinely fighting for a united front on the common strike objectives. A united front from organization to organization, from movement to movement. Concretely, it would mean to fight for a joint strike; for a joint strike leadership to jointly work out the demands for settlements. The party leadership should tell the workers in the shops who belong to the I. L. G. W. not to leave their organization, not to forsake it for a counterfeit institution but to fight with it for a united front. Undoubtedly, it would produce a powerful and favorable echo. This is the way to defeat those who have designs of betrayal. Incidentally it will also be the way to re-establish the seriously damaged prestige of the Left wing.

This policy, the Left Opposition has repeatedly emphasized. It is the policy of Lenin. In this decisive moment, in the face of a serious conflict, it has become so much more imperative.

We call upon all the dressmakers to heed the strike call, as far as the Left Opposition members are concerned, they will strike with the Left wing.

Imperialists Meet at Geneva

French and Americans Wrangle for Lead in Struggle against U.S.S.R.

The imperialists are shuffling their cards once more at Geneva. Despite all the bourgeois press comment to the contrary, it appears, nevertheless, that the French proposals are the real trump. Wall Street statesmanship has always been known for its "pacific" for its "democratic" gestures. At the disarmament conference now in session, it runs true to form. The antipathy of the American delegation to the Tardieu offer is easily understood in this light.

In the general comment on the presentation of France's delegate, a great deal of attention was devoted to the complications in the problems of "eastern Europe". And it is not idle talk, as the bourgeois press feigns to believe, to say that the French proposals are directed in the first instance against the Soviet government and against an eventual upheaval of the German workers. One needs only to bear in mind the French applause of the Japanese actions in Northern Manchuria, the various diplomatic plots sponsored and initiated by Paris, to realize this.

It is not at all surprising to find Wall Street and American imperialism opposed to the French plans. An "international police force" under the control of the League of Nations, would inevitably have to act under the hegemony of Gallic imperialism. The French army is the strongest and best equipped military force in capitalist Europe. France is, of late, one of America's most powerful rivals. Wall Street can have no interest whatsoever in a compact European army under French direction. The same holds true for Great Britain, especially if we consider the recent financial obligations of that government to the United States bankers.

COMMON ACTION AMONG IMPERIALISTS

However, while we are disinclined to schematically outline a united imperialist front in advance, as the Stalinists do, it does remain important to point out the possibilities of common action among the robber governments in the event of a war against the European working class. While the Americans have not concealed their discomfort and vexation in the face of Tardieu's proposals, the head of the Washington delegation, Ambassador Gibson, does find it possible to say in its name that it "is prepared to consider any form of military limitation and reduction which promises real progress toward a feeling of international security, protection against surprise", etc. It is clear that this statement is a reservation on the part of the Hoover regime with regard to the French proposals. And it will be remembered that the United States imperialists once before joined the European vultures in an attack on the U. S. S. R. That was in 1919, although the "Polar Bear" division of Wilson's troops was sent to Vladivostok without any definite instructions to cooperate with the other Western powers. One could hardly expect less from Hoover than from Wilson.

In liberal bourgeois circles, it is being said rather apathetically, that the current Geneva Conference will be the last before the next war. And, in view of the developments in the Far East and in central Europe it must be admitted that there is a great deal of truth in the contention. The Japanese in the Orient, who can hardly afford the all too costly extension of their Chinese looting expedition, proposed to the other powers, the demilitarization of the main Chinese ports, or in other words, a repartitioning of China. The Americans naturally find this Japanese design unacceptable. What they need most is a centralized China, to serve as a reliable market for the inflated American industries. All indications point, however, to some sort of an agreement, between Tokio and Washington, on the one hand, and between Washington and the Quai d'Orsay, on the other.

It is quite indisputable that the most serious danger at present is that of a war against the working class of Germany and against the Soviet Union. As the political crisis develops, the oppressed masses of the Asian continent will look more and more to the European proletariat, for succor. Upon the leadership of the revolutionary European proletariat devolves a role of the foremost historic and world magnitude. To trifle now with a mocking intransigence toward the social democratic workers' organizations, to heedlessly overestimate the importance of the Red partisan movement in China, to subordinate everything today to the needs of the Five Year Plan alone, means to head for irreparable losses, to drive blindly towards an epoch-making defeat.

The working class of the world must be aroused to the danger facing it. Only international action on its part can save the Soviet Union, can keep the achievements of the heroic struggles of the Russian workers intact and carry them further, beyond the boundaries of the capitalist world. To do this, the possibility must be created to speak to the broadest sections of the masses. Every "little" mistake, every obstacle lightly put in the way of reaching the masses, is bound to prove extremely costly not only nationally, but internationally, not only for a year, but for a whole epoch.

Philadelphia Oppositionists Sentenced

Bulletin

Comrades Bernard Morgenstern and Leon Goodman, members of the Philadelphia Branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) have been sentenced by Judge Reed of Philadelphia to ninety days imprisonment. They were found guilty of violating the notorious Flynn Sedition Act of the state of Pennsylvania. Comrades Morgenstern and Goodman were arrested a year ago for distributing leaflets issued by the National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition), explaining the causes of unemployment and stating that the international proletarian revolution alone can bring a real solution to the misery called forth by the capitalist system.

The case of Morgenstern and Goodman has been most shamefully sabotaged by the Stalinist bureaucracy heading the International Labor Defense, who have not turned a finger for them and whose policy it has become, to defend only members of the Stalinist faction and not all working class prisoners, for which purpose the I. L. D. was originally founded. All workers, all revolutionists, all Communists must be aroused to this fact. The dangerous and criminal sabotaging policy of the Stalinists must be stopped, if the staunchest fighters of the proletariat and all the workers with them are not to suffer the inevitably harmful consequences.

Comrades Morgenstern and Goodman will serve their term in prison. They have been sentenced for distribution of leaflets of the Left Opposition emphasizing to the working class that the final solution to the unemployment problem can be found only in the proletarian revolution. For its realization they are prepared to fight regardless of their incarceration in the capitalist bastilles. (Further news of the case will be found on page Two).

Com. Glotzer's National Tour

Our second national tour is about to start. Comrade Albert Glotzer, member of the National Committee, Communist League of America (Opposition) will speak at a series of meetings now being arranged throughout the country. Comrade Glotzer has just returned from a visit to comrade Trotsky. He spent about four weeks discussing with Lenin's closest co-worker some of the pressing problems of the world revolutionary movement today.

Comrade Glotzer was also fortunate in being able to get a first hand view of conditions now existing in Germany, England and France. An account of his impressions should be of extreme importance to American workers, particularly in view of coming decisive events in Germany. This will naturally be the subject of his lectures and contain an intimate account of comrade Trotsky's views on the threatening Fascist danger and the problems of Communism in Europe.

His subject will be
WHAT IS EUROPE HEADING FOR?
The following is the schedule for Glotzer's tour:

Boston, Mass. February 19
Montreal, Canada. . . February 21
Toronto, Canada . . . February 23-24
Buffalo, N. Y. February 25
Chicago, Ill. February 27-28
Other dates will follow.

The meeting for Glotzer in Montreal will be held at Universite Ouvriere, 85 East Craig St., Sunday evening, Feb. 21, 1932.

Three months subscription: $0.50—a copy of either one of our 10c pamphlets. The International Communist Review will appear in 48 pages, bi-monthly in the beginning. The price per copy will be 15c, subscription will be $1.50 for 12 issues and $1.00 for 8 issues.

There will be no delay in preparations for its appearance. We count similarly on no delay in your response. Help us build the Left Opposition Press!

Is Trotsky's Life to be Kept in Danger?

The Daily Worker of January 8, 1932, reports a White Guard plot to assassinate Maxim Litvinov, Soviet Commissar of Foreign Affairs. In addition it quotes from a note sent by Krestinsky, acting Commissar of Foreign Affairs to Sir Eric Drummond, Secretary General of the League of Nations, in which it says:

"Our authorities have learned reliably that certain Russian emigres in Paris led by Miller, Dragmlov and Shatlov, were given orders to make an attempt on Litvinov's life. . . ."

That the White Guards are planning to murder a number of Russian revolutionists has been known for some time. The menace is imminent in the most direct and immediate sense. Several months ago, on October 22, 1931, the Rote Fahne, official organ of the Communist Party of Germany at Berlin, first exposed this plot, bringing news at the same time of a plan by the White Guard emigre, Turkul, to murder Leon Trotsky, in his place of exile near Istanbul, Turkey.

The report which has reached the Daily Worker omits that part of the story printed in the Rote Fahne. We want to know, first of all: has the Daily Worker done this willfully, under instructions? Secondly, do Stalin and the Central leadership of the Russian party intend to content themselves with merely casting off the responsibility for an eventual murder of our comrade by the White Guards, as was apparent from the tenor of the Rote Fahne report? Thirdly, will the Stalinist leadership continue to sabotage the protection of comrade Trotsky despite the fact that it is they, as heads of the Soviet state who have discovered the plans of the White Guards? We demand an answer promptly.

The organizer of the October victory, the first leader of the Red Army, Leon Trotsky, the comrade in arms of Lenin, is in danger of losing his life at the hands of White Guard murderers! Every further attempt to neglect precautionary measures against the would-be assassins, every attempt of the Stalinists to wash their hands of the whole matter will be interpreted only as assistance to the White Guards, as united action with them. The workers of the world will understand that full well.

Let every worker-Communist, every sincere revolutionary in the Communist Party of the U. S. A., demand an accounting of the leadership. The question must be posed to them sharply. What do they intend to do with Trotsky? Do they intend to leave him exposed to the daggers of a White Guard assassin? Is Stalin in a united front with Turkul?

Help Build Opposition Press!

When we launched our Expansion Program about this time a year ago one of the most important steps contemplated was the publication of The Militant as a weekly. It became a reality. But a serious extension of its circulation still remains ahead. Can we now ask the cooperation of all our comrades and supporters to take this up in earnest? We propose that all put their shoulder to the wheel and make a real effort during the coming three months: March, April and May. This is the time of our regular subscription drive.

Our weekly has appeared now without fail for some seven months. Our readers, we are sure, fully appreciate this accomplishment. But what they may not appreciate so well, is the fact that it has been running on a mere shoe string.

This, however, has not affected its character in the least. On the contrary, we feel confident we can also say that the weekly appearance has increased its theoretical, its informative and its fighting quality. It has become a real source of additional strength to the Left Opposition. This is at it should be. The press is the fighting instrument of the revolutionary movement. For the Left Opposition that holds doubly true. But it will only become that fully when it reaches to the farthest corners of its field, when it reaches every live, thinking, militant worker. This is what we aim to make our immediate task.

With our newest addition to come, announced in our previous issue, that is with the addition of a theoretical organ,

The International Communist Review, this task should become considerably facilitated. First, because it will make possible further improvements of The Militant. It will become a means of seriously broadening its appeal and give its character a more popular touch. It will enable us to further consolidate our position.

Will our supporters assist us in this task? Will they help build the Left Op-

Pay Reduction in the Building Trades

A Blow at the Workers' Standard Throughout All the Trades

The wage cut drive in the building industry now initiated in several large cities simultaneously reveals a concerted plan of action. In the cities of New York and Chicago alone the demanded 25% cut will involve more than 200,000 workers. But the objective is a far greater one. The objective is to strike at this section of "privileged" workers, to more effectively pave the way for the reduction of the workers' standard throughout. A devilishly well fitting complement to the much heralded Hoover Home Building Program.

The Building Trades Employers' Association hardly awaited a reply to their proposed wage cut, it immediately became a virtual ultimatum. It was practically offered as: "Take it or leave it." In this they counted on the effective assistance of the lashing whip of unemployment.

The extent of the increasing tempo of wage-reductions recently applied can very well be understood from the late reports made by the Department of Labor. Up to September 15, when the U. S. Steel Corporation took over leadership in wage reductions, there had been during 1931, 2,257 cuts involving 315,229 workers. In the ensuing two months alone there were 1,074 reductions, involving 290,082 workers.

With this ultimatum the wage cut drive is carried into the very center of the A. F. of L. unions. For among the exclusive craft union make-up of the A. F. of L., the building trades still constitute the actual backbone. But it is also this exclusiveness of craft organization and craft ideology, terribly antiquated in conditions of modern class relations, which spells the greatest handicap to these unions.

What will be the answer of the Building Trades Unions to this ultimatum? Will they resist? It should be clear that failure to resist at the outset will soon start them on the toboggan slide with one wage cut following another. William Green and his A. F. of L. hierarchy have repeatedly made grandiose declarations that the unions will resist wage cuts. Now the A. F. of L. backbone faces the test. But there are no indications that this leadership will back up its declaration with preparation for action. The Chicago union leadership has already offered a compromise. This is how much the grandiose declarations of Bill Green and his hierarchy mean.

For public consumption the employers have for some time held up in horror the example of the high wages in the building industry. The fact, however, that employment is extremely seasonal, that the building trades worker manages to keep a job only a few months out of the year is never mentioned. Though now glib promises are being made that a wage-reduction will increase building and thus increase the jobs. Yet it is a well-known fact that the amount of building to be done does not at all depend upon the wage level of the workers in that industry. As one example, we may cite the instances of cities where building trades wages have remained low, or where cuts have been accepted, that did not bring an increase in building. As a second instance it is well to remind building trades workers that the present crisis has already seriously diminished building requirements; and with a general reduction of the working class standard of living one could not at all expect an increase in residential buildings. Thus wage reductions will rather react in the reverse of the promises made.

Within the building trades unions the corrupt practice of business unionism flourishes. The miserable incompetence of the leadership stands out glaringly. A host of useless petty grafting-business agents has infested these unions with the general result that the organized position is today very seriously weakened. The power of the organization is not at all maintained on the job. Workers find employment today in practically every instance only by accepting a wage considerably below the official scale. Some unsuspecting worker might think that it would be better to reduce the official wage scale to the level of what is actually being paid—and this is a quite widespread belief. They forget, however, that the minute a cut of the official scale is accepted it will be as much reflected in the wage actually paid. That will be immediately cut further also.

Thus the wage cut ultimatum looms as a real problem before the building trades unions. Added to this is the present heavy scourge of unemployment. Meek submission to the employers' demands cannot at all solve the problem but only aggravate it. It can only result in a further reduction of the workingman's standard. An aggressive attitude is necessary. The unions do not face a question of maintaining what is being charged to be a high wage scale but of maintaining a bare possibility of existence. Acceptance of a wage cut can never bring relief to the workers either for their maintenance of a standard nor for the problem of unemployment. To find a solution for these problems it is first of all necessary to prepare well to utilize all the power of the organization to resist the attack, to resist the wage cut. Secondly, it becomes necessary to give serious consideration to the reduction of the workday so as to actually help relieve the unemployment situation. This is where the six hour work day without reduction of pay should be particularly considered. The building trades workers unions today constitute the backbone of the organized labor movement. As such they should show the lead in resisting the general attacks upon the workers' standard of living.

Morgenstern and Goodman Sentenced

A Letter from the Two Philadelphia Defendants

Moyamensing Prison
Philadelphia, Pa.
Monday, Feb. 8, 1932

Dear Comrades:

This is our answer to Judge Reed: "We are members of the C. L. of A. (O.) We fight under the banner held high by comrade Trotsky. We are Communists, not for a moment have we been fooled by the trickery of the court's legal liberalistic tinting.

"We are not here as criminals. Nor as repentant sinners. It is a year since we were arrested for daring to tell the workers the cause of their misery and for urging them to struggle unitedly against worsening conditions. Has capitalism solved any of the crying contradictions of society? Have not conditions grown worse for the masses of people? For this you will suppress us. What matters your vaunted civil rights? For us—civil terror, but that solves nothing. Nor can the cancer of capitalism be eliminated under capitalism. Only the proletarian revolution can do that.

"Your sentence shows that it is you who stand in fear of us. It is not we who are afraid. High indeed would rise the wrath of the workers against the arbitrary repression against us revolutionists, were it not for the sabotage of stupid and corrupt bureaucrats put in charge of working class organizations.

"We are here as fighters of your starvation system, not as criminals. Your class has grown rich and powerful on our poverty and degradation; has flourished on the blood and tears of the working class. For wanting to change all this; for our struggle to overthrow capitalism, to emancipate society from human slavery and to build a Communist society where exploitation and hunger no longer exist, you persecute us. Your verdict we can only accept as a verdict of capitalist class justice. Today you pick us out because you think us small and weak. Tomorrow you will stretch further—to every brave voice of working class freedom. You jail us; you can never jail the ideas we stand for. The day will soon be here when your whole system, already doomed, will stand before the bar of proletarian justice.

HAIL THE REVOLUTION!
(Signed) Leon Goodman and Bernard Morgenstern

This is the first opportunity we have had to write and we hasten to do so. Judge Reed who passed sentence on us for violation of the State's notorious Flynn Sedition Act gave us ninety days in Moyamensing. This is as "punishment," he said, for teaching the overthrow of capitalism. The lawyers fled appeal to the Supreme Court. Bail has not yet been furnished.

We were very fortunate to be placed in the same cell. There are about 45 party members and party sympathizers in the same prison. Forty of them are here for resisting an eviction. Our two hour period in the prison yard permits us to fraternize with the other comrades.

This despite the I. L. D.'s sabotage of our defense and the vituperation against us.

With Red greetings to all our comrades,

L. GOODMAN.

B. MORGENSTERN.

The Minneapolis Branch of the Left Opposition in the Fight for the Unemployed

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

As we go to press, six workers are on trial before Judge Carroll for participating in the unemployed meeting at Bridge Square on February 4th. About 50 policemen, according to the capitalist press, on the orders of Mayor Anderson, charged about two thousand workers assembled to hear the speakers. A magnificent resistance was put up by the crowd which laid low and sent to the hospital 4 policemen, although the latter were armed with murderous saps and black-jacks. Working women were especially prominent in the fight, kicking, scratching and breaking lath posters over the heads of the cops. A dozen or more comrades and sympathizers sustained wounds and one comrade is in danger of losing an eye from a vicious attack at the hands of a cowardly cop with a sap.

The Daily Worker of January 9, 1932 carries a vicious slanderous attack against our comrades, inventing a story about Oppositionists beating up a party comrade. The whole story is just one more despicable Stalinist lie, unfounded and without any actual basis. The remarks concerning the "counter-revolutionary" leaflet can be judged for what they are worth from what follows.

Below is the leaflet issued by the Minneapolis Branch of the Communist League calling for a united defense movement for the arrested and for a Free Speech Conference.

STATEMENT:

SAVE FEBRUARY 4th VICTIMS

Mayor Anderson has again shown his true colors! On February 4th, he ordered his police, armed with saps, to crack the skulls of a peaceful meeting of unemployed workers at Bridge Square. The meeting was called by the Minneapolis Unemployed Council to discuss the present crisis and to propose a solution.

The brutal attack of the police is an attempt to take away an elementary right, hard-won in many struggles. And no one can deny that the Farmer-Labor Mayor was elected over the Republican Kunze on the promise (now violated) of free assembly for workers and adequate relief for the unemployed. A year ago, when our headquarters were raided and closed by Kunze's police, Anderson, then prospective candidate for office, volunteered to defend the right of free speech and assembly in court. Can we now take seriously the Mayor's excuse of traffic hazards? Shiners, Templars, or any capitalist movement get the Square—or any public street—without question. Our Mayor had 50 police break up a peaceful meeting; but none to direct traffic and protect the meeting.

THE MAYOR IS HIDING SOMETHING! He does not tell us that the Rands, the Deckers, the Pillsburys who control the relief funds and city budget dictate to the "Farmer-Labor" Mayor to cut relief to the bone, to cut the wages of city employees, etc. THEY WANT NO PUBLIC CRITICISM OR PROTEST ON THE PART OF THE WORKERS. Anderson does their bidding. On February 4th, he came out in the open as the YES-MAN OF THE EMPLOYERS. He proposes to relieve unemployment by slugging the unemployed.

Thousands of workers, enthusiastic for the "Labor" candidate, reproached the Communists for "splitting the labor ticket" in putting forward a Communist worker for Mayor. The Communists predicted that Mr. Anderson's middle-class reformism could give no benefits to the workers, but only serve the bosses. Only through organization, they said, can workers gain. This prophecy is now fulfilled.

Three women and three men face jail sentences for challenging the right of Mayor Anderson to forcefully break up a peaceful meeting. Their conviction, to any thinking worker, questions the right of any body of workers to meet and carry on business. The fight for Unemployment Insurance and immediate relief must go on. An effective fight can only be carried on by winning back the workers' right to meet and express themselves.

This latest attack of the bosses must be combatted by a determined united defense movement. The defendants, members of various labor organizations (A. F. of L. Unions, Unemployment Councils, I. L. D., Communist Party, as

Tampa Tobacco Workers Struggle

Florida, winter playground of the bourgeoisie, is the latest scene of capitalist oppression against the workers.

On November 7th the workers of Tampa gathered to honor the memory of Lenin at the Ybor City Labor Temple. The meeting was well attended. A majority of those attending were tobacco workers who responded to the call of the Tobacco Workers Industrial Union. The meeting was running to a successful conclusion when the doors were suddenly burst open and a cordon of police aided by American Legion thugs rushed into the hall clubbing and terrorizing those present. During the melee a shot was fired and a policeman dropped. Fifteen workers were arrested.

To try these fifteen workers, a laboring jury was judiciously picked. The verdict from these twelve good (to their masters) men and true (to their class) was never in doubt. The workers behaved staunchly in the court room. They showed the entire proceedings from the raid to the trial to be engineered by the Tampa Tobacco Manufacturers Association. They called upon the workers to defend their union and to pay no heed to the efforts at "red baiting" of the manufacturers' hirelings.

For this these workers have just been sentenced to from one to ten years in the penitentiary. A new trial has been denied them. But the workers of Tampa are not discouraged. These workers of Florida have shown that they can take it—in a revolutionary way. MacDonald, one of the workers arrested and now in prison, writes: "The concerted efforts of . . . capitalist henchmen with all their mass arrests, lockouts, clubbings, evictions and coercion have not shaken in the least the solidarity of the Tampa Tobacco Workers. On the contrary, the solidarity of the workers has been fused in the struggle and they stand today more determined than ever to stand shoulder to shoulder in their fight for decent working and living conditions."

The struggle of the Florida tobacco workers is our struggle. This new capitalist frame-up carried to its conclusion, again lends emphasis to the imperative necessity of class unity from coast to coast and from border to border to defend the elementary right of free speech for the working class.

R. R. Fakers & Bosses Join Hands

To Improve The Health of «Our» Industry

Messages of congratulation and praise were today pouring in on the leading lights in the drama successfully enacted at Chicago, Feb. 1st, to "voluntarily" cut $215,000,000 from the rail workers' pay checks and give it to the coupon clippers. The plot in the drama contains both comedy and tragedy. The comic part consisted of the farcical pretensions on the part of the labor spokesmen, headed by D. R. Robertson, to fight the wage cut. The tragic part of the seventeen day Chicago show was the added sacrifice and suffering it brought to the railroad workers for the benefit of the parasites who live on the labor of others.

The 17 day Chicago wage conference, which began on Jan. 14th, and ended on Feb. 1st, was merely a farcical display of controversy to fool the railroad workers into believing that their leaders were putting up a real fight against the wage slash. We maintain that those who spoke for the railroads at the conference and also those who were supposed to speak for labor, all knew what the outcome of the conference would be and this was also quite clearly set forth in the daily press reports released on the day the conference opened. One United Press report dated at Chicago, Jan. 14th, under the following headline, reads in part as follows:

"Union Chiefs and Presidents Seek to Provide Work for 700,000 Through 10 Per Cent Wage Cut"

"Chicago, Jan. 14 (UP)—Capital and labor sat down across a conference table today determined to provide dividends for rail investors and work for unemployed rail men."

"The decision expected was a 10 per cent general wage cut for union workers. This will save the railroads $250,000,000, sufficient to meet interest requirements and provide work for many of the industry's 700,000 jobless."

"Two white-haired leaders, each long in the service of the railroads, led the conference groups. These were Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio road, chairman of the presidents' group, and David B. Robertson, union chairman."

"Both Robertson and Willard were optimistic that an agreement would be reached."

Up to this date no one has explained how this $250,000,000 wage cut is going to furnish work for 700,000 jobless railroad workers. But of course, the conference was not held to get anything for the workers; it was held for the special benefit of bond and stock holders. And organized capitalists were jubilant over the outcome, although they knew it in advance, because it netted them $215,000,000 more profit taken from the meager earnings of the workers.

Labor Bureaucrats Play the Role of Puppets

Even by reading, the daily press reports, a worker could learn that the Chicago railroad wage conference was nothing but a mock drama where the $15,000 a year labor officials played the part of that many puppets sitting on the knees of the railroad officials. And for the readers' benefit we will again quote a few excerpts from a press report appearing in one of the big dailies dated (Chicago, Feb. 1st:

"The final scene, enacted in the conference room of a loop hotel, climaxed 17 days of negotiations that were without precedent in the history of all railroad relations. Never before had the two factions pooled their efforts to solve a problem of like nature or magnitude."

"As labor made the decision known, its chief, David Brown Robertson, gave emphasis to the reason for the concession."

Now Listen to "Davy"

"In the hope that our action," he said "may improve the health" of our industry, may improve the relations of management and employees, may stimulate revival of business and advance general welfare, we have decided to accept the proposal."

Brother railroad workers, we will ask you to read the above press quotation from Robertson for several reasons. He was the chairman of that bunch of "chiefs" which is supposed to look after the interests of railroad labor. David, whom Edward Keating, the editor of Labor, affectionately calls Davy, is a high-priced labor "spokesman". The poor and hard-working locomotive firemen pay Davy $15,000 a year and expenses.

Now Davy, together with the other twenty chiefs, decides to take $215,000,000 from the pay envelopes of the workers and give it to the owners of railroad stocks and bonds to "improve the health of our industry". Mind you, Davy speaks of the railroads as "our industry". The lowly part of the jobless and part-time workers in "our industry" does not seem to bother him much, if we are to judge from the way this wage movement was handled from beginning to end. Davy also states that the wage cut was accepted so that it "may improve the relations of management and employees".

You section men and other part-time and poorly paid workers please note. However, don't take it too seriously, because what Mr. Robertson really means is, the relationship between the railroad and brotherhood officials. We will quote below Mr. Willard's statement to the press after the conclusion of the conference, where he joins with Robertson in his hope and wish. The difference is that Dan Willard speaks for the real directors of the show. We quote from the same press report from which we quoted "Davy":

"Dan" Joins with "Davy"

"With you, we indulge in the hope, the result of this conference may tend to improve relations between railway management and employees, and also tend to stimulate the revival of business and promote the general welfare."

Note the above paragraph carefully; note that the spokesmen of both groups at the wage conference join in the same wish, namely, that the result of the conference may increase the profit of the railroads at the expense of the workers. That is exactly what their joint wish and hope amounts to, when boiled down to actual facts.

Brother railroad workers, the whole thing is but another act added to the long string of betrayals by the brotherhood bureaucrats whose high salaries place them far closer to Willard and his group than to the workers whom they are supposed to represent. That is exactly why the two groups cast their joint support to the railroads. The brotherhood "chiefs" never did a thing to organize or mobilize the railroad workers for united action against the wage cut which was looming on the industrial horizon for the past year or more. These over-paid drones have never stirred to organize the motor transport workers. Instead of organizing the bus and truck drivers they engage in the foolish business of trying to put restrictions on their operations, thinking that this will please the railroads.

$15,000 a year labor officials like Robertson and his kind will never organize the workers nor lead them anywhere but to defeat. The fake wage conference at Chicago is but cumulative evidence of this. A minority movement must be organized and developed in the brotherhoods to help the membership not only to drive these misleaders from office, but to drive them from the labor movement in disgrace.

The Annual Heresy Trial

Almost a year ago, the party held a mass trial here in New York to show the workers—that "the Communist party will not tolerate any trace of white chauvinism within its ranks"—

The sacrificial lamb in that case was August Yokinen, a Finn, who had uttered expressions of anti-Negro bias. In a lynching atmosphere, the high priests, Hathaway and Moore, the prosecuting and defense attorneys, together offered up Yokinen to cover the failure of the party leadership to educate the party rank and file against anti-Negro prejudices. Yokinen was expelled. Immediately afterwards he was arrested by the vultures of the labor department and held for deportation. The party was forced to launch a movement to demand his release. Contrary to the expectations of Hathaway et al, this spectacle did not eradicate white chauvinism from the revolutionary movement. From time to time the Daily Worker has reported its manifestations.

The latest took place in N. T. W. I. U. A worker in the needle trades, Burns, has been accused of white chauvinism. A mass trial was ordered. It took place on Feb. 7th in the same hall in which Yokinen was read out of the party. In place of Hathaway as prosecuting attorney we had the notorious bureaucrat Ben Gold; in place of Moore, Alexander. The faces, the actors were different but the farce was the same. Gold spoke first. He made two points: he admitted, in anticipating the argument of the defense, that the leadership of the union was at fault in "not fighting insistently against white chauvinism", but held it necessary to make an example of Burns to prove to the Negro masses that the union really means to unite the masses and wipe out white chauvinism. He asked for Burns' expulsion from the union.

Alexander jesuitically argued that Burns was guilty but that his guilt was not as enormous nor as horrendous as Skylock-Gold had made it out to be. Alexander, following Moore's line of a year before almost word for word, described Burns as a victim of capitalist class ideology and of the leadership of the union, which should have fought in the ranks of the union against "this poison". He proposed in place of "expulsion, a period of probation in which Burns was to be assigned special work:

in the coming strike he is to be in the forefront of the workers' defense corps against the gangster attacks; he is to bring into the union an unstated number of Negro workers, and he is to sell a certain number of Liberators.

Then Burns took the floor to make a statement of denunciation. In Yokinen they had a meek lamb who agreed that he was all they said about him. But in Burns they caught a Tartar. Until he spoke, it was not clear what the specific charges against him were. It appears that Burns and a Negro organizer got into a personal dispute over a typewriter in the office of the union; that they had heated words, freely insulting each other which, by a process familiar to Stalinists, passed into blows!

With unconscious poetic justice Burns called Gold, Mr. Gold, accused him of discrimination in bringing only him to trial, criticized him and his fellow bureaucrats for not instructing him in what was white chauvinism and race hatred. He also accused the Daily Worker of exaggerating his statements. It was remarkable that the hundreds of party members and sympathizers in the hall took this last charge as a matter of course. It was obvious that they were aware of the Daily's policy of exaggeration.

Burns' statement was really, though not intentionally, a terrific indictment of the bureaucracy in the union. Not all of Gold's demagoguery in rebuttal could cover this up. The blows Burns dealt were too telling. The workers' jury brought in a verdict of guilty with a recommendation of probation with assigned tasks. Gold's plea for expulsion was refused.

This is a good sign. It demonstrated that the Stalinists can't always get away with such raw frame-ups. In our opinion, they should have brought in a recommendation to expel Gold from the union and along with him his fellow bureaucrats. Spectacles such as this do not and cannot eradicate racial prejudices. What is needed is, as the Militant remarked on March 1st, 1931, apropos of the Yokinen trial, "Education—an atmosphere free from demagoguery, hypocrisy and incitement; an atmosphere created by teachers of the proletariat, not by terrorizers."

IN THE INTERNATIONAL OF LABOR

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

German Opposition Forges Ahead

Growing Sentiment for a United Struggle against Fascism

Very encouraging processes are taking place in the labor movement today. In the factories, in the trade unions, in the non-party proletarian organizations, a powerful impulsion toward a united front is furrowing a path for itself after a long period of marking time. Skeptical over the ability of their leaders to establish the united front of their class, the workers in the factories are beginning to set up a united front from below force a united front upon their leaders.

The decision of the Berlin Gas Workers is of great significance in this respect. The factory councilmen of these workers are recognizing the seriousness of the situation at the present perilous hour, expressed in the program of the Nazis to transform Germany into a bloody dictatorship and felt by the workers of the gas works and by the working class as a whole. The workers' council has issued an appeal to the leaders of all parties, to do everything in their power to establish a united front of all the workers. The workers' council will undertake all the necessary steps, to create and assure the united front of all the workers.

The functionaries of the Berlin Shoe Workers Union have adopted a resolution: all proletarian parties are to enter into a united front, committees of action are to be formed, etc.

The S. A. P. workers are obliging their leaders to take the path toward a united front. They demand a united front with the C. P. G. From the Rote Fahne of January 5, we can glean that pressure for a united front has also been brought by the party organizations in Wurtemberg, Saxony, etc. These phenomena show, that despite all obstacles, despite all difficulties, the working class itself is beginning to realize the united front.

What is the party leadership doing? Instead of supporting the first real steps towards the creation of a united front coming from the factories, instead of leading them into revolutionary channels, it casts suspicion upon the workers in the factories with such accusations as the following: The S. P. G. factory councilmen only want a united front in order to harness the working class for the policy of betrayal promulgated by Wels. For that reason, the C. P. G. cannot participate in the united front and that is why only the "red united front" remains. The party leadership rejects common action, not only with the S. P. G., but with the S. A. P. (the new centrist Socialist Labor Party) as well. Every worker is expected to accept the leadership of the C. P. G. in advance as the one chosen leadership of the working class.

By tearing themselves loose from the S. P. G., by realizing that only through the dictatorship of the proletariat will they achieve socialism, the workers have brought an expression for the fact that they have entered the terrain of revolutionary class struggle. By the creation of the S. A. P. they have announced in advance that they have no confidence in the present leadership of the C. P. G. And it is precisely the policy of the present leadership of the Communist party that forces them to have a party of their own, to nourish their illusions with the policy of certain leaders of their party, namely, that it is necessary to create a new Communist party since the one that exists cannot change its policy. What does the C. P. G. leadership tell these workers? With your organization we cannot have a united front since your leaders are only "left wing social fascists." You must destroy your organization and enter the C. P. G.! Only in this way will the real united front of a proletariat, i. e., the "red united front" be realized.

The present party leadership, which alone bears the responsibility for the fact that these workers who have torn themselves from the S. P. G. have not come directly to the Communist party, which is doing everything to hold them back from that at present, believes that the S. A. P. workers will immediately follow their call and destroy their own party.

Really, the Communist party has never pursued such a light-headed, irresponsible and criminal policy in all of its existence.

If the "iron front" signifies betrayal of the working class, then the policy of the "red united front" signifies sabotage of a united struggle of the working class. This is the opinion of millions of German workers regardless of their party affiliations. Not to take cognizance of this correct class instinct means to work consciously along the lines of a defeat. And it is precisely this that the present day leadership of the party is doing.

Because the Left Opposition condemns this policy of the party leadership which is bound to culminate in a bloody defeat of the German proletariat with all the necessary sharpness, the party functionaries, in their press, daily pour their pails of refuse and slander out against them. The Rote Fahne of January 8th writes that comrade Trotsky has landed on the position of Noske and Grzesinski. The editors of the Rote Fahne, for whom their jobs are more important than anything else and for whom the revolution is merely a phrase, are great heroes when it comes to fighting with despicable methods against the Left Opposition, but when it is a question of the slightest activity on the part of the class enemy, they fall into the greatest panic.

It is not intransigence in principle that cause them to reject a united front with S. P. G. and S. A. P., but political helplessness and the simple fear of being overpowered by the opposing parties in a united front.

The fact that the Rote Fahne of January 5th must occupy itself with the "Trotskyites", with the "vanguard of the counter-revolutionary bourgeoisie", proves how deeply the ideas of the Left Opposition are penetrating into the party. In the party, a process is taking place on the basis of the sentiments in the factories, which will have the effect of negating the policy of the leadership. It has become a fact that even the followers of the R. G. O. (the red trade union opposition), are not prepared to continue along the lines of the party leadership. The partial strikes, carried out on command, lead to great sacrifices for the Communists in the factories, without in any way strengthening the influence of the party therein and on the contrary, causing its further enfeeblement. The Rote Fahne of January 5th reports that in Wurtemberg, Saxony, Berlin, the Ruhr, etc., there exist opportunist deviations. These are phenomena which were hardly possible several months ago. It is undoubtedly, the more strongly the desire for a united front makes its appearance in the ranks, the harder it will become for the Communists in the factories to carry out the policies of the party leadership. They will inevitably come into contradiction with the party leadership.

It is the task of the Left Opposition to follow up this process in the party with the greatest attentiveness. It is necessary to cause those party comrades who are already beginning to understand that the policy of Thaelmann and Remmele is leading the party to a precipice, to take further steps on the path of the reconstruction of the party, to organize them into a firm faction. Therein lies the only guarantee for victory in the decisive struggle for the "Communist

Reactionary Policies and the Working Class Movement in Spain

The government of the republic constantly threatens the people with fantastic and imaginary dangers which, according to it, endanger the republic, and which each time are increasingly imminent. Those responsible for these dangers are those who carry on acts characterized by violence against public peace and order. This naturally is the language used by those who under the government have shut off the voice of the people and above all, the voice of the proletariat, when this voice has asked for the fulfillment of the promises which the same government made before proclaiming the republican regime. This language is used to justify the repressive actions of the state power against the people.

The republican government of Spain leans ever further toward an essentially reactionary policy; social-democracy, collaboration with the present government constitute the false mask of official democracy, in reality a hypocritical reaction. The constitution with which the Constituent Assembly has endowed the "defense of the republic", was already a reactionary and retrogressive constitution, outmoded and anti-democratic at bottom, even from the standpoint of the bourgeoisie. If we add to this constitution and to this law for the defense of the republic the shameful declaration of Azana, when he took over the presidency of the government, that stupid and reactionary phrase, "the republic will make itself respected, and if not, then feared"; if we take into account the mildness and consideration with which the government has proceeded against the reactionary religious orders, there will be nothing to surprise us in the repressive policy which is being carried out today.

It is said that the religious orders will be subjected to a special law, to shut the mouths of the working classes who demand the immediate expulsion of the Jesuits, the friars and the monks from the country, but this law has not yet been passed; another law was passed and approved, to shut the mouths of the proletariat, to crush the rebelliousness of the working masses who were clamoring for bread and justice. The law for the defense of the republic was approved against the wishes of the people and in order to crush the people. The Civil Guard has been charged with making "respected" the law passed and promulgated by those who placed among the first of their demands the "dissolution of the disastrous Civil Guard" when they were conspirators.

The recent and present struggles of the workers are openly and frankly struggles for the dissolution of the Civil Guard. Here is where the government has exposed its truly reactionary and repressive character, defending the murders perpetrated by the Civil Guard, protecting and defending what its members had characterized as a "fatal body".

The very laws of the republic, these same reactionary laws, are violated and trampled on, do not employ the respect of the government itself. The law on individual liberty is a ridiculous lie. Today men are thrown into jail without taking the least account of this liberty, and the government behaves in social and political conflicts as in the best period of the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera and Berenguer.

"The Law for the Defense of the Republic"

The law for the defense of the republic was aimed exclusively at the working-class revolutionary movement. The social democracy, which sees in the working class revolutionists its most direct enemy, has taken the most direct and persistent part in the framing of this law.

The working-class movements, past and present, against this brutal repression have had the defect of being purely spontaneous and lacking in leadership. We have seen workers defend themselves—Communists, anarchists, syndicalists, socialists and non-party men—forming a compact bloc, but the united front of the leadership has not been realized, because the leaders have not wanted it. There has not even been created a real political united front, no orientation has been given to these proletarian movements.

The C. N. T. has not seen these events; its leaders were occupied with sterile internal discussions, and divided into two groups, the "pure" syndicalists and the anarchists, likewise "pure". This division has paralyzed the activity of the C. N. T.

The official Communist party has not seen them, as it has not seen the need for correct Bolshevik tactics. It has not known how to take advantage of this situation, which was developing favorably for our conquest of the masses. The Spanish Stalinists, the same who on the day of the proclamation of the republic launched the slogan, "Down with the bourgeois republic!", today, when the working class needs to be orientated and guided in its struggle with the Civil Guard and with reaction, cannot find the appropriate slogan, but launch a far different one, contradicting themselves, mutilating their own slogans, disorientating the masses who need the most absolute simplifications of the problem.

The Workers' Solution

The solution lies in the united front of the proletariat, but in a real and self-respecting united front, not in the united front and the maneuver which the official party proposes.

The dangers which threaten the republic—the government itself protects and defend them, by betraying its own promise. We say "its promise", because we believe that the republican government has not betrayed the people, as anarchists and Stalinists preach, which would mean believing that the republicans could fulfill a promise, which they have not fulfilled when in reality the republican government arrived for the purpose of defending the interests of capitalism against the attack of the proletariat.

There is therefore nothing strange in the activities of the government. It is accomplishing its historical mission. This is how the working class must approach the problem, to give it a correct solution.

THE SPLIT IN THE BRANDLER GROUP

On January 12, a number of the leading founders and spokesmen of the German Brandler group were expelled by the Brandler-Thaelmann majority for their policy towards the newly-formed wing of the social democracy, the Socialist Labor party (S. A. P.) of Seydewitz and Co. The expelled leaders include such people as Walcher, Froelich, Koehler, Rose Wolfstein, Enderle, Karl Frank, Thomas and many others. The expulsions, which are tantamount to a split, mark a new stage in the development of the central and strongest section of the international Right wing faction.

The Walcher-Froelich group stood up on the ground of virtually liquidating the Brandler organization and merging with the social democratic Centrists grouped around Seydewitz. In other words, they planned to eliminate even the last nominal pretense to Communism which is still hung out on the signboard of the Brandler-Lovestone-Roy international. The dissidents have already held confidential meetings with the Seydewitz leaders and their formal entry into the Socialist Labor party is merely a matter of arranging the details. In fact, by this writing, the marriage has probably already been consummated.

When the Right wing first took shape in the Communist International, the Bolshevik-Leninists constituting the Marxian section of Communism declared that the wants France to grant concessions, France whose little clients and valets (Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Belgium) are agitated by unrest, raises her head and makes believe that she has no one to depend on except herself, that is to say, upon her "rights", upon her cannon. Under these conditions, Fascist Italy, whose economy is in a state of full-fledged internal decomposition, attempts grand gestures which are commented favorably in the entire imperialist French press: it is necessary to establish a "united front" of the European creditors against the U. S. Thus we are witnessing a transformation in a double sense: on the one hand, American pressure accentuates the rivalries and the dissensions among the European imperialisms and on the other hand the self same pressure obliges them to attempt common efforts with regard to their mammoth rival. There is not the slightest doubt that the present phase will bring about an accentuation of the process of dissension. The capitalist "united front" is merely a utopia when it is a matter of going against the U. S. It can only be of reality when it turns against the Soviet Union. Against the international working class, against the Soviet Union, imperialism can realize the united front and is realizing it. But against America, that is to say against the capitalist competitor who monopolizes by himself almost half of the world market, no united front is possible. Every attempt at a "union" among the capitalist countries can but signify an attempt at hegemony by one of them over the others within European framework. Brandler's "European Union" was an attempt of this sort to definitely settle upon the others the domination of France. In this sense it was an attempt to conclude the work of the Versailles treaty. The "Anschluss" was the embryo of an attempt of the same order by Germany. But these attempts have crumbled pitifully under the pressure of America. Now less than ever will they succeed to revive them.

—LA VERITE.

Right was a bridge to the social democracy. The Left Opposition made this affirmation at a time when the Right wing was in power, or at least shared the power with Centrism, in the highest instances of the Comintern and the Russian party. We made this characterization at the time when Brandler was the principal theoretician of the Communist International, when Roy was one of its main spokesmen, when it was planned to put Brandler and Thaelmann back into the leadership of the German party, when the Right wing ran the American, Swedish, Alsatian and other parties. After the Sixth Congress, when the Right wing was expelled throughout the International, we repeated our characterization with increased emphasis and pointed out that it would not occupy for long a position between Communism and the counter-revolutionary social democracy. Our strictures aroused the hottest denials from the Brandler and Lovestones. More than that, they treated our assertions with scorn and contempt, for were they not being made by the "Trotskyist counter-revolutionists", who had "broken with Communism" and therefore deserved the expulsions which the Brandler, Roy and Lovestones had organized against them? But time is replete with revenges, particularly for the Marxists who have such a powerful protector in the form of history against the calumny, the violence, the misrepresentation and the philistinism of the Right wing liquidators.

The Right wing condescendingly explained to us that they could not share our "sectarian" point of view. They, you see, were for winning the masses, for going to the masses "as against" us. We retorted that they would never win the masses, certainly not for the proletarian revolution and Communism. Time has here again vindicated theoretical considerations. The Right wingers have long ago started to "go to the masses" . . . of the social democracy. In Czechoslovakia, the bulk of the much-advertised Right wing group promptly proceeded to shift its activity into the ranks of the social democracy of the Czech republic. Shortly after its formation, the Brandler group yielded such leaders like Rost Aschenbrenner, Xavier Buchs and many others to the ranks of the party of Wels, Noske and Scheidemann. Not long afterward, Messrs. Miller, Levitch & Co. quit the Lovestone group for the more fertile and "massy" fields of the social democratic "progressives" and worse, while the Lovestone group as a whole became positively thunderstruck with admiration for the "revolutionary, pro-Soviet" Militant faction in the American Socialist party.

Now, the numerous supporters of the Walcher-Froelich faction (and also a number of supporters of Brandler and Thaelmann, as their organ reports) have added to the list by joining the social democracy of the more despicable and cowardly and treacherous type, that is, of the "Left wing".

Thus the Right wing produces the flowers for the social democratic bouquet. Each shading of the Right wing moves its bridges to the social democracy in its own particular way. Some rush forward to the party of treason, impatient at the failure of the promised "masses" to materialize; others pass lightly over to the "Left wing" of the social democracy still others capitulate quietly by going back to the Centrists through or by dropping out of working class politics entirely; and the rest oscillate feverishly with the winds, waiting for the most favorable opportunities, regretful that the impatient ones have reduced their bargaining power with those before whom they are prepared to capitulate in the end.

Lovestone only a few weeks ago wrote that the differences between Brandler and the minority were not so fundamental or serious. We want to be recorded in complete agreement with this thought. It is largely a difference over "stages" over "tempo". Patience is never unwielded. Let us wait but a while. Who is bold enough to say that where Walcher or Bert Miller is today, Lovestone or Brandler will not be tomorrow?

Changes in the Policy of French Imperialism

PARIS, FRANCE

The internal crisis of the government, that is to say, first of all, the shelving of Briand, has a far greater significance than l'Humanite assumes. Here is the opinion of the party paper: (1-16-32): "A change in policy? Not really! There is a profound identity between the policy of Briand-Herriot, Briand-Poincare, Briand-Blum, Briand-Laval and the present day Tardieu-Laval policy. How can this policy vary from the other today? It is hardly to be expected that the crisis is going to calm down the ferocious intent of our imperialism. Quite the contrary."

The editors of l'Humanite are deceiving themselves completely. They do not even take into account the fact that the second part of this paragraph literally contradicts the first part. In fact it is precisely the crisis which, by "making our imperialism more ferocious", to employ his own impression, imposes certain changes in the political orientation of the bourgeoisie. One has to be blind not to understand that. In fact one has to be not only blind but as limited as the Stalinists in order not to understand that the economic development, that is to say in the last analysis, the international and national class relationships necessitate different reactions on the part of the bourgeoisie as a consequence of the situation with which the latter is faced. In this sense, it is false to say that the policy of Poincare, Briand or Tardieu bears the same traits.

If one wants to speak of a "profound identity" in their policies simply in the sense that they are all bourgeois policies and the representatives of capitalism in the government, then that is merely an elementary truth, but if one wants to say—and that is just what l'Humanite does want to say—that all the reactions of the bourgeoisie in the course of the development of events are always the same, that is a profound mistake. The policy before the occupation of the Ruhr in 1923 is not the same as that after the failure of that occupation. The policy after Locarno is not the same as that before Locarno, and now it is possible to say that the policy after the Hoover moratorium, after the failure of the negotiations with Bruening, who affirms that the German bourgeoisie will not pay any more reparations, is not the same and cannot be the same as the one pursued before that.

M. M. Laval, Tardieu and Co. understand that very well. The "triumphant" voyages of Laval to Berlin, London and Washington has not fooled them at all, although they have attempted indeed to throw sand in the eyes of the middle classes and workers. The actual results of the Berlin trip and of the establishment of the Franco-German commission (with the aid of Jouhaux) is the declaration of insolvency made by Bruening on the eve of the Lausanne conference. As to the actual result of the voyage to Washington that has brought only increased pressure of the United States on the internal policy of the European governments, not to speak of the insults proffered by Borah to our chauvinists. Under the veil of a very relative, temporary, strong financial position, the real weakness of French imperialism, which is doomed to lose part of the fruits of its pillage of 1918, are revealing themselves. And this turn in the situation is not to have serious repercussions in the ranks of the bourgeoisie itself? And yet that is just what l'Humanite wants its readers to believe.

In the month of June, the Left Opposition showed how America was going to profit from the crisis by which the principal European countries have been seized, in order to reinforce its tutelage over them, in order to more quickly force Europe to content itself with its "rationalities."

Laval has attempted to break the stranglehold, trying to take advantage of a particularly difficult financial conjuncture in the U. S. His little black-mail game at Washington did not meet with very great success. And now, Hoover turns to ravage Europe and declares: "The reparations are your affair. It was not we who signed the Versailles treaty. On the other hand, the payment of your debts to us is our affair. That must be carried out."

This attitude on the part of the U. S. must of necessity bring dissension of the most serious proportions into the camp of European imperialists. Germany feels herself encouraged by this attitude on the part of Hoover. England, coping with difficulties within its own empire,

EDITORIAL NOTES

I. W. W. WISDOM

Some comrades who have contributed money to the General Defense Committee of the I. W. W. to help in the defense of the Kentucky miners—as the Militant suggested a number of times—have called attention to the statement in the Industrial Worker of February 2 to the effect that “the Trotskyites have never donated a single penny for the relief or defense of the Kentucky miners,” and the profound conclusion: “Classify the Trotskyites with the other traitors who have sabotaged the Kentucky miners.” We can only attribute the indignation of the comrades in question to inexperience. If you have any dealings with the I. W. W. you have to get used to playful remarks of this kind and not take them too seriously. It is just the I. W. W. way of writing out receipts.

What is more important to notice is the approach of the Industrial Worker to the serious defeats suffered by the working class in the convictions of Jones and Hightower. In these defeats, there is revealed a deplorable weakness of the labor movement. This should be the point of analysis and discussion by every militant who considers things from the standpoint of the class and its armament for future battles. But the Industrial Worker—if one is to judge by its extended comments on February 2—has not considered this side of the question. That is why its comments are so barren, so permeated with petty factional recrimination and so devoid of any proposals for the future organization of the class fight in such a way as to make good the defeats.

LASSALLE

The editorial board of the Militant owes an apology to its readers for the publication, in the issue of January 30, of the book review dealing with a recent biography of Lassalle. The superficial quality of this article, as well as its flippant and presumptuous tone, have been remarked as more appropriate for the New Masses than for our paper. The entire article contradicts our attitude toward the great historic figures of the proletariat, among whom we count Lassalle. Its appearance in these columns was entirely accidental. We are decidedly against the attitude expressed in the article, and we are still more against the spirit of it.

N. Y. Open Forum

On Friday, February 5th, comrade Glatzer spoke to an audience of about eighty workers including some party members on the subject of Communism or Fascism in Germany. Comrade Glatzer developed the implication of a Fascist victory in Germany for the international working class, including the Soviet Union, and sharply criticized the Comintern's present capitulating policy. The outstanding incident of the discussion which followed was a presentation of the Stalinist position on the German question. Incredible as it may seem the comrade argued that India or China, not Germany, was the key to the international situation. He claimed, too, that the victory of Fascism in Germany would not precipitate intervention in the U. S. S. R.

Comrade Glatzer's summation of the discussion shattered these arguments to bits. He showed again, upon the basis of the Stalinist move, the frightful consequences for the C. P. G., the trade unions, all working class organizations including the social democracy, of a Fascist victory in Germany; the inevitable world wide reaction that would follow, and the certainty of intervention on the U. S. S. R.

The forum was a demonstration that despite the shameful silence of Stalin and the Comintern generally and the Daily Worker in this country, on the burning importance of the situation in Germany, revolutionary internationalism is still alive even in the ranks of the party stifled by the bureaucratic leadership.

The founder of the German labor movement were not without shortcomings in the field of theory and tactics. Marx, who was his contemporary, explained them sufficiently and they are known to the students of socialist history. But, for every serious revolutionist, Lassalle remains Lassalle, the sword and the flame of the proletariat. We do not grant to anyone the right to disparage and belittle him—and thereby to distort him altogether and to obscure his grandiose historic import.

Lenin, who was not so presumptuous, spoke of Lassalle many times, and always with respect. He began his famous brochure “What is to be done?” by quoting, in thesis form, from a letter of Lassalle to Marx. In another place he speaks of “the historical service Lassalle rendered to the German labor movement.” Trotsky has referred to him in the same manner in “Our Revolution” and in other works. Such examples were lost on the reviewer who appraised Lassalle in the Militant.

It is necessary to protest against the utterly false evaluation of Lassalle in the review under consideration. But it is no less important to react against the spirit it manifests. We have to be careful that such a movement as ours which is obliged, especially under present conditions, to emphasize the critical side of its work, does not become a playground for smart-aleckism and parvenue self-assurance. Tendencies of this kind are to be seen now and then, especially among the youth. The parvenue spirit is the petty-bourgeois spirit. It is alien to an organization of proletarian revolutionaries and has no legitimate rights within it.

In Spain: The Socialists and State Power

Reformists Maneuver to Avoid Responsibility before the Laboring Masses

The party with the strongest influence among the workers and peasants of Spain today is the socialist party. In the coalition cabinet of the Cortes it is represented by three ministers, Caballero, de los Rios and Prieto. As a consequence of the relationship of forces in the country the question of a socialist government in power has become one of the most acute issues in the present-day politics of Spain.

One can scarcely point to any other body in the country that has played a more despicable role in Spain than the socialist party. During the period of the Primo de Rivera dictatorship, with its record of reaction and repression, the socialist leaders worked hand in hand with the dictatorship. Largo Caballero, the leading spokesman of the socialist party and Secretary of the socialist General Workers Union, was a Councillor of State under Primo, and by his assistance the dictator purchased a legal existence for his party and his trade union organization, both of which were converted into docile agencies of the state. It was Caballero, functioning as Councillor of State, who elaborated the notorious law providing for the “comités paritarios,” consecrating by compulsion the system of class collaboration throughout every industry. Until virtually the last day of the monarchy, the socialist leaders helped to drag the dictatorial juggernaut over the prostrate bodies of the Spanish working class and peasantry.

The intensification of the revolutionary situation, marked by fierce general strikes in the principal localities served to cut the reluctant socialist away from the dictatorship. The bourgeoisie, compelled to sacrifice the monarch to the furious advance of the insurrectionary people, wisely provided themselves with a buttress on the Left side in the form of the bourgeois-socialist coalition in the revolutionary committee which subsequently constituted the government.

The Socialists in the Coalition

The drawing of the socialists into the coalition had a double advantage for the bourgeoisie. In the first place, the election apparatus of the S. P. was immediately placed at the service of the joint coalition—no small matter, for the S. P. constituted after the proclamation of the republic about the only political party with even a well-equipped skeleton organization. Secondly, the presence of these socialist and trade union representatives in the government served to give it sufficient of a rose tint at the outset to attract the support of masses of workers and peasants who, still dominated by strong democratic illusions, would have regarded a purely bourgeois government with considerably greater suspicion and even hostility.

But such an inconvenient combination cannot last forever. That is to say, the development of the struggle, far from moderating, is becoming increasingly acute. The masses are demanding a cash payment for their revolutionary uprising which ushered in the republic, they are demanding the fulfillment of those multitudinous promises with which the bourgeoisie bought their support. Issues are therefore being put so pointedly that it becomes increasingly difficult for the socialist leaders to take the same position towards them as is taken by the reactionary bourgeoisie, out of fear of disillusioning the masses who still have a measure of faith in them.

The Purpose of a “Socialist” Government

In addition, the problem should be regarded from another angle. A bourgeois government in which the socialists merely participate but do not “govern” necessarily brings down upon itself growing measures of popular wrath. Necessarily, for the simple reason that the bourgeoisie, to consolidate its position, is compelled to inaugurate reactionary proposals which rob the masses of any pretense to democratic rights and which flaunts all the promises made in the early days. As the resentment and activity of the masses, rebelling as they are against these proposals, increase, the bourgeoisie, or at the very least, a substantial section of this class, find it the best part of wisdom to put a “Left” wall between its domination and the assaults of the masses, in other words, a “socialist government” which they hope will more easily absorb the shocks of mass action. Another section of the bourgeoisie, it is true, bolder and headier, demands even stronger measures for the establishment of “law and order,” measures which lead straight in the direction of Fascism. Thus is established the division of opinion in the ranks of the bourgeoisie: the latter standpoint is represented by Llerroux, who is already proceeding to organize a Fascist band throughout Spain; the former standpoint is advocated by fairly powerful organs of the ruling class, for example, the ex-monarchist and now “republican” daily in Madrid, El Sol.

The Attitude of the Socialists

In the ranks of the socialist party leaders themselves, however, there is a division of opinion on the matter of a “socialist government,” or more accurately, of a “socialist coalition,” for none of them has yet advocated a “purely” socialist cabinet. Largo Caballero, one of the least popular but strongest of the socialist leaders, ruling figure in the G. W. U., minister of labor in the cabinet, and ruled by an uncontrollable ambition to head the government, has already declared publicly the readiness of the socialist party to constitute the government and its cabinet. In the interview which he granted a couple of months ago, he emphasized however, that the socialists would not take over the government completely, but would include in their cabinet the representatives of other parties, for they realize that they have not enough strength and that the situation “is not ripe enough” for the socialists “to put through their complete program.” The same point of view was underscored

Pioneer Publishers Notes

The Catholic Church exercises a strict censorship over the books its flock is permitted to read. In this manner it keeps its sheep in peaceful ignorance, and therefore docile and obedient to the Church.

The readers of the official Communist parties have learned from the Pope—or have they never forgotten their early training? They too dictate to their flock: “You must not read anything by Trotsky or any of the Left Opposition writers.” By this prohibition they hope to keep the membership ignorant of the issues under discussion. But here and there, as in the Catholic Church, daring individuals rebel against being kept ignorant. They insist on their right and duty to read the opposition material if they are to polemize intelligently. For the benefit of these, as well as others who want to know what the disputes are which have torn the Communist movement of the world into factions, we have undertaken the task of publishing for the first time in English all the manuscripts which have been suppressed by the “official” party.

THE DRAFT PROGRAM

The first of these manuscripts was The Draft Program, smuggled out of Russia. Months later we discovered that this was only part of Trotsky's criticism submitted to the Sixth World Congress. We then secured the balance, and published it separately under the title of The Strategy of the World Revolution. This pamphlet is in reality the second part of the Draft Program.

CERTIFICATE HOLDERS

All those who have subscribed for certificates in the Pioneer Publishers paying the $10 in full or in part, are requested to send their names and addresses so the certificates can be mailed at once. Those who have not yet subscribed are urgently requested to do so immediately. Payments can be made on a weekly or monthly basis. All holders of certificates are entitled to a 33-1/3% discount on all of our own publications and 15% discount on books of other publishers handled by us.

With a little additional capital we will be able to extend our publication work and include in our list a number of the Marxian classics now out of print and some never printed before. Send for application blank to-day.

by Caballero's colleague, de los Rios, minister of Justice, in his interview to El Sol last November.

Opposing this standpoint is the group headed by Besteiro, a more popular figure in the party, who is in fact, its chairman, as well as the chairman of the G. W. U. and the president of the Cortes. Besteiro opposes a socialist coalition until the party is in a “strong enough position” to carry out the “full socialist program for the reconstruction of society.”

The Reformists Fear the Consequences

Between both viewpoints, the whole essence of the issue is juggled around with an elaborate and pompous cynicism. The socialists are the strongest party in the country, with the largest representation in the Cortes. They do not take power as a “pure” socialist government for the simple reason that they fear the consequences of assuming so heavy a responsibility before the masses. A real socialist party government could do little more and little less than social democratic governments have done in the past in such countries as Germany, Belgium and England. It would carry out, in every essential respect, the policy of the bourgeoisie, to which it is bound by a thousand threads. But carrying out a bourgeois policy under its own name, without the possibility of furnishing pretexts or shifting responsibility, would hasten phenomenally the disillusionment of the masses who still follow the socialist party and are beduced with democratic fantasies. Upon the background of a socialist government, would be starkly revealed all the cowardice, shamelessness, impotence and reactionism of the social democracy, in such a manner as would become clear to all. That is why the socialist leaders recoil from the prospect; that is why even the most hard-pressed bourgeois thinks twice and three times before taking such a step—for after it might come the revolutionary deluge.

What Is the Official C. P. Doing?

In view of this situation, the official party obviously refuses to adopt the slogan and tactic advocated by the Left Opposition which is for driving the socialists into a corner and compelling them to take a stand in the government which will facilitate the winning of the masses for the revolutionary cause: the slogan and tactic which Lenin's Bolsheviks applied with such exemplary success between the February and October revolutions in Russia. Against this position, the Stalinists adopt a thoroughly sectarian and sterile attitude. Bureaucratic boasting replaces revolutionary tactics.

The party is forced into a position of inactive expectancy, waiting and hoping for the socialist party to lose influence among the masses automatically, so to speak. It is quite true that the socialist party leaders have conducted themselves before and since the proclamation of the republic in a most hideous manner, which has undoubtedly resulted in a certain decline of its influence. Unfortunately, this process is by no means a one-sided one, it is not automatic, and does not follow a straight line. If it took place in a vacuum, one might even establish with mathematical accuracy the point at which socialist influence upon the masses would reach the vanishing point. But it takes place, on the contrary, in a live and complicated environment. Just as socialist opportunism has so often resulted in a strengthening of anarchist and syndicalist ideology in the masses, so also does anarchist sectarianism and impotence frequently drive the disappointed masses back into the arms of the social democratic opportunists. This is being proved in Spain today. One need only point to Barcelona, where the socialist G. W. U. is gaining strength for the first time in years as a result of the hopeless course pursued by the anarchists. Thus these two extremes of the labor movement feed upon each other parasitically. Worse yet, the antics and incapacity of the Stalinists have nullified many of the splendid opportunities which Communism was offered at the expense of the social democracy in Spain. A more detailed exposition of these phases of the Spanish situation we leave to the forthcoming articles.

--From Comrade Trotsky's Letter to the National Sections--

1. I have received No. 5 of the organ of our Bulgarian friends, Osvobodhenie (Emancipation). This number contains truly astounding material of the maltreatment of our comrades in the prisons by the Stalinists imprisoned there. It appears that a group of supporters of the Left Opposition has been formed against the prisoners in some of the Bulgarian penitentiaries. Against them, a rabid and thoroughly poisoned, that is, a purely Stalinist baiting is carried on, which is fostered by bureaucrats from the outside. One need not doubt that among the incarcerated Stalinists there are not a few honest and upright revolutionists. But when in the name of the Comintern they are told all sorts of atrocities about the Left Opposition, atrocities which they cannot verify in prison, they pour out their prison hatred upon the Left Oppositionists, that is, they take the road of least resistance. The demand of the Oppositionists that these accusations be stated openly and verified, leads to new calumnies and physical collisions.

In Plovdiv (Phillipopol) a few comrades were heavily wounded, the Stalinists applying to the state prosecutor with a complaint against our comrades who were thereupon completely locked into punitive cells. Concerning this incident a letter of comrade D. Gatschev, addressed to the state prosecutor, on October 16, 1931, is published in Osvobodhenie. An excellent document which—as the editorial board correctly writes—despeaks the high proletarian morale of our incarcerated friends. In my opinion this letter must be brought out in the whole international press of the Left Opposition; it deserves it in every respect. The declaration begins by pointing out that its author belongs to the International Left Opposition. Further on it says: “Mr. State Prosecutor, I have never wanted and would never permit your interference in our factional struggles. You are the representative of bourgeois class rule against which we are fighting in order to replace it by the rule of the working class. We are a fraction in the class struggle movement of the proletariat which is a foe of the class which you serve.” Since his faction opponents nevertheless turn to the state prosecutor, Gatschev considered it necessary to put the truth correctly. Further on, the tragic episode of the collision, is presented in detail. After Gatschev has quoted Trotsky's article on the impermissibility of terrorized methods in the internal faction fights of the working class, he continues: “We cannot make use of provocation, terror, swindle, calumny, killings, etc., in the struggle against comrades. But when we are assaulted—shall we not defend ourselves? Yes, we defend ourselves because we are no Christians.”

The letter ends with the following words: “The real judgment will be given by the working class. It is to it that I appeal.” Similar incidents took place in other prisons. The public opinion of the working class must be informed as widely as possible about these facts. Our Bulgarian comrades must feel that they are not alone, that there are hundreds and thousands of comrades with them in every country and that the number of their friends is growing rapidly. It should be added that comrade Gatschev was at once time sentenced to death.

2. I have received a group picture of 23 Greek comrades, Bolshevik-Leninists, “Archio-Marxists,” who are incarcerated in Singros prison in Athens. This picture gave me a living and direct idea of the composition of our Greek section. Shameless, paid bureaucrats have had the cheek to call these proletarians whose revolutionary spirit is written upon their countenances—Fascists! Wherever the faction of the Bolshevik-Leninists in Greece has sunk firm roots in the working class the future belongs to genuine Bolshevism, to genuine Marxism. I salute most warmly our imprisoned comrades.

3. Just two months ago we received documents and material from the U. S. S. R., which characterized the theoretical and political work of the leading cadres of the Left Opposition. This material consists of a few hundred small sheets which are written with such microscopic letters (for the purpose of conspirative dispatch) that it took some six weeks to decipher it with magnifying lense in hand. By their external alone they bespeak the high revolutionary efforts that are concealed behind them. The material received after so long a delay, we have begun to publish in the Bulletin of the Russian Opposition. In No. 25-26 there is reprinted a large article by comrade Rakovsky and programmatic theses of three exiles. Every reader will be convinced without difficulty of how far the Russian Opposition stands from the idea of a capitulation. The material, which contains the internal discussions in the Left Opposition evidences the high level upon which the theoretical political level of the Russian Bolshevik-Leninists is unfolding. In it a new generation of Marxists is taking shape, which will not permit the extinction of the theoretical spirit of scientific Communism. The less opportunity the Russian comrades have to let themselves be heard from at the right time and audibly, the more resolutely and intransigently the foreign comrades must repel intrigues and insinuations of all sorts, regardless of the source from which they come.

The January Conference of the C. P. S. U.

4. The preparations of the January Conference of the C. P. S. U. are entirely under the sign of the struggle against “Trotskyism.” How long ago is it that the Stalinist bureaucracy declared “Trotskyism” liquidated? (Molotov exclaimed: “Coffin, finished!” and so forth.) Is it so long ago that it was established: “The Right opposition is from now on the main danger!” Now we have a new turn. “Trotskyism” is the principal foe!! It is discovered that “Trotskyism” has penetrated into all the institutions of learning, into the most important text books and even into the commentaries to Lenin's works. The Central Committee informs the organizations by telegraph that—while the Right wing opposition seeks points of supports on the land, in the Kolchozes, etc.—the “Trotskyists” raise their heads in the industrial districts. Kaganovitch, the Amsterdamer, presented a speech before the Institute of Red Professors, which fills up a whole page of the Pravda, on the need of opening up a struggle against “Trotskyism” all along the line. On the political significance of this campaign, we will have to express ourselves especially in the near future. For the time being, it is sufficient to mention a few facts that leap particularly to the eye. The Stalinist top is compelled to draw the circle ever more closely around it. Ever less and less, can it base itself upon these who repeat the general incumbent formulae of fidelity. That is why it invents supplementary formulae, ever more enormous, which finally culminate in the dogma of Stalin's infallibility. Every attempt at Marxist research in any direction whatever, leads inevitably to conflicts with the ideology of Stalinism. An ever greater number of people who are not connected with “Trotskyism” by anything whatsoever, who are, on the contrary, even hostile to it, fall under the accusation of “Trotskyism.” On the other hand, it appears that the most important Marxian seats of learning in all the higher educational institutions are occupied by oppositionists who have capitulated. This fact demonstrates directly, but very convincingly, that a serious theoretical life exists only within the Left Opposition, so that the Stalinist bureaucracy is compelled to use renegades to occupy the most important seats of learning.

The fact that such a tremendous state and party apparatus is compelled, after eight years of uninterrupted and bitter struggles against the Left Opposition, to concentrate all its forces once again for the struggle against “Trotskyism,” shows the imperturbable vitality of our ideas. The Russian Left Opposition still has a great historical word to say.

Labor Fakery Before Congress

The A. F. of L. Bureaucrats Finally Recognize the «Dole»

The other day one hundred A. F. of L. "leaders" submitted a petition for Federal unemployment relief to President Hoover and to Congress. The one hundred marched one whole mile to the White House. It was not exactly a hunger march, this dandy crew of well-groomed portly per-capita absorbers. It must have been a rather grotesque looking affair, in the present unemployment situation.

But this is not the point. There is something else worth nothing in this whole affair. For the A. F. of L. high officials it represents a considerable change of front, since the convention held at Vancouver last fall. Above all, it is important to know the reason for this change of front.

First of all, it signifies further evidence of the slowly growing pressure within the unions, of discontent caused by the ravages of unemployment. The petitioners, so humble in this role, but insolently haughty before their union membership, fear the signs of the coming discontent. They fear its becoming directed against the rulers of a system which is causing unemployment and misery. They fear its becoming expressed in genuine class consciousness. Hence they hurry to head it off if possible.

We recall the traditionally reactionary A. F. of L. policy of servile cringing before the desires of the politically distinguished to Washington. It is this which has particularly distinguished its leadership as agents of capitalism. At the Vancouver convention the assembled high salaried business agents despite the changes in the phraseology of the orators, reinforced this policy in full. They frothed at the mouth against the "dole". They went on record against unemployment insurance and any form of federal unemployment relief.

Would it now seem, in view of this petition, that the traditional A. F. of L. policy is undergoing a change. We fear it would be entirely too optimistic to have such expectations; but these gentlemen are quite alarmed at the prospects of seriously rising discontent. And that much their petition reflects very distinctly.

The petitioners ask for appropriations for direct federal relief; for cessation of wage cuts; for the five day week, for the enactment of the Norris anti-injunction bill and, of course, they also asked for the inevitable 2.75 percent beer. How disadmirably Congress ignored the plea of the humble petitioners, was shown by its adoption at this moment of a number of measures of relief to capitalism. There are the examples of the establishment of the two billion dollar reconstructing finance corporation, of the Glass banking bill, etc. On the very same day of the filing of the petition the Senate leaders girded their loins to defeat even the moderate La Follette-Costigan bill providing an appropriation of 375 million dollars for federal unemployment relief. Undoubtedly more attention would have had to be paid to the A. F. of L. heads if they had undertaken to lead a substantial section of the millions of unemployed in a march upon the White House. But that, of course, they had no intention of doing. It is precisely to prevent demonstrations, which can easily fan a flame of real protest and seriously advance demands, that the petition came forward, and came forward in the manner it did. The government need not at all take serious heed of such requests. It well knows the intentions and designs of its obedient servants.

There may be workers, however, who take this change of front at face value, thinking that it indicates a more progressive attitude and hoping that real leadership for unemployment relief can be expected from the A. F. of L. high salaried officials. Such hopes, of course, are doomed to disappointment. It is true that even these reactionaries are subject to a change of front under compulsion and pressure. They may even under such conditions take steps forward and in a progressive direction. But by their position as defenders of capitalism and hopelessly reactionary make-up any such steps would always remain far behind the actual needs of the workers. Essentially they remain a brake upon the movement and looking for the first opportunity to betray. Nevertheless, the pressure upon them, by the deepening of the crisis and by extension of the wage cut drive, will increase. This pressure would be deliberately and consciously aided, organized and directed by Left wing militants. It should be made articulate and effective, not based upon expectation of results from the official funkeys but, on the contrary, as a means of further drawing the distinction between these capitalist agents and the rank and file workers, as well as a means of moving the masses ahead to build the movement.

This petition for Federal unemployment relief and what it implies should offer an added opportunity to penetrate the ranks of the A. F. of L., in building the movement for a struggle for unemployment relief. As yet however, no serious efforts have been made to extend the movement to embrace the A. F. of L. unions.

The Daily Worker, in its issue of February 11th, says editorially in commenting upon this petition: "The workers' answer should be a wider campaign for unemployment insurance, building up the fighting ranks of both employed and unemployed, fighting hunger and the rotten capitalist system which produces it. In the ranks of the A. F. of L., the movement for unemployment insurance should be made to sweep the fakery off their feet."

This is absolutely correct. But it can be made a reality in only provided the party leadership pursues a policy of the united front in every sense of the word. The opportunity for it has been available; it is becoming daily more pronounced, moreover, its acceptance and practice has become an imperative need.

The efforts of the party in the struggle for unemployment relief, while having something on the credit side of the balance sheet (for example by way of dramatization of the issue) still carry a mounting record on the deficit side. The very demonstrations organized by

The Jailed Marine Workers and the I.L.D.

I have received about a dozen letters from party members as well as I. L. D. members during the last week. All these letters deal with the same question—that of the I. L. D. and its relation to the defense of the prisoners involved in the case. I have not enough stamps nor writing material to answer each letter individually so this statement of facts will serve as a reply to all those concerned. If I am judging correctly, it is evident that a misunderstanding exists in many a comrade's mind as to my personal stand on the question of the I. L. D. I shall endeavor in this statement to settle that very question once and for all—

At the time of our arrest Nov. 16, 1931 we were entirely at the mercy of the police and they knew it only too well and acted accordingly. Hence, the inhuman and beastly 3rd degree and brutal beating. Bunker at the time, asked me whether I thought the I. L. D. would come forward to defend us. I replied that I was sure they would as the organization of the I. L. D. was supposedly non-political and in any event non-partisan. On the following day, after having appeared in the Magistrate's Court and after having pleaded not guilty it became evident to me that the I. L. D. did not intend to take the case. Realizing that we were facing the rest of our life in prison if the frame up was successful, it became evident that we must obtain legal advice somehow. I, therefore, put through a telephone call from Tombs prison to Mr. Fishman, an attorney who had successfully defended me in another case. Mr. Fishman arrived the same afternoon and upon hearing the case told me that he would see us through, fee or no fee. He has kept his promise.

On the 19th of November, three days after the arrest, I received a letter from comrades Cannon and Treason, informing me that due to the fact that no one had seemingly come forward to defend us, they had in conjunction with other comrades retained an attorney who would call to see us. The following day, Mr. Sabatino called and has since then handled the case as chief counsel with Mr. Fishman as associate counsel. On or about the 15th of December, one month after the arrest, I received a letter from Mr. Brodsky informing me that he had been instructed by the I. L. D. to offer his legal services. I want comrades to bear in mind that this was the first offer we had from the I. L. D. and it came 32 days after our arrest. Bunker, Traje and myself discussed the letter and it was decided that I should write Brodsky asking him to call in order to enable us to discuss the question of the committee and endeavor to find ways and means whereby the I. L. D. and the committee could get together on the question. Nothing was heard from the I. L. D. until 9 days later, when Brodsky came. I asked him how the I. L. D. could explain its attitude in view of the fact that when approached by workers shortly after the arrest they had

Aid in Our Circulation Drive

Slowly we are developing a group of active, Militant builders. But it is yet entirely too small, and the results have therefore remained scant. To make the proverbial "power of the press" have a meaning for the Left Opposition, the first step must become an active building and extension of its circulation. And today, with several organs being published or about to appear, the extension should embrace the whole Left Opposition press. This is our immediate aim.

There are still a few months of the winter season left which offers the best opportunities among workers being more attentive, participating more in meetings, and being more easily within reach of our propaganda. We naturally depend upon our comrades to support us, to attend these gatherings, to make their contacts, to sell a copy of the Left Opposition press and to endeavor to get a new sub. When practically organized and carried on, this will also help us in replenishing our depleted treasury the party, regardless of the militancy displayed, have constantly decreased in working class participation. The February 4th demonstration was smaller yet than the preceding ones. That down ward tendency is also the status of the movement as a whole. This has become an ineradicable record of the working class attitude toward the party leadership and its policies. And this in a situation of growing pressure from mass discontent.

Is it not clear that here a complete change of policy is necessary. Not merely a change on paper but a change in reality?

World Powers at Loggerheads

Japanese Repulsed in China as Laval Cabinet Falls in Paris

The events of the last week have brought about a very noticeable shift in the relationship of forces among the powers involved in the recent struggle. The unexpected and rather remarkable resistance put up by the Chinese at centering on the Far Eastern question, Chapel has vexed the Japanese aggressors considerably. And the rather cool reception given the French delegation at Geneva, has not served to encourage Tokio any either. The French imperialists have up to the present been the only ones to play the role of apologists for Nipponese militarism.

The bold stand taken by Tardieu has, if anything, only been of service in the consolidation of Wall Street influence in Europe. Isolated internationally by their strong-headed drive for a sharp solution, the French reactionaries have suffered an internal defeat, through a combination of circumstances, by the downfall of the Laval cabinet. The inevitably more moderate regime that will succeed Laval, will not fail to take into account the desires and demands of the Washington government in continuing, under a new guise, the traditional French struggle for European hegemony. After all, the money bags will remain the determining factor in imperialist politics.

Japan, weakened already by her Far Eastern adventure and losing ground continually in her diplomatic disputes with the West, finds herself entangled in a net of strangling contradictions. On the one hand, the Manchurian expedition and the attack on Shanghai have already proved to be extremely expensive, have sapped her resources like a suction pump. A protracted stay in China can only mean the collapse of her financial structure. Discontent at home is maturing rapidly. Despite the censorship, reports of anti-war demonstrations in Tokio and in other cities have found their way into the press. The economic crisis and the unemployment it brings can only aggravate this situation for the Mikado's ministers. On the other hand, the Chinese boycott of Japanese goods has already piled up heavy losses for her industries. And it is primarily the breaking of the boycott that Tokio is concerned with at present, after the first flush of victory and the ravenous ambitions accompanying it, have dimmed. And even then, it is questionable if the imperialism of the East could repair its losses by merely lifting the boycott, as the situation stands today. At any rate, it may be safely assumed that in the coming weeks, the diplomats at Tokio will be much more "reasonable" in their negotiations with the U. S., Great Britain and the others until new factors intervene.

The temporarily successful defense of Chapel has no doubt raised the morale of the Chinese troops. That the Kuo Min Tang politicians attempt to exploit this situation is only natural. But it is not their intention to make use of it by rallying the masses for a real struggle. For them, it simply constitutes capital in the bid for the support of American financiers. Washington is not at all reluctant to come to the aid of the Chinese bourgeoisie. The centralization of China and its transformation into a stable market for American goods, has always been one of Wall Street's dreams. Any opportunity to realize this dream will be taken advantage of by United States imperialism.

But the Kuo Min Tang has not yet succeeded in establishing a stable bourgeois power in China. All the exigencies of recent years have helped to strengthen the hatred of the masses of the people against the foreign robber powers, America included. They will undoubtedly look upon the Kuo Min Tang's flirtations with Wall Street, with suspicion. This fact cannot help but increase the opportunities of the Chinese Communists to build up their influence and to take the lead in the struggle, supported by the prestige and the backing of the Soviet Union and the world proletariat. Rumors have been spread about relative to a supposed entente between the Soviet government and the Japanese with regard to the transportation of troops on the Chinese Eastern Railroad. Despite the disgustingly non-revolutionary stand of Litvinoff at Geneva, dealt with elsewhere in this issue, despite the fact that this position at the Disarmament Conference only constitutes another step in the Stalinist degeneration, it is, nevertheless, inconceivable, that there is any truth whatsoever in these rumors. Any such entente could mean only one thing in betrayal of the most elementary duty of a proletarian power—that of intransigent antagonism to the imperialists and their designs against the oppressed colonial masses.

The imperialist powers are busy preparing their households for the coming test of strength. Just how imminent this clash is, may be gathered from the parleys going on at Geneva in the ante-chambers, away from the din of oratorical bombast. These discussions have for their subject the very prosaic matter of restrictions in the use of air-craft bombing on civilians, the distances to be established between battle lines, etc. The utmost watchfulness is required of the international working class. We, too, must be prepared. The tension in Germany, in the face of the March elections, may well give vent to an explosion that will shake Europe. The outcome of the class struggle in Germany will serve as a signal for imperialist action. It is the task of the Communists to lay the ground for a successful counter-action of the proletariat. The first requisite for that is international solidarity. And it is on this point, that the Stalinist leadership in all the parties of the Comintern, and especially in the Soviet Union must be called to order.

Glotzer Meetings

The national tour for comrade Glotzer is now under way. For the information of our readers in the various cities his dates are quoted below.

Previously we announced that comrade Glotzer has just returned from a visit to Europe in which he also spent about four weeks of fruitful discussion with Lenin's closest co-worker, comrade Trotsky. It is the result of this discussion which will form the kernel of comrade Glotzer's lectures. His subject will be:

WHAT IS EUROPE HEADING FOR?

The following is the schedule for Glotzer's tour:

Pittsburgh, Pa. March 13

The meeting for Glotzer in Montreal will be held at Universite Ouvriere, 85 East Craig St., Sunday evening, Feb. 21, 1932.

The Presidential Elections in Germany

All political parties in Germany are retrenching themselves for the general presidential election to be held in March. At present the nominations are taking place and the most important parliamentary drive in the history of German politics is under way.

Hindenburg has accepted the candidacy of a "coalition" drive to defeat Fascism. He will have the support of the social democracy, the Centrist party, the People's Party, the Economic Party and the Democratic Party. In a word, the "democratic" forces are uniting on the basis of a defense and resistance against Fascism—and Communism. At the head of this drive stand the socialists. The object is to retain Hindenburg as the "iron man" to save the republic, and also to keep Brüning at the head of parliament.

The Fascists are orientating themselves for the drive. To them the elections do not close the question. They are confident that they can defeat this coalition even on the election field. The Nazi party and their counter-part, the Nationalist party, are grooming their ranks for a united stand against the "coalition". The Fascists are now attempting to force through Hitler's citizenship with the aim of legalizing his participation in politics and acting as a candidate for his party.

It would be the greatest danger to the working class of Germany and the whole world, and particularly the international Communist movement, to believe that the Fascists will terminate their drive for power with the end of the elections. Quite the contrary. In the event of a defeat of Fascism at the election polls, they will begin instantly with a concerted drive for power through an armed coup.

At the moment of this writing, the detailed plans of the combined Fascist and Nationalist front are unknown. There is a certain uneasiness in the ranks of the democratic coalition because of this. They do not know how to resist the Fascist drive. They fear the results of an election defeat of the Fascists because they understand that in such an event, Fascism will resort to an armed struggle against the government.

In this situation the role of the Communist party is of highest importance. Information from Germany demonstrates that the C. P. G. is now concentrating on the elections. Thaelmann is the party candidate for president. The party is now too, preparing for an intensive parliamentary campaign as a fight on two fronts: the fight against Fascism and against the Centre-social democratic coalition, stressing at the same time that the most important fight must be made against the Centre-social democratic coalition, and not the Fascists.

But the danger in the present situation lies in that the party sees no further than the elections. It is correct that the party should carry on the struggle on the election field. But that cannot be the final aim of the struggle. For the Communists it is more important to see further than just the parliamentary (Continued on page 3)

From the Needle Strike Front

The struggle of the dressmakers in New York began a week ago under the auspices of the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union. The Right wing controlled International Ladies Garment Workers Union postponed the calling out of its shops for more than a week, with the sole object of isolating the fight of those dressmakers who are striking under the banner of the Left wing. While the response to the Left wing was not such as would be desirable, the ranks remained intact all the time since the strike.

Soderberg Explains the Disruptive Role of the Stalinists in the Defense Negotiations turned us down with the excuse that they did "not want to reopen friendly relations with Soderberg". He told me to "forget it." After some discussion it was decided that Brodsky call on Sabatino with a view of cooperating as an attorney and that the I. L. D. get in touch with the committee. To date, Brodsky has not called on Sabatino nor Fishman. From this date, November 15th to January 19th and two days before we were scheduled to go to trial, nothing more was heard from the I. L. D.

On January 19th, Stern, Organizer-Secretary of the New York district of the I. L. D. called and saw me here in prison. He said the I. L. D. had sent him to offer the services of that organization. I pointed out to him that we were going to trial in 48 hours so what could he do now? He stated they had been too busy with other cases. As far as he personally was concerned, he had just arrived from Pittsburgh where he had been at the time of our arrest and therefore did not even know we were arrested until his arrival in New York a couple of days ago. How sincere this individual was can be judged by the fact that at that very moment was resting in my pocket a letter written to some friend of mine dated New York City, Nov. 25th, with an official I. L. D. letterhead and telling my friends that "Soderberg has associated himself with some racketeers", was "an enemy of the workers" and finally that "this is not an I. L. D. case" and warning my friends to "keep hands off." I knew he was lying when he spoke to me but I did not want to do anything that would prevent the I. L. D. from joining with the committee in the defense. I told him that I was still ready and willing to accept the I. L. D. in conjunction with the committee. A few hours later an attorney arrived bringing with him a statement drawn up by Carl Hacker, N. Y. District Organizer of the I. L. D., which in effect asked us to dissolve the committee and discharge the Attorneys Sabatino and Fishman. We pointed out to him that it would be against all ethics and principles to do so now but in order that no one should say that we turned any defense offer down, we would be willing to accept the I. L. D. attorney as associate counsel if that would be satisfactory to our attorneys. That evening I sent a letter to Stern informing him that I was willing to go to any extent to make this a real united front of the defense.

I stated, however, that I would not under any circumstances tolerate a dual defense movement. I endeavored in my letter to make all kinds of concessions in order to leave the door wide open for the I. L. D. to come in. The following day, Mr. Buitenkant, the I. L. D. attorney, arrived and we had a discussion. I asked him to explain the previous actions of the I. L. D. where they had spurned us and even referred to me as a stool pigeon. In reply, he stated that they had been mistaken, that their previous actions were erroneous but that they now were willing to rectify the errors.

I asked him to leave, so the defendants could discuss the matter. I was warned during this discussion by both Bunker and Trajer that the I. L. D. was not sincere in this offer. I refused to believe it at the time. I could not conceive of an organization playing with the very lives of three workers. I could not imagine the extent of their irresponsibility and treachery. How correct Bunker and Trajer were later events have proven. Later Buitenkant returned and shortly after, Sabatino and Fishman arrived. We informed Buitenkant that we could not and would not support our present attorneys nor discharge the committee that had worked faithfully for us. My stand was that I was still willing to accept I. L. D. attorneys as associate counsel with Sabatino as chief attorney, providing arrangements could be made with Sabatino and Buitenkant. It soon became evident, however, that this was impossible due to the obvious belligerent and domineering manner of Buitenkant towards Sabatino. He informed Sabatino that he did not understand the case, knew nothing how to defend it, etc. It should be borne in mind that Sabatino had gone through the case carefully several times but as far as Buitenkant was concerned, he had not even looked up the indictment and certainly had not asked us what it was all about. As Brodsky stated, "It is an ideal I. L. D. case." "We have the dynamite," "We have the workers framed," "And we have the stool pigeon!"

That is all the I. L. D. knows about the case to date, yet an attorney that has spent three months working on the case does not know "how to defend it." It was evident that we could come to no arrangement after this. The following day we went to trial and a mistrial was declared. Upon returning to my cell I found a telegram from the I. L. D. offering to take over the defense. Although I at this time was certain that the desires of the I. L. D. leadership was not so much to defend us as it was to disrupt the defense committee, I still wanted to keep the welcome sign up and wired the I. L. D. that my stand was still unchallenged. I. e., I was still unwilling to accept the I. L. D. attorney with our attorneys, but that there was a danger of a disagreement among the defendants and that there still was time to fight, in view of the mistrial.

This is a true picture of happenings since our arrest and up till January 25th. On that date, the official organ of the party comes out with a vicious attack upon the Marine Workers Defense Committee and accuses the committee of betraying the defendants. As one of those defendants I state openly and knowing the full meaning of my statement, that the betrayal is at the hands of the I. L. D. leadership. Not only have they betrayed the three defendants and viciously stabbed them in the back, but they have betrayed all that is fine, that is decent, that is sacred in labor's principle.

They have shown themselves to the rest of the working class as open collaborators with the prosecution, first at the time of the arrest when they left us at the mercy of the police and treacherously sneaked away and actually assisted the authorities with their thinly veiled provocative articles in their press, and secondly, when they, under excuses of wanting to correct these past errors, came in and came with one purpose only—that of smashing our defense. In their eyes we are but political pawns. Our lives mean nothing to them. They are not concerned. They have played a game in this case so despicable, so utterly anti-working class that it makes one wonder and ask, why? What are their purposes?

Of one thing I am sure, if we are acquitted at our trial it will not be because of the I. L. D., but rather in spite of the I. L. D. There is one gratifying feature about this case. For the first time in modern labor history has it been found possible for Anarchists, Syndicalists, I. W. W. and Communists of different factions and A. F. of L. trade unionists, to sit at the same table and discuss ways and means of freeing members of their class. This is an achievement but it is precisely this achievement that the party bureaucrats—with their blind, mad, factional rage—are trying to split. They tried, by lies, to stampede the workers at our arrest. They did not succeed. They cannot understand it. I ask comrades, workers everywhere: Support the Marine Workers Defense Committee which is the only body that has the full and undivided confidence of the defendants.

N. Y. Open Forum

The subject of comrade Shachtman's lecture on Saturday, February 13, held before an audience of about fifty workers, was "Imperialist Aggression in China—the danger of War". The facts and arguments advanced by comrade Shachtman constituted a brilliant confirmation of the forecast made by comrade Trotsky in November, in his pamphlet Germany—the Key to the International Situation—"there is no threat of an immediate and acute danger to the existence of the Soviet Union from the Far East."

While the Daily Worker and the Stalinists saw in the Manchurian events principally a series of maneuvers against the Soviet Union, the Japanese imperialists were preparing the attack on Shanghai. With the realization of their immediate objective in Manchuria, they shifted their scene of operations southward, leaving the Daily Worker analysis hanging in mid-air. Nothing daunted, the Daily sees in the attack on Shanghai, the beginning of an assault against the Chinese Soviet Republic, that mythical creation of bankrupt Stalinism.

While the cannon roar in Shanghai and the civil population is ruthlessly slaughtered the suave diplomats meet in Geneva to discuss disarmament! To this orgy of hypocrisy and jockeying for favorable position comes that bright star of Soviet foreign policy—Litvinoff. Not to be outdone by Grandi, the Fascist spokesman, he proposes as the only solution to the problem of war—complete disarmament! But not to seem impractical, he is willing to accept less as a beginning.

So clear was the opportunistic policy of Stalinism at Geneva, so evidently incorrect was the Stalinist analysis of the Manchurian and Shanghai events, that there was no discussion in opposition to comrade Shachtman's presentation of the point of view of the Left Opposition.

ORGANIZATION NOTES

Our subscription drive is getting under way. That there are real opportunities for extension of circulation of the Left Opposition Press is indicated by letters we have received recently. We quote from one received from a comrade from Pittsburgh: "What I learned for a short while reading The Militant and the paper from Greece called PALLI TON TAXEON (Class Struggle) I never learned for six years reading the Empress, the Greek language paper of the official Communist Party of America. I received your Greek paper COMMUNISTES which was sent to me, and found it very interesting." The comrade subscribes to The Militant for COMMUNISTES and orders some literature.

From a Chicago comrade we received the following: "Please find enclosed money order for $2. for renewal of subscription to The Militant. I am out of work since May last year. The little savings I had are gone and I live on charity at the present time. That has never happened to me before. The only thing they could not take away from me is the same old hatred which I feel for our wonderful order of society, the capitalist system. I hope the comrades are able to keep The Militant going as a weekly."

This should be a good incentive to The Militant builders. We have had among the most active ones of the recent months such comrades as Hedlund from Minneapolis, Sacharow from Chicago, Schechet from Boston and Goodman from Philadelphia. Comrade Goodman is now going to serve his term in Prison but we expect the Philadelphia branch to follow his fine example and to keep up this work. And we count surely on more comrades joining the ranks of The Militant builders.

The New York branch has elected a special committee in charge of the drive. Each member is required to bring in at least one subscription. The record of accomplishments will be kept on the bulletin board. This branch expects to be in the lead. Comrade Tom Stamm is giving special attention to the subscription drive in his capacity of being in charge of The Militant circulation.

Our Second National Tour

This week, comrade Giotzer is starting out on his national tour. Public meetings have been arranged in the various cities which will serve to further bring the views of the Left Opposition on the burning issues of the class struggle before the American workers. It will serve to give added life and added strength to the branches as well as to make more firm their contacts with the Centre. A couple of big features of this tour are to be a planned address over the radio from St. Louis and a debate with A. C. Townley at Minneapolis.

The subject of Giotzer's meetings will be in the main center around the issue of the international movement, and particularly of Germany. Comrade Trotsky calls Germany at present the key to the international situation. It is decisively so. We propose to follow up regularly in The Militant columns with information of all developments in Germany and endeavor to make a searching analysis into the events and perspectives. We propose that in addition to Giotzer's meetings the branches should wherever possible bring the subject forward at open forums and public meetings arranged by them. They should also, when an opportunity is available, endeavor to have our comrades speak on this subject before labor organizations. We expect the situation in Germany to become a subject for serious discussion by our membership as there are many important lessons to be learned in such discussions. Above all should this opportunity be utilized to spread comrade Trotsky's pamphlet on Germany far and wide.

AFTER THE R.R. WAGE CUT

In our previous article on the Railroad Brotherhoods, we quoted a United Press report to the effect that on Jan. 14, Railroad capital and Railroad labor "sat down across a conference table determined to provide dividends for rail investors and work for unemployed rail men."

Accordingly, the recent Chicago railroad wage conference had a two-fold purpose. First, to provide more profit for the millionaire investors in railroad bonds and stocks, more money for the rich who do not need it and did not earn it, and this money was to be taken from the poor railroad workers who needed it badly for food, clothing and rent, the very necessities of life. Well, the first purpose of the wage conference was accomplished by taking $215,000,000 from the railroad workers wages and giving it to the railroad capitalists. But what happened to the second question work for the unemployed rail workers? That was only a bluff in the first place. The Brotherhood misleaders, who have nothing in common with the workers anyway, never had any intention from the beginning, of getting any work for its unemployed members by accepting a voluntary wage cut for those who were unemployed. Ignorant, incompetent and overpaid as these Brotherhood officials are, they nevertheless know, and admit in their final agreement with the railroads, that wage cuts will not create more work but diminish it.

Complete Harmony prevails at the Wage-Cutting Meet

According to T. C. Cashen, one of the participants at the conference, there was no disagreement between the Chiefs on the question of taking the ten per cent cut for the men. The only difference of opinion which arose in the conference was over "the policy of procedure". The policy agreed upon was to take the cut for the men right there and then. The Chiefs did not want their cronies Dan Willard to wait until they put the wage cut through the mill of the Watson-Parker Law, because that might have delayed the cut for another thirty or sixty days. As a matter of fact the Brotherhood Chiefs were so anxious to serve and please the railroad Chiefs that they worked overtime on Saturday, January 30, in order to get their letter of acceptance in shape for presentation to the railroads on Sunday, Jan. 31st, so the cut could be put into effect on Monday, February 1st. And to show by their own words the brazen betrayal of the railroad workers at this fake wage conference at Chicago by the Brotherhood leaders, we will quote in full their letter to Willard accepting everything the railroads asked for. Read it carefully:

The Palmer House
Chicago, Illinois
January 31, 1932

"Mr. Daniel Willard
Chairman, Committee of Nine
Railroad Presidents
Chicago, Illinois

"After a painstaking review of the proposals and arguments which have been ably and forcibly presented in behalf of the railroads, we feel compelled to reiterate our previous opinion that as a matter of pure right and justice, the railway employees could not be called upon to agree to a ten per cent reduction of their meagre earnings. Nor do we wish to give any assent to the theory that wage deductions are to be regarded ordinarily as the appropriate means to promote prosperity. We cannot believe that the public welfare is advanced by reducing the purchasing power of our responsibility to the workers whom we represent and our country, we have weighed the urgent needs of the railroad industry and the demands of the public welfare in this present unparalleled situation against the individual sacrifices requested of the railroad employees. In the hope that our action may improve the health of our industry, may improve the cooperative relations of management and employees, may stimulate a revival of business, and may advance the general welfare, we have decided to accept the proposal of the railroads to the employees whom we represent, that—

"Ten per cent shall be deducted from each pay check for a period of one year beginning February 1, 1932:

"Basic rates shall remain as at present;

"This arrangement shall terminate automatically Jan. 31, 1933.

"We attach the following conditions to this acceptance of your proposal:

"(1) That the formal notices served by the railroads whom you represent upon the organizations of employees whom we represent, seeking a fifteen per cent reduction in present rates of pay, shall be withdrawn and further proceedings thereunder discontinued.

"(2) That the railroads whom you represent will agree that without attaching any limitation upon the use of funds derived from this pay roll deduction, the participating railroads will make an earnest and sympathetic effort to maintain and increase railroad employment.

"We trust the foregoing proposition will meet with your favorable consideration.

Very truly yours,
"(Signed) D. B. Robertson
Chairman, Railway Labor Executives Association."

We believe that the above letter constitutes the most open and shameful betrayal of the railroad workers in the annals of the Railway Labor Movement. The two feeble conditions incorporated in the letter and numbered, (1) and (2), are both pure fakes, and are merely put in there by the labor skates to cover up their treachery to the workers.

The request for a fifteen per cent cut referred to in condition (1) was never a serious proposal in the first place. If it had been, it would have been put into effect. In all probability it was a suggestion by the Brotherhood leaders to enable them to make the workers believe that their leaders saved them something. As a matter of fact, everyone knew, who studied the matter, that what the railroads really wanted was a ten per cent cut and they got it. Press reports released at the very beginning of the conference on January 14, stated so frankly.

In condition (2) where the Brotherhood Executives stipulate "an earnest and sympathetic effort to maintain and increase railroad employment", they got nothing. The railroads agreed to two things and those two they got, namely: A 10 per cent wage cut, and the offer on the part of the labor leaders of cooperation with the railroad management. Items (4) in the final agreement reads as follows:

"The parties unite in expressing unqualified approval of whole-hearted cooperation between management and employees and agree to do everything they can in support of this policy."

The only thing the railroad workers got out of the Chicago wage conference, was another costly lesson on the bankruptcy of its overpaid bureaucracy with its class cooperation policy and the useless character of the craft system of organization.

The Sims Murder

The know-no boss-class in Kentucky terror of the hounds. Not content with brutal repressions and beatings, they have resorted to murder. Cold, planned, premeditated murder.

On Wednesday morning, February 18, William Sims, nineteen year old organizer of the National Miners Union and member of the Young Communist League was shot down by deputy thug, Orbin Miller in the employ of the Rockefeller controlled mine interests in Pineville, Kentucky. He died a few hours later. Lawson Green, a N. M. U. organizer, who was with him when the shooting took place was arrested. As Sims lay dying in a Knox County hospital the Indiana district attorney kept plying him with questions. All urgings from hospital nurses and friends of the young organizer, to have that torture cease, proved futile. When the district attorney finished his inquisition the bed was saturated through and through with the red blood of the young miner and Communist. The end came a short while after.

Murderer Orbin Miller who went through a formal arrest was later released by county Judge Baker of Barbourville. The reason given being that he (the deputy murderer) shot either in defense of himself or his accomplice. "So it didn't matter." But it does matter! It matters to the starving and struggling miners in Kentucky. It matters to all those impoverished southern workers, black and white, fighting for the right to organize. It matters to the entire militant working class.

Lawson's killer Orbin Miller was rejected. His testimony was rejected because he was a miner. His testimony was rejected as invalid because he dared tell the miners of Kentucky-Tennessee of their serf-like existence. His testimony was rejected because he dared tell them organize. In the County Court of Barbourville, Kentucky, Orbin Miller's testimony proved valid and just because he has a general reputation as a killer. Because he served a sentence in jail for robbing the Cumberland Gap post office. This degenerate's testimony was placed against the testimony of Green Lawson, miner and organizer and the court decided in favor of the degenerate, the killer.

workers; openly or behind the backs of the workers these class collaborators and parasites will give up what still remains of the conditions that the dressmakers won through many bloody strikes. It is this danger of leaving the conduct of the strike in the hands of the Schlesinger machine and their Lovestone helpers that makes imperative for the Left wing to call for:

(1) UNITED PICKET LINES. (2) FOR IMMEDIATE FUSION OF THE TWO STRIKE COMMITTEES. (3) FOR A CONFERENCE TO CONSIDER THE SETTLEMENTS JOINTLY.

The banner of the Left wing can again be raised high among the thousands of organized and unorganized dressmakers in the struggle for unity, in the effort to bring about One Union, in the fight for better conditions for the needle workers. The great mass of dressmakers will march under the Left wing banner when they see it unfurled for unity.

BOOK REVIEW

Unemployed Councils in St. Petersburg in 1906 by Sergei Malyshev Workers Library Publishers.

This pamphlet is an interesting and popular account of the unemployed movement led by the St. Petersburg Bolsheviks in 1906. Although the situation in which this movement developed is radically different from that which surrounds the unemployed here of today, nevertheless one reads these pages with the hope of finding some general experiences which are instructive for the Communists at present. And to be sure, this is to be found in the tactic used by the Bolsheviks in involving the employed workers in the fight for the interests of the unemployed.

The unemployed council movement in St. Petersburg developed on the declining wave of the 1906 revolution, which had already attained its climax in the Moscow uprising of December. The fright which the Russian rulers had experienced as a result of the revolutionary actions of the proletariat plus the well organized movement of the unemployed enabled the Bolsheviks to wrest some concessions from the St. Petersburg city Duma for the unemployed. The unemployed situation itself had been artificially created by the bourgeoisie through a lockout of the workers in the last months of 1905 in retaliation against their revolutionary demands and actions. In the beginning the St. Petersburg Soviet had assumed the responsibility of caring for these tens of thousands of locked out workers, but after its suppression the Bolsheviks commenced the organization of the unemployed councils. Unlike the present unemployed councils which consist of all unemployed who wish to join them, the St. Petersburg unemployed councils were representative bodies. The unemployed workers elected their delegates who composed the unemployed councils. The first unemployed council consisted of thirty delegates.

The author relates how after its organization he and the president of the Unemployed Council went to Lenin to report what had been done to organize the council. "Vladimir Ilyitch heard what we had to say, and then said he had some doubts as to whether the Unemployed Council alone could fulfill its program by its own efforts."

Lenin told them: "Through this organization alone you cannot influence the bourgeoisie; you will not be strong enough, and the unemployed workers themselves will not be able to develop this work on a broad proletarian class basis. Therefore, you must immediately extend the Unemployed Council to include representatives of those employed in all the factories and mills in St. Petersburg. You must now begin to agitate in the factories and mills for this purpose, and immediately arrange for the election of these representatives. The Unemployed Council must consist not only of 30 representatives of the unemployed, but of 100 or 150 from all districts, from all factories and mills. This will provide the unemployed with a genuine proletarian leading body which will really be able to exert pressure successfully on the City Duma and on the bourgeoisie generally."

In accordance with Lenin's suggestions, the organizers proceeded with the further formation of the Unemployed Councils.

While the suggestions of Lenin are not applicable in their exact form for the unemployed movement in the United States, nevertheless, the essential idea, that is, that the unemployed themselves cannot compel the bourgeoisie to alleviate their condition to any appreciable extent, but must gain the support of the employed workers, remains particularly true today. In St. Petersburg where the workers had already experienced the organization of Soviets, it was proper to go to the factories to obtain the support of the employed workers. In the United States, unfortunately, this cannot yet be done, that is, not on a mass scale, for the workers are not ready for it. But it is possible to go to the trade unions. It is possible to fight within the trade unions for their participation in the unemployed movement. This of course requires a correct trade union policy and a correct unemployment program, neither of which the Stalinists possess. The proposal of the Left Opposition to organize the unemployed councils on the united front basis is in accord with Lenin's idea. This would transform them from their present feeble and insignificant state into organizations of influence, really capable of conducting a fight to help the unemployed, and develop the class consciousness of the proletariat.

The author traces the progress of the St. Petersburg Unemployed Council and the successes it was able to win until its liquidation when the reaction became very black. Of interest is the story of how the Bolsheviks were able to finance a whole series of strikes with funds obtained by the unemployed council from the City Duma. This was done among other ways by listing the strikers as unemployed. The author narrates a number of other interesting occurrences which makes this pamphlet very readable.

The Character of Fascism

An Analysis of the Composition of the Hitlerist Camp

In October 1930, the central committee of the C. P. G. decided overnight, that Fascism is reigning in Germany and that Bruening is its prophet. The 11th Plenum of the E. C. C. I. put its seal upon that, and all expectations, nourished by the "deviations" and inconsistencies in the resolutions, in the speeches of Remmele, etc., that the German central committee would revise this decision and take reality into account, have come to naught. Under the mask of a "theoretical elaboration", a large current of confusion is flowing through the party into the minds of its membership and the only one of the four credos of the Thaelmann article in December which is actually being preached, is: "We live under Fascism!" "Fascism and social-Fascism in the last analysis are two different shades of one and the same basis for the bourgeois dictatorship" (Mannusky's report to the 11th plenum).

It is therefore not at all strange that the resolutions of the 5th world congress have been raised from their graves and that Stalin's theoretical infantile maladies, like "social-democracy as a moderate wing of Fascism", "social democracy and Fascism as twins" and other abortions of the same sort are being preached as eternal truths. It is only being consistent for a Warner Hirsch* (Die Internationale, Vol. 15, No. 1) to counterpose democratic England and France to "Fascist" Germany!

The question of the evaluation of the situation, the question whether we really have Fascism already in Germany, is of the greatest strategic importance. If one takes an affirmative position on this question then one must come to an entirely different point of departure, to an entirely different (and distorted) evaluation of Hitler, as well as of the Fascist danger in the perceptible future. For in that case the question of a formulation becomes the question of a prognosis of the most likely development.

The theoreticians of the Comintern are operating with commonplaces like "Bruening and Hitler are both merely dictators of the bourgeoisie. Between an open Fascist dictatorship and the Bruening government there is in no case any class difference whatsoever." These are elementary truths for every Marxist.

The essence of Marxist analysis does not, however, consist in the recognition of the general, but of the particular, of the concrete. The essence of a valid political characterization does not consist of the ability of fastening it on to every, but to a definite, political situation.

Can the expression "Fascism" serve as a characterization for a specific political phenomenon, for a definite situation? It can. But in that case, what is "Fascism" actually? A review of European, and especially Italian Fascism, permits us to elaborate certain specific features of it, without any difficulty. Fascism is a unique and new phenomenon of the period of monopoly capitalism, a product of post-war capitalism, an offshoot of reformism.

As the collapse of economy spreads, as reformism begins to disappoint the masses looking for a way out, Fascism is saddled everywhere with the task of intercepting the radicalized masses who are about to turn revolutionary channels and of faking them useful once more for the purposes of finance capital. It is a matter, in this case, first of all, of radicalized petty bourgeois masses and consequently, we see everywhere, as a particular feature of Fascism—its broad petty bourgeois mass basis. Furthermore, we see as a consequence of this, the super-radical and quasi-revolutionary, typically petty bourgeois phraseology, the desecration of the idols of yesterday—democracy, pacifism—and the idealization of the most brutal strongman dictatorship. We see further an unrestricted terror of the Fascists against the working class and all its organizations before and after its seizure of power, through particular organs (Fascist Storm Divisions, etc.)—a terror of such a great quantitative proportion that it becomes transformed into a specific quality. Finally we see the nationalist ideology as a maneuver of diverting attention from social misery and as the basis of an aggressive foreign policy, which is possible only on the backs of a defeated working class, for whom the revolutionary way out is closed. It is especially significant to take into account, as Alfred Kurella has done, the strong war sentiments current among the Italian workers.

Its origin and the tasks assigned to it by the bourgeoisie, account for the position of Fascism with regard to the social democracy. Fascism, which cannot tolerate any other party, not even a petty bourgeois one, at its side, can least of all tolerate those for whom it must substitute, because they have compromised and outlived themselves. It is quite true that the social democratic leaders would like to rule together with Fascism, but Fascism would not share its power with them. Despite the offer for a coalition made by the Baldisi of the Socialist Party of Italy, the S. P. I. was proscribed even before the C. P. I. Despite all the services rendered to Pilsudski by the Socialist Party of Poland, its leaders nevertheless landed in the fortress of Brest-Litovsk. Just as it is certain that several D'Aragnas will go over to Fascism, it is certain that the reformist organizations in themselves will be totally crushed.

"Fascism, nourished by the social democracy, will and must eventually crush its skull, in order to reach power. The Austrian social democracy does all it can to facilitate this surgical operation for it, (Trotsky)."

That is why the formula of "social Fascism" is not only harmful in agitation, but also false as a political prognosis.

When we consider, after this brief analysis of Fascism, the present day Bruening government, the differences are unmistakable. Its social basis consists unfortunately, as yet of the reformist workers chained to it by their treacherous leaders and not of the petty-bourgeois masses of Fascism even though it does indeed maneuver with the latter from time to time. The ideology of the Bruening who base themselves upon a parliamentary majority, is conservative and not quasi-revolutionary. The terror of the state apparatus is as yet in its embryo. It restricts itself to the toleration of the Nazi terror. The foreign policy of Bruening is not that of Hitler. That is what differentiates Bruening from Fascism. What brings him closer to it we know full well; it is the regime of emergency decrees, the factual even if not formal, suspension of democracy, the active support of the Nazis, etc. If we want to evaluate the Bruening government as a whole, we must characterize it not as Fascism but much more precisely as the government of the transition to Fascism, of the active preparation (Groener!) of Fascism.

The difference between Hitler and Bruening consists not in the aim but in the social basis (what Thaelmann, Mannusky and Co. say about their common social basis is pure twaddle). It consists in the methods. And that is something that must not be overlooked.

The Government Reprisals in Greece

AGRI, GREECE—January (Our correspondent).—On December 31, 1931 State troopers arrested comrade Demetrios Mylonas, President of the Panrefugees Organization of Agri, and led him to the Police Headquarters. There the lackeys passed him through the third degree and locked him in a dark cell. At midnight, the Chief of Police Anastopoulos arrived at headquarters and immediately began to examine our comrade. During the hearing our comrade declared that he is a Communist and as President of the "Panrefugees", he carried the book and a protest leaflet, which they discovered in his pocket.

It is, however, conscious deception to characterize this order of things as the "lesser evil", as the social democracy is doing. Because the "lesser evil" Bruening is being tolerated by the S. P. G. and not fought by it, it becomes by itself an ever "greater evil" and is enabled thereby to prepare the "greatest evil" so impudently. It is clear that to differentiate between Bruening and Hitler does not as yet signify a policy of toleration. The Marxist manner of posing the question is given by Trotsky in his latest pamphlet:

"We Marxists consider Bruening and Hitler, together with Braun, as component parts of one and the same system. The question which one of them is the lesser evil, has no sense, because the system against which we are fighting, needs all these elements. But for the moment, these elements are in conflict with one another and the party of the proletariat must take advantage of this conflict in the interest of the revolution!" —E. BAUER, Berlin

*This gentleman, still convalescing from the Merker malady, is seeking to squeeze his way into the front ranks of the bureaucratic jackals again, by howling himself hoarse against Trotsky ("Trotsky, an agent of Hitler-Fascism"). In his day, he himself, after leaving the C. P. G., did not disdain the role of a genuine "agent of Ulstein".

Immediately, this bestial policeman attacked our comrade with a black jack shouting that he is a member of the Unemployment Committee which met this Monday. Confronted with the Bolshevik courage of our comrade, the beast continued his attack with rabid madness for a whole hour until our comrade began to bleed. At the end he did stop with the threat that he is going to kill him in case he continues to be an active Communist.

The following day they called comrade Mylonas for another hearing.

But how Anastopoulos was able to learn of the meetings of the Unemployment committees which are illegal remains a mystery. In this organizational committee Stalinists also participated and there it is possible that this treachery is the work of stoolpigeons which exist in the Stalinist ranks.

The condition of comrade Baboucoupos continues to be the same and the wounds in his shoulders are not healed and therefore he can't move from his bed. The Municipal Hospital shows a criminal neglect and the same attitude is shown by the I. L. D. Our comrades have to care for him. In the meantime the condition of our comrades within the prisons walls remains the same and we urge the formation of a committee of workers and intellectuals to bring to light the criminal activities of the Warden who are aiming to exterminate our fighters by every device of terror.

We are informed that our comrades of the Averof prisons are going to declare a hunger strike because the Ministry of Justice did not reply to their demands.

The "Students Syntrifia" circulated leaflets and appeals to every intelligent person, worker or intellectual to participate in the rally which is scheduled to be held at the "Trionon".

The Stalinists in Bulgaria

Use Violence against Oppositionists in the Prisons

We are bringing below the document of comrade D. Gatcheff, incarcerated in the Philippopol Prison in Bulgaria, mentioned in the February 6th issue of The Militant. It speaks highly of the revolutionary quality of our Bulgarian comrades, whose splendid morale should serve as an example and as an inspiration to all Communists, and to the Left Oppositionists in particular.

To the District Attorney of the Philippopol Court, Petition of the Prisoner Dimitri M. Gatcheff, sentenced to life long imprisonment, a member of the International Left Opposition under the leadership of the brave comrade Trotsky and Rakovsky, against G. Ogianoff, T. Nikoloff, Boris Dimitroff, etc. Mr. District Attorney:

I should never have desired or tolerated your interference into our factional disputes. You are a representative of the power of the bourgeois class against which we are fighting and for which we want to substitute the power of the working class. We are a faction in the labor movement hostile to your class justice and to your class itself of which you are one of the representatives. But in the moment in which my opponents of the other faction turn to you and demand justice from you, I am forced to bring the truth, in the first place, before the working class and then also to the attention of your tribunal. At any rate, the responsibility for this interference on the part of our class enemy into our internal disputes, rests upon my opponents.

For a long time there have been existing several factions within the labor movement; the Right the Centrist and the Left. Of late, the approach of decisive struggles between the classes has brought about an aggravation of the factional disputes.

The Left faction in Bulgaria, as it exists at present, came to the fore towards the end of 1928. The opponents of our faction, incapable of conducting an ideological struggle and of withstanding our tactics, resort to personal attacks, provocation and threats, employing all the means unworthy of a revolutionist. They have more than once published all sorts of stupidities about us, for which they have never brought any proof. We have answered all these provocations in a firm and disciplined manner, by pursuing our course, the course of the Marxist Left Opposition.

They have threatened our friends that they would throw them out from the third floor windows of the Central Prison. They have spat into their plates to deprive them of the meagre nourishment granted by the class enemy. They have attempted to get two of our friends killed at the hands of paid assassins. (At the Haskovo Prison) they have crushed the skull of one of our friends. They have made attacks upon the lives of our friends in the prisons of Silveu, Vidin, etc. They have stolen letters directed to us. That has become a system with them. They murder our friends in Russia, in the fatherland of the workers and peasants. They imprison, they sentence to deportation Bolshevik-Leninists like Trotsky, Rakovsky, Muravov and others. They have shot upon our friends in China and elsewhere. I must emphasize that all these deeds have not been committed by the Communist party but by one of the factions and that is—the Centrist faction, which is only a bureaucratic and paid apparatus, with Stalin as its head. They act without the knowledge or the desire of the Communist party and in this manner they stab a knife into its heart and into the heart of the working class.

Ever since my arrival here, these filthy affairs have also begun with regard to myself. I have more than once challenged them to make public their "accusations" and to counterpose the two points of view. They have always avoided this and have been continuing their attacks.

On the 11th of this month, after some similar quarrels and provocations, I met G. Ogianoff. I told him that they would remain cowards and rogues as long as they would not adopt an open declaration. Upon this, T. Nikoloff and G. Ogianoff almost simultaneously fell upon me with the cry, "Traitor!". Nikoloff beat me with a stick over my head, Ogianoff struck me in the right eye with his fist. This was the cause of the entire scuffle. The result was: One of our comrades was wounded in the head, myself in my ear, and one other also on the head. On their side: Two wounded and several suffering lighter injuries. That is the whole truth, the rest is pure invention.

In No. 16 of the Russian Bulletin, comrade Trotsky, condemning the attack against members of the Left Opposition in Canton, states: "We will never employ terroristic methods in the factional struggles within the labor movement. It is the task of the Left Opposition to take special care with regard to this. Firmness, will power and discipline are indispensable!" Yes, we are fighting against the system of provocation, terrorism and cold blooded murder within our ranks. Can we also make use of this? No and never! We can never employ provocations, terrorism and murder against our comrades. But once we are attacked, we must defend ourselves for we are not dogs. Our factional opponents are at present playing in the role of the thief who cries: "Stop thief!"

They are organizing more attacks. They are employing more provocation and they tell stories of threats and provocations coming from us. We declare that we shall answer all their threats and provocations as we have in the past, with firmness and discipline.

We shall not employ the same weapons as they do, and accuse them of being connected with the management of the prison, but we shall tell the working class that they are being tolerated by this management—and that when they raise their hands against us they are acting unconsciously as a tool of the bourgeoisie.

Stalin himself is unconsciously a tool of the Ramsins when he shoots Opposition fighters, when he exiles them, throws them into prison. And the Ramsins are the conscious instruments of French and international imperialism. History also has its logic and that is the logic of the class struggle.

I protest not only against the situation, which my opponents remain "free" (i. e. they are in the regular prison), which permits them to hunt up witnesses and to continue the slanders against us—I protest against the fact that we, who have been wounded and beaten without any guilt on our part, are condemned to solitary confinement and subjected to an insufferable regime. It is possible that for the necessary enjoyment of sun and air only 30 to 40 minutes are to be granted to us in the day?

I shall furnish you with sufficient evidence that the responsibility does not rest upon my shoulders without attempting to throw it on anyone else. The working class alone will judge who is really guilty and it is to it that I address myself.

D. GATCHEFF

-- Sharp Changes in the Foreign Policy of the French Imperialists --

For the reasons enumerated in the first part of this article, the Lausanne conference, which is to occupy itself with the question of reparations, that is to say, in the last analysis, with the Versailles Treaty, will be confronted with such troublesome and unstable conditions. If it is to be a matter of taking up the Young plan, the French will refuse to participate in it and will maneuver to postpone it. Germany intends to play its own game there, taking advantage of the attitude of the U. S. England considers it futile to lose its time there. If it should be impossible to include the question of the debts to the U. S. As to Italy, she wants to make of it a tribute from which to appeal to the mercy of the U. S., who are in control of all its railroad stocks, by putting forth the threat of a "united front".

It is indisputable that the development of the crisis and the movement of the proletariat and the impoverished peasant classes of Eastern Europe require some sort of a way out for the bourgeoisie. Germany, Poland, Rumania, Hungary live on top of a volcano. Each bourgeoisie is conducting a fierce struggle against the working class, ruining its own home market, and consequently, also the foreign market of the others, reducing the working classes as a whole to actual servitude. But even this policy is insufficient to resist the monstrous onslaught of America, coupled with the strictures of the economic crisis. That is why the struggle against the proletariat cannot go on without the intervention of a certain amount of agreement among the rival imperialism, that is to say, without some of the imperialisms achieving certain temporary advantages over the others. France intends to maintain her own advantages. For this price, she is ready to tolerate the Fascist counter-revolution in Germany, in order later on to drive its point against the U. S. S. R. The East European states are also being encouraged by France to prepare for an armed struggle against the U. S. S. R. But Germany is still seeking to liberate herself from the fetters of Versailles, from the "tribute". For that is the only means of easing her difficulties, but also at the same time the one by which to shatter the hegemony of France in Europe.

The development of this situation which has been maturing for several months has brought about a displacement in the directing apparatus of the French bourgeoisie. Briand was the man of the period of ascent of French imperialism, on the basis of the Versailles Treaty, after the defeat of the Poincare foreign policy. Faced with new difficulties, he has little by little withdrawn from the scene. Heavy blows are in store for France from the outside. The recent ministerial crisis has reflected this forecast. Some demagogic reserves still exist; they constitute first of all: the radical party, which has just asserted, that in so far as foreign policy is concerned, its program jibes with that of Laval.

The necessity of an internal struggle against the proletariat, the growth of unemployment, the awakening of the labor movement, combined with the need to mask the aggressive policy of France and perhaps also the defeats which it has undergone, beneath the veil of pacifism, also constitute important facts. The radicals and socialists will play this role and will doubtless, consciously prepare to play it much more openly in view of the approaching elections.

Thus, once more, and this time with a character of extreme urgency, the clashes between the imperialists show the way to the only genuine solution: the overthrow of the bourgeoisie and the installation of the dictatorship of the proletariat which alone will solve the problem of the socialist United States of Europe. The C. I. is at present engaged in a struggle along the lines of the "nationalist and social" liberation in the different countries. It provides further ary struggle. For us it must be clear that the elections can at best act as a certain barometer of the tendencies to the political situation.

However, to plan the campaign of the party without bearing in mind the situation as it will appear after the elections, the trend of the struggle in the event of a defeat or victory of Fascism, is to lose oneself in a purely parliamentary struggle. Such a situation would result in continued defeats of the party and victory for the black forces of reaction.

What should the party do now? It should prepare for the struggle that will follow the elections. The Opposition has pressed for a change of line on the part of the C. P. G. We have attempted to make the party realize that the situation in Germany is a revolutionary one, that it ought at present prepare its forces for an eventual armed struggle for power. The elections should serve as an indicator of the relation of forces and

If the party is to successfully defeat help in the preparation for the conflict. Fascism and all the forces of reaction, it is necessary that it first change its analysis of the political situation, and reorientate itself accordingly. Concretely, this implies an acceptance on the part of the C. P. G. of the extreme danger of Fascism in Germany. The most important task confronting the party is the organization of the united front of all workers in the struggle against Fascism. But for this it is necessary that Thaelmann and Company first drop the theory that "the main danger is the social democracy".

If the party does not at once change its orientation, the leadership of the C. P. G. together with the T. C. C. L., will be held responsible for the defeat of the German working class. It is they who are responsible for the failure of such a change today and for weakening the position of the workers which signifies, in effect, strengthening the position of Fascism.

The elections will decide nothing definitely. At best they may postpone for a short time the decisive struggle. Between Fascism and Communism only the armed struggle for power will decide the future. Supposing that the Centre-social democratic bloc should win the elections. It will at best give the working class more time to prepare itself for the final struggle. A victory of Fascism will push to the foreground the extreme acuteness of the situation, and force it to a head. In either case the election result will not change the perspective of struggle.

The party must foresee all the implications beforehand. The elections must serve it as a means of organizing its forces. The C. P. G. must begin to actually promote a genuine united front of the workers and their organizations. The perspective must be that of struggle to defeat the Fascist front as the step toward the proletarian seizure of power.

—ALBERT GLOTZER.

for an "alliance" of the countries in which this revolution will be victorious with the U. S. S. R. This perspective is false. The United States of Europe on the basis of Socialism will require a complete fusion with the U. S. S. R. As against the anarchy of capitalist Europe, it is not sufficient to counterpose the "harmonious" economic development in the U. S. S. R., for it is not a matter of a simple hypothetical comparison that remains abstract in the eyes of the proletarian masses. As against the pseudo-efficiency of the imperialists, as against the "European unions", as against the conferences of Lausanne and the European "united front", it is necessary to counterpose the agitation around the slogan of the overthrow of the bourgeoisie, for the realization of a Soviet United States of Europe. The internal ruin of bourgeois Europe is characterized by its extremely chopped up, parcelled off economic picture. This tattered character is an obstacle to the economic development of society as a whole. But the bourgeoisie seeks only profit and the advantages of competition. Only the proletariat, only the broad exploited masses can realize the socialization of the principal means of production, after the overthrow of the bourgeoisie and the conquest of political power, as well as the socialization exchange production and planned economy for a broadened market, through the elimination of the manifold national barriers winding around Europe. This is the perspective which we counterpose to the bourgeois utopias.

LEARN FROM THE WORKERS

The sound impulse of the militant workers to maintain solidarity with persecuted members of their class under all conditions has again been demonstrated by the latest actions of Local 2090 of the carpenters' union in regard to the marine workers' defense. At the same time it has been shown again how far upstart bureaucrats, holding office by appointment and freed from accountability to the ranks, can depart from the principles they claim to espouse, and even to monopolize.

Local 2090 contains quite a few progressive and militant unionists, including a number of sympathizers of the official Communist Party. The I. L. D. has had a strong support there and the carpenters have responded every time to its appeals for class war prisoners. They took the idea of non-partisan labor defense seriously, apparently, that the officials of the I. L. D. who had talked to them so much about it. Consequently when an appeal was made to them for the marine workers they responded just as loyally as they had done in other cases. The principle had taken root in the union, and the few members, inspired by the Party and I. L. D. bureaucrats, who tried to sabotage the action succeeded only in damaging their own prestige.

It might be thought that this warning would have been sufficient to put a stop to such trifling, at least in this union. But the Stalinist generals and field marshals have hard heads, very little shame and absolutely no respect for the intelligence of the workers. They thought there must be some mistake, and they undertook to correct it. Hacker, the district organizer of the I. L. D., took an evening off from his arduous labors for the principle of non-partisan support of class war prisoners to go to the union and explain that it did not apply in this case. Having learned by the previous experience that the carpenters could not be turned against the prisoners, he switched the attack to their defense committee and proposed that the union should withdraw its support from that body.

The ruse did not work. Without showing any prejudice one way or the other, the carpenters decided to hear both sides before coming to their final decision. They invited the defense committee to send a speaker to the next meeting. After hearing him they voted to continue their support of the marine defense committee until the end, without slackening any of their help to the cases defended by the I. L. D.

In this action the workers gave two lessons to the bureaucrats. On the one hand they showed that what they are really concerned about is workingmen in jail and not the auspices of their defense. On the other hand, rejecting the sabotaging tricks of the Hackers, they maintained their solidarity with the prisoners defended by the I. L. D., in spite of the Hackers. In both cases we believe they were right. Their actions show a line of principle, and that is what is needed to find the right answers to questions of the class struggle.

UNIFIED FRONT IN PRACTICE

We have heard a lot of twaddle about the united front from the Left Opposition who have described our struggle for principle as "sectarianism". But for all that, the first concrete example of the united front which has not involved a sacrifice of principle—the marine workers' defense committee—was initiated by the "sectarians" of the Opposition. So far all of its activities have been of a positive character and we have no reason to regret our participation in it. What the future will bring we cannot know, but this much is already clear: the formation of the committee carried into life an almost forgotten principle, it rendered a timely service to persecuted workers and therefore to the class they represent. Thereby it is justified.

The event may have a certain effect on future developments in the Left wing labor movement. Hopes—as well as fears and speculations, depending on the source—are spoken of all around in this regard. But in our opinion the hopes as well as the fears are considerably exaggerated. We think now as we thought before that the problem of the united front, taking all the circumstances—and primarily the splits and relation of forces in the Communist ranks—into consideration, is a long way from solution. The work of the marine workers defense committee is at best only a contribution, by way of example, toward that solution.

Most empty and groundless of all is the talk about our participation in this joint struggle signifying a "change of policy" on the part of the Communist League. Those who draw this conclusion show that they know no more now than they knew before about the question of the united front. The defense committee is in no sense a political combination. It is not a union for joint struggle on a wide front of the class struggle. It is a simple agreement to cooperate on a single concrete issue, the most obvious one and the one having the widest appeal to the honest workers in all camps, and in a case which would brook no delay. You cannot stall around and negotiate very long when workers are facing trial; you must either help to defend them or desert them. We chose the former course without any illusions as to the possible results and without altering our fundamental conceptions on the subject of the united front in general.

Another point needs to be considered in appraising this conditional, limited and—from our point of view—unavoidable united front action. That is its experimental character. Our part in the endeavor was conceived as a class duty at the moment. We never guaranteed the results of the effort. So far they are good, far better in fact than was to be expected. But we are willing to leave predictions as to the final outcome to others. We will draw our conclusions at the end of the experience.

Nevertheless the experiment up to date has all tended to confirm in practice the conceptions we held in advance regarding the difficulties of carrying through a united front action without the participation of the official Party. The logic of the situation works against its success, and it is only the exceptional circumstances and the limited character of the issue, which we naturally took into consideration beforehand, that prevented a disruption of the present action.

The rude provocations of the Stalinists could only have the effect of nourishing and strengthening the anti-Communist elements, which are present in this case as they will always be. The Stalinists, by their whole course, prepared the ground for the transformation of the defense committee into a concentration point against Communism. This did not happen, and it is not likely to happen. There were and remain certain safeguards against it. By the nature of the case and the origin of the movement the Communist are in a position to fight more effectively against such a distortion. The principle of unity—against the capitalists and not against the Communist Party—has been firmly established in the policy and work of the committee and will not be easy to change. And finally, this direction is strengthened by the attitude of the prisoners who have a decisive word and have spoken it clearly for this policy.

All of this goes to show that we are dealing here with an exceptional situation from which it would be most unwise to draw hasty and general conclusions for the future. We must rather concentrate on the problem of the moment. The treacherous maneuvers of the Stalinists have been branded as they deserved to be. The task now is to hold the defense movement to the basis of principle upon which it has worked up to now, which alone could maintain its class unity and justify its existence.

MORGENSTERN AND GOODMAN

The imprisonment of revolutionary workers is nothing new, even in America where only the first skirmishes of the great class struggle have so far taken place, and Morgenstern and Goodman are only two more added to many. Yet the departure of these militants represents a unique development and has an exceptional significance. It fell to them to be the first to fall victims to direct class vengeance against the revolutionary wing of the Party. The case against them was purely political; the indictment was based exclusively on the contents of our unemployment leaflet. Hitherto this persecution has been refracted through the distorting lens of the controlling centrism, which is a form of alien class influence upon the movement. In the persons of Morgenstern and Goodman, American capitalism has struck directly at the Left Opposition. Thereby it has conferred a singular honor upon them and upon the cause they symbolize and represent.

Beyond all doubting there will be many more to follow in the stormy times that must intervene between the present period of preparation and beginning and the day of the final victory. Our doctrines which are destined to become the fighting ideas of millions will receive their verification in the heat of mighty conflicts in which no resource of violence and oppression will be neglected by the class enemy. In these fires the cadres of the revolutionary vanguard will be steered and tested. There will be many victims. The example of Morgenstern and Goodman will have its value for those who are to follow. We can all be confident of this because those who carry our flag into the Pennsylvania jail are not strangers to us. We know them as fighters. These young and unassuming, and yet stalwart, revolutionists take with them our affection and our faith.

Despite their youth, Morgenstern and Goodman have already earned their standing in the Communist movement; there are six or seven years of activity behind them. They belong to the founders and organizers of the Left Opposition in America, and before that they fought on the side of the proletarian tendency in the party. In the ranks of the Opposition they have been distinguished by their qualities of stability and endurance, by their stubborn adherence to principle and their capacity to go against the stream. They combined a courageous open fight for our ideas against heavy odds with the modesty that befits the young revolutionist who doesn't know it all. In them there is not a trace of the ugly presumptuousness of those academic upstarts who conceive of revolutionary education as a set of scholastic exercises. The jail will not hurt Morgenstern and Goodman, it will only make them stronger.

As is known, the Stalinists, who dispose of the party press and the defense organization of the I. L. D. and abuse the good faith of the workers who support them, refused any assistance to our two Philadelphia comrades. They deserted them in the court of the class enemy and gave not a published word of notice to their conviction and sentence. We will not forget that. In the final accounting for their rudeness, their dis-

The Right Wing of Spanish Communism

The Truth Concerning the Actual Policy and Influence of the Maurin Group

The Spanish Communist movement is divided into three distinct groups: Right, Left and the Center representing the "official" wing of Communism. In these divisions, the Spanish movement is not at all unlike the movement in every other important country. Where it differs is in the relative strength of each of the three wings. In distinction from most other countries, the Left Opposition in Spain can easily stand comparison with the official party from more standpoints than one. In addition, the Right wing group in Spain—at least at the time I visited the country; I learn that the ratios have since changed considerably in favor of the party—is as large in one district as the official party is nationally, if not larger. And what is more, enjoys practically a monopoly on the Communist movement so far as Catalonia is concerned.

The Spanish Right is organized into the Catalan-Balearic Communist Federation and its electoral apparatus, the Workers' and Peasants' Bloc which, in all important respects, supercedes the Federation. The Federation was the representative of official Communism in Catalonia until a short time ago when the split took place between the Catalonians and the Madrid Executive Committee of the party over the insanely sectarian trade union policy which the latter sought to impose upon the party members against the will of a majority of them. The trade union dispute which was of such vital importance at the height of the revolutionary upsurge—involving as it did the whole future of the National Confederation of Labor which was being resurrected—was rendered increasingly acute by the extraordinary bureaucratic regime prevailing in the party. The attempt of an irresponsible and unrepresentative clique, terming itself the "Executive Committee" to foist itself upon the membership, willfully, met with obdurate resistance, particularly from the Catalan Communists.

The result was that, as has happened everywhere else, the bull-headed arrogosity, their violence and their slander we will also present our bill for their treachery to Morgenstern and Goodman.

In their actions in this case there is revealed, as by a promiscuous flash, what these people will be capable of in the future when events will put the great class questions categorically, when no one will be able to dissimulate, to hide or to evade. The day of reckoning will come. Let us hope that it will come before their course unfolds its ultimate logic in a catastrophe for the movement. The names of Morgenstern and Goodman will be a banner for us in the fight to hasten on that day.

The Litvinoff Stand on Disarmament

The "Disarmament Conference of the great imperialist powers is taking place at a time of the moral collapse of bourgeois pacifism. In the face of the bloody Sino-Japanese conflict, the bankruptcy of the Kellogg Pact, the League of Nations and the various other designs of the imperialists to fool the masses with illusory perspectives of international peace, the imperialists in Geneva feel the shaking of the very foundations of their "peace" institutions. The masses in capitalist countries who are suffering, starving and in a state of fear of an approaching world conflict of unheard of dimensions, have lost their confidence in their present rulers. They seek a new world, for an inspiring thought that would show them the way out of their torturous conditions. Who could be expected to bring them that inspiration if not a representation of the Soviet Union, who could present the exploited and deceived masses that vitally needed message in their hour of desperation, if not the builders of a free working land?

The opportunity to fulfill this historic mission was conferred upon M. Litvinoff by the Soviet Government. Litvinoff did fulfill his mission, but in a tragic manner. His proposals for peace at the Geneva Conference were disappointing and if they had any value at all, it was that of soothing the shattered nerves of the imperialist diplomats and morally strengthening the tottering structure of the so-called League of Nations, the Kellogg Pact and other schemes of deceiving the masses. Litvinoff's proposals may also have the effect of reinforcing the hopes of the soft-boned, chicken-hearted liberals and social-democrats who are sharing in this pacifist fraud with the imperialists. The workers of the capitalist countries, the millions of unemployed, could not read anything out of Litvinoff's proposals.

What did Litvinoff propose? A remedy against war? He proposed disarmament to the capitalist governments, total disarmament, if acceptable, partial, if more practical. How well it fitted in with the program of the Conference and its objectives! The Conference is out to accomplish just this modest task of reaching a common agreement on reducing armaments. They all talk about it. They all offer plans to achieve it. Litvinoff's proposals were just appropriate for the occasion. Besides, he is moderate and conciliatory. He is ready to compromise on a plan of partial disarmament so as not to appear "impractical" to the imperialists. In a word he was obliging and willing to cooperate. If there was any distinction between his proposals and those of the French or Italian delegates, that distinction was only technical, but not in essence. As put by the New York Times correspondent: "Litvinoff completes the circle of these suggestions. As was fitting for the delegates of the New Russia he went to the extreme limit." Litvinoff repeatedly emphasized, "The only way to prevent war is general and total disarmament." This half truth is the crux of the whole problem. As a Marxist, Litvinoff must know that this half truth lies at the foundation of bourgeois pacifism and that it is an utterly false theory. He must know that according to Marx, wars are inevitable under capitalism. He did not, however, mention a word about the abolition of the capitalist system a condition sine qua non of the abolition of wars. He did not as much as suggest the necessity for the international proletariat to achieve the socialist revolution if not in their own interests, at any rate in the interests of the Soviet Union. On the contrary, he said, "The sole aim of the Soviet government is to build up socialism in the Soviet Union." In other words, the Soviet government wished to be assured by the capitalist governments that their capitalist nature would not assert itself in regard to the Soviet Union.

The same New York Times correspondent remarks, that, "In international quarters, the Soviet delegation was credited with being marked with moderation and as likely to increase the possibility of success for the Conference." Surely, the correspondent has in mind the moral success of the imperialist leaders of the Conference. Thus Litvinoff's mission instead of being an inspiration to the international proletariat has turned into its opposite by rendering moral success to international imperialism. Such is the logic of Stalinist dialectics. Litvinoff went to the "extreme limit" of this logic.

For the sake of comparison with the true Bolshevik-Leninist attitude taken by another representative of the Soviet government, we shall quote from Chicherin's note to President Wilson in reply to his message to the U. S. Congress of January 18, 1918, on the question of the League of Nations and the conditions for World Peace. Dated October 24, 1918:

"But the League of Nations must not only settle the present war. It must make all wars impossible. It cannot be unknown to you, Mr. President, that the capitalists of your country contemplate continuing in the future the same policy of conquests, and of exaction of high profits from China and Siberia, and that fearing the competition on the part of the Japanese capitalists they are making military preparations in order to overcome the resistance which may be offered them by Japan. You undoubtedly know of similar plans of the ruling capitalist circles with regard to other territories and other nations. Knowing this, you will have to agree with us that it is not possible to leave the factories, mines, banks in the hands of private individuals, who always use the great means of production created by the masses of the people to export the products and capital to foreign countries, to extract from them excessive profits, provoking imperialist wars by their struggle over the booty. We propose, therefore, Mr. President, that the expropriation of the capitalists of all countries be adopted as another of the basic principles of the League of Nations, etc. . . ."

Why did not Litvinoff take this correct stand? He could not because that would not be in accordance with Stalin's theory of "Socialism in one country," which is a reversal of Leninist internationalism. This morbid theory is the original source of the opportunism and moral stagnation to which the official Communist movement is doomed by the Stalin leadership. It is this spurious theory that has limited the role of the Communist parties to that of mere frontier-guardians of the Soviet Union, with little value and significance in the international proletarian revolution.

Lenin's internationalism is considered by the Stalin leadership "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism" and its place is taken by national opportunism. Marxian teachings on the laws and development of capitalism are substituted by petty-bourgeois pacifism and putrid opportunism. The signing of the Kellogg Pact by the Stalin Government was a violent breach of Lenin's internationalism. Litvinoff's proposals at the Geneva Conference are of the same character.

Lenin conducted a bitter struggle before and after the world war against pacifism. The Stalin leadership at the Geneva Disarmament Conference has given aid and comfort to the imperialists and their pacifist agents. Let the Communist workers take note!

ALBERT ORLAND.

ance and blundersomeness of Stalinism literally drove hundreds upon hundreds of the best Communist workers into the camp of the confusionists and opportunists. Skillful leader, popular figure in the party and among the workers, revolutionary of long standing and prestige, Joaquin Maurin, with his associates Arlandis, Arguer, Sese, Miravittles, and others, was able to win the leadership over the whole Communist organization of Catalonia "and the Balearic Islands". To such an extent that the official party today, while it grows with sometimes phenomenal speed in other parts of the land, has practically no strength whatsoever in Catalonia, where the Maurins have some four to six thousand (the figure has increased since I left) in the Bloc.

The structural relations between the Federation and the Bloc are reminiscent to an American Communist of the fabulous plan of Pepper & Co. to build a mass party in the United States by the simple expedient of organizing the "Federated Farmer-Labor Party" on a "mass scale" and then suddenly converting it into the Communist Party. In Catalonia, too, the Federation controls the Bloc, and is led by precisely the same people dressed in different uniforms as occasion requires. But there is one feature of it which is worse than what the glittering Pepper conceived. While the still-born F. F. L. P. was at least formally conceived as a bloc composed of various organizations otherwise independent of each other, and admitting no individual membership, the Workers' and Peasants' Bloc is in no real sense of the word. The Communist Federation directs it; like the Federation, the Bloc is based upon individual and not group membership; in a word, it is an enlarged caricature of the Federation itself, and nothing more.

Yet there is something more. The Maurinist justification for the two organizations is that the Federation should be "pure" and take in only educated revolutionists, Communists; it must be somewhat "narrow". But "as Lenin taught", the Communist party, i. e., the Federation, must surround itself with broad mass organizations into which even non-Communist elements may be taken. Such an organization, the Bloc is supposed to be. It is much larger than the Federation; it takes into its ranks all sorts of elements, including "Catalan Left" supporters and people to the right of even this bourgeois group.

The whole point, however, is that the "Bloc" increasingly dominates the "Federation", instead of vice versa—that is, assuming for the moment that the whole idea is not a vulgar derision of Lenin's teachings. In the elections, it is not the Communist organization which is presented, but the candidates and platform of the Workers' and Peasants' Bloc. In this case, substance marches side by side with form. The expelled minority which Maurin finally criticized, sharply assailed the whole policy of the Right wing leaders in the elections. Wherever the Bloc was active—and most of its militants are also Federationists—the face of Communism was heavily veiled with the more attractive colors of opportunism. Instead of advancing and popularizing the revolutionary slogans, the Bloc organizers devoted their attention to playing upon the petty bourgeois prejudices of the nationalistic elements. It is no exaggeration to say that the largest proportion of the Bloc's growth has been among the petty bourgeois elements and among the employees and office workers, particularly in Barcelona, where the factory workers in the Right wing organization are very few. On the countryside, the members of the Bloc are mostly peasants, tenants and even small proprietors. These elements, flocking to the banner of the Bloc, do not remain passive there. They exert a growing petty bourgeois pressure to which the leaders yield with a grace learned from the art books of opportunism.

The source of strength of the Maurins lies precisely there; in its petty bourgeois surrender to the backwardness of the workers and peasants of Catalonia. The party of Macia, the "Esquerra Catalana", the various other factions of the Catalanian bourgeoisie and petty bourgeoisie, have all moved to the Right since the proclamation of the republic. This is particularly true of Macia, the former idol of the petty bourgeoisie. The marked shift to the Right of what was formerly the Left wing of the Catalonians, has created a vacuum in the field. Politics abhors a vacuum as much as nature does. It seeks to "fill the vacuum." In Catalonia, the space left vacant in politics by the Macians is being occupied by the Maurinist group, the increasingly popular candidate for the post of extreme Left wing of the Catalonians.

Not having an influence over the decisive sections of the industrial workers, particularly those organized in the C. N. T. (National Confederation of Labor, the strongest trade union center in Spain, controlled by anarcho-syndicalists, and now by the "pure" anarchists), the Maurins have been making the most desperate efforts to gain a real foothold there. In this field too, the vulgar opportunism of this Right wing group bobs to the surface. In order to lend himself the appearance of a strength he does not possess, Maurin talks constantly of the all-saving head of a united front in which no other organization, not even the official Communist party, figures at all. The syndicalists and the anarchists do not even bother to reply to Maurin's fantastic proposals and schemes. For, with all the insistence upon his "Leninist correctness", Maurin has developed an idea for Spain which has few if any rivals in recent revolutionary history. He approaches the C. N. T. with the plan that it should take power! Neither more or less. The patent ridiculous of the very idea being propounded to precisely those elements—anarchists and syndicalists—subsequently made it necessary for Maurin to retreat a bit on the slogan.

Maurin spent some time trying to convince me that his group had never raised the slogan of "All power to the C. N. T.!" They had proposed, he claimed, the slogan of "All Power to the Proletariat!" Unfortunately for Maurin, I read that very evening a copy of the popular agitation organ printed in the Catalan tongue and edited by Miravittles, in which the slogan of "All Power to the C. N. T.!" was repeated and elaborated upon. Later on, a copy of Maurin's official organ, La Batalla, reprints an interview which he granted the Buenos Aires La Nacion, in which he says literally:

"The Trotskyist faction is insignificant. It is made up of a few dozen more or less unknown intellectuals. Its specific weight is practically nil. Towards the Spanish Revolution, they take a completely Right (!) position. They advocate that the working class cannot yet aspire to taking the power when it has no constituted Soviet organization. They propose as a solution that the Socialist party should assume the power. Their reformist social democratic past weighs down upon them enormously. The Workers' and Peasants' Bloc contends that the working class should take the power. And through the medium of hypothetical Soviets but with the aid of the existing organizations. Without being syndicalists, we believe that the syndicates (trade unions) can be powerful instruments in the taking of power by the proletariat. We propagate the taking of the power by the C. N. T. We will lend all our aid to a syndicalist government."

What a "syndicalist government" would look like, what it is, what its ingredients are, what it resembles—remain secrets sealed with seven unbreakable seals which not even the syndicalists can—or have they even cared to—open. It is hard to believe that Maurin does not "know better"; it is the plan of the Right wing opportunists, however, to win the syndicalist workers by this slogan; what is gained, in actuality, is the muddying of the waters and the spread of confusion among the workers. In this respect the Catalanian Right wing is no different from its sisters-under-the-skin in other countries. Maurin is clever enough, by the way, not to affiliate with the Brandlerist "International". It would gain him absolutely nothing, for he knows what this "International" is worth, and it might shut the door for him to re-entry into the official party on his own terms, i. e., as party leader. He told me that Brandler had sent a letter of inquiry, and that B. D. Wolfe, of the Lovestone group, had also written to attempt to establish relations. But the wily Maurin wants to have nothing to do with the rest of the Right wing, although he is blood relative to them. Yet he is like Brandler and Lovestone in that he is prepared to criticize the effects of Stalinism in any country in the world—except in the U. S. S. R., where, apparently, the ordinary laws of the physical and mental sciences no longer operate.

It should not be thought that Maurin is in any mood to capitulate on Stalin's terms. He is too flushed with the progress of the Bloc to do that. Already, a delegation of the Comintern containing such stars as Bela Kun and Humbert-Droz has visited Spain for the main purpose of winning over the Federation. But so compromised and discredited is the official party among the workers there, that the Maurin machine was able to nullify practically all the arduous labors of the delegation. Out of the thousands "available", the C. I. got only about three score comrades, led by Arlandis and Sese, who demanded of Maurin that he actually unite with the official party instead of merely writing appeals on the subject. Maurin, who is always ready with an elaborate speech on the absence of democratic procedure and of the right to speak freely in the official party, promptly expelled the whole group of Arlandis and Sese. Hence, by the by, a little burlesque was enacted, with the fiercest passion that bureaucracy had gripped the vitals of the Federation, that Maurin was a dictator, that the rank and file could no longer discuss the problems of the revolutionary movement, that expulsions were a bureaucratic answer to criticisms, etc., etc. Their cries had little effect, for only a short weeks before their own expulsion, they themselves, together with Maurin "the dictator", had engineered the expulsion of members of the Federation who sympathized with the Left Opposition and insisted upon discussing the disputed issues—comrades Molins, de Cabo and others. It all depends upon whose ox is yoked!

The Comintern failed to break Maurin's power in Catalonia primarily because the alternative it had to offer caused the Communist workers to shrink away. In this case as in all others, almost everything depends upon the party. An incompetent party, which refuses to learn and therefore cannot teach and lead, will never produce big results. The Stalinization of the Spanish Communist Party is being paid for today by having thousands of militant workers and peasants led deeper into the swamp of compromise and confusion by the clique of Joaquin Maurin.

Germany Before the Elections

The latest dispatches from Berlin report the long expected announcement of Hitler's candidacy in the coming presidential elections to be held on March 19. The New York Times of February 24, 1932, in its editorial comment on this subject, chides the German reactionary brusquely for his "tactical" mistake. "By lining up with the venerable president of the Reich," the Times goes on to say, "he would have added to his dimensions as a responsible statesman without surrendering anything of his prestige as a crusader." It is quite plain that Wall Street is rather vexed with the developments in German internal policy. Reconciled for some time now with Fascist ascendancy it nevertheless dreads the thought of social convulsions conjured up by the picture of a break with "legality" by the Nazi leader, to whose popularity with international reaction it has, of late, contributed not a little. In a combustible political atmosphere like the present, what with the rumbling of the cannon still in full swing in the Far East, every abrupt turn in the situation of any of the outstanding European countries is a cause for the greatest anxiety on the part of American capitalism already dizzily spinning in the whirlpool of the world crisis.

But, in Germany itself, it is not only the National Socialists who are oriented for sharp and open class warfare. The entire bourgeoisie is prepared for it, knows that it must come, and lends the most direct aid to the Fascists in their aims. Only a short two weeks ago, Groener, Hindenburg's Minister of the Reichswehr lifted the ban against National Socialists in the army, an act equivalent to an open offer of military collaboration with the Hitler hordes. A German newspaper, the Spandauer Volksblatt, brings an even more interesting report:

"For weeks, intensive military exercises are being held on the parade grounds of Doberitz (near Berlin). The participants in these exercises are National Socialists. As many as 3000 men have been counted at each field day in the course of the last few weeks. . . . The exercises take place on the property of the Reichswehr. In front of the entrances, soldiers stand on guard. These are entrances bearing signs to the effect that civilians can pass only with the permission of the commander. . . ."

In addition to all this, there is, of course, the Nazi terror in the proletarian quarters, which goes on unabated, without any interference on the part of the police. On the other hand, all attempts of the working class to take measures against this terror, are put down without much ado, no matter from what section or tendency they arise. In one of his proclamations to the army, the same Groener declares:

"I will never tolerate the preparation of an auxiliary militia, as it has been spoken of in certain Reichs Banner (reformist) circles. . . . Such organizations lead in the last instance, to workers' and Soldiers' Councils and similar revolutionary formations". It must be remembered, in passing, that the Reichs Banner is not even as exclusively working class organization by the composition of its membership. But the fact alone that the Reichs Banner does include a great many social democratic workers, makes it insufferable to this minister of the "democratic German Republic", for which the Scheidemanns and the Eberts saw fit to destroy the flower of the German proletariat in 1919.

While the Fascists are feverishly preparing for their attack behind the scenes, the attention of the entire German nation is occupied by the forthcoming elections. The Fascists have selected Hitler, the Centre and the middle parties, Hindenburg; and the Communists, Thaelmann for their respective presidential candidates. The social democrats are chiefly concerned with ways and means of making the former Hohenzollern Field Marshall acceptable enough for the workers in their ranks, as the defender of democracy! This despicable aim of the social democrats, which falls in line with their entire tradition of working class betrayal, is one that stands open to successful attack on the part of the German Communism. The social democratic workers are just about nauseated with the shilly-shallying of their leadership, who by their tactic of piece-meal capitulation to the Bruening-

Hitler policies have lost nearly everything that still held the workers in their ranks attached to the social democratic party. A very great part of the social democratic electorate will undoubtedly vote for Thaelmann in the elections, regardless of the decisions of their leadership. And this fact is of great importance for the Communists, provided they can link up the extra-parliamentary struggle for the social democratic workers with it.

Unfortunately, the German Communist Party, bound hand and foot by the utterly false tactics of the Stalinist leadership, with its disastrous theories of "social Fascism" and the "united front from below", has not been able to progress very far in the struggle for the reformist workers in the factories. Despite the enormous increase in the Communist vote during the elections held in the course of the last two years, with the S. P. G. losing ground continually, the situation in the factories still remains well within the hands of the social democracy. 83.6 out of every 100 Works Council seats still go to the reformists, while only 3.4 per cent go to the Communists. Without an advance in the factories, all the gains in the parliamentary election will have no meaning. But in order to push forward in the factories, the German party must give up its false, un-Leninist conception of the united front, cast aside the obstructionist theory of "social Fascism" and reorientate itself along the

The Glass-Steagall Bill -- A Measure to Aid the Bankers

American capitalism twisting and squirming under the lash of economic law, is making strenuous efforts the present time to bring about a revival. Plan after plan is being thrown at the country, only to go down in defeat, leaving barely a ripple on the declining crisis curves. But a few short days after the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the administration at Washington announced the new, bi-partisan, anti-depression measure, the now much heralded Glass-Steagall Bill.

The capitalist class of this country, failing to see any indication of a coming revival, even now, two and a half years after the stock market crash, are attempting to, through a series of well timed and big scale maneuvers to restore this "confidence" that has supplanted all their economic theory. It is only in an actual analysis of the proposed steps that their valuelessness as measures for revival can be exposed. Particularly is this true of the present Glass-Steagall bill.

"Big Free Gold Gain", "Credit Expansion", "Increased Currency", we read in the newspaper headlines. What are the actual facts? Is there a stringency of credit at the present time? What might this "big free gold" lead to? These are the questions to be answered.

Any economist will admit that were there a demand for credit at the present time and the banks were unable to satisfy this demand, any steps taken to relieve the credit strain would be steps for revival. But is this condition prevalent today? By a mere glance at the low interest rates of the past year one would be forced to give only one answer. Industry desiring funds for investment have no difficulty finding lenders. There is no credit crisis—except on the side of the borrowers.

Now, to examine the actual measure. Under the existing laws, member banks of the Federal Reserve system are permitted to rediscount (borrow on) certain commercial short term loans from the Federal Reserve Bank. This so-called self liquidating paper consists of loans secured by actual commercial and industrial goods to be realized upon soon. Thus should industry demand more credit, the various member banks can apply to the Federal Reserve system with these eligible notes as security for loans in the form of increased currency, which money is then loaned to industry. The cry is now raised of the exhaustion of the total of eligible paper. Item number one of the new measure would make eligible for rediscount less secure paper than at present. This is hailed as the powerful tonic to aid "our" sickened industry. Will it do this?

Any analysis of the facts shows the futility of the measure in this regard

Lines of a broad proletarian struggle against genuine Fascism, as outlined by comrade Trotsky and the Left Opposition. Instead of persisting in its ostrich policy which amounts to a surrender to the class enemy without a struggle.

The presidential elections, considered not as a decisive struggle, but as an opportunity to rally the workers and to force the breach between them and their reformist misleaders, offers another great opportunity to the Communist Party of Germany to make up for lost ground.

New York Dress Strike Grows Workers' Militancy Attains Unity on Picket Line

Since the International Ladies Garment Workers Union issued its strike call in the New York dress shops on Tuesday Feb. 16, this battle has gained in momentum with a claimed 20,000 workers out and approximately 60 percent of the shops closed at the time of going to press. On a whole it is one encouraging sign of working class resistance to the slashing capitalist offensive.

With the needle trades workers this is a tradition. While they have suffered untold misery from the sweatshop conditions under which they have been working for years, they have always been found in the very front ranks of the class struggle. This splendid tradition, however, has continually been most outrageously abused by the treacherous sell-outs, victimization and expulsions which is the record of the union officialdom. It practically paralyzed the union in 1927. Yet with the aid of the class enemy the corrupt officials were able to continue themselves in power and suppress the rank and file revolt. But the price paid was the one of re-establishment of the misery of the sweatshop. A heavy price for a union to pay.

The garment workers union has succeeded in recuperation in the sense that the ranks have again been strengthened.

But the same leadership remains in control. Only the intense pressure of the membership brought the issues of abolition of the sweatshop to a head now and resulted in the strike. The officials did everything in their power to ward off struggle. Surely this is sufficient reason to bear close watching of these officials. Sell-outs are their practice and only the rank and file itself can properly guard its own interest.

There is a considerable difference in this strike compared to the one two years ago. That was too obviously a made up affair of collaboration with the bosses. The latter were actively helping in shutting down the power and ejecting the workers from the shops. The difference now is in the fact that the workers are more definitely asserting themselves and pressing for their demands.

The central issues in the strike are the demands for abolition of the sweatshop conditions, for a minimum piece work price of not less than $1.10 per hour, and for the forty hour, five day week. The jobbers and manufacturers object, of course, particularly to the minimum wage demand and want to maintain the privilege of the right to reorganization in the shops—that is the hiring and firing at will.

The strike has become a powerful one immensely adding to the ranks of those following the call of the Left wing union entering into the conflict one week earlier. Despite the lack of a unity policy in the strike the workers have succeeded in establishing unity on the picket lines. This has served to reduce actual scabbing to a minimum. Naturally the manufacturers have begun to feel disturbed which has become particularly expressed in the statements made by the jobbers and inside manufacturers associations of negotiations depending upon the inroads of the strike into the unorganized shops. That considerable such inroads are made can be gleaned from the fact that while the I. L. G. W. has within its ranks only about 15 percent of the dress shops, nevertheless the strike has become about 60 per cent effective.

With the striking ranks attaining unity on the picket line the monstrous policy of strike leadership becomes so much more outstanding. The I. L. G. W. officials are still pursuing their old game of working hand in glove with one set of bosses helping them against another, of working with the jobbers and inside manufacturers against the unorganized contractors. That is playing the bosses game and benefits them only. It contains the very germ of sell-out and defeat. But in the very rank and file unity and determination lies the hope that it can be circumvented. A victory of the dressmakers strike will become a powerful incentive to stimulate general working class resistance to the capitalist wage cutting offensive.

In this situation the responsibility of the official party leadership in control of the policy of the Left wing receives accentuated importance. Continuation of blunders can only strengthen the hands of the Right wing officials and thereby benefit the class enemy. The present course of the official party policy accomplishes precisely that. It still proceeds from a proclaimed intention of smashing the "company union" and smashing the "fake strike". How ridiculous that must sound to the thousands of workers on strike one can well imagine. They mean their strike in deadly earnest. They cannot have any too great illusions of intentions of the Right wing leadership. But what they require is assistance. Their fight is one against sell-outs as well as against the class enemy. They should be able to look for such assistance from the Left wing.

Unity has a very distinct meaning to workers in struggle. The remarkable achievements on the picket line should be a serious warning to the party officials that the essence of this word cannot be played with. This strike is only one stage in the series of conflicts which the future holds; but it does offer an opportunity for a revolutionary policy of working class unification. It holds the possibility of wielding this weapon so much dreaded by the employers as well as by their agents in labor's ranks.

Negotiations for settlements are already in progress. The industrial union reports several shops settled. The I. L. G. W. leaders can be expected to spare no efforts to accommodate the bosses. In this they can count upon a coat of whitewash from the Lovestone group which is already laying its basis by accusations of scabbery by the Left wing. That, of course, will prove primarily how far this group has traveled in deserting the Left wing and all it stands for. But above all it again emphasizes the responsibility of the revolutionary party. A correct policy of trade union unity, a preliminary actual and genuine struggle for a united front in this strike, a united front which will bring the two unions into common struggle for the immediate common objective, would now spell a serious step forward in organizing the general working class resistance to the capitalist offensive.

Canadian Workers Fight Against Reaction

In Canada the infamous "Section 98" of the criminal code is being enforced with a vengeance. Its most outstanding case was the trial and conviction of eight Communist Party leaders. But that was only a prelude to a yet greater objective.

The Canadian bourgeoisie, the same as their worthy brothers in every other capitalist country, are endeavoring to issue out of its crisis primarily on the backs of the workers. And, of course, the criminal code prosecutions are primarily the beginning to a general and more intense attack upon the working class in an effort to reduce the standard of living. It is significant of the role of capitalist agents within labor's ranks that precisely in this situation Mr. Moore of the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress steps forward with the statement that in his opinion "these men had a fair trial".

During the year 1931 there have been within the borders of Canada over 700 working class arrests. Over 110 years of imprisonment was handed out by the courts in 155 convictions. Working class meetings were broken up and in many cases entirely prohibited. Revolutionary literature was banned. The Daily Worker and the Freiheit are prohibited entry into Canada. Workers upon whom any possible suspicion of revolutionary inclinations can be placed are stopped and questioned in the streets. This has already been the experience of several of our Left Opposition comrades. Some time ago the book "The Proletarian Revolution" by Trotsky was banned. Just now our new pamphlet "Germany the Key to the International Situation" has suffered the same fate.

It is encouraging, however, that the official Communist party of Canada, by these serious experiences at least have learned one valuable lesson. It is actually making some efforts toward building a genuine united front movement for the repeal of "Section 98". The response of working class organization have been so broad and wide that it gives gratifying testimony to the power and validity of this policy. The Left Opposition is participating fully in this movement. At a recent united front repeal conference held in Hamilton, Ont., our comrade Green was seated as a representative of the Communist League of America with Silver representing the Toronto conference district. Selected on a delegation to present demands upon Premier Henry in regard to the repeal are our comrades Spector and Silver.

Glotzer Meetings

Responses from the various cities to our second national tour have been excellent. In Buffalo, N. Y. the local branch of the Proletarian Party Opposition made arrangements for a public lecture for comrade Glotzer under its own auspices.

Arrangements are now also being completed for a radio address to be delivered by comrade Glotzer from the St. Louis station KMOX, on Wednesday afternoon March 2nd. Further announcements of this we expect to make in our next issue. In Minneapolis our branch is preparing for a debate with A. C. Townley, the organizer of the Non-Partisan League.

The fact that comrade Glotzer has just returned from a visit with comrade Trotsky, able to give first hand information of the discussions with the revolutionary leader in exile, able also to give first hand information of his impressions of the movement in the European countries, is proving of real interest and a stimulus to the projected public meetings. At the time of going to press the swing through Canada has been completed and comrade Glotzer is heading west. The schedule for the balance of this tour is as follows:

West Frankfort, Ill. . . . March 1
Lecture to be at Labor Lyceum (Number Two Orient Hall) 7 P. M.
St. Louis, Mo. March 2
Lecture to be at Central Library Hall, 14th and Olive Streets, 7:30 P. M.
Kansas City, Mo. March 3
Minneapolis, Minn. . . . March 5, 6, 7
Chicago, Ill. March 9-10
Cleveland, Ohio March 11
Youngstown, Pa. March 12
Pittsburgh, Pa. March 13

Our Press Needs Your Help!

Building the revolutionary press is even under objectively favorable conditions an arduous task. It requires unceasing activities by those willing to devote themselves to its accomplishment. Without doubt the conditions today are objectively favorable. We have received many tokens of the growth of sympathy for the Left Opposition, but we can, of course, not overlook the fact that many workers are not able to translate their sympathy into material support. Yet we must find the means to overcome such handicaps.

In the stream of turbulent events of the present period the Left Opposition press stands out solid as a rock. But we cannot at all say that its foundation has been secured in the sense of providing the means for its continued existence. Yet that can and must be accomplished. It is because of this that we today particularly call upon all comrades and supporters to assist us in finding the best way out of this present difficulty. Extension of our press, building its circulation is the way out.

Can we have this assistance in the form of concentrated activities during our three months' circulation drive. Every new subscription, every additional sale extends our press and helps provide the revenue for continuation. It drives an additional nail into the coffin of capitalism.

We call upon all our supporters to participate, to endeavor to secure subscriptions for The Militant, The International Communist League (to appear April 1st), the Young Spartacus, Unser Kampf and Kommunisten.

John L. Lewis Continues His Betrayals

A Review of the Thirty-second Convention of the United Mine Workers of America

The 32nd Consecutive Constitutional Convention of the United Mine Workers held a twelve day session in the historic Tomlinson hall of Indianapolis, Indiana, beginning January 26th and ending February 5th. The huge auditorium was draped in the tri colors of the Wall Street republic. It was a fitting arena for the arch reactionary fakers of the union. It reflected bowing to the captains of American industries, their apologizing for the radicalization that is taking place among the mine workers of this country. The atmosphere of the gathering, was a sorrowful one. The conventions of yore that had pictured hectic sessions, fighting, energetic, militant, rank and file miners, was almost a memory aside of an extremely small minority that courageously fought throughout the entire convention exposing the traitorous role of the Lewis machine in shackling the mine workers.

The keynote of the administration was sounded in the beginning of the convention when Phillip Murray, International Vice President, made the joint report of the three standing officials. A lengthy report covering a pamphlet of 83 pages, the keynote was "stabilization of the coal mining industry by Federal Government regulation in order to assure the coal operators a fair return on their investments and to abolish the cut throat competition especially in the central competitive fields." The woes and sufferings of the miners was secondary and almost forgotten.

The officers report mentions unemployment, but they are so reactionary that they even fear unemployment insurance, as a step forward in alleviating unemployment. However, the pressure of even a packed convention forced the issue on them and they were compelled to accept unemployment insurance in the records of their report and to include it in the general program of the union. The remainder of the officers' report is merely a repetition of a typical A. F. of L. union. Class collaboration, quotations from famous letters from the great Mr. Hoover, more mechanization, greater efficiency, etc., etc.

The most sorrowful expression of the convention was the gigantic retreat the miners union has taken in the last ten years. The miners union under the administration of Lewis has diminished in strength, influence and confidence so badly that there is even a growing tendency among the capitalist and their agents to begin to ignore Lewis. This is well confirmed by the fact that Secretary of Labor Doak and President Hoover refused to give Lewis a conference, with the coal operators of the Central Competitive field, due to the fact that a wild cat strike had taken place in southern Illinois where the United Mine Workers and the operators had a contract.

The decline and defeat of the United Mine Workers of America can well be summarized by the following facts and figures:

Year	Membership
1901	198,024
1911	256,255
1921	442,057
1931	152,148
less last ten years	289,900

Let us see how this great retreat under Lewis has affected the Bituminous coal producing fields. In the year 1921 the U. M. W. of A. had 385,724 dues paying members in the bituminous districts of the United States and Canada. For the six months ending June 1, 1931 there is merely 52,723 average tax paying membership in the 28 bituminous districts of the continent. In other words there remain less than 14% of the former tax paying membership. A retreat of 86% of its former strength! The United Mine Workers Journal tells us that in some of the unorganized fields wages are as low as $1.50 per day and 14c per ton, for nine to ten hours work.

The retreat of the organization can be further shown by the West Virginia situation. In 1921 the union had an average tax paying membership of 45,862 divided in 595 local unions. In 1931 up until June 1, we have 40 dues paying members from seven feeble local unions. The role of Van A. Bittner the chief representative of the United Mine Workers of America in West Va., and the right hand man of John L. Lewis on the International Executive Board, has long been proven notorious. William Z. Foster, in his book, "Misleaders of Labor" points out to the workers that "Van A. Bittner is the coal operators' best assurance that the coal miners of that state will not be organized." The figures of the most recent betrayals by Bittner prove this adequately. Later on we will deal with the West Virginia situation more thoroughly. This particular section of the coal mining industry is today the most important and the pivot of all union movements.

In spite of these figures which are derived from the official records of International Secretary-Treasurer William Green and Thomas Kennedy, Lewis is continuing to pay tax on 400,000 members in the American Federation of Labor in order that he can use the voting power for his own personal ambitions.

The Credentials Committee report was a piece of out-right robbery. The part the Credentials Committee plays is to be sure that enough delegates are packed that will give Lewis an overwhelming majority. The job is done very crudely, but it is put over convention after convention. Out of the 1155 delegates that attended the convention the bulk of them only represented themselves. The bona fide delegates from the Anthracite regions, Illinois, Indiana and a few other remnants of districts, were pitted against "blue sky" delegates that possibly had never worked in the coal mine or had never belonged to the organization. The figures of the International Secretary-Treasurer compared with the report of the Credentials Committee, proves this very conclusively. We have the following facts:

District	Delegates	Paying Members
2 Pa.	39	955
5 Pa.	86	1142
8 Ohio	89	862
8 Ind.	5	168
16 Md.	10	2
17 W. Va.	22	37
19 Ky. & Tenn.	47	489
21 Okla. Ark. & Texas	25	63
23 Western Ky.	52	377
25 Missouri	19	187
30 Kentucky	14	34
31 West Va.	125	2168
Total	533	6484

353 of the above delegates do not have a single tax paying member in the local unions they represent!

Illinois had 285 delegates representing a total membership, 31,368 dues paying District No. 1—Pennsylvania had 131 delegates with 45,043 paying members. District No. 31—West Va. had 125 delegates with 2168 tax paying members. District N. 9—Pa. had 61 delegates with 32,403 tax paying members. District No. 5—Pa. had 86 delegates with 1,183 tax paying members.

Quite a contrast. Yet some of the simon pure, "loyal unionist" suffer under the illusions that Lewis and his machine may bow to majority decision and voluntarily abdicate when the majority so desires. The above facts indicate all too clearly; if further proof be needed, that only by a strongly organized determined Left wing can the union be cleaned of such rubbish. That implies tenacious struggle and united efforts of all who are ready to fight for a clean union.

The National Miners' Union in a statement to the convention charges that the delegates that came to this convention from the unorganized fields were "hand picked, baited with whiskey, no elections of delegates being held, packing the convention for the Lewis machine." That is obviously true.

The first day's session of the convention was marked by a sharp division of forces, led mainly by the Illinois "insurgents". Some 222 opposition votes were "counted" by the Lewis tellers. This is far from correct. Whole rows of opposition delegates were left out from the count. This, however, was the largest opposition vote cast against the Lewis machine. It remained fairly well intact throughout the entire convention, voting against practically every proposal that the administration brought forward. Within the Illinois opposition was formed a Left wing group. A few allies from the outlying fields were joined. However, the terror and persecution of the Lewis administration was so brutal that greater numbers were prevented from joining forces. Notably, among those who led a militant Left wing fight throughout the convention, were delegates Gerry Allard, August R. Hoffman, Lawrence Lamb, Borell, of Illinois, Delegates Schuster, Mische, of Pennsylvania and a few other elements with a "socialistic tinge". Outside of the above mentioned elements, the convention was dominated by two rival reactionary factions. The Illinois faction, embracing scores of honest, rank and file delegates, fought all through the convention for home rule. The Left wingers supported them on every progressive issue.

The injunction secured by the former district President of the Illinois miners Harry Fishwick, and still enforced against the arbitrary revocation order of the International Union, was the subject of heated discussion for the first six days. A wide range was given in the discussion where Illinois delegates clashed with the supporters of the International Union. First fights broke out in the convention on one occasion when the Sergeants-at-arms attempted to drag out of the convention, John Hindmarsh, of Springfield, Ill., self claimed socialist and for years a figure in the miners' movement. The disgraceful attempt of the International officers ordering the ejecting of Hindmarsh so stirred the convention that the Anthracite and Illinois delegates joined forces in defeating the attempts of kicking Hindmarsh out of the convention. The fighting determination of the insurgent delegates was so great that fear struck the hearts of the reactionaries. This had a great effect in stopping any further attacks on delegates who dared to dissent with the almighty ruler. Aside from heated verbal clashes, coupled with the great one man burlesque of John L. Lewis, no physical damage was recorded.

The report of the Committee on Resolutions revealed that 97 resolutions of different character were submitted to the convention by various local unions throughout the country mainly from Illinois. The Committee expressing the political line of the administration rejected scores of progressive resolutions. Resolutions on the six hour day and the five day week, bank to bank, Unemployment Insurance, Against Criminal Syndicalism, For Old Age pensions are about the only concessions the reactionaries made. The pressure was forced to all extremes by the Left wing group, the originators of these progressive measures.

Resolutions on the recognition of the Soviet Union came from Westville, Illinois; Rocks Springs, Wyoming; and a militant one from local union No. 303 of Orient, Ill. The resolution from local union No. 303 called upon unconditional recognition as well as to extend liberal trades relations with Soviet Republic, extend credits, etc. The resolution further pointed out that recognition of the Soviet Government would assist generally in relieving existing unemployment difficulties as well as to assist the Russian working class to realize their great efforts at laying the foundations for Socialism. Gerry Allard, mover of resolution, delivered a powerful attack against the Lewis regime in refusing to recognize the Soviet Government. Delegate Mische, District 1 of the Anthracite, supported the resolution and opposed the Committee's report. Secretary-Treasurer Kennedy, in voicing the opinion of the administration charged the "Soviet government of assisting the capitalist class in this country to destroy the United Mine Workers of America and the official labor movement." Allard challenged Kennedy to submit the evidence that the Soviet government had done so. Kennedy spluttered to the best he knew how, but no evidence was forthcoming. In spite of a predicted defeat, the resolution gained attention, received applause and a substantial vote but the eye and nose vote was cast against the Committee's report.

On Unemployment Insurance the committee made a report camouflaging the issue, by stating the International Executive Board will "investigate". A rank and file delegate asked the committee what they were going to "investigate"? How an unemployed worker dies of hunger? The Committee's report, as was to be expected, was concurred in by the packed bunch of professional hand clappers that infested the conclave.

A resolution from Royaltown, Illinois, asked that John L. Lewis resign as president of the International Union. The officialdom assailed the resolution and charged that it was "a piece of coal operators' work or Communist propaganda." August R. Hoffman, young militant mine leader of Illinois attacked Lewis for his betrayals for many years and asked that Lewis resign. However, he pointed out that he understood in the beginning that it never would be complied with. The chair later reprimanded

Hoffman and threatened to bar him from the convention if he made another break. Delegate Hindmarsh asked that Lewis resign as International President or as President of a large bank in Indianapolis. This stirred the convention. Lewis never denied that he was the president of a bank, rather admitted that he was. From Union president to Republican National Committee man, to Bank president—that proves that America is a land of great promise for the youth of the working class! the great, bushy browed, pot bellied John L. Lewis roared time after time as youthful delegates poured a hot barrage of attack against him and his hirelings. With his oratorical tricks and experienced lieutenants, he succeeded in every instance to impress the newspapermen in the press box who cleverly fixed the reports for the "public".

The outstanding features of the convention was the fact that the dominating, active element from the Anthracite and Illinois delegations were young coal miners. The statement in the convention was made, that never before had so large a number of youthful delegates attended the United Mine Workers convention. Lewis, time after time, along with the official family, attempted to excuse the young miners who attacked the administration as "young", "inexperienced", "they will change their minds in due time." This healthy representation was a ray of great hopes. The forces within the mining industry, as well as in the entire capitalist order, threw the class lines sharply before the miners, especially those active young men who dared to voice protest in a terrorized, packed convention.

The United Mine Workers of America has completed another great betrayal, under the rule of Lewis. Lewis, the mouthpiece of the capitalist class performs the role of agent provocateur, deportation agent, assists to railroad militant workers to prison, stifles union progress in the mining industry that are slowly but surely molding their efforts together must fulfill their tasks speedily. The rank and file of the United Mine Workers of America, the National Miners Union and the West Virginia Miners Union, must unite their efforts under a clear, uncorrupted, democratic leadership and pave the way to the rehabilitation and rejuvenation of the miners' struggles, carrying the fight on a higher revolutionary program of unionism. With the many odds against such a movement, unification of the Left wing element is a crying need. Division on account of personal or factional preference is the weapon that the bosses and their agents will further use to starve the working class into submission. The fight against the misleadership of the United Mine Workers of America goes on. It will continue in spite of all the enemies of the coal miners.

Lovestonites in the Workmen's Circle

A Protest Conference of Workmen's Circle Branches was held on Sunday, February 7th, 1932 at Stuyvesant Casino, 142 Second Avenue, New York City.

This conference was called by an initiative Committee, organized by the following branches of the Workmen's Circle: 16, 34, 368, 386, 417, 637 and 656.

The purpose of the conference as explained in the call, was: "To discuss the scab-disease problem in the W. C. and the passive attitude of the present leadership of the W. C. towards scab members. The same statement also infers; that the problem of change of leadership is involved in this struggle and that such must be proletarianized."

150 delegates, representing 75 branches, participated in the conference. The majority of the delegates came from New York City and New Jersey State. A few came from Philadelphia Pa., Boston and Springfield, Mass.

If we take into consideration the unfavorable conditions which the Initiative Committee had to contend with, and especially without a press, the Conference was a success. It has proven again the fallacy of the "Third Period", ultra-Left policy of splitting the Workmen's Circle (which was also supported by the Lovestonites) and leaving the workers in that organization at the mercy of the S. P. leadership.

The response to the call has shown the correctness of the Leninist position against splits which he has so profoundly expounded in his pamphlet, "Left Sickness". The workers, even those who were sympathetic towards the Left wing movement, refused to split away, because of their healthy instinct against splits in the labor ranks. Then again the objective conditions of the last few years, as unemployment, the successes in the Soviet Union, have changed the mind of a great many workers in those organizations. These workers are now vitally opposed to the course of the present leadership in the trade unions; their anti-Soviet attitude, their toleration of scabs and employers in the W. C. leadership was needed to give expression to that sentiment. The call for the conference gave this opportunity.

The Lovestonites Play Their Role

The party, in the deplorable condition it finds itself because of nine years of Right wing and "artist leadership", is not apt to give leadership to any movement now. Here a wonderful opportunity is given the Lovestonites to perform their "historic" role. They drag this movement into the swamp of opportunism.

Because of lack of space, it is impossible to go into details of the organization of and procedure at the Conference. Those of the readers of The Militant who can read Jewish will find a very elaborate article on that subject in the second issue of Unser Kampf. Here we will explain the position of the Lovestonites in the W. C., in brief.

The Lovestonites, still believing that they are the "Majority Group" of the party, at the time of the split of the W. C. engineered by the party, supported and participated in the splitting of the W. C. Shortly afterwards they realized that those that followed the call of the party will not support Lovestone. In a hurry, they made a fast turn. Back with lightning speed to the W. C.—became their motto. Since then, the Lovestonites everywhere travelled with lightning speed to the Right. So also in the W. C. But here, in the W. C., they were not received with open arms as in the I. L. G. W. U. or Paerson. The Right wing leadership couldn't find a reason why they should recognize them. But despite all the noise the Lovestonites make and the foolish attitude of the Freiheit towards them, by boosting them through attacking them every day in the Freiheit, they have not only not gained organizationally, but have lost influence, membership and even in circulation of their paper. They are making a desperate attempt to get a foothold somewhere, ready to pay any price for it. In the Workmen's Circle, they try to utilize the present dissatisfaction in order to force a deal on the so-called opposition (which is only a Right wing clique fighting for power).

Is it any wonder that under such leadership the Conference showed its political impotence. The Initiative Committee showed an utter lack of understanding of the problems confronting the membership of the W. C. They haven't even understood the real character of the scab problem in the W. C. They have tried to make it a "pure and simple" scab issue, not realizing that it is a symptom of a diseased body and that some limbs, especially the scab and employers group, to whom the present leadership looks for support, will have to be amputated. Consequently, the whole movement had all the characteristics of the opportunist swamp, as no perspective, no plan, not a single concrete proposal. The few concrete proposals in the resolution by the conference were taken from other resolutions.

The crassest example of opportunist

Is Mooney to Stay in Jail?

Reactionaries Make Capital of the Stalinists' Blunders

Disgusted by the betrayals of the Communist League is mentioned by name in Mooney's appeal as one of the organizations he wants to participate in a genuine united front, our delegation was ejected under threats of violence. In Minneapolis, St. Louis and Staunton and Belleville, Ill., where the I. L. D. organized no conference and where the Opposition was instrumental in setting them afoot, the I. L. D. pursued a policy of: either we control the conference or we smash it. In one way or another they wrecked all of these conferences.

This method of freeing Mooney has ruinous consequences for the Communist movement. Mooney's cause will not die if the party does not take it up. The issue will become a plaything for all sorts of political fakers. Particularly dangerous are the bourgeois demagogues who use the issue to make political capital, for the pursuit of personal ambitions. From time to time the press records their pious hypocrisy. The latest to come to our attention is the report in the N. Y. Times of February 13 of resolutions demanding that "Governor Rolph pardon Thomas J. Mooney immediately", introduced into the House of Representatives by those despicable demagogues from New York State, La Guardia and Sirovich.

In the lull in the fight created by the inactivity of the Communists, the Molders' Defense Committee, the I. W. W. and others are busy propagating the illusion that a boycott of California goods can force Mooney's release. When the itinerant peddler of confusion, Marcus Graham, of the I. W. W. can persuade a group of militant miners like the Staunton Miners' Educational Body to unanimously adopt a resolution for a boycott of California products as a means of getting Mooney out of jail it is only because these fighting miners have been made easy prey by their confusion and disgust with the Joe Tassies and Bill Geherts.

Finally it must be remembered that the last act in the Walker-Rolph publicity stunt has not yet been reached. Gov. Rolph, who has reserved judgment on Walker's plea, is sitting back waiting to see what pressure the working class will bring to bear on him for Mooney's release. His reply is due soon. If no working class pressure is forthcoming, he will find that Mooney's release is not to be considered.

Working class pressure can force him to find the necessary legal pretext to pardon Mooney. The time is short in which to build a fighting working class movement. But it is not too late if we begin at once. This the I. L. D. should do. What is needed is a genuine united front, from which the Communists have nothing to lose and everything to gain. For this united front every party member, every member of a party organization should raise his voice.

A Letter From Our Class War Prisoners

We were committed to prison Wednesday 17th. It took us the whole day to get in. We see each other in the little prison yard every day for two hours; together with the other white prisoners. Have also been given work together. I am told that no days off are allowed on sentences under one year. We receive the common treatment accorded all common prisoners, no special privileges. Political prisoners are rather a novelty here. There are however a few sympathizers.

We will get a paper every Sunday only. I will inquire about a Daily Worker sub. The very meagre prison library can supply only trash and some classics. There is no book by any Russian writer! The rule is, I think, that books may be sent only from the publisher and then must remain here. Will see more about it. It works, as things do under capitalism, very hard on the poor. It is an expensive matter.

Have no concern on our part personally. We are well and in good spirits—we see each other every day you know. Not at all downhearted. We miss our freedom and contacts with the movement personally, but we know it is for a comparatively short while only. We are proud to be here as political prisoners: not for a moment would we change places for that of the hosts of bought souls and cravens, outside; and the saboteurs of working class unity. One thing we want is news of the outside, particularly of the movement. The comrades can do that. We are considerably hampered in sending out mail but can receive all letters sent us. Tell us, comrades, about the dressmakers' strike (the local daily papers carry no news of it); about the Marine Defense work; the I. L. D. and the whole movement and also as you may be able of your work. Also will one of the comrades mail me a picture (post card, I suppose) of Rose and Karl.

Please give our fraternal greetings of solidarity to the comrades of the Marine Defense.

Our best of comradesly greetings. Courage and cheer for a good stiff fight from:

Your Comrades,
GOODMAN AND MORGENTHAU

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

The Character of Fascism

Today, the task stands before us, before the Communists, to gather the entire working class around the slogan of the struggle against the threatening Fascist overthrow. There is no doubt, that this struggle will also bring about a conflict with the "lesser evil". There is no doubt that the struggle against wage robbery, which is a struggle in the trade unions and in the factories and which constitutes an inseparable element of the formation of the united front, will also bring about a struggle against the regime of emergency decrees.

The Struggle Against Social Democracy, and the United Front

No one (and least of all ourselves) desires the suspension of the struggle against the S. P. G., the suspension of criticism—a "reconciliation". But it is necessary to realize that the struggle against the S. P. G. must be conducted in the form of a united front tactic, under the slogan "against the seizure of power by Hitler". Lenin demonstrated very clearly the essence of this tactic when he recommended that the English Communists "support" Henderson under certain conditions (Infantile Leftism, page 76, German edition). By making it clear for them that they would support Henderson "as the hangman's rope supports the hanged."

Manuilsky and Thaelmann make very light of the matter, by substituting here also, for the question of a concrete analysis, for the question of the varying struggle on the different fronts, a non-Marxist commonplace like: "The main enemy is the dictatorship of capital—that is, every bourgeois government and its supporters". According to this schema, it will always remain a mystery, why the Bolsheviks fought with Kerensky against Kornilov and did not carry on the struggle against Kerensky in a stereotyped fashion.

It speaks of a high degree of insensitiveness to the development of events, not to want to see the Fascist danger, not to want to see the practical consequences which genuine Fascism will bring.

People who regard Bruening as Fascist, that is, the overture as the opera, can very easily become altogether blind and deaf.

Thaelmann Fails to Correct False Views
The party, far from revising its false theory, has "deepened" it by the article in the January issue of Die Internationale, composed by the group of authors that works under the pseudonym of Thaelmann.

"It may be assumed that the execution of the dictatorship of the bourgeois is—no matter through what methods, and particularly when it is a question of Fascist methods—will in the first instance, and in the long run, be in the hands of the Centre in a very strong measure" (Die Internationale Vol. 33, No. 1).

The content of the present situation is characterized crudely but not incorrectly by Thaelmann: "Today, the Centre is the carrier of the policy of an interchangeable exploitation of the social democracy and the National Socialists for the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie." With this, he has finally reached the estimation formulated by Trotsky in the following manner in 1929:

"This will also determine the policy that the bourgeoisie will adopt in the near future: to force the social democracy, with the aid of Fascism, to reconstruct the constitution, so that the bourgeoisie will be able to combine the advantages of Fascism with those of democracy, those of Fascism in essence, those of democracy in form. In this manner, they hope to save themselves the high expense of democratic reforms, and if possible, also the new expense inherent in a Fascist overthrow."

Unfortunately, however, Thaelmann, who characterizes this situation as Fascism and who neglects entirely the economic relationships and the political perspectives that lie in this situation, has not yet reached the conclusions of Trotsky!

"Will the bourgeoisie be able to take this path? To its actual conclusion and for a prolonged period of time—most certainly not. In other words, the bourgeoisie cannot build up a regime that will allow it to base itself in a peaceful manner, on the workers as well as on the ruined petty bourgeoisie, without bearing the expense for the social reforms or for the convulsions of a civil war. The contributions are too great, they will be broken in one direction or the other." (Trotsky, The Austrian Crisis).

Dangers of Calling Present Condition Fascism

The fundamental error, of characterizing this condition as Fascism, is avenged by the prognosis. We have already heard above, of Thaelmann's "prolonged Centre-Fascism". What is even more grotesque, is the sentence he attaches to the quotation brought above: "At times, the preponderance rests with the social democracy and that will probably be true, from the class point of view, also in the future, up to the proletarian revolution in Germany."

A truly annihilating prognosis, this prognosis put forward by Thaelmann: Germany has already reached its Fascist form and it will remain so. Year after year, the genial Bruening will continue to rule, nourished by the starvation of the patient proletariat, interchangeably supported by his zealous and inexhaustible retainers, the National Socialist Party of Germany and "social Fascism", in which case the seizure of power by Hitler is just as unlikely as the disintegration of the S. P. G., until such a time, when, probably after the completion of the second five year plan—the "people's revolution" finally arrives.

It is clear that this prognosis is somewhat dulled by the struggle with the Nazis. It is clear, that the party and its Brandlerist page boys underestimate and mock at the significance of the slogan of the General Strike (which we, for our part, have never separated from the question of immediate partial strikes).

It is clear that the entire ideological confusion with regard to Fascism can lead to capitulation at the moment of the establishment of the Fascist dictatorship, because these people will say—just as the despicable Kolaroff, the Bulgarian Thaelmanns, did on June 9, 1929—"Why get excited particularly now, when one Fascist is merely replacing another Fascist"? The Comintern, which has most unhappily capitulated to Fascism three times already (Bulgaria, Poland, Finland) is coming to another cross-road. The very reserved criticism of the defeatist attitude made by Thaelmann serves no purpose at all as long as his own theories, false to the roots, are not cast aside.

We must pose the question here: why this fatal error in the problem of Fascism? Simply by referring to the thinking ability of the Thaelmanns and Manuilsky, this question is not solved for the Marxist.

Basis For False Analyses and Tactics
Manuilsky has, however, perhaps unintentionally, informed us why it is impossible, in the last analysis, for the Stalinist Comintern leadership to differentiate between Hitler, Bruening and Weis.

"The entire aggravation of the class struggle proves that the differences in the methods of class rule between so-called bourgeois democracy and Fascism are constantly being wiped out, and are actually, in practice, wiped out already. Can anyone attempt to prove that, for example, the policy of the German social democracy with regard to the country of socialist construction—the U. S. S. R.—is any more "progressive" than the policy of Italian Fascism!" (Report of Manuilsky to the XI Plenum of the E. C. C. I.—our emphasis, E. B.)

That means: the final touchstone in the policy of the Stalinist Comintern leadership, whose basic task is no longer the world revolution but the construction of socialism in one country, are the foreign trade relations of the Soviet Union: and so it happens that a considerable lack of sensitiveness arises in these people, their eyes glued on Mussolini, with regard to the Hitler question. But even in this case, these people, generalizing mechanically, are falling into error. In the instance, the often misused argument of the difference between Germany and Italy is very much in place. Mussolini means—oil exports. But Hitler means—war of intervention. The nationalist attitude towards Marxism, which in Germany has led through the program of the national and social liberation, (to use Manuilsky's own jargon) to the "descent to the level of the middle classes, in the Menshevik, and not in the Bolshevik manner", here too proves to be fatal.

Lessons of the Recent Events in Spain

An Official Document of the Spanish Left Opposition on the Results of the Struggle

The following is a circular letter sent out to the local organizations by the Executive Committee of the Spanish Communist Opposition, which evaluates the revolutionary events that broke out in Spain in the middle of January. —Ed.

Dear comrades:

The Spanish Left Opposition, engaged in collecting facts and documents which will permit it to make a more detailed analysis of the recent events, considers it necessary for the moment to indicate cursorily and as briefly as possible, a few considerations brought forward by the developments of the movement.

We shall first approach the negative features of it.

(1) The movement lacked in continuity. Beginning in the heights of Llobregat and Cardener, it received the backing of Barcelona and other places in Catalonia, when it was already crushed in the former towns. This spelled death for the movement. One of the most important lessons to be deduced from this, is the following: a strike of such amplitude must arise simultaneously or be initiated by the large industrial centers (Barcelona in the first place) and in no case in the periphery of the country.

(2) The movement was immature. It lacked an immediate impulsion capable of pushing the masses forward. It should have been declared, for example, one or two days after the successes of Arnedo had aroused to action, the entire proletariat.

(3) The National Confederation of Labor did not assign concrete tasks to the movement. This disoriented it and was the principal cause of the failure, as was made evident by the strike in Barcelona.

(4) It was a manifest mistake to declare the strike on a Saturday. On such a day, failure is assured in advance.

(5) If in Barcelona, the strike had started Friday morning, when the movement unfolded in Cardener and Llobregat had not yet been put down, and limited to 24 hours, the proletariat of Barcelona would undoubtedly have displayed a unanimous manifestation of solidarity. The situation did not permit it to go further and the results obtained would have been undeniably far greater.

(6) The official party again covered itself with ridicule, calling for a strike anew, on the 25th, when the C. N. T. (National Confederation of Labor) had already decided to go back to work. With this, they once more compromised the prestige of Communism before the masses of the workers and merely proved that the only aim of its leaders is to remain in the good graces of the Comintern bureaucracy, not even shrinking back from waging all the immense possibilities that the Spanish situation offers to the development of Communism.

(7) Finally, there was demonstrated the abominable influence exercised in the C. N. T. by the elements that go under the classification of the "group of thirty" (Pestania, etc.) who, by opposing the declaration of the strike in Catalonia at the Regional Conference on Thursday, called forth a counter-attack by the local Federation of Barcelona, led by the F. I. A. (anarchist) elements, who decided to join the movement when the circumstances had already become unfavorable. Nevertheless, the movement also had its positive features.

(1) For the first time, in the course of the revolutionary period, the proletariat had entered a vast movement of a distinct class character. And this is of enormous importance.

(2) The working masses showed clearly that they had almost freed themselves from democratic illusions, still strong in the September strikes, which makes the conviction ever more deeply rooted that only the proletarian insurrection can solve the revolutionary crisis that the country is facing.

(3) In spite of the incapable leadership and organization of the Anarchists, the workers of Cardener and Llobregat fought with admirable solidarity and discipline and withdrew in perfect strategic order and with a minimum of losses, when they were convinced that movement was defeated.

(4) The most important fact to be recorded in the uprising of Cardener and Llobregat is its distinct political character. The workers had seized the city halls and had hoisted the banner of the proletarian revolution on top of the buildings themselves. That is to say, they had seized political power for themselves. In some places, the anarchist elements had proclaimed openly that their aim was the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat. This is a big step forward that the Communists can point to with pride.

The general conclusions to be drawn from this hasty review, are the following:

Kai-Shek in the crushing of the Chinese proletariat in 1925-27 by the infamous "bloc of the four classes", while Trotsky was being shouted down as an ultra-Leftist for demanding the creation of Soviets, dares accuse the closest comrade of Lenin, of being "against a Soviet China". Cheap slanders cost these people nothing. For concrete analysis, they can very easily substitute a quotation from Stalin; for Communist arguments, they can easily substitute a few of the "great masters' pet epithets. Just why Trotsky's slogan of a Constituent Assembly—issued as an immediate demand for the purpose of once more rallying the

(1) Everything permits us to ascertain that the working class will unwaveringly support a revolutionary movement whose aims are clear and precise. We must intensify our Communist propaganda with all our means, making it clear for the working class that only the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat will enable them to achieve emancipation.

(2) This fight will not remain a lost fight. But the working class would occupy stronger positions if it were to take advantage of the movement for the creation of Soviets and revolutionary Juntas. Even though temporarily dispersed by the authorities, this first experience will not remain in vain and the irrepressible organs of struggle will arise again in the new and inevitable conflicts that the immediate future will produce. To this fight, the Communist party and the Workers' and Peasants' Bloc should have dedicated itself: this struggle the Communist Left Opposition would have conducted itself were it not for the fact that in numbers it is as yet a small force in Catalonia.

(3) We have repeatedly contended that there are sincere revolutionary elements in the F. A. I. (Iberian Anarchist Fed.) whose driving force remained sterile because of the inconsistency of their doctrines. But in the last events there has been initiated, although confused and timid, an evolution toward our point of view. It is necessary to give this evolution an impulse, intensifying the propaganda of our principles and making an attempt at practical approach to the F. A. I. for immediate action, which however does not mean that we give up our freedom of criticism.

(4) The reactionary bourgeois forces are organizing themselves. The recent events have provoked a panic among the bourgeoisie who had seen in this chaotic, disconnected, disoriented movement the possibility of victory. In order to oppose the danger that menaces it, it will hasten the organization of counter-revolutionary forces to annihilate the flower of the proletariat by installing a Fascist dictatorship. In order to avoid it, an immediate united front of the working class becomes imperative without distinction of tendencies for the organization of an armed defense. It is a matter of life and death.

(5) The elements constituting the "group of 30" and the leaders of the U. G. T. (the Reformist Center), notwithstanding the fact that there are distinct differences between them, constitute today a check against the development of the revolutionary movement. To eliminate them from the leadership of the workers organizations is an indispensable condition for victory.

(6) Never before has it become so evident as now that a powerful Communist party a truly revolutionary party of the masses capable of fusing and leading the revolutionary attack of the proletariat is what is needed. But this party is not to be an organization like the present official party, dominated by the most unbridled adventurism and the most scandalous irresponsibility before the masses, nor like the B. O. C. the workers' and peasants' bloc) an organization of "sympathizers" and not an instrument of struggle, but genuine Bolshevik party that can only issue out of a general congress of unification and deserve the confidence of the masses.

These are, in the main, the principle considerations that we gather from the latest events. Due to its small numerical force in Catalonia, the Left was not able to play a decisive role nor exercise a great influence in this movement, but its members participated in every possible way, and some of them have fallen at the hand of the enemy. Now taking advantage of the lessons that the movement offers it, will continue with intransigent tenacity its work of renovating the Communist movement, dedicating all its forces to give to the Spanish proletariat the arm that it absolutely needs, the powerful Communist weapon that will lead it to victory.

And how does "Trotskyism"—"disparate and disarm the revolutionary forces"? Simple. By pointing out the Thermidorian danger involved in the theory of socialism in one country—while Stalin and Molotov find a place for Groman and Ossachi and Ramsin in the economic councils of the Soviet State. By pointing concretely to the danger facing the Soviet Union in the event of a Fascist overthrow in Germany—while the Stalinist press chokes itself on unintelligible and confused abstractions, and doesn't mention the German situation by as much as one word. By analyzing the factors making for revolutionary solution to the critical situation in the Far East—while the Stalinists lul the masses with the legend of a still to be achieved Soviet China.

But, enough of this. Does Don think he is fooling anybody but himself, when he takes quotations from The Militant out of their context, when he picks out half-sentences and isolated phrases? Is it not a sign of the weakness of his own political position that he finds himself incapable of coping with the complete idea of an opponent? Why should he avoid explaining the lines accompanying the quotation he makes from our thesis,

Proletarian Party Opposition

Some Fundamental Problems of Its Future Course Discussed

The opposition Communists who were expelled from the Proletarian Party are now facing the important issue of the next step to be taken. This group proposes to approach through a national conference preceded by a discussion. That method is, of course, quite as it should be. If, in addition, the group centers its discussion on the questions which for its particular position become the most essential, it should be able to further accelerate its development in a progressive direction.

So far this is already indicated in various views expressed by some of these comrades. There have for example, been recorded, views in favor of the organization of a new party. In our opinion, the building of a new party could not at all be considered a problem facing this group. Moreover, it would be entirely incorrect to set such an objective. For Communists, in respect to this question, the problem is not the building of a new party, but the one of building a single party which will embrace all Communists and which will be capable of taking up its serious tasks. A second question which already occupied a prominent position from the inception of this group was the one of its further attitude to the Proletarian Party. In this respect it is true the group has a certain duty to perform; primarily to win the rest of the membership for progressive development. As a third question arose the problem of approach to the working masses which are now manifesting signs of awakening because of the effects of the crisis. It assumed an added importance by virtue of the endeavors of this group to get away from the Proletarian Party sectarianism and its insistence upon a struggle for immediate demands.

For a Communist organization this is always a problem and particularly so today. It is to be taken for granted, so to speak. On March 11, 1889, in the period of formation of the Second International, Engels wrote in a letter to Sorge: "The workers will follow those that know what they want and how to get it." That, of course, for a Communist group, presupposes first of all that it defines its principle position and strategic objectives. And so it becomes necessary to conclude that the main issue just now confronting the Proletarian Party Opposition is the one of defining its principle position, that is, its orientation toward the existing currents in the Communist movement.

Some Serious Progress Already Made

The emergence of the Proletarian Party Opposition we have already characterized as a genuinely progressive step. It arose out of a struggle against the sectarian sterility of the P. P. It demanded revolutionary activity first by insisting upon an attitude toward and a formulation of immediate demands. Concretely, in the unemployment situation, it proposed a struggle for measures of relief. It demanded a Left wing policy for trade union work not to exclude co-operation with the C. P. in certain practical tasks. Particularly in regard to the Communist International—and that is important—did this opposition group denote its progressive direction as distinct from the P. P. It recognized the necessity of functioning in revolutionary activities with the world Communist movement, simultaneously with criticism of and a fight against the opportunism of its leadership.

In this respect, the background and origin of this opposition group assumes considerable significance. The P. P., from which it came, proclaimed itself Communist. As such it should have recognized that there can be only one Communist party. It gave complete endorsement to the C. I. and found no fault with the Stalin leadership, but refused to give the slightest recognition to, or have anything but condemnation for the American section. Its endorsement of the C. I. policies and leadership should have made obligatory upon it to unite with the official C. P. on the conditions laid down by the C. I. But despite its endorsement, it remained a second party outside the Comintern. It sought to replace the official C. P. In reality this became the sharpest reflection of its sectarian sterility and its narrow nationalist position. (The remnants of the Proletarian Party may still endeavor to seek comfort for this position in the national socialism of Stalin; in the theory of socialism in one country, but this, instead of helping in the least, merely emphasizes its contradiction.)

Can this group of Communist opposition comrades now conceive of emulating the P. P., from which it broke away, by proposing to also become a second party—by building a new party? If so, it can only become doomed to the same contradictions it endeavored to extricate itself from. It can only remain sec-tionary, separated and isolated from the revolutionary working class section. Evidently some of the members of this group have hopes of making the Workers' League, organized by them, a basis for a new party. But what is a pure and simple unemployment organization. Its proposed program envisages a struggle for unemployment relief to be secured exclusively by levy on capital and large incomes, with the elimination of the present charity character, administration of the funds to include representatives of the labor movement and co-operating in its attainment with working class organizations on the basis of the united front. This as a foundation of a party make-up for a new party could at best only be a reformist one, despite the fact that many good militants may be found within its ranks. The Workers' League should be properly conceived as a part of a general united front unemployment movement and as a bridge to the masses.

Will This Group Continue In A Progressive Direction?

But let us again return to the vital issue of orientation. That there are three distinct currents within the Communist movement today these comrades know and acknowledge. The currents have their organized form in factions. Can their group remain ideologically independent or neutral of these currents and still remain Communist? Obviously this is quite impossible. For the Stalinists, the problem appears to be very simple—just denounce and calumniate the others without any argumentation or endeavor to prove one or the other wrong. But these comrades are not mere Stalin puppets. At least this is the very method to which they have taken exception. Hence, there can be only one conclusion. They must define their attitude. They must orientate toward one or the other current. Finally they must become organically a part of the current whose position they adopt.

Some of these comrades may want to follow the method of the little P. P. bureaucrats of merely brushing this issue aside, of not adopting any position, or of maintaining a double position, at any rate for the time being. We hear some of them say: These are international issues, or even: These are only Russian issues, we will come to them later, first we must build right here. But the all decisive question is—to build what?

If the issue of the currents in the Communist movement is only a Russian one of what enormous importance would it still be with the U. S. S. R. occupying the position of the only proletarian dictatorship? We grant it is essentially an international issue but as such it affects the very root and foundation of the movement no matter in which country the specific problems arise. It is fully and completely interwoven in every major question of principle, policy, strategic objective and tactic of the movement here. It becomes part of every revolutionary problem here. It determines the building of the revolutionary cadres.

There can be no doubt that the first and most essential question for the Proletarian Party Opposition to decide is the one of its orientation toward the existing currents within Communism. Ideologically the group is not so far a homogeneous one and could hardly be when we recall its compromised background. There is no advance guarantee that it can determine its orientation unitedly and without splitting into various tendencies. But it has a revolutionary duty to put this issue at the very top of its pre-conference discussion agenda.

The Anti-Trotsky Campaign

Chinese masses after their crushing defeat by the Kuo Min Tang (with the direct aid of Stalin-Borodin-Martynov)—is a "counter-revolutionary thesis", our Don does not bother to explain at all. Nor does he as much as utter a word of explanation as to why the Chinese proletariat, up in arms against the imperialists in 1928, is not to be found leading the struggle against the Japanese plunderers. It is much more comfortable and a great deal less embarrassing to resort to the legend of a "Chinese Soviet Republic" and to exaggerate the strength of the "Chinese Red Army".

These silly and excitedly incoherent attacks against "Trotskyism" are part of a renewed and wide-spread campaign by the Stalinist faction against an evil they have a thousand times over again declared dead and buried. It is Stalin's treacherous answer to our question regarding his attitude towards the White Guard murder plots against the organizer of the Red Army. It is Stalin's manner of encountering the mounting current of sympathy for the ideas of the Left Opposition everywhere, and especially in the Soviet Union. But he will not succeed. All the tens of thousands and even millions of posters "Against Trotskyism—the vanguard of the counter-revolutionary bourgeoisie" will not stem the tide of rising revolutionary conviction in the Soviet factories. Great social developments, tremendous opportunities for Communist action are unfolding before the international proletariat. "Trotskyism"—Leninist Bolshevism will live and come into its own once more, despite the desperate and helpless efforts of the Stalinist revisionists. The new wave of the world revolution will sweep away the Stalinists and all the dunghills of Dons and Browders with them.

Pioneer Publishers Notes—

WHITHER ENGLAND

Many of the younger elements in the Communist and general labor movement have not had an opportunity to read one of Trotsky's earlier works—"Whither England", as it was recalled from circulation by the International Publishers when they discovered (by order), that Trotsky was a "renegade". We are now able to get about 300 copies of this book from England. We will be able to get it out with a paper cover for fifty or seventy-five cents. If you are interested, write us.

PAMPHLET ON GERMANY

If you have not yet bought your copy of the pamphlet "Germany, the Key to the International Situation, Shall Fascism Really Be Victorious?", be sure to get it before it is out of print, as it is selling very fast. In this pamphlet, Trotsky deals with the political situation in France, England, the Far East the U. S. S. R., Germany, and the possibility of a Fascist coup d'Etat there. In his usual keen and poignant manner, Trotsky analyzes the international political situation in this pamphlet, draws his conclusions and makes concrete proposals of policy to be followed.

BOUND VOLUME OF PAMPHLETS

In the very near future, we are planning to bind 100 copies of all the pamphlets issued thus far in one volume. Watch for further announcements of prices and other news. If you are interested, let us know at once, as we will only be able to supply 100 orders. Some of our pamphlets are already out of print, but they will be included in this volume. We have set aside 100 of each for this purpose.

HISTORY OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION

The History of the Russian Revolution by L. D. Trotsky, published by Simon and Schuster, is now available through us. Members of the Communist League of America can secure it at $3.50. Certificate holders of the Pioneer Publishers can have it for $3.00. Send your orders and checks at once. Add 10c for postage.

A NEW BOOK ON CHINA

By March 15th we expect to have Trotsky's manuscript on China ready for the press. It will be a 385 page book dealing with all phases of the Chinese Revolution and the role of the Communists. The book will sell for $1.00 paper cover and $2.00 cloth cover. Certificate holders will be entitled to a discount of 1-3 just as on all our publications.

A Letter from a Militant

Dear Comrade:

I hope this will reach you all right. I received your letter and receipt for The Militant subscription. I had to borrow the dollar in order to make it. I have not had a job for wages except about one month. Since you saw me last, I stayed around Fargo a number of months but it was hopeless trying to get work at any kind of wages, even the farmers are not hiring help any more.

I am certainly sorry that I am so helpless to do anything for the cause in the way of an occasional donation. I cannot even afford to get Trotsky's pamphlets. Up to now have kept the Daily Worker, but now must give it up too as I have no income at all. Anyway, it seems to be continually deteriorating in quality. I am taking the Western Worker on trial. I take the keenest interest in all that is going on in the movement everywhere and especially our own Opposition. I believe the Opposition has made gratifying progress in the last year—really I wonder how you manage to do so much in this period. For a time I wrote up conditions around Fargo, for the Daily Worker got bundles and smuggled them to the packing house workers. I wish I could describe the atmosphere of repression of fear, of the helplessness that grips the workers of Armour's plant there in West Fargo.

What I miss more than I can tell you is my organizational activities that I took part in, in Chicago. It seems like the best part of my life is missing. The way things look now I am not at all prepared to agree with those comrades who hold that this crisis is just another periodic capitalist depression. I believe it is entirely possible for the present depression to develop into social revolution and in that judgment I do not forget for one moment the backwardness of our workers in general. But as The Militant never tires of putting it, "Where is our Party to lead us if such a situation arises?"

Paris Commune Celebration

A celebration of the Paris Commune is to be held by the New York branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) on Saturday evening, March 19th at Irving Plaza, Irving Pl. and 15th St. It will be a mass meeting and entertainment.

An elaborate social program has been arranged which includes a chorus of about sixty singers from a Hungarian workers' singing society, and a series of revolutionary dances given by a group of our own comrades. It will also include dancing and refreshments.

Hold the date, Saturday evening, March 19th, open. Watch the Militant for further announcements.

«Pravda» on the Second 5 Year Plan

A National Socialist Utopia or the Leninist Conception of Socialist Economy?

The convulsions of the world crisis are tearing wide gaps in the edifice of international capitalism. A seismograph recording the economic and political eruptions of bourgeois society at the present moment would show jagged, spasmodic lines for every country like the fever line of a dying man whose blood runs hot and cold in turn. Everywhere the masters of a great tomorrow are awakening, becoming more rebellious, moving at various speeds towards the insurrection which is to destroy an outlived social structure. Revolutionary problems of the greatest magnitude confront the class conscious vanguard everywhere, Spain, Germany, China—here are only three of the countries which are reaching the boiling point. In all three—to mention no others—the Communist movement bends beneath the tremendously urgent historical tasks it is called upon to solve because no other movement is capable of even dealing with them, much less solving them.

More than ever is the Communist movement in sore need of guidance, of wise advice, of the lessons and experience of the past. They are justified in looking for this guidance and advice to the country in which the theory and practice of the proletarian revolution were successfully tested in action, that is, to the Soviet Union and its Communist party.

The Disregard for the International And here lies the great tragedy. The leaders of the Soviet Union party not only fail to give them this advice but they do not even concern themselves with the burning problems of the rest of the international working class. In 1923, the Central Committee of the Russian party, keenly preoccupied with the impending revolutionary clashes in Germany, called together a special conference on the question, together with representatives of the largest local organizations. It adopted theses on the problems of the German revolution, mobilized the whole party, and through its representatives in the Executive Committee of the Comintern, organized an international conference. In 1932, with the tension of the class struggle far more compelling than it was nine years ago, the Russian party acts in a totally different manner. The cannon-roar in Shanghai may be the first thunderclaps of a world catastrophe of imperialism, Fascism and Communism may be coming to death-grips in Germany, the lava of the social revolution may soon inundate the Spanish bourgeoisie—but all this appears to be happening on a different planet so far as the present leaders of the Russian Communist Party are concerned.

That is the only conclusion one can come to after the accomplishments recorded by the just concluded 17th party conference in Moscow. Outside of agitation references to the contrast between the advances of industrialization and collectivization in the Soviet Union and the increasing misery of the workers under the world capitalist crisis, we do not know of a single problem of the international revolutionary movement that was given an hour of serious consideration at the congress. Not a single movement has yet emerged from this assembly of what was once Lenin's Bolshevik party, dealing with the tasks of the Communists in the capitalist countries.

To compare the proceedings of the present congress with one held under Lenin's leadership is to see at a glance how ruthlessly the party chiefs of today have chopped down one prop after another from under the bridge which, despite the assiduous efforts of the Stalinists, still traditionally connects the nationalistically degenerated apparatus of 1932 with the party of revolutionary internationalism which Lenin trained up for two decades. No more murderous indictment of a leadership speaking in the name of Marxism can be conceived of today than this: the waves of the international revolution beat upon the closed doors of the 17th congress of the Russian party without the bureaucratic congress managers allowing a single one of the hand-picked delegates to as much as get his feet wet.

The conscientious Communist worker to whom internationalism is something more real than a badge to be worn on holidays, will not only feel humiliated and mortified at his state of affairs in the ranks of the leaders he is instructed to obey blindly as "infallible chiefs", but will reflect upon the basic causes that make it possible, or rather, that make it logical and inevitable.

The Second Five Year Plan

If the congress had nothing—absolutely nothing—to say about the problems of the international revolution, it had more than enough to say about the problems of the Soviet party. And on this point we witness the canonization in a veritable nationalistic orgy of the theory of "socialism in one country" which, we are now taught, is to spring forth full-panoplied, like Minerva from the brow of Jove, at the end of the second Five Year Plan adopted at the congress. Whereas, according to the apostolic revelations of the time, the first Five Year Plan, which was to be completed in three, would merely end with the Soviet Union having "caught up with and outstripped" the most advanced capitalist countries, Pravda now informs us (Daily Worker, 2-23-1932) that, according to the report of the incomparable Molotov:

"The basic political task of the second Five Year Plan is the final liquidation of capitalist elements and of classes in general, the complete extermination of causes which tend to create class distinctions and exploitation, and the conquest of the remnants of capitalism in the economy and in the consciousness of the people; the transformation of the whole toiling population of the country into conscious and active building of a classless socialist society."

What is to happen in the rest of the world while this stupendous project is being accomplished in the brief span of five years (or will it be four or three?), its authors do not inform us, nor are they concerned. For whoever seriously believes that Russia will become a classless, socialist society, in which "the final liquidation of capitalist elements and of classes in general" has been achieved, —that it will do this before the workers in a culturally (techno-industrially) more advanced country have taken power and come to Russia's aid, has definitely turned his back upon the prospect and idea of the international proletarian revolution. Such an oleomargarine "Marxist" has an infinitely more optimistic view of the possibilities for capitalist world stabilization than is entertained by the average bourgeois statesman of mature intelligence. Despite all his fine holiday pretenses, he believes in his heart that the "foreign Communist parties would die without our wasted subsidies". He is convinced deep down that these parties and their leaders, whom he regards with scarcely concealed disdain and contempt, will never seize power in this generation, at least; and if that is the case, what is to be gained by this interminable din and agitation about a "world revolution", especially when it antagonizes the foreign bourgeoisie who must, above everything else, be prevented from intervening with troops to disrupt the bureaucratic Eden of a national socialism? Legion is the name of those decadent Stalinist bureaucrats whose conduct is animated by these ideas.

But despicable as their attitude is towards the international problems, the bureaucrats have an equally reactionary and far more Utopian standpoint towards the problems of Soviet economy. Here an objective consideration of its complex structure is replaced by administrative commands to race at top speed for new records which are not always as unblemished as they appear. In many, perhaps in the majority of the cases, the "records" are achieved at the expense either of a dangerous tensile strain on the physique and nerves of the workers or else of a marked inferiority in the quality of the product turned out. Frequently it is both. For a short period and under the pressure of a partial aim, such strains are conceivable. But to imagine that the workers can or will bear up under the concert pitch to which they have been tuned for the whole historical period that separates us from socialism in Russia, is to reveal a mad ignorance which threatens the existence of the workers' republic more than do a thousand deliberate saboteurs.

What Socialism Means

This should be an obvious truth, unless one is a blind official whose idea of what constitutes socialism is different from everything we have learned from the teachers of our movement. To those for whom Marx, Engels and Lenin are not "outlived", socialism is not a social system in which everybody has been leveled down to a common low plane of a so-called "equality", but a society in which the classes have really been abolished, in which the distinction between "town" and "country" has been eliminated, in which agriculture no longer exists as an economic entity but has become an industry, in which such a rise has been accomplished in production that there can no longer be any comparison between the living conditions of the workers (i. e. of the whole population) under the new society and under the most highly developed capitalist state, and above all, in which the state power and coercion are beginning to die out and to be replaced by the administration of things.

But this assumes such a tremendous rise in the productivity of labor and the national wealth based upon a highly developed machine technique—all of which must, moreover, keep pace with the concomitant absolute and relative growth of population—as has only begun in the Soviet Union and which cannot be brought to a successful conclusion on the basis of the efforts of Russia's economy alone. Pravda informs us that "the proletariat of the U. S. S. R. is in possession of absolutely all the possibilities, all the power, all the means and all the resources for the victorious fulfillment of this gigantic plan of construction of a socialist society in that period," that is, in another five years. But, bearing in mind the classic definition of socialism, such a contention is not only root false, but is based upon a reactionary outlook. In the strictest sense of the word, particularly for the following reason:

Socialism and World Economy

Socialism is a form of socio-economic relations that must rest upon a far higher plane than that occupied by the most developed capitalist unit. It is an advance from capitalism and in no respect a retreat to pre-capitalist relations. Now, not a single one of the important capitalist powers has developed its productive forces on a strictly national scale. The growth of capitalism in its classic cradle, England, was based essentially upon its world connections, that is, its ever closer interweaving with world commerce, world economy. The low point of capitalist strength in the United States—which has more internal resources than almost any other country—was nevertheless the period of its "isolation" from the rest of the world. Like every other country, it became the economic and political colossus it is today by its increasingly inextricable association with world economy. Indeed, the crisis rendering world capitalism today superfluous, essentially, because the bonds that tie it all into the waters of international economy in which the most backward country is as much a necessary component part as the weaker, were cut at vital points by the contradictions inherent in commodity production itself.

Socialism, or even the transitional economy which prevails in Russia on the road to socialism, cannot be based upon an increasing withdrawal from world economy, but must be predicated upon an extended participation in it. That is why the second Five Year Plan, with its consecrated nationalist ideal is conceived in a reactionary Utopian spirit, not by accident, but as an inexorable result of the—by your leave—"theory" of socialism in one country. For it is based upon the fantastic idea of a complete withdrawal from what Lenin characterized as that "international market to which we are subordinated, with which we are connected and from which we cannot escape". (To refer to but one example: a striking rise in the crops, exceeding domestic needs would soon show in a glaring light how subordinated the U. S. S. R. is to the world market.)

It is, of course, impossible to deal in a short article with all the problems raised by the second Five Year Plan, most of which have already been analyzed in anticipation in the works of comrade Trotsky. It will suffice for the moment to point out that the plan and the whole environment surrounding its elaboration, once more reveal, perhaps more harshly than ever before, the catastrophic practical results of the nationalist theory of Stalin and the abyss he has placed between himself and the revolutionary internationalist essence of Bolshevism. It is easy to imagine in advance—it would even be easy to write them for the paid scribblers!—the answers that will be made to our arguments, the accusations of "pessimism" and "counter-revolution" that will be flung at us because the Left Opposition which fought for years for plan in economy, for industrialization and collectivization, which was expelled while trying to convince the bureaucracy of the progress that Russia could make in socialist construction with a correct policy—nevertheless refuses to be a party to duping the working class with fatal illusions or drugging them with theoretical opium. These accusations about "pessimism" we can answer in advance, with finality, by the words of Lenin which are as applicable in every essential today as they were when written in 1922:

"We have not even finished the foundation for a socialist economy, this can again be taken from us by the hostile forces of dying capitalism. This must be clearly recognized and openly admitted, for nothing is more dangerous than illusions (and attacks of dizziness on high places). And in this recognition of the bitter truth there is nothing 'terrible', nothing that gives any just cause for even the slightest despair, because we have always defended that elementary Marxist truth, we have constantly repeated: that for the victory of socialism the joint efforts of the workers of several advanced countries are necessary". (Works, Vol. XX, part 2, page 487.)

The New York dressmakers' strike came to an end with the workers returning to practically the same conditions as before—that is, to the sweatshop. This was not because of the lack of a fighting spirit on their part. On the contrary. At a time of general working class acceptance of wage cuts without resistance, these dressmakers set a glorious example by walking out and bringing a considerable number of workers along from the unorganized shops. Their ranks were solid. But their officials of the dominant union, the International Ladies Garment Workers, were primarily concerned about not inconveniencing the jobbers and manufacturers. They themselves proved to the hilt our often repeated warning, not only to watch their declarations but also to watch their fingers signing new agreements. Yet it must be said: Above all, this strike demonstrated the disastrous weakness of a situation where workers are divided in struggle.

Inevitably this situation is reflected in the settlements made by both unions. The I. L. G. W., for example, agreed with the jobbers and inside manufacturers upon certain measures of when and how to fix prices of piece work, but without any guarantee of the demanded minimum price amounting to $1.10 per hour. The employers' demand for a 10 per cent reorganization right was rejected, but still leaving provisions at their command for reduction of the working force at the end of the season. A certain form of union recognition is granted, but it amounts in this case to facilitate the ironing out of conflicts between the various strata of bosses. The jobbers association has agreed to confine their work to members of the contractors' association. The union obtains the right to protest any working in the shops over and above the five day week, but even that is left for final decision of the impartial chairman. As a whole, no practical change from conditions before the past agreement expired, but leaving plenty of loopholes for further connivance between the employers and their union agents.

Did the Left wing forces in the industrial union fare better in regard to actual strike gains? In this situation that could hardly be expected. As a matter of fact it had to rest content with agreement obtained one by one in individual shops, generally speaking also on practically the same conditions as prevailed prior to the strike.

The Serious Weakness of Two Separate Strikes

Such is the balance sheet of another settled conflict in which the workers, again forming the battling ranks, became the mere object of maneuvers. Their grievances were identical. All were working in the same industry. Yet there were two strikes, called separately, conducted separately and settled separately despite the unity obtained on the picket lines. This could not be conducive to wringing great concessions from the bosses. That the industrial union—that is the Left wing—side of the fight was conducted in the name of a united front committee altered nothing but brought more confusion to the serious objectives of actual workers' unity.

The actual situation in the New York dress shops is now, as before, one in which working conditions and piece work prices are practically the same in unorganized shops, in shops controlled by the I. L. G. and in shops under industrial union control. That, of course, is no great inducement for workers to organize. After all, to the rank and file the most telling argument for organization is one of conditions obtained by the union. That is true even for the dressmakers who have such a splendid fighting tradition. In the same measure it must also be emphatically stated that, while it cannot be expected that the Left wing industrial union, as a minority organization, can force far ahead in gaining conditions, if it cannot at least advance a policy which stands out clearly as superior to that of the Right wing officialdom it forfeits its possibility of winning the masses. Mere propaganda for the Left wing position in its abstract sense is not sufficient. When it degenerates to pure and simple demagoguery, as is now the case of the official party leadership of the industrial union, it becomes actually harmful, because the result is that the workers lose respect for the Left wing and lose confidence in its ability. Moreover, the gentlemen in charge of the I. L. G. W. are far more skilled in the art of demagoguery and have proven alert in maintaining their hold upon the workers on that basis. In this strike the Left wing union, under immediate party direction, did not at all show superiority of policy or in leadership of struggle. Here was a plain problem. Workers of two organizations struggling against a common enemy, against conditions commonly abhorred and commonly hated. What was the burning need, if not that of common struggle and common working out of the immediate objectives in such a way to help frustrate sell-outs. This was a plain duty confronting the revolutionary party and the industrial union leadership. What did the official party leadership propose? It established a shibboleth which it called the united front committee. It called upon the dressmakers to support this committee, informing them that they did not need to belong to either of the two unions. What argument is that for unionization? Is a substitute for either, or both of these two unions, what is needed? Obviously that could not be the need and ultimately it would negate the very right of the industrial union to exist.

The revolutionists among the needle trades workers must first of all tell them categorically that union organization is the vitally necessary instrument of struggle for their everyday needs. Next they must make clear what kind of union is required, certainly stressing the superiority of the industrial form. They must in actual practice help demonstrate the tactics of a militant policy as a substitution for the treacherous connivance with the employers. But the most powerful weapon of the revolutionary party remains the one of unification of the workers against the common enemy and against the treacherous influence of the yellow leaders. That, of course, would in its first step mean a united front of the two organizations and final trade union unity.

In some cases there is no other way out but by separate unions. That was so at the time of the formation of the industrial union. At the present time, however, the question of trade union unity looms as a serious one, and particularly in the needle trades. That at least should be a lesson from the strike.

Consequently the Left wing should urge the workers in the I. L. G. W. to remain there and to fight for unity. We do not propose this slogan of unity on the basis of whatever conditions the reactionary officials may desire to lay down. Not at all. It is a fighting

Lovestonites Disrupt Rank and File Movement in the A. C. W. Union

The Lovestone Group in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union has for a long time been in search of a suitable ally among the discredited and discarded officials with whom to initiate an "opposition" movement in the A. C. W. administration. The recent developments in the New York A. C. W. organization finally gave birth to a group which is compelled to rise against Hillman and is in need of some protective covering to be able to rally the workers in a sham fight against the Hillman machine.

Hillman has recently effected an economy reorganization of the New York Joint Board as a result of which a number of officials fell out of their positions. Thus the long sought for ally has been found. Between these officials and the Lovestone group known under the name of Progressive Circle, has been created a united front against the Hillman policies in the Amalgamated. A mass meeting of tailors was called to launch a rank and file movement under their leadership. The tailors responded in big numbers. The situation in the industry is deplorable. The intolerable conditions in the shops and the wide spread unemployment are driving the workers to revolt. Any group with a program for improving their conditions and determination for struggle will easily get a following among them. But that was not furnished by this combination.

The Right wing combination from the beginning secured the leadership of the movement having arranged the details of the meeting. The speakers and the resolutions, left no doubt about the character of the movement they were out to create.

The Rank and File Committee (an organization under Party control) who came to the meeting had little difficulty in exposing the character and aims of the combination, that called it. The meeting ended in a commotion without accomplishments. The Lovestone group in a statement published in the Jewish papers, Forward and Day, accuses the Rank and File Committee of breaking up the meeting.

Who Will Organize the Revolt

The truth is that the Right wing combination adjourned the meeting to suit themselves. The continuance of the meeting would mean its complete discredit and loss of its control. They did not wish to concede to the demand of the Rank and File Committee members for a committee to be elected from the floor because such a committee would displace them from control. Neither were they willing to discuss anything. Their resolution was to be adopted, and their leadership recognized. So the "opposition" movement in the A. C. W. has burst like a bubble. It is to be expected that the organizers of it will now adopt slogan and implies a simultaneous fight for certain definite conditions. We do not propose unity merely in its abstract sense but for the attainment of specific working class objectives.

Despite the present situation of the sweatshop still obtaining in the garment industry future growth of the I. L. G. W. is not precluded. But with that also growth of the problems of this union for satisfaction of the demands of the workers. Certainly this implies possibilities of formation and growth of a Left wing within the union. With equally as much certainty we can also point to the prospects which are available for growth of the industrial union provided it proceeds correctly. To that can be added the general prospects of a developing workers' resistance to the enemy onslaughts which is destined to assume real proportions for the future. From this must be concluded that on a whole the need and the possibilities for trade union unity of these organizations who are rivals today will increase. This contains a warning which must be heeded.

—A. S.

a course that is more in accord with their traditions and aims, that is, to negotiate for positions and powers behind closed doors.

It is characteristic for the Right wing group to find an excuse for their bureaucratic control in the intentions of the Rank and File Committee members to capture the movement. The Rank and File Committee, in spite of its erroneous policies, has the reputation of an honest and sincere group of workers, while the despised Right wing officials have on their record a whole series of crimes which it has committed against the tailors at Hillman's behest, which even the Lovestone cover would not hide. The tailors will not readily follow them, even though they remain inattentive to the Rank and File Committee.

Who will organize the revolt of the tailors in the A. C. W.? This question is constantly heard from the lips of Left wingers. What can be the answer to it? What does the party do to meet the need of organization of a Left wing in the A. C. W.? What is the reason for the failure of the Rank and File Committee in developing a Left wing movement in the A. C. W. In spite of the favorable situation? There seems to be only one explanation. The numerous blunders of the Left wing in the past and the wrong policies pursued by the Needle Trades Industrial Union in the other needle trade branches have had their repercussions in the men's clothing situation. A year or two ago the Lovestonites could not succeed in gathering a handful of workers at their meetings. Their own following in the Amalgamated consists of less than a half a dozen people. Today they are more successful in getting a response among the workers in spite of their association with the discredited elements. The Lovestonites are exploiting to their benefit the false policies of the Party leadership in the trade union movement. It is significant that in their resolutions presented at the meeting emphasis is laid on the necessity of "categorically rejecting all proposals for a split in the Amalgamated." The resolution also urges the "rejection from the ranks of the movements of all persons who are committed to a policy of splitting the Amalgamated or have loyal duties to a dual organization."

The Rank and File Committee, however, has never made clear its policies or adopted a clear cut program for the men's clothing Left wing. Confusion prevails in their own ranks. A great number of them still cherish the idea of splitting the A. C. W. Many among them consider themselves a part of the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union. The Rank and File Committee in general is marking time, lacking confidence in its own forces in spite of the increasing favorable opportunities for a Left wing movement.

Fake Peace Gestures in Far East

Imperialists Jockeying for Position in Coming World Clashes

The day's news hails the acceptance by Japanese imperialism of the armistice proposals made by the League of Nations. That this "peaceful" gesture is merely a continuation of the aggressive policy of the Tokyo statesmen along new lines, cannot be mistaken. And it is especially the Wall Street spokesmen at Washington who know this fact and bring their actions in accord with it. A Japanese acceptance of the truce can only take place under conditions favorable to the invaders. Tokyo does not conceal these intentions. It is simply putting into play a diplomatic maneuver which it is confident the French reactionaries and a "strong pro-Japanese Tory group in the British cabinet"—actually the backbone of the present conservative government—will support.

It is only natural that the Hoover regime is disgruntled with this state of affairs. One thing is certain: the conclusion of the truce, if it should get as far as that, will hardly mean the end of the Far Eastern episode, but will much rather bring it more closely within the framework of a broad struggle among the world imperialists themselves. The United States, through the mouth of Stimson, in his letter to Senator Borah, has already expressed its determination not to recognize any new transactions, involving China, that will break the boundaries set by previous treaties (The Nine Power Treaty, etc.). The Japanese militarists will not pay any attention to them.

They have already too much at stake. They started out on their Manchurian adventure because they saw an opportunity in the present unstable economic positions of the other powers, to get some badly needed markets for their own hard-pressed industries. In view of the belated arrival on the scene of Japanese capitalism, that was only to be expected. In the meantime, the boycott of its goods in China and the rapidly growing war expenses are further devouring the resources of Nippon's industries. Already the various organs of the Tokyo government—the Privy Council, the cabinet—are very busy to make further levies on the population for the conduct of military operations, especially since the latter have hardly met with the desired success. But it is impossible to conceive of anything like a "peaceful" retreat on their part.

The American gentlemen-brigands, whose aim it has been, ever since the inception of the present crisis, to find a solution for it by a vast extension of its foreign market, specifically in a centralized bourgeois China, look with great concern upon Japanese machinations. More immediately, American industry has already sustained losses in its recently increased exports to China (brought about by the creation of a demand for American products, subsequent to the devastations of last year's flood) through the siege at Shanghai, which hardly improves the attitude of Washington. The concentration of the United States fleet in the Pacific, and the maneuvers attending it, are especially significant when viewed from this angle, although not in a direct sense.

In China itself, the valiant fight put up by the Nineteenth Route Army in its defense of Shanghai has not brought forth the nation-wide response that many expected. In the absence of a resolute and conscious class to lead it, the Kuo Min Tang bourgeoisie has for the moment succeeded only in making a football for the imperialists, of the Chinese nation. The most progressive class in the Chinese masses, the proletariat, suffered a frightful defeat at the hands of its own bourgeoisie during the Chiang Kai-Shek-Borodin-Stalin alliance in 1925-1927. The slaughter of the flower of the Chinese working class by Chiang Kai-Shek and the frightful depression following it could only be counter-acted by a slow and patient regathering of its scattered forces, by a wide-spread struggle for the most elementary rights, as was proposed by comrade Trotsky and the Left Opposition at the time. The failure of the Stalinists in control to realize this Marxist tactic and their persistence in sowing illusions about the Red peasant movement in the rural districts, which was only a faint and belated echo of the immense revolutionary upsurge of the earlier years, is again largely responsible for the impotence of the Chinese working masses in the present situation. Its revolutionary rebirth will most probably come with a new wave of proletarian struggle in the other countries, and not in the last place, within the Japanese empire itself. At present, it is first beginning to recover from its tragic defeat, under very difficult conditions.

The events in the Far East and the sharpening conflicts among the capitalist nations cannot be considered in themselves. They are part and parcel of the entire economic and social development of the epoch we live in. The world crisis has brought the course of this development into bold relief. The anarchy of capitalist production, based on the profit system alone, can only be maintained by a widening of the market for each capitalist nation. But a widening of the market, in so far as the capitalists are concerned, can only mean the acquisition, in an economic sense at least, of foreign territories. The fact that all territories outside of the capitalist world have already been distributed among such new "acquisitions" can only be achieved by sharp struggles among the such new "acquisitions" can only be achieved by sharp struggles among the various imperialists. The conflict between Japan and the United States at the present moment is the most recent illustration of this development. War under our present system can only benefit the imperialists. The workers have no interest in it. While American imperialism is waging a struggle for markets on the one hand, it is making an assault upon the standards of living of its own working class on the other. These two methods represent the two levers of the capitalist solution of the economic crisis. The solution of the working class can only be that of persistent and intransigent struggle against its own bourgeoisie, against its war aims and against its wage-cutting drive.

The capitalist antagonisms, between Japan and the United States, between the United States, France and England, cannot help but lead in their further course, to social convulsions, to revolutionary situations. In the meantime, it is the task of the class conscious workers to prepare themselves, to understand what is going on about them, and to act accordingly.

Alongside with the danger of a war among the imperialists, and not at all in contradiction with it, is the danger of a war against the Soviet Union, against the workers' fatherland. For, aside from being the outpost of the world revolution, which is most odious to the entire capitalist world, the Soviet Union also represents a potential market for capitalist exploitation, while the first danger is most prominent in the Far East, the second centers around Germany. The prerequisite for a capitalist attack on Workers' Russia is the crushing of its most reliable ally, the German working class. And that is why the class conscious worker must pay particular attention to the Fascist menace in that country, the success of which can only mean the destruction of the German proletariat and an immediate attack upon the U. S. S. R.

Sharp solutions of the crisis in the Far East and of the class struggle in Germany are inevitable and close. The first task of the Communists in preparing for the revolutionary situation that will result is to entrench themselves and the influence of Communism among the broad masses of the workers. This can only be done by means of a Leninist united front policy. By patiently explaining to the workers, by sincerely striving for unity in action on the issues of the day, by forcing their reformist leaders into the struggle so that their true and treacherous character will become apparent to the workers—this is the way to prepare the ground for effective action in the revolutionary situation to come, this is the Communist road to the masses.

Secondly, it is necessary to educate the American workers to class consciousness by the concrete example of socialist construction in the Soviet Union. This can best be done by linking up the magnificent successes of socialist planning in the U. S. S. R. With the struggle against the misery brought about by capitalist anarchy, by linking up the absolute need for international solidarity in the work going on in the Soviet Union with the fight against unemployment in this country. The Left Opposition for this purpose long ago proposed the slogan of long term credits to Soviet Russia, with which to buy machinery needed for the fulfillment of the five year plan, and which in turn means Soviet contracts for American factories and a considerable measure of relief to thousands of American unemployed workers.

Thirdly, it is necessary to exert all forces to imbue the working class with militant internationalism. To constantly stress that only the international fighting solidarity of the proletariat can once and for all free it from the yoke of capitalism. Concretely, to explain to them every day what it is that binds their interests up with those of the Soviet Union, of the oppressed peoples of the Far East, with the success or failure of revolution in Germany.

The differences that exist on these questions between the Left Opposition and the Stalinists are differences of historic importance, questions of life and death for the revolutionary movement. To fight against the reactionary theory of socialism in one country which cripples that international solidarity without which the workers in America as well as those in Russia are doomed to defeat; to fight against the Centrist policies and tactics of Stalinist Centristism ("united front from below", "social Fascism", etc.) which abandon the working masses to the reformist fakery; to unfold the banner of Marxism-Leninism as the guiding light of the revolutionary vanguard, today; when it is being dragged in the mud—the Left Opposition is ready to undergo all the hardships in the world. The persecutions and slanders of the party bureaucracy cannot for a moment hinder us in our historic struggle, in the struggle for a Leninist party, without which there can be no proletarian victory. Confident of the future, the Left Opposition will patiently continue its course, which is the course of regenerating the Communist movement. It is the hardest and most important task of the moment.

—S. G.

Glotzer Tour Meets Success

The best meeting yet held for the Left Opposition in Chicago is the report of comrade Glotzer's lecture, Sunday Feb. 28, on the prospects of the revolutionary movement in Europe. About 150 workers attended the meeting participating in an excellent discussion after the lecture. This attendance really defied all the efforts of the local party leaders to prevent its success.

Instructions had previously been issued to all party units that no member was to attend Glotzer's meeting on pain of disciplinary action for any violation of this rule. A special party observer was selected to attend, and to attend alone in order to check up on possible recalcitrants. However, the observer failed to put in an appearance while the workers showed up in good numbers eager to head what the Left Opposition representative had to say.

From Boston the tour went to Montreal, Canada. In that city we have no regular organization. Nevertheless it became possible to gather a small meeting of about 30 Communists which resulted in more convinced supporters for our platform. Toronto was the next stop. The handicap to be surmounted in that city are already known to our readers. The reactionary drive against all working class and revolutionary activities now pursued by the capitalist government is particularly aiming to suppress all semblance of freedom of speech and of assembly. Under these conditions a meeting could be arranged only under the greatest difficulties. Nevertheless there was an attendance of about 60 workers, including a good many official party members and close party sympathizers.

In Buffalo comrade Glotzer spoke under the auspices of the local branch of the Proletarian Party Opposition group. While not the most effective advertisement was made, nevertheless fifty workers attended, including some official Party members. Discussion with these P. P. Opposition group comrades have already served to clarify their understanding of our position. As a result the Buffalo branch is proposing to its national group to orientate itself in the direction of unity with the Communist League of America.

Lenin and Trotsky in 1905

On Some Stalinist Distortions of History

The Russian Revolution of October 1917 can only be written adequately when the role of Lenin and Trotsky are properly placed. Written history at the time of this event elevated the role of Lenin and Trotsky to its proper height in relation to the 1917 prelude of the world revolution. The attempts of Stalinism to revamp this part of history, and to delete Trotsky's role from the pages and replace instead—Stalin, is of no avail. The source of material within our party and throughout the world proletarian camp is so voluminous for this research that Stalin's attempt to erase Trotsky's role only complicates matters for Centrists.

But the 1905 Revolution leaves us no such source of material, as to the position of Lenin and Trotsky. Therefore, the haters of Marxism and Internationalism fall back to this period and slur the position of Trotsky. Fortunately though, we have the material and writings of Lenin and Trotsky of this period, and since the party leadership only lies about Trotsky's position it is necessary to constantly bring this material forward, so that the revolutionist and Marxist can decide the facts for himself, as to the position of Lenin and Trotsky.

ON THE FEBRUARY REVOLUTION

Stalinism not only endeavors to misrepresent Trotsky's position in 1905 but also attempts to falsify the role of Lenin, for the purpose of covering up the blunders of the present epigones in the 1917 period. After Stalin "corrected" history, one of the lesser lights followed up in the Daily Worker with an article on "The Historical Experiences of Bolshevism and the International Proletariat". One of the many blunders of the article reads as follows: "The Lessons of the year of 1905 enabled Lenin to draw up that strategic general plan which led the proletariat to victory first in February and afterwards in October 1917." This thought conveys the idea that long before the arrival of Lenin in Russia and long before his famous April thesis, which amounts to the rearming of the party, Stalin and his like, who were in Russia, were carrying out a correct Bolshevik line. In other words, Lenin's arrival and Lenin's April thesis did not correct anything, "the proletariat" were led "to victory first in February" (!). In trying to bury Lenin's April thesis to cover their blunders the February period the Stalinists create the source of additional blunders.

In the introduction to Lenin's pamphlet of articles on the "Revolution of 1905" the epigones rebash history again. In one place this introduction says, "On the other hand, Trotsky, who had never had a definite conception of the nature of the bourgeois revolution of 1905, for this reason reached a point, in his theory of 'permanent revolution' when he denied the possibility of the revolutionary alliance between proletariat and peasantry and proclaimed a 'workers' government' to be the immediate aim of the revolutionary uprising. And to this he 'logically' attached the conception that 'without direct and governmental aid from the European proletariat the working class of Russia could not maintain itself in power' (Our Revolution, page 278 Russian)."

TROTSKY AND THE PEASANTRY

Can you say these "Communists" misquote Trotsky's position in 1905 because they do not know of his position? No. They quote the above from his book, Our Revolution and in that book is sufficient evidence for any class-conscious worker to prove the correct position of Trotsky in 1905. These epigones are quoting Trotsky as the social democrats quoted Marx and Engels.

Trotsky in 1905 said the workers of Russia needed aid from Europe, otherwise they could not maintain themselves—and according to Stalinism this was wrong in 1905. But Lenin, not in 1905 but even in 1918, said the following: "This is a lesson because the absolute truth is that without a revolution in Germany we will perish." (Vol. 15, page 132, Russian edition). And, Lenin again, "Our backwardness has thrust us forward and we will perish if we will not be able to hold out until we meet with the mighty support of the insurrectionary workers of the other countries" (Vol. 15, page 187). What Lenin laid down on this subject in 1918 was equally, if not more so, true in 1905.

Did Trotsky "deny the possibility of the 'revolutionary alliance between the proletariat and peasantry' in the 1905 period, as is claimed? Trotsky, in 1905 said, "It is self-understood that the proletariat, as in its time the bourgeoisie, fulfills its mission, supported upon the peasantry and petit-bourgeoisie. The proletariat leads the village, draws it into the movement, interests it in the success of its plans. The proletariat, however, absolutely remains the leader. This is not the dictatorship of the peasantry and proletariat, but the dictatorship of the proletariat supported by the peasantry." (1905, page 231). Many more equally important passages can be quoted to prove that Trotsky's understanding of the peasant problem in 1905 was equal to any and far superior to the epigones of today who lived at that time. Many such quotations can be had in Our Revolution, translated by Olgin, or in Trotsky's pamphlet on the Permanent Revolution in which he quotes from his works of 1905.

The rank and file Communist members repeat these slanders against Trotsky because they do not know the truth and repeat what they are told. But for the bureaucrats, it is not a matter of ignorance—it is a matter of plain lies, of revisionism; just as the social democrats skillfully quoted Marx and Engels on the state, giving the rank and file a wrong picture. Let me quote just once more from 1905, page 267-68: "Our revolution, which is a bourgeois revolution according to the immediate tasks it grew out of, knows, as a consequence of the extreme class differences of the industrial population of no bourgeois class which could place itself at the head of the popular masses by combining its social weight and political experience with revolutionary energy. The suppressed worker and peasant masses, left to their own resources, must take it upon themselves to create, in the hard school of implacable conflict and cruel defeat, the necessary political and organizational preconditions for their triumph. No other road is open to them."

Does this look as if Trotsky did not understand the relation of the proletariat and peasantry in 1905? Does this look as if Trotsky did not understand the nature of the bourgeois revolution of 1905? Let the revisionists talk. They have their day as the leaders of the second international had theirs. We, the Marxists, are sure of victory. Material facts and Marxian truths are greater than all the lies of the epigones.

LENIN ON COLONIAL REVOLUTION

In the Daily Worker article, quoted above, they say, "The task of organizing the united front of all the exploited and oppressed under the leadership of the proletariat was raised by Lenin to the level of the world problem of the revolutionary alliance of proletariat of the advanced countries with the enslaved peoples of the colonies and semi-colonial countries." This is a jumble and is not the position of Lenin. As Trotsky says, "Lenin thus raised the national liberation movement, the colonial insurrection and wars of the oppressed nations to the level of the bourgeois democratic revolutions, particularly in the period prior to the Russian revolution of 1905. But Lenin did not at all rank the national liberation wars above the bourgeois revolution as this is now done by Bukharin who has turned an angle of 180 degree." (Criticism of the Draft Program). And to this day the revisionist rank this movement above the bourgeois democratic revolution.

All of this revamping of history in relation to the 1905 revolution is necessary on the revisionist part, first to smash the Marxian position of Trotsky and second, to enable them to build a case for the use of the slogan of the democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and the peasantry, as it appears in the Sixth World Congress Program. In order to do this, they must not only throw overboard all the facts of Trotsky's position but with it the position of Lenin on this subject. This hypothetical slogan raised in 1905 was discarded events concretized the perspective through the 1917 revolution. It was discarded by Lenin, but not by the epigones although he criticized them on this very point in April 1917.

THE "DEMOCRATIC DICTATORSHIP"

The introduction to Lenin's valuable book on 1905 also says, "Because of this circumstance, the 1905 revolution may be called the dress rehearsal not only of October 1917, but of the 'World October.' Because of the colonial conditions of China and India, etc. In other words, 1905 is the dress rehearsal for the backward countries in revolutions and 1917 is the dress rehearsal for the industrially developed countries.

In answer to this, we can show that 1917 has been the dress rehearsal not only for the revolutions of industrial Europe, but also for the Chinese revolution of 1925-27. But to this day the Stalinists and Right wingers have not recognized this historic fact. There can be no other than a dictatorship of the proletariat or a dictatorship of the capitalist in content. The form will vary but the form of the proletarian dictatorship in backward countries will not be a "democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and peasants." On the contrary, the more backward the country, the weaker the country is economically, the more open will our dictatorship with the peasant alliance have to be in order to hold power with a minority of the proletariat and here we have the revolution in countries with the majority of the proletariat, the more proletarian democracy can we have in the early years of our rule.

The R.R. Workers and the Wage Cut

A Militant Looks at Conditions in his Industry and Reviews the Past

The article printed below is a discussion article we have received from a worker long active in the Railroad industry. It raises important questions with regard to the Communist approach to the problems of the transport workers, which cannot be overlooked and which deserve the attention of all Communist trade unionists. The columns of The Militant remain, as always, open to all points of view among its class-conscious, working class readers, on this as well as on all matters of import to the revolutionary movement.—Ed.

The recent wage cut of the R. R. workers has once again brought the R. R. unions to the foreground of the American labor movement. The several articles in the Militant dealing with this event have brought out most of the basic factors of the immediate developments. However, to a certain extent they have one common fault. They are uniform in playing up the betrayal of the officials with very little criticism of the rank and file for their past activities or inactivity.

It is true enough that, in so far as the immediate aspects of the situation are concerned, the betrayal of the R. R. workers by the labor skates stands out in bold relief. It is also true that the R. R. workers (the great majority of those involved at the present time have been in the industry since the war) over the period of the past twelve years have been guilty of inactivity, self-centeredness, narrow craft psychology, passivity, white chauvinism, bourgeois prejudices, etc. While the latter facts do not excuse the labor skates for their betrayal neither does the betrayal absolve the rank and file from their sins of omission and commission.

American Stalinism constantly demonstrates to us that the only method known to the bureaucrats for winning both black and white workers for militant struggle is by a system of patronization. But the history of the American labor movement teaches that workers in such situations are prone to seize upon excuses of this kind of deserting the unions in the most critical moment, thus making the further onslaught of the capitalist class less difficult.

Every militant worker knows or should know, as was pointed out in a recent leading article on the R. R. wage cuts, in The Militant, that the acceptance of one wage cut does not arrest the wage-cutting drive. On the contrary it only wets the appetite of the master class. This was the lesson of the events leading up to the shopmen's strike of 1912. Preservation of the R. R. unions, as weak as they are, is of paramount importance to the R. R. workers at the present moment.

MUST ACKNOWLEDGE MISTAKES

In the struggle to develop the class consciousness of the working class it is as essential to point out to the workers their weak sides as well as their strong points and the role of the bureaucrats must not be allowed to serve as an excuse for the short comings of the rank and file. The novice fears to criticize the workers because he is afraid of offending them. He is likely to rely upon the condemnation of the officials instead. But every experienced agitator knows that the first step toward any militant action is to get the workers to see and acknowledge their own failings. This is less difficult to accomplish than it may seem, for the working class is not easily offended by sincere criticism and they instinctively know that they have been guilty of many offenses against their own best interests.

It is handling the question superficially to lay too much stress upon the lack of activity and preparation on the part of the officials when it became evident that the present wage cuts were the immediate goal of the R. R. Companies. To accept such a viewpoint is to aid the official in erecting a plausible excuse for their capitulation. The labor skates betrayal goes back much further and much deeper than that. Likewise the behavior of the rank and file. The history of the struggle in the R. R. industry over the period of the last twelve or fourteen years is full of events. If the rebel worker is to be of value to the R. R. workers in the present situation he must be able to skillfully present both sides of the picture. Those who are incapable of seeing the weakness of the working class will be sure to overlook their strong points at the critical moment.

UNITY SOLIDARITY A CRYING NEED

It was inevitable that all R. R. workers as well as the R. R. union in general would sooner or later suffer from the defeat of the shop men in 1922. The favored position granted to the Brotherhood unions during and after this strike was little short of a bribe for non-support of the shop men. The Brotherhood members are now receiving the second installment of interest on their policy. No amount of excuses can eliminate the fact that the "Hoger" sat on his back side (two hundred and fifty pounds of solid anchorage) and pulled the throttle while the shop men were putting up a heroic but losing battle. Not a few of them, monkey wrench in hand, "got out and got under": It was thus that "Casey" Jones kept his junk pile running. And the trainmen and conductors were doing their stuff in perfect union. Even the "Fire Boys" with their militant traditions and from whose ranks came the undaunted Gene Debs, shame-facedly kept the "home fires" burning brightly beneath the leaky boilers. This was not the first but second offense, for the Brotherhoods did the same thing during the "out-law" switchmen's strike at an earlier date.

Could the Brotherhood men have struck in sympathy with the shop men in spite of their officials? The shop men set the example in the victorious "out-law" strike of 1919 when they told their officials to jump in the lake. Militant support of the shop men in 1922 by the Brotherhoods, leaving the job in sympathy, would have welded the R. R. workers together permanently with an unbreakable iron band of solidarity. It would have left an undying tradition in the R. R. unions.

Do the shop men then have anything to crow about? Very little. After the "out-law" strike victory in 1919, the rank and file allowed themselves to be swayed by a sense of self-security and self-satisfaction. The plea on the part of a few militants to take the maintenance of way men into the shop federation, for the most part, fell on deaf ears. They, the "skilled shop men", disinclined to be too closely associated with "common" (some of the so-called laborers had almost as much skill as the shop crafts) laborers. Several of the shop craft unions (particularly the machinists) were more afraid of being "contaminated" by the Negro workers (who wanted nothing better than a chance to fight side by side and shoulder by shoulder with their white fellow workers) than they were of the R. R. bosses.

The writer knows whereof he speaks, for the main part of his effort during this time was in the direction of bringing the maintenance of way men into the shop federation. Opposition came not only from the officials but from the rank and file as well. Even where there was sympathy for the idea there was little concrete action and much passivity. In the midst of the strike of 1922 every shop man realized the mistake. But it was then too late. Instead of admitting the mistake however, some of them took to blaming it all on the then President of the Maintenance of Way Men. Although that culprit deserved to be condemned and kicked out of the labor movement, the principal blame belongs to the shop men themselves, for it was they who placed the weapons in this fakes' hands by their past policies.

The shop men are also to be blamed for their feeble effort toward the bringing of the several other A. F. of L. Railroad unions into a closely knitted strike alliance and making the R. R. Department of the A. F. of L. something more than a soft spot for such job holding scoundrels as Bert M. Jewel.

It is just at such a time, when the workers are compelled to suffer the consequences of past indifference, that the lessons flowing from past experience must be hammered home to them. In such a time, the logic of the militant minority has tenfold force. Those who waste too much time on the acronically acts of the officials are often wont to divert attention from the more permanent lessons that the working class must learn before any lasting improvement can be made in their status.

Unless the events over the entire period from the end of the war onward are understood and explained, all comment on the present situation will be well nigh useless to the Railroad worker. The whole history must be reviewed and interrupted in language understandable to the working class. Treachery of the officials either past, present or future must not be allowed to become an excuse for individual desertions from the ranks of the old unions. The weaknesses and mistakes of the rank and file must not be minimized. They must be brought out in the open in order that they may be overcome and they can be overcome only by militant activity and real solidarity. There must be no deserting of the unions at the critical moment. The workers must be made to understand that the crying need is One Big Union of all the Railroad workers from the track laborer to the "Hoger" and that the way to get it is to work for it. By substituting unity for dissension, and solidarity for petty self-interest, the Railroad worker can not only regain all lost ground but can march ahead to new victories and the six hour day for the entire Railroad industry.

- A Story of Boss Violence in the Illinois Mine Fields -

Andy is a young coal miner. He works in one of the big coal mines of southern Illinois. His job is possibly the most hazardous in the mines. He runs a locomotive on the main line. Andy and I started into the labor movement at the same time. One evening an organizer of the Young Workers' League came to our mining camp. He played capitalism, he spoke of the struggles of youth in the working class' general fight through out the world. The orator was convincing. Our early experience had taught us that he was right. We joined the Young Workers' League and became absorbed in the fight energetically. We did the best we could, we studied and everything in line with our class duties, was fulfilled to the greatest extent.

Nine years later, we again were together at the recent Indianapolis convention of the United Mine Workers of America. We joined together in a room during the two weeks in the convention city. Every morning we journeyed together at the conclave. We listened attentively to the orators. The infamous John L. Lewis, President of the International Union, belittled and growled away at the insurgents. As we watched the portly, pot bellied, bushy browed, "leader" of "our" union, prance around with his air of sophistication, we began to wonder among ourselves, where such a species of a coal miner had ever originated from! We saw with our own eyes and heard with our ears, this betrayer of the miners for years and his cohorts. We had not made any mistake in the nine years that we had opposed this tool of the coal operators.

During the hectic sessions of the convention we took our place in the fight against the erroneous policies of the officialdom. Andy is not an orator, his early beginnings in the pit had not permitted him to get the education one deserves. Like scores of stevedores of the class struggle, Andy's deeds are not measured by the wonderful language of a silver tongued speaker, but are transformed daily into action by his fights against the mine bosses and his service to the membership of his large local union in which he serves in the capacity of secretary. During the rank betrayals of the Lewis machine throughout the entire proceedings of the convention, Andy's teeth gritted, his mind was where the minds of the officers the union were farthest from; he thought about the miners back home, the miners in the unorganized fields, suffering, starving, dying like rats.

Upon our return home, we prepared for the regular local union meetings. Duty bound, we take the fight back to the coal miners of southern Illinois. Once more the United Mine Workers of America has met in an International Convention, and once more the Lewis machine has further hog-tied the coal miners of the continent. Andy, as a delegate from his local union reports to a well-attended meeting. He exposes the packed convention, the professional hand clappers that were brought in by the official wrecking crew. Nothing was done for the miners! To send delegates to such a convention is like sending delegates to hell, Andy tells them. The miners know it. Their freedom to fight the coal operators and their murderous attacks against them are stifled, not by the forces without, but by the forces from within, paid by the coal miners themselves in handsome salaries.

In the local union, as in every mass section of organized labor is present a stool pigeon of the coal company. One gangster by the name of Whitlow. Formerly on the district payroll of the reactionary clique, alleged to be on the payroll of the Lewis machine at present and for a fact deputized on several occasions to break local "wild cat" strikes and to slug and kill Communists. A general rumpus takes place in the local union meeting as the stool pigeon takes offense to the remarks of the delegates. The miners boo and jeer the agent of the bosses. Andy calls his bluff and challenges him to lay aside his brass "knucks" and his gun and to come in the center of the hall like a man. The complexion of the gangster turns pale, later it becomes green as his cowardly constitution fails him in a man to man fight. The gangster, like the rest of his ilk, is exposed. He must snuff the humiliation of being exposed! He is not now in the dark corners of the street gangling militant workers, his hand is called by a young miner. The meeting is tense, every miner is determined that no other aides of the gangster will interfere. But like all other cowards, the gangster and four of his lieutenants sneak out of the hall with a mad rush. Andy follows them outside, the young militant's indignation is past control. We follow Andy. As we approach the stairway, the gangster has a dead aim on Andy, his wolfish eyes gleam like a demon in the darkness of the night. The murderer's gun barks twice. Andy is temporarily floored, the bullet strikes Andy in the back, piercing his abdomen. The other bullet strikes another young miner in the leg. A waiting automobile rushes the bandits away whom the enraged miners, speeding to the sheriff's office. The gangster receives the protection of the County Jail, as his blood lust body trembles from fear.

Andy is rushed to the hospital along with the other victim. Doctors hurriedly speed to and fro, as the young victim goes under the knife of the surgeon. Hundreds of miners swarm the dark shadows of the trees surrounding the hospital, awaiting news, hoping against hope that their young leader will live. At home, a young wife with her infant will have to be notified . . . What a task!

While Andy fights for his life, while every tissue and corporeal exerts itself for life, as his gentle face is covered by a deadly sweat, the officers of law and order caucus with the murderer. The gangster has nothing to fear from the "law", he is encouraged to murder by the very "enforcers of justice!" "After all, shooting a Communist, especially a hunk, is no more serious than shooting a nigger, they're worse than niggers." This is the report from the County Office of the great American democracy, the land of equal opportunity, pursuit of happiness and symbol of world freedom.

The Militant Subscription Drive

In the center of the drive to build the opposition press stands the task of boosting the circulation of The Militant. This can be done in three ways. It is necessary to increase the paid subscription list. From March 1st to June 1st the subscription drive will take place. The branches of the League should take up the drive in an organized manner. The New York branch has organized two teams with a captain at the head of each. The progress of the teams will be recorded on a specially designed chart on the bulletin board. During the drive with each one year subscription of $2.00 we will offer to the subscriber a paper bound copy of the Permanent Revolution; with each six months' subscription of $1.00 the Strategy of the World Revolution; with a three months' subscription of $.50 any one of our 10c pamphlets. Everywhere our comrades should canvass our sympathizers and their friends for subscriptions. The progress of the drive will be reported in The Militant.

The second way of boosting the circulation of the Militant is by going after expired subs. Our branches will be notified regularly in advance of the expirations. They are expected to canvass for renewals. Renewals will be considered on the same basis as new subscriptions and will be entered to the credit of the comrades. Where we have no branches, if our comrades will undertake this work, we will inform them regularly of further expirations.

The third method of boosting the circulation of The Militant is to increase the newsstand and bookstore sale. To help our comrades place The Militant on stands and in book stores we have printed posters with a picture of comrade Trotsky and the simple statement "Leon Trotsky writes every week for The Militant." These posters are attractive and should be placed on only those stands which carry or will carry The Militant. The publication of the first volume of the History of the Russian Revolution will no doubt be attended by a wave of publicity. It is our intention to ride the crest of this wave. The posters should be ordered immediately, and placed immediately. The bundle orders should also be remitted at once. Where stands carry The Militant, an attempt should be made to persuade them to increase their orders. The posters will be furnished gratis. But they should be distributed discriminatingly as our supply is limited.

If all our comrades pitch in this drive should make it possible to raise the circulation of The Militant 100%.

Lectures on the History of the Communist International

On Wednesday, March 9th when comrade Shachtman begins his series of eight lectures on the History of the Communist International, the Left Opposition, in New York, will take another step to provide workers with an education along Marxian lines which the Stalinists have distorted to fit the needs of their factional stranglehold of the party. The subject was chosen with this view in mind.

The lectures will trace the rise and development of the Third International under Lenin and Trotsky; its Stalinization and degeneration subsequent to Lenin's death, and its future perspectives. The lectures will be popular and designed to raise class consciousness as well as to equip workers with accurate factual data theoretically along the lines of Marxism-Leninism.

«Young Spartacus» No. 4 Out

The March issue of the Young Spartacus is ready for sale and distribution. It contains a summarized article by comrade Trotsky on Germany and Fascism, a report by Albert Glotzer on Imperialist War and the Class Struggle, an article on the murder of Harry Stinson, one of the "Logic of the Theory of National Socialism", a brief biographical sketch of Karl Marx and other interesting items.

The comrades should make efforts for effective distribution and sale of the Young Spartacus.

The editorial board of the Young Spartacus wishes to apologize for the four blank pages which accompany some of the copies of this issue. Due to a misunderstanding the "form" of the Young Spartacus was removed from the press before the press work had been completed, and its contents distributed. We had no alternative but to use the eight page copies (four pages printed and four blank). These copies contain the complete issue of our paper.

IN THE INTERNATIONAL OF LABOR

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

German Political Scene

BERLIN, Feb. 16, 1932

The terrible effects of the crisis, increasing in its intensity, are apparent to all. At present, the articles of the American reporter, Knickerbocker, are making their way through the world press. It must be said that he does not exaggerate at all. The hordes of beggars and prostitutes are growing on the streets daily: a symptom of the constantly spreading misery. But even those who do have work, find it impossible to live a normal life on their ever more and more reduced "wages".

Under these circumstances it is rather astonishing, on first consideration, that no strikes whatsoever broke out at the time of the last wage cut, in January, despite the fact that the C. P. G. agitated for strikes with all its forces, once again sacrificed a good number of the few who still remain with it in the factories. But the cause here is the same as that for the lack of all the other activities. By its false "third period" tactics, the party has isolated itself from the masses organized in the trade unions, who form the decisive element for any sort of action. In this manner, the masses who want to fight remain without leadership, and the leadership that wants to fight—without masses. This new bankruptcy of the trade union tactics in the course of the strike attempts in January has caused the bureaucracy to carry out a certain turn in trade union policy with increased energy; that is, all forces are now being concentrated for the work in the trade unions. But unfortunately, this work is being carried on in such a spirit that great successes cannot be expected.

NAZI TERROR INCREASES

The most striking feature of the situation—and one should not be distracted from this by all the parliamentary maneuvers—is the growth of the National Socialist movement, if not in numbers, then in power, in spite of all the minor injuries inflicted on Hitler. The extra-parliamentary activity of the Nazis has once again taken a big bound. Only to mention two examples (which, by the way, have taken place right in the midst of Red Berlin): an assault by Nazis on a workers' colony in Felsenheim—entirely after the Italian model—and the disruption of a protest meeting attended by several thousand Communists by a few hundred Nazis. The latter case is altogether unheard-of. It is the first time such a thing has happened. Here, as well as in the case of other murders of workers, and in the scuffles at the universities it is naturally the Communists who are arrested. The Nazis are generally set free. Is it at all surprising, when Minister Groener—and that is very significant too—who still hauled Nazi officers before a court martial a year ago, today opens up the "republican" army for the Nazis? In order to round out the picture, we must also mention that the organizers of the pogrom of which we have spoken above, and in particular a certain Count Helldorf, have all been acquitted.

With regard to the presidential elections, we have reported before. It is, of course, self-evident that the Left Opposition will, as always, support the candidate of the party. The very probable renunciation of a candidacy of its own in favor of Hindenburg by the S. P. G. will naturally offer exceptionally favorable opportunities for the Communists in the election struggle. The task imposed by this, namely, to take advantage of the parliamentary gain for extra-parliamentary actions will, however, be possible only with a turn in the tactics of the C. P.

UNITED FRONT IS ONLY SOLUTION

The position of the S. P. G. in the presidential elections is naturally breaking up its "iron front", created under such hopeful circumstances, almost immediately. That was a bloc of all republican organizations for a struggle against Fascism, carrying on a theoretical campaign with many well attended meetings, which had, to be sure, very little practical value for the fight against the Fascists, but did nevertheless effect the dissatisfied S. P. G. members so strongly that the growth of the Socialist Labor Party (the split-off from the S. P. G.), for example, had come to a standstill. At the present, only a united front policy, as outlined by comrade Trotsky in his latest pamphlets, is needed to drive a deep wedge into their ranks.

To report more in detail about the S. L. P. G. very much space is required, for this prototype of a Centrist party has almost as many tendencies as members. (There can be no doubt that a rapid process of differentiation is going to take place within it.) On the one side, in the direction of reformism, towards which a great part of the leadership doubtlessly tends, and in the direction of Communism, to which a great part of the worker members stands very close. Not a few of them will stop at Stalinist Centristism, if it will not only turn slightly in the German question. These are aided by preparatory work on the part of those Brandlerites in the S. L. P. G. who preach against criticism in the international and the Russian questions. It is well-known that the "genuine" Brandlerites themselves are on their way back to Stalin. The creation of an equal Centrist party has made their attempt at the establishment of one like it—superfluous. Part of them have gone over to the Centrist party, the others want to go back. What will become of this former part of the Brandlerites in the further course of the process of development inside the S. L. P. G., it is hard to say with certainty, in advance. The perspectives are not very good for them, since Walcher, Froelich, e.c., have a very great, but nevertheless very questionable tradition (1923) behind them.

It is also quite indisputable that with even the meagre activities of the German Opposition, great parts of the S. L. P. G. will, after they have convinced themselves of the impossibility of their fundamental idea (or rather, fundamental mistakes,—the creation of a new Communist party—place themselves on the positions of the Left Opposition and fight with us to reform the party. For it is hard to describe the extraordinary popularity that comrade Trotsky enjoys within the ranks of these workers who are coming from reformism to the revolution. No wonder. These workers feel no need of the theoretical marginalization of Brandler-Thalheimer or the stammering of Thalheimer; they are anxious to learn Communism at its source. This has not only instigated the Stalinists to a new campaign of slander, but even Brandler could not sleep peacefully until he too had contributed in his moribund little sheet, his compound of falsification and insults under the misleading title, "theoretical article", which was quite worthy of a Yaroslavsky. But this will not stop the onmarch of the Trotsky pamphlets, which speak on that which millions of workers feel as a necessity.

Greek Oppositionist Victim of Terror

ATHENS, GREECE

On January 23, there died in the Municipal Hospital of Athens, comrade Theodore Paboucoupos, for two years a member of the Archio-Marxist Youth. Comrade Paboucoupos and nine other members of our organization were arrested during the illegal demonstrations on the Fourteenth Anniversary of the Russian Revolution and condemned to 42 months of imprisonment and deportation. Imprisoned in the Averoff Reformatory he was savagely maltreated by the guards because of his revolutionary attitude. All the comrades were beaten up for 10 consecutive hours on the flat of their feet. As a result of this maltreatment, our comrade Paboucoupos suffered from a swelling and a gangrene developed. His leg was amputated, but the poison spread all over his organism and after 50 days of martyrdom he succumbed.

Here is a version of the incidents that took place on the day of his burial, according to the bourgeois journal "Eleftheros Anthros" of January 24.

"The Communist Incidents of Yesterday"

"The Communist Injured at Averoff Dies"

"During the Funeral Fighting Takes Place"

"Clashes between Police and Archio-Marxists"

"Attacks Made to Snatch Away the Corpses"

"Yesterday morning the young Communist Paboucoupos died at the Municipal Hospital, where he had been transferred from Averoff Prison, to which he was committed with other Communists for violating the Anti-Communist Law, and at which he was maltreated by a guard. At the Hospital, his foot was amputated, but it was impossible to save him. The death of the young Communist Paboucoupos, due, according to the hospital physicians, to septic poisoning caused by the injury, provoked bloody battles between police and Communists at his funeral yesterday. The fighting was provoked in the following manner: "As soon as the death of the young worker Paboucoupos became known, the Organization of the Bolshevik-Leninists (Archio-Marxists) circulated the leaflet printed below among the workers:

"Workers: Your comrade Paboucoupos is dead. A victim of bourgeois savagery, this young worker has given his life to the struggle for bread and freedom of our class. The butchers have slain him in the prisons.

"Workers: Do not allow this crime to pass unpunished. Raise your voice in protest and prepare the ferment of revenge. All out to his funeral today at 8 o'clock near the Church of the First Cemetery. Follow our young comrade to his last resting place! Down with the capitalist assassins! The martyrs of our cause must not be forgotten!

Organization of the Bolshevik-Leninists (Archio-Marxist Left Opposition)

"At 3 o'clock promptly, the Archio-Marxists began to arrive in groups and demanded that the corpse be handed over to them for the funeral. The brother of the victim and his parents appeared for the same purpose. But the police gathered in front of the Hospital, and executing the orders of the Police Department, refused to hand over the body of Paboucoupos to the Archio-Marxists. In view of the refusal of the police to grant the demands of the Archio-Marxists and the insistence of the latter on taking possession of the body of their comrade, saying that "he belonged to them", the incidents mentioned above took place. Seeing that the assembled would not depart even if they attempted to disperse them by force, the police tried to remove the corpse through a door at the rear end of the Hospital, out of the sight of the Communists.

"After the transfer of the corpse, the Archio-Marxists were informed that the dead had been interred in the First Cemetery.

"An attack against the Police
"Following this, the Archio-Marxists turned en masse to the First Cemetery. But a great contingent of police gathered there, with Chief of Police Nascos at their head.

"At the First Cemetery the Archio-Marxists again demanded that the corpse of Paboucoupos be given to them, but the police refused and occupying the gates to the cemetery, prohibited them from entering. Upon this attitude on the part of the police, the Archio-Marxists began to climb the walls and in several minutes they were all inside the cemetery and took possession of the unfortunate Paboucoupos. Immediately, they hoisted the dead on their shoulders and started to sing revolutionary funeral songs in preparation to the interment. The police, with fresh reinforcements, commanded the Archio-Marxists to abandon the dead and to leave. They refused. A lively scuffle took place between police and Archio-Marxists. The police finally succeeded in dispersing the Archio-Marxists, chasing them with nightsticks among the graves. Later on the police buried the dead after an official ceremony.

"But the incidents of yesterday did not end at the cemetery. The dispersed Archio-Marxists reformed their ranks in front of the University to protest the unjust seizure of the dead by the police. Three speakers harangued the crowd, attacking the police, condemning its interference and characterizing it as "unheard-of cruelty". . . . Later the Archio-Marxists headed for the Court House. A committee petitioned the District Attorney, protesting against the attitude of the police and declared for the first time, relatives and friends have not been allowed to bury their dead, entrusted to policemen with nightsticks! The District Attorney declared himself incompetent to act in the matter. After the committee left the Court House, new incidents were provoked. A skirmish took place between police and Archio-Marxists resulting in one policeman being wounded and in the arrest of seven workers."

At the time of their arrest for the demonstration of the Fourteenth Anniversary, our comrades declared before the Tribunal that they were Bolshevik-Leninists. A lawyer comrade defended them. The official organ of the party did not breathe a word of all this and classified them as members of the party. Seven days after our paper Pali Ton Taxeon brought news of the crime committed in the prison, the party paper launched an attack against the state for the maltreatment of comrade Paboucoupos, whom it called a member of the Young Communist League affiliated to the party. The young martyr wrote a letter, published in the Pali (The letter mentioned appeared in The Militant of January 6, 1932—Ed.)

The party organ did not breathe a word about it, but continued to exploit the fact in the branches of the I. L. D. where they refused to let our comrades take the floor. At the same time, the I. L. D. forgot the martyr and failed to send him either medications or food. The day of his death they went so far as to demand the corpse for the funeral, although the deceased was a member of our organization and despite the fact that his brother is also a sympathizer of ours. At the grave, a Stalinist outraged all those present with the shout "Down with the Archio-Fascists!" but the worker-members of the party, who had joined in our united front, silenced him. The party membership considered the dead as a member of the working class. But the Stalinist bureaucrats attempted to exploit him for their own ends, not mentioning anywhere that the victim was a member of our organization.

Pali Ton Taxeon, in its editorial on January 26, drew the following conclusions:

"The death of comrade Paboucoupos has given the members and sympathizers of the Communist party an opportunity to demonstrate their sentiments. Despite the efforts of the Stalinist bureaucracy to exploit comrade Paboucoupos, as is its custom in other working class questions, the workers of the party understood that the victim was a victim of their class and they realized the united front with us in their chagrin at the actions of the bureaucrats as they have realized it in the course of the struggle. For them, the Archio-Marxist Paboucoupos was a revolutionist and a member of a revolutionary Communist organization. The Stalinist bureaucracy is responsible before the workers of having attempted to transform the dead into a banner for its own exploitation against our organization. The workers have judged them and condemned them for it."

The Memorial Meeting

On the First of February, our organization organized a memorial meeting for comrade Paboucoupos. 1500 workers participated. Bloody clashes took place in front of the cemetery where the police force attacked with stones for a whole hour until it was finally forced to shoot at the demonstrators, to disperse them. Later on, demonstrations were held in the town proper. 141 were arrested, but due to the broad participation of the working class and its militant manifestations, the arrested were set free. This has aroused the fury of the bourgeoisie and the judges responsible for the acquittals have been severely reprimanded.

The Stalinists fixed another hour for the memorial in order not to permit their sympathizers to come in contact with us. We defeated this maneuver by appearing at the hour set by them. We took the initiative in the demonstration and we transformed it into a success for our organization. The following day, the official organ of the party was forced to admit that Paboucoupos was an Archio-Marxist.

tral party organ is edited by the turncoat Pumarega, which is, perhaps, as it should be, under the Stalinist regime.

With the conditions in almost perfect harmony for the progress of the Communist party, with virtually everything in its favor, the party has nevertheless only made the slightest gains, gains which, considering the possibilities, are really closer to losses. Instead of dominating the stage of events, official Communism drags out a distracted existence somewhere in the wings. Stalinism has robbed it of its vigor, paralyzed its limbs, upset its ideological balance, divested it of its power to attract the masses. Only a stiff antidote of Marxism will enable the Communist movement to shake off this noxious disease. Communism is not dead in Spain, as its enemies hope. It has only been momentarily prostrated by Centristism, and it will revive with new strength under the influence of the Left Opposition. The Bolshevik-Leninists of that country already number a thousand strong and they bear the future in their hands.

—MAX SHACHTMAN.

The Spanish Communist Party in the Revolution

Points of similarity in the Russian and the Spanish revolution can be found in numerous questions. It is when a comparison is made between the state of the revolutionary party in both countries that the striking contrast is found. The Bolshevik party under Lenin and Trotsky was fully equipped for the struggle for power and drove inexorably and successfully towards that aim. In Spain, the Communist party, deprived of rudiments, sails and crew by the ravaging storms of Stalinism has floundered helplessly in the trough of events and has served as one of the principal factors slackening the progress of the proletarian victory.

It does not always take a revolutionary situation to demonstrate the disastrous effects of eight years of the domination of Centristism in the Communist International. But such a situation does reveal with the clarity of a flash of lightning the wreckage in the field of ideas and organization which the Stalinist current has left in the wake of its campaign against "Trotskyism", that is, against the tested principles of Marxism. The tragedy of the Chinese revolution is to be attributed to it. The setbacks suffered by the proletarian movement in England during the big strikes six years ago, in Austria during the Viennaurrection, in Germany for the last few years, in short, wherever the Communists have been confronted with historic tasks, may be traced directly to the poisonous doctrines distilled in the laboratories of the Stalin machine. Now the "great organizers of defeat" are diligently pursuing their appointed task in Spain. The responsibility for the situation lies directly in the hands of the central Stalinist clique, for it has ruthlessly extirpated any sign of independent thought and leadership in the national sections, substituting for them puppets in office who practise a servile obedience towards the "infallible chiefs"—a condition which has one advantage: it makes it impossible for these chiefs to unload the responsibility for defeat upon anybody else, try as they will.

MANUILSKY ADMITS ERRORS

It is a truism to affirm that no small question is involved. The question of the Communist party is decisive in the Spanish revolution. Only anarchists can believe that without a proletarian vanguard organized into a political party for the purpose of leading the class to power, and capable of reaching that goal, the workers of Spain can achieve their emancipation. But in actuality, one of the main reasons for the persistent strength of the anarchists in the Spanish labor movement has been "the absence of such a party. Just look at the following, great condensed record of the official party leadership, registered, moreover, in a revolutionary period when uncorrected small errors assume downright threatening proportions.

Every Communist infant now "knows" that one of the unforgivable crimes of "Trotskyism" is its penchant for "leaping over stages", for "not distinguishing" between the democratic and the socialist stages of the revolution. This stupid falsehood has been dimmed into the ears of every new recruit to the movement. No doubt but that the present leaders of the Spanish party accused their own Oppositionists of the same thing. But when the monarchy was overthrown, these revolutionary savants, far from "leaping over" any stages, simply failed to see that a "new stage" had been reached. In this line of thought they were merely giving a faithful imitation of Manuilsky and the other appointed leaders of the Comintern, which did not prevent one of the official scapegoats from stating (correctly, but more than a year afterward) that:

"The party was taken by surprise by the fall of the monarchy; it saw in it nothing more than a change of front, without seeing the change in the class relationships, and in principle it roundly denied that the bourgeois-democratic revolution had commenced."

In other words, the Stalinists, who have introduced into Marxism the positively gifted idea of the bourgeois revolution "growing over into" the socialist revolution, made the simple mistake of not recognizing the bourgeois-democratic revolution even when it burst before them with a deafening roar. After the fall of the monarchy, the French Communist Party plastered the walls of Paris with posters announcing: "Nothing has changed in Spain!"

As soon as the party leaders woke up to the fact that a revolution had taken place under their very noses, they proceeded to "act with determination". While the masses of workers and peasants, and certainly the petty bourgeoisie, were still reeling deliciously under the influence of their democratic illusions, the party contended itself with fingering into a void the "radical" slogan: Down with the bourgeois republic! Partial slogans like urging the seizure of land by the peasant, were scornfully pushed aside and in their place the slogan of Soviets was issued as a slogan for immediate action, and of course, "Soviets under the leadership of the Communist party". Naturally, neither the workers nor the peasants paid the slightest attention to such fantastic absurdities. The Stalinists acted throughout like the man who has come too late for his train and then, after going home because "there is still time for the next one", misses that one too.

The interest in democratic demands aroused in the masses by the fall of the monarchy found no reflection in the activities and slogans of the official party. Neither by word or deed did it give the masses any indication that only the proletariat and its revolution could really solve the democratic tasks with which Spain is still confronted. In this manner, it lengthened the term of imprisonment to which the popular masses were condemned in the ranks of the republican and socialist demagogues who were thus enabled to pursue their hypocritical course of unfulfilled and unfulfillable promises.

In the trade union field the party piled blunder upon blunder. And here it had to deal not only with the social democracy which was already discredited among the majority of the workers (although it still remains no mean factor), but with the anarchists and syndicalists who had a revolutionary prestige among the masses which only an intelligent Marxist policy could possibly shake. Instead, therefore, of sinking the roots of the party in the National Confederation of Labor (anarcho-syndicalist) and the General Union of Workers (Socialist), the party was forced by its leadership to waste invaluable time in what the official Comintern critic (Stirner) now calls "the premature creation of small and lifeless Red trade unions". Result: in the socialist trade unions, the Communist influence remains quite negligible. In the anarchist unions, with hundreds of thousands of members and the decisive influence upon the workers, the party's hold is just as inconsequential. In fact, throughout Catalonia, the industrial heart of Spain and the seat of power of the N. C. of L., the Communist party does not even exist because the vast bulk of the organized Communist workers have been inexcusably surrendered to the mercies of the Right wing faction of Maurin and Co.

To say that the internal regime in the Spanish party does not differ essentially from the one prevailing in the other national sections, is already enough to give any even half-experienced Communist worker a clear idea as to what is meant. For months during the early period of the revolution, the Madrid "Executive Committee", composed of a handful of bureaucrats, ruled despotically in the name of Spanish Communism without any mandate except the rights arbitrarily conferred upon them by their Moscow superiors, in the purely papal sense. Critical and even questioning voices in the ranks were either commanded to be still, or else their possessors were summarily expelled from the party. Bullejos-Trila-Adame—this unholy trinity has become a by-word in the ranks of Spanish Communism, and even inside the official party. Workers supporting the Left Opposition found themselves promptly removed from the party's membership list. The best-known and most popular leaders and founders of the Spanish Communist movement were expelled for "Trotskyism", and that is why such comrades as Juan Andrade, Andres Nin, Henri Lacroix, Luis Palacios, Esteban Bilbao and scores of others of the same caliber are today outside the ranks of official Communism, which does not, it is true, diminish their activity for the revolutionary movement by one iota.

Whole districts and groups have been expelled, and in cases with disastrous consequences. The best example of the latter is the case of the Catalan Federation which resisted the false trade union line of Messrs. Bullejos and Adame and fought against party bureaucracy. The arbitrary expulsions which followed resulted in Right wing confusionists like Maurin being enabled virtually to take over the Catalan Communist movement, while the official party remains with scarcely a nucleus throughout the district. But for that, elements have made their way into the party who can only disgrace its name. The worst instance is the appointment of Angel Pumarega as editor of the party's recently established daily paper in Madrid. Pumarega is the creature who, while imprisoned with other Communist leaders under the Primo dictatorship, wrote from his cell to plead for mercy and liberation on the basis of his complete renunciation of Communism and the assurance that he would quit all politics. The release by this despicable renegade only enabled the latter to devote his talents for a long time to the reactionary gangster "trade unions" organized by Martinez Andio in Barcelona. Now, while the party is carefully purged of all "counter-revolutionary Trotskyists", the cent-

«The History of the Russian Revolution»

Leon Trotsky: The History of the Russian Revolution. Volume 1: The Overthrow of Tsarism.—Translated by Max Eastman.—Published by Simon and Schuster, Inc., New York.—$4.00.

With the enforced leisure imposed upon him by the Stalinist faction for the past four years, the organizer of the Red Army, the comrade-in-arms of Lenin, has forged another great weapon for the international working class in its struggle for a higher form of society, for liberation from the capitalist yoke. And that is precisely what his History of the Russian Revolution is. A weapon, a manual of action for the proletarian revolutionists the world over.

If the Russian revolution in itself served to inspire in thousands of proletarian fighters in every country the spirit of Bolshevik internationalism, then this History of the Russian Revolution, by the scientific analysis of its inner processes, will teach these fighters how to put that spirit into practice.

Without for one moment leaving out of sight the broad historical outlines of the event, Trotsky displays a painstaking devotion to detail, a penetrating preoccupation with the minutest shadings of action, policy and thought such as only a craftsman is capable of. The whole gigantic scene, all of its complicated mechanism, rises before the reader with the whole lucidity of its deep internal logic. Neither the intrigues and counter-intrigues of the reactionary camouflages within the decrepit Romanov monarchy, nor the nuances of policy among the representatives of the big bourgeoisie, nor the squirming and vacillation of the petty bourgeois leaders are left out of account. Each is accorded its proper place and weight in the continuity of the narrative, each is evaluated from the point of view of the tactics of the revolutionary party.

The major place, however, is of course accorded to the chief actor in the immense drama—the masses. "The most indubitable feature of a revolution is the direct interference of the masses in its historic events." And it is the study of the revolutionary consciousness of the masses in action that makes the book doubly valuable for the Communist militant. Here, the masses are shown marching ahead with determination while their "leaders" turn and twist and attempt to avoid struggle. Here the masses are shown smashing through the hardened shell of the conservative ideology accumulated by them in the course of peaceful times by bold, revolutionary, everyday activity.

The picture of the masses streaming into the streets in February to proclaim the downfall of the Romanovs, while the "democratic" Milukovs plead with the doomed dynasty for a "constitutional regime"; the picture of the masses demonstrating openly for the dismissal of Milukov in April, while Kerensky and Tseretelli and the other conciliators tremble lest the bourgeoisie leave all the power to them; and once again the picture of the masses rallying to the Bolshevik banner against the "offensive" in June, while Kerensky and Tseretelli prepare to outlaw the Bolsheviks as German spies, are only a few of the impressions that will help bring home the lesson of the tremendous historical importance of the masses to those who are dedicated to lead them in the struggles to come.

The masses are not to be trifled with. In the last analysis, it is they who decide, who and what shall prevail. And it is this fact that the Communists, who are needed by the masses just as much as they need them, must understand. "For better or worse, the revolutionary party bases its tactics upon a calculation of the changes of mass consciousness." Just to talk about the masses and their role, is not enough. It is necessary to understand what is going on in their minds. "However, the processes taking place in the consciousness of the masses are not unrelated and independent... consciousness is determined by conditions." To understand these conditions and their reflections in the mind of the people, a revolutionary, Marxist party is needed for "the active orientation of the masses by a method of successive approximations." Without a Marxist understanding of the character of the Russian revolution, of the relationship of class forces within it, and of the specific period of time in which it broke out, a successful conclusion was unthinkable. And it was just this understanding that Lenin brought to the Bolshevik party in April 1917, when the Bolshevik leaders, along with the other political chiefs, lagged behind the consciousness of the masses.

Lenin's rearming of the party is regarded by Trotsky as the most important factor in shaping the course of the revolution. Just as the "interference of the masses" formed the unmistakable general feature of the revolution, the rearming of the revolutionary party, and the orientation of the masses subsequent to that, lent it its specific, ultimate character. In the chapter, "Rearming the Party", the role of the proletarian vanguard and that of the revolutionary leadership as a whole, is expounded with convincing precision. The personality of Lenin, his indispensable value for the progress of the masses to power, is cast in its true light. His great historical significance is enhanced by an objective, Marxist evaluation. Lenin's was the power of determining the conditions of the consciousness of the masses and of "actively orientating the masses by a method of successive approximations." And it was this power of Lenin's, combined with the "interference of the masses" of the party itself in the rearming of the party (up to then disoriented by Kamenev, Molotov and Stalin) that brought the Bolsheviks to the fore as the veritable leaders of the revolution.

Of especial value to the theoretical considerations involved in the estimate of the February revolution, is the appendix to the chapter "Peculiarities of Russia's Development". The dangerous practical implications of a schematic conception of the dialectics of economic development are pointed out in all their sharpness. Without a realistic, Marxist view of the specific character of Russia, without applying the Marxist theory of the permanent revolution to it, it is impossible to grasp the logic of the events of 1917. How can the impotence and the amazingly rapid elimination from power of the Russian bourgeoisie be understood without it? How can the dominating role of the young and numerically weak Russian proletariat be conceived of, from a different point of view? Those who are inclined to consider his characterizations of Kerensky, Milukov and the other protagonists of the big and the petty bourgeoisie as caused by personal malice only fail to give the slightest attention to Trotsky's scientifically grounded analysis of the social basis that produced them. Trotsky cannot be held responsible for the ridiculous spectacle of the Kerenskys and Milukovs any more than he can be held responsible for the precarious position of the Russian bourgeoisie in 1917. That was merely due to the peculiarities of historical development. And the same holds true for the portraits of Stalin, Tseretelli, Kamenev and the others, as well.

The chapter of "The Peasantry" is particularly significant in so far as it explodes the myth of the Stalinist epigones of an eternal alliance between the proletariat and the peasantry—as though it were created in heaven. It was certainly not Lenin who developed this disastrous theory which has since his death produced such frightful results in China and elsewhere. Lenin's conception of the alliance with peasantry like Trotsky's, was based on the temporary relationships of forces within the country. It was precisely the weakness of the bourgeoisie and the immature development of capitalism in Russia, Trotsky points out, that made the peasantry—always incapable of independent action—more amenable to an alliance with the proletariat. The agrarian problem of the Russia of 1917 and the actual attitude of Lenin towards it, are presented with telling proof.

The History of the Russian Revolution is a challenge to the bourgeois historians, it is a challenge to the social democrats and the Stalinists as well. Retracing the events step by step, illuminating each step with irrefutable facts and documents, Trotsky builds up the Bolshevik resume of the February revolution, and flings historic truth in the face of all the slanders and distortions to which this great event has been subjected in the past. It once more proves that only the Marxists can afford today to say what is, to speak out the truth. Without feigning historical impartiality, beneath the cloak of which reaction so desperately attempts to spread its deadly poison, Trotsky gives a fearless and objective account of events as they took place. The right to draw his own conclusions from the facts no one can deny him. That is his revolutionary duty. But in order that his conclusions may be most effective for the progress of the revolution, the Marxist knows that he must base them upon reality.

The great work of comrade Trotsky is so packed with action, so closely cemented with documents, so impregnated with powerful revolutionary lessons, that a brief review like the present cannot, by far, even attempt to do it justice. The History of the Russian Revolution is not merely a new publication, it is a creation that will become part of the life of future revolutionary generations. We shall come back to it again from time to time.

We are bringing below a chapter from a larger work by comrade Rakovsky. Although the figures cited have, in part, grown antiquated and, in part, been surpassed, this work is nevertheless of exceptional significance. For the first time problems which facilitate a Marxist examination of the results of the five year plan and of the process of development in the Soviet Union are raised and subjected to a thorough analysis.

Christian Georgevitch Rakovsky is one of the most prominent personalities in the international revolutionary movement, with a record of versatile activities and of participation in the revolutionary movements of several countries behind him. He is now 58 years old, 42 years of his life—ever since 1880—he has spent in the revolutionary working class movement. Having from Dobruja (formerly Bulgaria, later Rumania), he still enjoys the greatest degree of confidence on the part of the Balkan proletariat. In the years 1906-1907 he founded the Rumanian socialist party and trade unions. During the war he participated in the Zimmerwald conference. The Russian revolution liberated him from imprisonment in Rumania. Since then, he occupied some of the most important positions in the civil war. Elected president of the Ukrainian Soviet Republic, he remains at this post for four years, when he is sent to hostile England as the Soviet Ambassador to that country. From this post he is transferred to that of Ambassador to France. Wherever he goes, he remains faithful to his revolutionary internationalism. He showed himself prepared to exchange his position as Ambassador for the life of an exile when he saw the leadership of the C. P. of the Soviet Union deviating from the Marxist line. Ever since 1928, he has been living in exile, at first in Astrakhan. Physicians pointed out that Rakovsky would not, at his age, be able to bear the life of an exile, that he was doomed to physical destruction there. After this, Stalin deported him to Barnoul in Siberia! Stalin knows that the frightful cold and the general climate of that place will destroy this fighter physically. Every sincere worker must raise his voice against these shameful deeds. Rakovsky must become the model of the revolutionary youth that floods to proletarian internationalism. The campaign of physical destruction conducted by Stalin against the Bolshevik-Leninists cannot destroy the ideas of the Left Opposition. In spite of everything, they are forging ahead and penetrating the masses of Communist workers.—Ed.

The extraordinarily strong quantitative increase in production over that of last year is absolutely indisputable. The gross value of heavy industry for three quarters of this year (1930) amounted to 11,705 million Rubles (prices remaining equal) as against 91,374 million Rubles for the past year. This is an increase of 27.4 per cent. Although this increase is 3.7 per cent lower than that prescribed by the plan, it is nevertheless to be considered as exceptionally high. This would be sufficient ground for optimism, were we to stop with the mere mention of the fact, without going into an analysis of the accompanying circumstances and phenomena which are bound up with this rise in the quantitative co-

Lovestonites in A. C. W.

The Necessity of A Correct Policy
With a correct policy it is possible to reach the masses of clothing workers at this time and get them behind a serious movement against the betrayals of the Hillman officialdom. Hillman's grip on the organization has been greatly shattered and his prestige irreparably damaged. His betrayal of the tailors in the strike of last July and the recent wage cut imposed on the hitherto privileged cutters have created the conditions for a unified struggle. The cutters who paid the price for Hillman's fake struggle against racketeering are now realizing their common interests with the tailors. Hillman's policy of serving the bosses at the expense of the masses of clothing workers is forcing him to wipe out all vestiges of union conditions and reduce all branches to the lowest level of working standards. The bosses have succeeded in not only breaking the condition of the workers but also in weakening the Hillman administration. The time is not far when they will be ready to discard even the services of the Hillman bureaucracy as these services are approaching the point of exhaustion. When Hillman becomes useless to them, the fight against the A. C. W. will be the next stage in the history of the industry.

The Left wing must be prepared for great struggles. The Rank and File Committee has a great task to perform. The Lovestone Right wing combination holds no gains for the clothing workers, but it can, however, temporarily succeed in misleading the workers and cause more betrayals. The Rank and File Committee must state off their demagogic advances. This cannot be accomplished by merely disrupting their meetings, even though they may not deserve any other treatment. There should be a consistent ideological preparation of Left wing forces and the adoption of a correct and clear policy. A thorough analysis of the past error and a correct approach to the present situation will clear the way for a much needed Left wing movement in the A. C. W.

Rakovsky on the Five Year Plan

I have already pointed out that a growth in the quantity figures themselves does not represent an adequate criterion for the evaluation of the actual growth of the productive forces, nor even for determining the existence of any such growth in general. A genuine yardstick for the increase of the forces of production, and consequently, a guarantee for further raising the quantity figures, can be given by the following three factors: (1) the basis upon which these quantity figures have been achieved; (2) the relationship between the quantity and the quality coefficients; (3) the measure of accumulation and extension of industrial capital.

Two main types of increases in the quantity figures are possible: (1) an increase on the basis of the extension of investment capital, which is generally connected with a rise in the productivity of labor (in the Marxist sense of the word; i. e., an increase in the product of labor, figured per person, on the basis of the transition of industry to a higher level); (2) an increase on the basis of the old figure for investment capital (and consequently on the old technical basis) at the cost of its more intensive exploitation. In the latter case, a rise in the quantity figures is generally bound up with an increase in the intensity of labor and with a relatively big growth of the labor forces. In practice, both these methods of increasing the quantity figures generally go hand in hand, and the task before us consists of determining the share of each. An exact calculation of this is hardly possible (in any case it is impossible on the basis of the material I have at hand) so that it becomes necessary to employ a series of indirect indices which, in my opinion, suffice to give a general conception of the state of affairs. It is indisputable that in the course of the last year a certain extension of industrial investment capital has taken place regardless of the non-fulfillment of the plan in the main fields of production and regardless of the insufficient amortization. It is indisputable that this is also the case in the course of the present year, so that an increase of quantity has, to a certain extent, taken place also on the basis. But when we approach this question from the other end we are easily convinced that in reality, the rise in quantity has taken place on the basis of the methods of the second order. We have, above all, an enormous increase in the burden borne by the old investment capital through of the introduction of the uninterrupted working week and the increase in work shifts.

According to the control figures, the increase in the labor product per worker should have "supported itself" only in a very slight measure on a rise in the intensity of labor. In practice this has worked out differently. Already in the first half year the number of workers increased 14.3 per cent in comparison with the same period of the past year. The increase in the number of workers surpassed the assumptions of the plan more than fourfold. In so far as the increase in the labor product per worker is concerned, that amounted in the first half year to about 18-19 per cent instead of the 25.3 per cent prescribed by the plan. If we could determine with precision to what extent this increase in the product of labor took place at the cost of improvement in the technical basis and to what extent at the cost of a rise in the intensity of labor, that would, of course, throw even more light on the subject. But at present we can only give an approximate calculation on the basis of the figures cited above. The introduction of the five-day week, in connection with uninterrupted work in the factory, signifies in itself an increase in the working time of the factory equipment amounting to 1-6 or 16.6 per cent. If within these three quarters of the year about 50 per cent of the workers, that is, about 1-2 of the industry, went over to the five day week, then this increased exploitation of investment capital alone must have brought with it an increase in production of about 8-9 per cent. The increase in work shifts must have brought an increase of 1-2 per cent. The increase in the number of workers tended in the same direction; since it took place in a considerable measure at the cost of an increase in unskilled workers, that meant an opportunity for the skilled workers to better exploit the equipment. Finally, when we take into consideration the fact that the transition to uninterrupted work in the factories meant the automatic abolition of a series of idle periods for equipment of a purely technical character, then it is probably not far from the truth to assume that 15 per cent of the increase in production is to be attributed to the introduction of the five-day week, the increase in the work shifts and the growth in the number of workers; in other words, to the rise in the intensity of the exploitation of the equipment.

The remaining 12 percent are to be attributed to the increase in the productivity of labor, to the increase in the intensity of labor and to the extension of investment capital. As we shall see further on, the lion's share must be attributed to the increase in the intensity of labor, which diminishes the specific weight of the influence of the two other factors with regard to the quantitative growth proportionally. I repeat that this calculation (I had to leave a whole series of details out of consideration) is only approximate but it is sufficiently exact to permit at least one conclusion with regard to the growth in quantity; the growth in quantity was produced, in a decisive measure, not at the cost of an increase in investment capital and not at the cost of an improvement of the technical basis, but at the cost of a more intensive exploitation of the investment capital that was at hand, with the increase in the number of workers on the one hand and the rise in the intensity of labor on the other. But such a method of increasing the quantity bears within its bosom the precondition for a breakdown, not to mention the fact that it in no way guarantees a further quantitative rise in industry. This method of increasing quantity very rapidly clashes with its own natural boundaries. Neither the intensive exploitation of the machine nor the intensification of labor can be increased endlessly. This sort of method has another meaning entirely—and that too, from an economic point of view—when it is applied only for a short period of time and when, parallel with its application, the possibility is given to create within just as short a period of time, the material basis: a new investment capital*. But this same fact, that such a method must be seized upon and that it is elevated into a system, is precisely the proof for the fact that we are far behind with the creation of the material basis. The measure of depression in the working class with whose aid Centrism hopes to make up for lost time, further proves how great this backwardness is. The essence of the present situation consists precisely in this fact, that it has indisputably become evident that this backwardness cannot be liquidated within a short time merely with the aid of the internal resources of the country. Before I go over to a consideration of this question I still want to deal with three factors which prove from different angles and in different ways that with regard to the increase in quantity we have arrived very closely to the boundary, beyond which a further growth on the given basis is impossible.

The first and most important of these factors is the quality of production. It suffices to pick up anyone of our papers to become convinced that in this regard the situation is catastrophic. Neither agitation nor administrative measures, nor measures of a juridical character have been able to put a halt to the process of the deterioration of the quality. The facts are sufficiently well known so that I will only confine myself to a few of the most obvious examples.

—CHRISTIAN RAKOVSKY.

* Such a method can be dictated for example by a condition of war when the questions of reproduction generally recede to the background.

Uphold Our Revolutionary Classics!

When young comrades, who are too much impressed with their own importance, express it in supercilious scorn for the revolutionary classics, it is time to issue a serious warning. There is only one short step from such an attitude into the camp of the useless petty bourgeois intelligentsia or else into the foul pollution of the most abominable revisionism. This latter is precisely what happened to one of our young comrades in an article entitled "Honor Bolshevik Leaders" and appearing over his signature in Young Spartacus No. 2. He stepped with both feet into that foul pollution.

It is said in that article: "Rosa, in her inaugural address, again investigated the new problems brought forth by the conditions of the war and post-war period. She re-examined the teachings of Marx and Engels on the questions of armed insurrection, guerrilla warfare, force and violence and concluded that history had once again placed on the agenda the tactic advocated by Marx and Engels in the Communist Manifesto in 1847-8, but later proclaimed by Engels as outlived." (Emphasis ours.—A. S.)

In criticizing Rosa Luxemburg Lenin once quoted two simple lines from a Russian proverb: "It sometimes happens to eagles that they descend lower than chickens, but chickens never succeed in mounting as high as eagles," and he added, "she was and remains an eagle". In its reversed form this would apply to our young comrade. The outrageous statement emphasized above looks too much like the attempt of a chicken to mount even higher than the eagle.

In ascribing these views to Engels our young comrade cites in parenthesis, evidently as his proof, the introduction to "The Class Struggles in France" by Marx. Perhaps he was unaware of the fact that long ago evidence has been unearthed of how this introduction, when appearing in print by the Berlin Workers, was miserably garbled by the German social democrats of the revisionist school, notably by Bernstein. The extent of this garbling became clear when Ryazanov discovered the original Engels manuscript, of which he has since produced photostats, showing the important deletions which had been made. Some of the results of his findings Ryazanov published in "Unter dem Banner des Marxismus" (Vol. I No. 1, German edition). In English these findings were reproduced by Trachtenberg in the "Workers Monthly" for November 1925.

What Engels himself thought of the printing of the introduction and of the garbled version becomes quite clear in his letters to Kautsky (then still fighting revisionism). First in his letter of March 25, 1895, he says: "My text has suffered some because of the scruples of our Berlin friends, due to timidity over the anti-socialist laws which, under the circumstances, I had to consider."

Again in his letter to Kautsky dated April 1, 1895, Engels said: "To my astonishment I saw today printed in the Vorwarts, without previous knowledge, an extract from my introduction so dressed up that I appear as a peaceful worshiper of legality and quondam (in spite of all). The more pleased I am that now the whole appears in the 'Neue Zeit', so that this shameful impression is obliterated. I shall tell Liebknecht very definitely what I think of this, and also those, whoever they may be, that gave him the opportunity to distort my meaning."

Engels spoke in a similar vein, of the "mean joke" played on him, in his letter to Paul Lafargue, dated April 5, 1895.

It is perfectly true that Engels, in this introduction, draws a sharp distinction between the conditions of 1848 and those of 1895. This is as it should be. And it is particularly in this respect that the deleted parts assume their enormous significance. We shall quote only one.

In drawing the sharp distinctions of difference in the two periods Engels says: "Does this mean that the street battles will play no part in the future? Not at all. It simply means that conditions have become far more unfavorable for the civilian fighters since 1848, and far more favorable for the military forces. Street battles in the future may be successful only if this unfavorable situation can be neutralized by other factors. Such fights will therefore be far less usual in the earlier stages of a great revolution, than in its further course, and will have to be fought with greater resources of strength. Such battles will rather resort—as in the great French revolution, and as on September 4th and October 31st, 1870, in Paris—to open attack than to the defensive tactics of the barricades."

Is there in this powerful testimony any evidence of Engels having proclaimed the tactics of the Communist manifesto as outlived? None whatever. On the contrary, the letters quoted contain the wrath of the revolutionary teacher against the monstrous falsifiers.

Such accusations made against Engels become a blot upon the Communist movement which we must eradicate. With our modest means we must hold aloft the banner of Marxism and particularly so in the Left Opposition. We can well afford to be humble students endeavoring to learn from our great teachers. We must guard against this supercilious, know-it-all attitude which steps with both feet into the foul pollution of social reformism. Comrades guilty of such an attitude must be called to order sharply.

N.Y. Paris Commune Affair

The Paris Commune Celebration to be held by the New York Branch on Saturday evening, March 19th at the Irving Plaza, 15th Street and Irving Place will be a joint mass meeting and entertainment. Comrade Swabek, National Secretary of the Communist League of America (Opposition) will speak on the Significance of the Paris Commune.

There will be a chorus of forty Hungarian comrades, a group of dances by members and sympathizers of the New York branch, as well as other forms of entertainment. There will be refreshments on hand.

A LECTURE OF INTEREST TO JEWISH WORKERS

The first lecture of the Left Opposition in the Jewish language in New York will be given by comrade M. Lewitt, Sunday, March 6th at 3 o'clock in the Stuyvesant Casino, 2nd Ave., at 9th St. His subject will be: What Does Left Opposition Stand For—Its Program and Aims. Following the lecture there will be questions and discussions. The price of admission is only 10c. Unemployed workers will be admitted free. This lecture will be held under the auspices of the Unser Kampf Arbeiter Club, an organization of Jewish workers sympathetic to the Left Opposition.

Sunday's Elections in Germany The Allignment of Class Forces in the Campaign Struggle

On Sunday, March 13 elections of enormous historical consequences are taking place in Germany. Behind these elections stands the mobilization of forces to decide the issue of who shall prevail, Communism or Fascism. Its historical consequence lies not so much in the direct outcome as to which candidate will win; but in the expression these elections give to the line-up and the strength of the class forces involved.

In its purely parliamentary aspect the present line-up represents itself as follows: To the Right the extreme reaction of Fascists (Nazis) nationalists and steel helmets, in the Center the bloc around the candidacy of Hindenburg of the various capitalist center parties and social democracy, to the Left the Communists.

Thus while the blurring of the class lines is still expressed in the fact of workers under social democratic influence being swung into the camp supporting Hindenburg together with outright capitalist reactionaries the two forces on either side of this grouping remain distinct. The strength of these two forces will be decisive for the immediate future. Futile indeed will this event be for the German working class.

As to how decisive for the future this coming recording of strength of class forces will be is amply testified in the pre-election campaigns. There are already the evidences of the conflict being transferred ever more out of the purely parliamentary field into sharp street battles. In this respect violence against the workers is on the increase. But there are also the accompanying hopeful signs of increasing working class unity in such skirmishes against the Fascist reaction. On the other hand ascension is now more clearly proclaiming Communism as its real enemy.

THE WORKING CLASS DIVIDED IN TWO MAIN GROUPS

As already indicated in this fateful situation the working class is still in its main aspect divided, by organization and by ideology. Today they appear in two main groups under the, for the actual situation, rather sumptuous names the "iron front" and the "red united front". In the former is included the trade unions, the Social Democratic party, the republican Reichsbanner and the labor sports organizations. Their leaders are the social chauvinists of S. P. G. It has of course nothing in common with a workers' iron front, but represents an attempt of the treacherous social democratic bureaucrats to swing these workers into a servile support of the reactionary capitalist government of Hindenburg and Brüning—for the maintenance of the capitalist system. Yet these organizations who make up the "iron front" embrace the workers who are still under the influence of social democratic ideology. The "red united front" embraces the workers won for the Communist ideology. A serious division in face of a dangerously vicious common enemy bent upon the destruction of all vestiges of working class organization.

The Social Democratic party bureaucracy is about to complete its course which passed through deception and treason to complete depravity. No longer even useful to rule on behalf of German capitalism they face the final test of ability to sell the workers whom they influence for Judas' silver. Their leadership over so many years has brought the ultimate result of enormous retreats for the workers of Germany. Today wages are cut to the very bone. It is estimated that 7 to 8 million workers are in the ranks of the permanently unemployed army, while starvation and misery stalks the land. The social democratic bureaucrats have given up their last shred of pretense of fighting for a reform program. Their whole course of object servility is now reaching its culmination in the fact that they have prepared all the prerequisites for a victory of Fascism. But that is also their most severe test. The workers are rapidly extricating themselves from their ideology and domination. The Social Democratic youth has long shown dissatisfaction with their toleration policy.

GROWTH OF FASCIST REACTION A THREAT TO WHOLE WORKING CLASS

In elections held during the last couple of years throughout Germany the Fascist gains have mounted at a dizzying speed. That gives expression to their menacing strength. Moreover, in a rapidly sharpening revolutionary situation, its role as the final means of maintaining capitalist rule becomes so much more pronounced. And so it is now. The Nazis can count on growing numbers of direct supporters amongst the great monopoly institutions.

Its true character as the darkest force of reaction, combining its aims of brutal working class suppression with a philosophy of adopting pre-capitalist forms of economy, was expressed, perhaps unwittingly, by a reporter of the New York Times of March 1. In describing the economic program of the parties to the Right he said: "All three groups (Nazis, Nationalists and Steel Helmets) fervently believe Germany should adopt a policy that they call 'autarkie', or economic independence. They admit this would be difficult, but think Germany in the long run could succeed in cutting herself off from Western Europe and feeding herself from her own land with the help of the Eastern European agricultural states. It would involve writing off parts of the vast capital Germany has put into her industrial plant, with a view to following a course exactly opposite to flooding the world with manufactured goods. It would involve an economic revolution and a terrific strain on the nation."

Here we have, though not yet clearly formulated, a theory of capitalist national self-sufficiency with an implied aspiration to become the spearhead of armed intervention for subjugation of the Soviet Republics. A return to pre-capitalist forms of production and exchange of commodities, squeezed in within national boundaries. A return to barbarism with the "terrible strain" to rest upon the shoulders of the working class.

IS THE WAY OUT THROUGH A FASCIST DICTATORSHIP

Today there is no way for Germany from her present economic dilemma on a capitalist basis. It exists within an economically declining capitalist Europe, ever more receiving the imprint of being put on rations in world economy by the more powerful American imperialism. German capitalism, after its re-stabilization following the events of 1923, has accomplished two successive waves of rationalization of its industry. Existing within a declining capitalist Europe and out of from its former colonies, its economic problems become today that much more acute. Even a temporary relief for German capitalism through a Fascist dictatorship could, of course, only serve to further intensify these contradictions. However, the menacing threat in such a temporary way out for German capitalism is the sinister prospect of the crushing of the German working class movement, and with that the enormous danger to the whole world's working class movement—above all to the Soviet Union and the Communist International.

COMMUNIST PARTY FAILS IN GREAT POSSIBILITIES

What is the position of the German Communist party in this situation of menacing threats? Stuporous efforts are being made by the S. P. bureaucrats to swing the bulk of the working class, under the sumptuous name of the "iron front", into support of the Hindenburg candidacy, into support of capitalism and, in its ultimate sense, into support of preparation for the Fascist regime. Obviously, this latter aspect is not yet clear to these workers. They are being held under the illusion that at the moment their support to Hindenburg will offset the Fascist advance. To what extent and by what methods has the official Communist party endeavored to shatter this illusion?

Undoubtedly there was an excellent opportunity to split the working class forces away from the Center bloc of reaction now supporting Hindenburg. But that would presuppose the Communist party genuinely offering a united front embodying the serious immediate objectives of working class struggle. There should even have been no objection to serious efforts to find the common grounds for unity around one working class candidate as a means of utilizing these elections to further stem the tide of Fascist reaction.

At the 1925 German presidential elections there were three candidates, the Communist, the social democrat and the

Trotsky Discusses World Situation

We are reprinting below an interview granted by comrade Trotsky through the intermediary of Simon and Schuster, the American publishers of his latest work, "The History of the Russian Revolution" to the N. Y. Times.

The presentation of his views—which are those of the International Left Opposition—is here given in a concise and trenchant form, so that every reader can at once grasp the general outlines of our position as well as the elementary causes of the struggle we are carrying on.

Appraisal of Five-Year Plan

Question: Will you give your appraisal of the Five-Year Plan and the economic perspectives confronting Russia? Answer: The question of industrialization, and particularly of the Five-Year Plan, was one of the chief points of conflict between the Stalin faction and the Left Opposition, to which I belong. Up to February, 1928, the Stalin faction considered it necessary to rest its power upon the strong peasant and refused to compel him to make sacrifices in the interest of industrialization. The very principle of planning was laughed at by the bureaucracy. "We depend upon rain, not plans," they said. In 1925 I published a book, "Toward Capitalism or Socialism?" in which I proved that with a proper leadership industry could show a 20 per cent yearly increase or more. Stalin and Molotov accused these figures fantastic and considered the Left Opposition of "superindustrialism." These cursory comments on the history of the thing are sufficient to demonstrate my attitude to the Five-Year Plan: I consider it a gigantic step forward in the development not only of the Soviet Union but of humanity.

Question: Do you believe that the development of the Five-Year Plan has strengthened or weakened the possibility of building socialism in Soviet Russia alone without cooperation along similar lines in the rest of Europe? Answer: This raises the question about socialism in a single country. The inevitability of socialism flows historically from the fact that the present productive forces of humanity have become incompatible not only with the private property in the means of production but also with present national boundaries, especially in Europe. Just as medieval particularism hindered the development of capitalism in its youth, so now at the peak of its development capitalism is strangling in the limits set by the national States.

Socialism cannot confine productive forces in the Procrustean bed of national States. The Socialist economy will develop on the basis of an international division of labor, the mighty foundations of which have been laid down by capitalism. The Soviet industrial construction is, in my view, a part of a future European, Asiatic and world-wide Socialist structure, and not an independent national whole.

Soviet Russia and the Capitalist World

Question: Will Soviet Russia be compelled to come to some sort of a compromise with Western capitalism, assuming that she may not be able to pursue a Socialist policy single-handed? What form would such a compromise assume? Answer: The "compromise" between the Soviet and the capitalist systems is not a question of the future but of the present. It is already a fact today, although not a very stable one. How will the interrelations between the isolated Soviet Union and world capitalism develop? Here a concrete prophecy is not easy to make, but in general I should cast the following horoscope: European capitalism is far nearer to a Socialist revolution than the Soviet Union is to a national Socialist society.

Question: What are the prospects of Soviet Russia's relations with other countries in the political field if such a compromise in the provinces is achieved? Answer: The Soviet Government is interested in maintaining peaceful relations. It has demonstrated its will to peace, and is still demonstrating it by every means at the disposal of a government. It is true that in Paris they consider the Soviet proposal of universal disarmament a proof of the belligerent intentions of Moscow, and on the other hand the refusal of France to take steps toward disarmament they regard as an expression of her belligerent intentions. Following the same logic the French official press considers the Japanese invasion of China an act of civilization. Burglars, according to their logic, are not those who break into other people's houses, but those who defend their own. It is difficult to concur in this.

Attitude Toward the Stalin Regime

Question: What is your attitude toward the Stalin regime today and why? Answer: To answer this question I distinguish sharply two different conceptions: the Soviet regime as the regime of proletarian dictatorship and the Stalin regime, which is a bureaucratic perversion of the Soviet regime. It is with the aim of strengthening and developing the Soviet system that I wage a

Ford Thugs Massacre Starving Workers

Police Give Workers Lead instead of Bread

On Monday, March 7, Ford's cossacks fired on a crowd of jobless workers demonstrating before his plant at Dearborn, Michigan. Four workers were shot and killed because they had come to demand from the apostle of "class peace"—work, a chance to earn their living. Among those killed was Joe York, the district organizer of the Young Communist League. Communist workers were in the first ranks of the struggle, were the first to be wounded.

The demonstrators, upon the call of the Unemployment Council of Detroit, were marching in orderly fashion and had intended sending up a committee to the management of the Ford plant, to present their demands. Ford, the idol of the post war social democracy and all the other preachers of class collaboration, the symbol of "Americanization", immediately ordered his gunmen to pour lead into the masses calling for work and bread.

The whole horrid shape of "humane" American capitalism stands exposed before the workers of the world. The "pacemaker" of modern industry and of "industrial democracy", whose hands are dripping with the blood of militant workers, will become identical with the darkest and most reactionary forms of Czarist despotism.

The heroic manifestation of the Detroit workers, coming in the midst of a general depression, will be a light-house of courage to the millions of unemployed workers all over the country in their fight against starvation. Their fearless march, in the face of tear-gas bombs, machine-gun fire will be an inspiration and a standard of battle for all those who share their miserable fate under the abominations of the capitalist system. The most powerfully developed industry in the world and in history can give the masses of the population only what the blackest regimes of the past have given them: hunger and lead. The workers are waking up to the fact that as long as the profit system, as long as private ownership controls the means of production, all technical progress can merely serve to enslave them. That is what the Communists are out to teach the workers, that is the condition against which the Communists are the vanguard fighters.

Action Teaches Lessons

The workers can only learn from practical experience, from action. And it is in action that Communism shows the workers most clearly what they are up against and how they can overcome it. To carry out this historic task, the forefront fighters of Communism have once more proved their fearlessness, their daring, their absolute devotion to the cause of the working class, their utter defiance of the class enemy. Joe York, a valiant young Communist warrior, has fallen at the hands of the boss class. The answer of the working class of America to the murder of York and his three comrades must be a more determined, a more tenacious struggle against the master class than ever. The best class vengeance for the murder of our fighters is—organization. The fight for which York and his comrades died, must be carried into every factory, into every trade union. The whole proletariat must be rallied for a militant protest, the banner of the Detroit martyrs must be held high.

Every worker in the United States knows what hunger means, every worker knows what wage-outs mean. The heroic example of the Communists does not pass them by unnoticed. But they are still apprehensive, they are not as yet convinced of the correctness of Communist policy. The Communists must take into account the degree of consciousness of the masses. In order to lead them into decisive struggles against the class foe, they must be prepared to go with the masses as far as the masses will go at the moment. In common struggle with the working masses they have the best opportunity for winning them over to a Communist line of action.

Relief Struggle Growing

The masses are at present conscious of the necessity of resisting further unemployment, further wage cuts, and of wrenching from the capitalist class a measure of relief for their misery. The workers are still bound to their reformist leaders by innumerable prejudices, traditions and organizational ties. If they are to be brought into action, their leaders must be pressed against the wall. The united front of working class struggle against boss misery must be organized. That is the way to carry the banner of the fallen Detroit fighters up higher. That is the way for a successful advance of the forces of Communism. That is the way of winning a majority of the workers for the proletarian revolution.

The Communist party has once more, as often before, been the only party to show the oppressed and exploited workers the way out, the road to a fighting solution. It has once more shown that it is the only true party of the working class. It has proved that the workers are not going to remain passive before the onslaught of the bosses.

Government Persecution Coming

Already, the boss government is initiating a ferocious campaign of persecution against the Communist organizers. The whole frame-up system of capitalist class justice, with its "criminal syndicalism" laws and other vicious devices is being set into motion. The entire working class of the country must come to the defense of those attacked like a solid stone wall. Every worker's fate, every worker's elementary right to existence, is at stake.

The Communist party is calling protest and memorial meetings all over the country. It is the duty of every class conscious worker to stand behind the party of his class, and to demonstrate his solidarity with it. Against the bosses' offensive, against government persecution, for the workers' right to demonstrate, for unemployment relief and unemployed insurance. Against wage cuts and for the six hour day, five day week. Against the imperialist war preparations and for Long Term Credits to Workers' Russia.

All New York workers will show their solidarity with the Communist party on Friday evening, March 11, at the Central Avenue, 67th Street and Third Avenue.

Workers! Make your protests against the Dearborn massacre a powerful demonstration of solidarity that will strike fear into the hearts of the bosses!

Press Circulation Drive

As we swing into the second week of the drive it is possible to report an encouraging response on the part of comrades and sympathizers. Some expired subs have been renewed. Some new ones have been sent in. At present the record of renewed and new subs is as follows: New York—7; Minneapolis—2; Chicago—1; Miscellaneous—4. There is also one new bundle order for a new stand to report. This is from Chicago. But this progress is not yet enough. More must be done.

What is already accomplished indicates that if all our comrades and supporters will put their shoulders to the wheel we can make a success of the drive. Certainly the objective situation is favorable. Workers are interested as never before in Communism. It can be assumed that a large working class reading public exists. It is necessary to reach it.

This can be done principally in two ways. First it is necessary to get new

N.Y. Paris Commune Affair

The members and sympathizers of the Left Opposition in New York are going to celebrate the sixty-first anniversary of the Paris Commune on Saturday evening, March 19, at the Irving Plaza, 15th St., and Irving Place. The celebration will take form of an entertainment and mass meeting.

Comrade Arne Swaback, National Secretary of the Communist League of America, will speak on "The Significance of the Paris Commune."

An elaborate social program has been arranged for. A chorus of forty Hungarian comrades will present a number of revolutionary songs, members of the N. Y. branch and the Spartacus Youth Club, have been preparing several original dances. We will also have a piano recital and group singing. Refreshments will be on hand.

The free pamphlets offered to subscribers during the period of the drive constitute a considerable reduction in the cost of a sub and are undoubtedly a strong inducement. They should be used as such. With each $2.00 sub for fifty-two issues (1 year) The Militant will give a paper bound copy of comrade Trotsky's The Permanent Revolution; with each $1.00 sub for twenty-six issues (6 mos.) a copy of part 2 of the World Program—the Strategy of the Draft Revolution by Comrade Trotsky! with each trial sub of $0.50 (13 issues) any one of our 10c pamphlets. In sending in subs comrades should specify the literature which goes with them.

In addition to this, during the period of the drive, comrades may offer a $2.00 rate for a combined 1 year subscription to The Militant and Young Spartacus. This will include fifty-two weekly issues of The Militant and twelve monthly issues of Young Spartacus. In the case of combined subs there is no literature premium. Whenever a combined sub is sent in it should be clearly indicated as such.

The second way of increasing the sale of The Militant is by increasing the bundle orders of branches, newstands, and bookstores. And by increasing the number of newstands which carry The Militant. This can be done more easily now by means of the newstands posters we spoke of in the last issue. These have been delivered by the printer and come up to our expectations. The posters will be shipped free immediately upon request. It should be remembered that we haven't too many. They should be placed only on stands and in stores which carry or will carry The Militant.

A third method of boosting the sub list is by renewing expired subs. Every week a number run out. From this it can be seen that the renewal of expired subs is a regular task. The national center notifies the branches in advance of the expiration. Where we have no branches the national center notifies the subscribers. These subs must not be allowed to expire for want of attention. Their importance lies in the fact that as a loss they will offset the number of new subs. As a political loss, of course, they are even more important. Renewals count as new subs. Literature premiums apply equally to them. They are included in the standing given above.

The thing to do now is to drive along the three ways outlined above. Systematic plans should be worked out by the branches. Every copy of The Militant should take it upon himself to bring in at least one new sub, or get one renewal, or get one newstand to carry The Militant, or better still all three. Against the difficult months which lie ahead The Militant must be put on a sounder financial basis now. Every effort must be made to insure the success of the drive.

Paris Commune Celebration Saturday Evening, March 19, at Irving Plaza

The Economic Month

Further Decline in Production and in Workers Living Standards

In attempting to give a brief economic analysis of the past few months, and a prognosis for the immediate future one should observe the following trends. First, the actual figures on production and general business activity (steel, cotton cloth production, shoes, car loadings, electric power production, building, etc.) of course, adjusted for seasonal variation. Secondly a study should be made of commodity prices. No break in the declining curve of general business activity can be expected unless a brake can be applied to the precipitous fall of commodity prices. Capitalists will begin to replace worn machinery, and invest the easily obtained credit in new industry only when they feel that they will not be confronted with their competitors purchasing in March at a reduced rate the raw materials that they purchased in January.

In connection with the actual commodity prices, one should attempt to estimate the actual stocks on hand, of raw materials and of manufactured goods, (quantity, not value is the factor to be looked for—most estimates are of present depreciated value, not of quantity). In connection with this item one should also examine the figures for construction contracts awarded and building permits granted. Also important, are new capital issues. These of course indicate purchases to take place in the immediate future. Thirdly, the condition of the working class, in the form of wage cuts, numbers employed, total wage, etc., etc., should be considered. Fourthly, there should be taken into consideration any special items that may have arisen, such as the recent government measures, or any special large scale measures planned or advocated by any specific industry. Under this last heading should be included any measures that have some bearing on the subject, but do not properly fall under any of the above headings. The above procedure, although not advocated as a rigid plan, should succeed in giving one a brief yet general sketch of the economic condition and immediate prospects of the country.

To sum up the economic developments of the past two months, one can but say, that as yet there have appeared no signs of any immediate revival. The months of January and February continued the kaleidoscopic decline in production begun over two years ago. The steel industry which ordinarily shows an improvement during the first quarter, continued to perform at about 26 to 27 per cent of capacity. The hoped-for rise in steel production to be brought on by an increase in automobile production failed to materialize, because of the lack of improvement in the production of new cars. The index of automobile production declined from a high of 52 for the first week of January, to one of 38.5 for the last week of February. Despite the streaming headlines to the contrary, Ford has not yet begun any substantial production. Freight car loadings and electric power output showed similar declines, the latter dropping during the two months' period from an index of 222 to one of 216, registering a rate of decline much greater than that of the past two years as a whole. The latest reports of building activity, one of the most important industries of the country, showed no bettering of its present paralyzed condition, the figures even showing an aggravation of the condition of the industry. The New York Times combined weekly index registered a new low for the depression in the last week of February. The index is now at 60.8 as against 69 for the beginning of the year.

The only figures reporting increased activity of a substantial nature have been those of shoe and cotton cloth production. In the production of cotton cloth, the rise from an index of 91 in the first week of January to one of 96 for the last week of February, had merely an aggravating effect upon the market, the sales in no way being able to consume the increased production. The stocks on hand increased, and despite the temporary rise in price brought on by the Shanghai events, the price trend continued downward for the period. (An interesting feature to be investigated in this so-called consumers' industry, is the recent statement made by the New York Cotton Exchange Service that 40 per cent in yardage and 60 per cent in weight of all the cotton goods produced go into industrial uses).

Commodity prices temporarily steadied in the third week of February, the only break in the two months' period, failed to keep their gains, and again registered a decline for the final week of the month. The Annalist index dropped from 95 to the level of 91.4. In the factors connected with commodity prices no signs leading to the belief that a bottom has been reached can be seen. Although comprehensive figures are difficult to obtain, one is led to believe that stocks on hand of manufactured goods still remain very high. The accumulation of raw materials is growing so rapidly as to become threatening for some industries. Crop estimates for the coming year indicate even greater yields than the present year. On the field of building activity the hoped for increase remained in the wishing stage. The figures of this year are running about 30 per cent below those of last year. For both contracts awarded and building permits granted, one is forced to use the words of the National City Bank Bulletin, "lowest by far" for any similar period. New industrial capital issues (a portion of which sums will be used for the purchase of goods in the next few months) have been conspicuous during the month of February by their almost complete absence.

The first two months of the year marked a continuation and extension of the general wage slashing campaign, this time attacking the organized industries, namely railroads and building trades. A horizontal 10 per cent wage cut to some 1,500,000 workers employed by the railroads, will reduce the total wage for this group, for the coming year, approximately by $200,000,000. The proposed 25 per cent cut in the building trades has this peculiar feature attached to it, namely, that the great majority of the workers in the industry are already receiving much below the scale. The proposed official wage cuts can but mean, not the adjustment of wages to 25 per cent below the present scale, (which in many cases would mean an actual wage increase) but rather a further reduction of the already reduced prevailing rate of pay.

According to the latest available reports of the Department of Labor, the number of people employed continues to decline; the total wage paid decreasing even more rapidly. Thus the drop from December to January for factory employment was from 7.9 to 6.8 whereas payrolls declined from 55.8 to 52.4. This ever widening spread between the two curves merely indicates the results of the wage cutting campaign. The worker fortunate to be kept on the payroll is finding less and less in the pay envelope each week.

As special emergency measures, the past two months saw the birth of the two much heralded banking measures, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Glass-Steagall Bill. (In connection with our article on the Glass-Steagall bill, a misleading sentence, crept in, due to last minute revision. The sentence reading, "But how can anyone hail as epoch making, a bill that does nothing but make legal that which is actually taking place," should have been concluded, "namely, the continued withdrawal of gold by foreign countries.") The entire attempt to increase commodity prices by increasing the available money in circulation is based upon the false assumption that it is possible to inject into the process of circulation, additional money despite the fact that business does not desire the additional sums. The bankers have yet to explain how the possible increase in currency will result in an actual increase. Were the government actually able to inject new money into circulation, then this would be a factor in tending to bring about a temporary rise in prices. But the present measures are valueless in this respect. Actual business conditions are the determining factor, and not the effect of money in circulation. Summed up in the words of Marx, "prices are not high or low, because there is more or less money in circulation, but on the contrary, there is more or less money in circulation, because prices are high or low." The complete futility of the present currency measures is summed up in the above sentence.

The danger of America going off the gold standard (inflation in the strict sense of the term) becomes greater daily. Gold continues to be drained from the country. In the first month of the year the total decrease of gold stocks was 37 million, while for February this sum had mounted to 67 million. In addition to the above there exists the ever mounting deficit of the national government, which will probably reach well into the three billions for the present fiscal year, unless new tax measures are rushed through. "The need to balance governmental budgets of all kinds beginning with the Federal Government." Thus reads the National City Bank report, expressing in their words the fear of the stability of the U. S. government bonds. The financial crisis rather than being alleviated, is facing much greater stumbling blocks. Private German bonds are now being talked of, in addition to the public debt, in the discussions of defaulting. There is even talk here of a complete shut down of the stock market. The framework of the banking system is rapidly becoming weaker.

All in all, the conclusions to be drawn are, that the prospects for immediate revival are not great. Unemployment and the misery of the working class will most probably become more accentuated. The questions of immediate relief and of unemployment insurance must remain at the forefront of our unemployment campaign. Concentrating on these slogans, and in addition bringing forward that of the six hour day, as well as that of credits to the Soviet Union, the Communist movement should attempt to rally around it the great masses of workers who more and more should become disillusioned with the prospects held out for them by the capitalist system.

Organization Notes

CLEVELAND, OHIO. Our steadily growing mailing list in this city has finally resulted in a branch of the Left Opposition now engaged in active work. Reports coming into the office are to the effect that our new Jewish organ Unser Kampf found a ready response and is being quite well distributed among the Jewish working class readers. The first active work is being expressed in a substantial order for literature and for additional copies of The Militant.

For a long time there have been many sympathizers of the Left Opposition in Cleveland. The several efforts made in the past by party bureaucrats to break up our meetings arranged at the time for Cannon and for Shachtman did not in the least deter the sympathizers but on the contrary added to their ranks. Last summer, comrades Clarke and Stamm put in an active period of street speaking, literature sales and collection of Militant subscriptions. All in all, this helped lay the foundation for a new active branch. This new branch is making arrangements for a meeting for comrade Glotzer on his national tour visit.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — Our comrades, always active in this city utilizing their good working class contacts, are now raising a very fundamental issue growing out of recent events. They took part in the Feb. 4 unemployment demonstration held on Bridge Square. As is known to our readers, it was broken up by the police under orders of the Farmer-Labor mayor, Anderson. Several workers were arrested and have since been sentenced to pay fines ranging from $10 to $25. The Farmer-Labor mayor is utilizing this conviction as a legal reinforcement of his threat that there shall be no more workers' meetings on Bridge Square.

The official party, yet suffering from the Third Period adventurism, is raising the issue of the "right of the workers to defend themselves and their meetings." This is not the correct slogan in such a situation where the fundamental issue of the right of free speech is involved. Our branch is raising this as the proper slogan recognizing also its much broader appeal. In line with this our branch is insisting that the Communist forces take the initiative in calling a free speech conference to bring organized mass pressure behind the demand. When presented in this manner the opportunity is enhanced to hammer one more lesson home to the Minneapolis workers, namely the one of the true role of the Farmer-Labor Party city ofcialists in utilizing the capitalist machinery of city government to suppress the working class rights.

The Minneapolis branch in addition to its regular public activities, meetings and forums is also conducting a study class in Elements of Marxism. Similarly the first steps have been taken for the organization of a youth club.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Our small membership in this city has gained new recruits to their ranks. In addition, it has established convincing proof that although small in numbers, active work will bring results. Recently the branch held a successful debate, well attended, in which our comrade Roberts defended the Proletarian Dictatorship against the celebrated American democracy. That was a part of our regularly conducted weekly open forum. Attendance at the Glotzer meeting held in St. Louis as well as at subsequent forums testify to the fact that the worker audience found it self impressed with our presentation. Our St. Louis branch has now also taken the first steps toward the organization of a youth club.

Our three months' subscription drive is on the way and already brings good response. In subsequent issues we will carry exact accounts of the responses received. From our early announcements our supporters will have noticed that we propose this drive as one means whereby we can render practical aid to our press, the kind of practical aid which also spells increased financial assistance. Such assistance is very sorely needed.

This, however, is only one side of the question. The other, which is yet more important, is the one of seriously taking up the task of extending the Left Opposition press. Each step in our program of expansion so far taken have brought results in extended influence for the Left Opposition views. The establishment of the weekly Militant, of the Young Spartacus, of the Greek organ, Unser Kampf were the important steps. The extended influence achieved has been expressed concretely in many instances.

Building of the Left Opposition press is the best means of further extending its influence. It is a vitally important means of building and strengthening of the Communist movement as a whole.

HELP BUILD THE LEFT OPPOSITION PRESS!

United Front of Southern Miners Imperative

While miners in the Eastern Kentucky fields continue to fight sporadic battles for their existence the machinery of "law and order" is getting ready to grind out more "justice." During March and April the remaining forty defendants of the Harlan County murder conspiracy frame-up are to stand trial. Their case dates back to May 5, last year, when during the Everts strike in a battle, provoked by the company gun thug, Sheriff Henry Blair, three gunmen and one miner were killed. Wm. Hightower and W. B. Jones, president and secretary of the Everts local union, who were the first defendants tried, are already serving the life sentence imposed upon them.

Next to Harlan county, in Pineville, nine strikers and relief workers are about to go on trial indicted for criminal syndicalism. They have been held in jail since Jan. 4th. This frame-up grew out of the strike conducted by the National Miners Union which began on Jan. 1st. The trial which followed closely upon the heels of the dastardly murder, by company gun thugs, of Henry Simms the young Communist organizer.

Savagely wreaking their vengeance upon these coal miners, who dared to attempt to obtain better conditions, the companies of northern "civilization", who own the mines, have outdone the southern bourgeois in vicious persecution. They found bigoted reactionary tools who could serve to their liking, so much so that even the liberal writers from the Theodore Dreiser committee and the Waldo Frank committee could be chased out of the field branded as dangerous to the community. Servile creatures of "law and order" like Judge Jones and Sheriff Blair covered themselves with infamy. This questionable reputation does not, of course, make the state of Kentucky an exception. On the contrary, it merely focusses the class struggle there at the moment. Yesterday it was Pennsylvania or West Virginia, today Kentucky. One more object lesson in the function of the capitalist state forces, including the celebrated American frame up method, as a means of coercion against the workers is recorded. The all important question is: To what extent do the workers translate these lessons into practical endeavors to meet it.

Support the Relief and Defense!

In preparation for the coming trials reports from Kentucky testify to the increasing persecution and intimidation by company gun thugs of witnesses who appeared at the Hightower-Jones trial. Throughout the fields down into Tennessee, to which the strike has spread, the hysterical red scare is being kept alive. It is the cover under which the persecution proceeds, and, as so often before demonstrated, the perfidious officials of the U. M. W. of A. (all that is left of that organization there) are working hand in glove with the operators' agents to crush unionism. Eastern Kentucky has long remained an unorganized field. To keep it so is the aim of this black horde.

The impoverished coal miners, constantly harassed by starvation, are even now suffering further wage cuts bringing the rate for day men down to $2.00 a day. Help for both relief and defense is sorely needed. Their battle, although still sporadic and not sufficiently organized, is nevertheless writing another brilliant page in the miners' history for organization. This is what carries a powerful appeal which should be heeded by the workers everywhere. The Harlan miners defense is in the care of the General Defense Committee, 555 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill. The Pineville case is in the care of the I. L. D., 799 Broadway, New York.

The struggle of the Kentucky miners, their strike for living conditions, in a very large measure depends upon the assistance of workers elsewhere. They face a powerful enemy, well organized; an enemy which has been enabled so far to strike a blow at one section of the workers at a time, inflicting defeat upon one section while the others were kept at work under starvation conditions. The sad fact is that they have been able to keep these mine strikes localized. Only a short while ago the Pennsylvania and Ohio miners were on strike led by the National Miners Union. Almost simultaneously the West Virginia miners went out under their independent union. These strikes were isolated to their local fields. The rebellious Illinois miners were again

Railroads & Strike Policy

The Strike Weapon and its Rejection by the Misleaders

In the purely industrial disputes between the bosses and the workers concerning hours of work, wages and working conditions, the only weapon the workers have to promote and protect their interest with, is the strike. In a political struggle wherein the workers are aiming for control of the government, the strike can only serve as a supplementary weapon, as an aid or help in the general struggle for political power and control. But when workers organized in trade or industrial unions fight only for better conditions, or to keep the wages and working conditions they have, from being taken away from them by the boss, then the strike is the only weapon for either offensive or defensive purposes.

Therefore, we think that without illustrating this point further, the average worker will agree with us when we maintain that the strike is the only weapon of the labor unions, and a good one at that. But good weapons can only be used effectively when placed in the hands of individuals who possess the necessary skill and determination to use them at the proper time. And this is equally true about the strike weapon. Let us note briefly how the strike weapon and strike strategy have been used by the leaders of the Railroad brotherhoods in the last fifteen years.

The last time the Brotherhood leadership made any pretense at using the strike weapon effectively, was during the movement for the eight hour day on the railroads in 1916. Two strikes were organized and came within a few hours of taking effect to bring about the eight hour day for railroad workers. The first strike was called off with the enactment of the Adamson Eight Hour Law. The railroad owners took the Adamson Law to the U. S. Supreme Court with a view of having it declared unconstitutional. Another strike vote was taken and the second railroad strike came within a few hours of going into effect when the Supreme Court came out with a 5 to 4 decision against its unconstitutionality. It was necessary for the railroad workers to use the strike weapon to squeeze the Eight Hour Law out of congress and it had to be used again to squeeze agreement with it out of the Supreme Court by the narrow margin of 5 to 4. In neither case was the strike weapon used but it was ready for use if necessary, and the strike weapon was the thing which furnished the necessary influence to bring the eight hour day into reality on the railroads.

Since the Eight Hour Day movement in 1916, strike policy and strike strategy has steadily drifted towards the very bottom of bankruptcy and today the strike is practically discarded as a weapon, in so far as the Brotherhood leaders are concerned. Instead of training and organizing the railroad workers to use the only weapon they have against their bosses, they have trained them to cast it aside or to hang it up in the closet and to keep it there. Instead of keeping the strike weapon ready and in good shape, for use when necessary, the Brotherhood leaders sign one peace pact after another with the railroad bosses, always and inevitably at the expense of the workers. The recent Chicago peace pact was just another example of this bankrupt policy.

Strike Policy vs. Cooperation Policy

The Brotherhood leaders, like all labor leaders, are confronted with two main alternatives; they must either fight or surrender to the bosses. For workers there is no escape from one of these two processes. We are compelled by the circumstances to choose one of two roads upon which to travel, either to victory or to defeat. Since 1916, the Brotherhood leaders have steadily kept the railroad workers on the path which leads to defeat. The sign posts which directed our leadership along this path were such inventions as: The B. and O. Cooperation Plan; the Watson-Parker Law to prevent strikes in labor disputes; Class Collaboration instead of Class Struggle; Peace Pacts, Mutual admiration and cooperation between Railroad and Brotherhood Officials. These were the slogans which were used as weather-cocks to steer the railroad labor movement towards the swamp of surrender and defeat. The Brotherhood leaders chose this road because it was a road which offered less resistance to their personal interest and ambitions than the road which led towards organization, amalgamation and well-led struggles against the bosses.

In order to make it a little more clear to the ordinary worker as to why the Brotherhood leaders adopted the policy to cooperate with the railroad management instead of fighting it so as to promote and protect the railroad workers' interest, we will point out several things. The Brotherhood leadership have organized the railroad workers into 21 separate craft unions. The same type of organization which the Locomotive Engineers launched at Detroit, Michigan in 1888. And we still cling to this out-of-date craft system of organization. It would be to the railroad workers' interest to amalgamate these 21 useless and expensive crafts unions into an industrial union, but it would not be to the best interest of craft union officials to do so. Their big salaries separate them from the rank and file and so the interest of the Brotherhood officials runs in the opposite direction from that of the members. Therefore, we are not one union but twenty-one. It would be to the best interest of the Brotherhood members to have freedom of expression in their unions so they could advocate amalgamation, reduction of official salaries, elimination of gag-laws and secret work, but this would be against the interest of 15,000 craft officials like Robertson. They want gag-laws, censored magazines, obligations and secret work to barricade themselves against the organized criticism of the rank and file. It would be for the interest of railroad workers to have one strong union for all workers in the railroad industry so they could better protect and promote their interest against the bosses. It is against the interest of the labor leaders to build this kind of organization and consequently they cannot fight the bosses and are therefore forced to cooperate with them. So, the way things stand in the railroad brotherhoods today, it is the desire of the officials to avoid at all costs strikes and struggles because they have not got the kind of organization needed to put up a successful strike and it is against their interest to build one, and hence we have the cooperation policy instead of the strike policy.

This cooperation policy has had a most destructive effect on the railroad unions since the railroads were returned to private control after the war. During the war, under government control, when the railroad owners were reaping enormous profits, the lower paid masses of railroad workers were allowed to organize without serious opposition and thousands of shop and maintenance workers streamed into the rail unions. But after the war profits were over, and the roads returned to private control, then the onslaught started on the unions by the railroad owners and the craft system of organization simply crumbled. The only thing that was saved from the wreckage was the Four Transportation Brotherhoods, whose leaders offered cooperation with the bosses in return for the privilege to collect dues from the members of the so-called "Big Four". Since that time all the labor skates have adopted the policy to cooperate with the boss in order to keep their meal tickets from being completely destroyed. Most of the shop workers have been permitted to remain in company unions for the last ten years. Working conditions have been gradually lost. Workers are being suspended or discharged for getting injured while at work to save the company from paying them anything. Speed-up, "ef-

Support «Unser Kampf»

The first three issues of Unser Kampf our organ in the Yiddish Language met with a very favorable reception among all our comrades, sympathizers and friends. Especially appreciative were those of our readers whose knowledge of the English language is limited. The worker who is anxious to know about the platform of the International Left Opposition, wants to read about it in the language he knows best.

The financial aid to make the appearance of Unser Kampf possible, came from branches, from groups and individuals. But nevertheless the aid is still urgently needed. Very many of our adherents are victims of the deep-going crisis and cannot help to the extent they would like to. We know that at the first opportunity those of our readers will bring forth their contribution. At this time we are forced to appeal to every one for financial aid. The fourth issue is in preparation—but to see the light of day it needs the aid of all our sympathizers.

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

Party and C.I. in England

LONDON—

Our party is admittedly weak, backward in revolutionary action, and shot through with social democratic tendencies. We are accustomed to blame "ourselves" for this. We have used self-criticism to the point of self-abasement. But is it only "ourselves" who are to blame? Is it not rather the fault of those in the Comintern who have neglected the British party and its difficulties—neglected not only the British party, but all those parties which, in capitalist countries, are striving to overthrow the bourgeoisie?

The course of events in the party leadership has been as follows: certain British comrades, by virtue of their militant activity, commended themselves to the Russian revolutionaries in the early days of the Comintern. They were taught some of the elements of Communism, and returned to England to lead the proletariat over the long and difficult course that lay ahead. From that time on, their assimilation of Marxism and Leninism ceased. They became bureaucrats divorced from the masses, immersed in routine work, and incapable of initiative, for initiative requires some freedom of action for its development, and that is what our leaders lacked—in addition to theoretical understanding.

We think that the present leadership of the Comintern—the Stalin leadership, has allowed things to slide in most sections of the organization. It has been content to let our fossilized bureaucrats carry on here, provided sufficient reports were returned, Russian triumphs given publicity, and defence of the Soviet Union advocated. We say that the Five Year Plan has absorbed practically all the attention of our Russian comrades and that we have been forced into the position of mere distant admirers of Russian working class successes.

To back up this statement, we give the following extracts from recent speeches of two well known Russian party officials—comrades Molotov and Litvinov. Molotov at the XVII Conference (Moscow) of the all union Communist Party on January 30th last, said: "The foreign policy of the Soviet Union is clear—it is a policy of peace. It is obvious to all that we are totally absorbed in peaceful construction in our country and are doing all in power to prevent all new imperialist attacks on the Socialist Republic." ("Moscow News", Feb. 2, 1932)

As if this was not enough to make clear the indifference of the Russian authorities to revolutionary work in capitalist countries, comrade Litvinov on Feb. 11, at the Geneva "Disarmament" Conference, announced that, "The sole aim of the Soviet Government is to build up Socialism upon the territory of the Soviet Union!" ("Daily Worker" (London), Feb. 12, 1932)

This statement of Litvinov's holds the key to the whole desperate situation of the revolutionary organizations outside the Soviet Union, and especially in Great Britain. It repeats plainly the assertion of Stalin that socialism can be confined to one country. This assertion was most glaringly made in an interview of Stalin with a United Press correspondent in December, 1930, when he was asked, "Can the capitalist and Communist systems co-exist peacefully?" Stalin replied: "It is possible, and the best proof is that they have lived peacefully (sic) side by side since the conclusion of the civil war and the intervention period." ("Moscow News", Dec. 17, 1930), Rak-dik followed this up six months later (at the Dzerzhinsky Club) with the statement, "Bolshevism is no article of export!" ("Moscow News", June 18, 1931)

Contrast the point of view thus expressed with the teaching of Lenin, who said: "It is as impossible to pass from capitalism to socialism without breaking national frameworks, as it was impossible to pass from feudalism to capitalism without adopting the idea as a nation." (Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 18, page 72)

The present leadership of the Communist International has, by its own statements—and action—travelled a long way from the decisions of the Second Congress (1920) of the International, where a resolution extracted from the statutes of the First International was unanimously adopted. It was resolved at the Second Congress: That the emancipation of labor is neither a local nor a national problem, but one of a social character embracing every civilized country, and the solution of which depends on the theoretical and practical cooperation of the most progressive countries.

The leadership of our British party should be the first to agree with the above resolution, for in an introduction to the Thesis on National and Colonial Questions of the Second Congress, the B. C. of the C. P. G. B. concluded with: Finally, the ultimate aim is indicated in the World Soviet Republic, to be reached by an ever-expanding Federation of Soviet Republics, which shall organize world production, distribution and transport as a single problem. Already, the economic needs of today calls for this world economic organization, but the rival capitalist camps are from their nature incapable of unity. That task awaits the World Soviet!

And no doubt the leading officials of our party do agree with the Second Congress resolution—"in principle". But in action they follow meekly the line laid down by the exponent of "socialism in one country".

Do we need a new line then? Certainly we do—a true Leninist line. We need also to get away from the apologetic attitude we have been adopting—of constantly blaming "ourselves" for all the faults and shortcomings of the British party. Of course we have faults, chiefly those of theoretical backwardness and of inexperience, but the roots of our extreme disability lie outside Britain; they are to be found in the policy of the Stalin leadership of the Comintern—most strikingly condemned by recent events concerning China, but always at fault in the past—a policy of going over the heads of the working class (e. g. flirting with Hicks, Purcell and Co.) of overestimating the strength and stability of capitalism (unpreparedness to meet the present world crisis) and of making everything subservient to the immediate needs of the U. S. S. R., regardless of revolutionary problems confronting the proletariat of the capitalist countries.

Our new line, to which we, the party rank and file, must adopt ourselves, is a line of internationalism, of revolutionary action, of rapid expansion into the mass of the workers. We need to warmly greet workers outside the party, instead of lecturing them as inferior beings. Away with sectarianism! Into the masses! Concentrate on our own revolutionary problems! The best defence of the Soviet Union is a free and sustained attack on our bourgeoisie here. A new world revolutionary situation lies before us. Our own October is not far distant. The capitalist class is going to give us the war. Let us give it war in return—a civil war for the international revolution, for the dictatorship of the working class, for the World Soviet Republic.

Rakovsky on the Five Year Plan

In the following metallurgical factories and types of enterprises, the amount of defective goods was:

Djerdjinsky factory (wrought iron plates)	32 per cent
Djerdjinsky and Petrovsky factory (steel parts)	40 per cent
Verkhny-Turinsk factory (steel parts)	100 per cent
Lapayevsky factory (sheet metal)	40 per cent
Nadjejdinsky factory (high quality steel)	30 per cent
Marti factory (steel)	32 per cent

This list can, of course, be increased many times. It is a matter, therefore, not of single defects, but of a whole system of producing defective goods. The percentage of waste in the production of coal increased sharply, reaching in some instances as much as 18 per cent. Only 20 per cent of the bricks produced could stand up under the established methods of loading. Matters are still worse in light industries, in which textiles broke all records. According to the figures often quoted, the average percentage of defective goods in the different trusts was 50 per cent. The press also quotes the figures of the losses in millions of rubles, connected with this drop in quality. It is characteristic that the new factories do not remain behind in the percentages of defective goods. The textile factory of the Melange Syndicate, which has been recently constructed, produced in April, 93.98 per cent (!) and in May 92.37 per cent defective goods. According to the figures of the People's Commissariat of Workers' and Peasants' Inspection, the percentage of defective goods in the needle industry amounted to 30 per cent this year as against 10 per cent last year. Defective goods in the production of rubber reaches 14 per cent, of shoes 13 per cent. There is literally not a single branch of industry where the problem of quality is not a very painful one, and there is almost not a single branch where the current year did not bring a deterioration of quality. It is clear, in connection with this, that where the produce has to go through several stages in the process of production or through several branches of industry, the poor quality in one branch is multiplied by the poor quality in all the other branches. To what conclusions does an examination of the question of quality bring us? There are two conclusions: (1) The deterioration of the quality of production makes the quantitative indices more or less fictitious. Even Kuibishev was compelled to admit this at a session of the presidium of the Supreme Economic Council, where he declared: "The figures of the tremendous growth of industry become relative if we take into consideration the qualitative changes." ("Ekonon. Zhizn", May 22, 1930) "Za Industrializatsiu" of July 18, expresses itself still more emphatically, when it declares that under such conditions "all our quantitative achievements would not amount to a farthing"

In a whole series of instances, the deterioration of quality not only annuls the quantitative achievements, but even converts them into the opposite. For example, in the survey regarding the work in the textile industry for the first half year ("Za Industrializatsiu", April 20) we read: "In many enterprises the plan of production is fulfilled at the expense of a growth in industrial losses and in defective goods among finished and half-finished manufactures. The ultimate result shows that this makes the quantitative achievements negligible and that it has incurred losses to the textile industry and to national economy as a whole. Finally, in several groups of commodities, the cost of production is not covered, not a speak of any accumulation." This is the reverse side of the high tempo of increasing production.

Only a comparison with the qualitative indices makes it possible to judge the quantitative indices. Without taking into account the quality of the products, the quantity figures represent a mere statistical fiction, which does not at all give a picture of the actual state of affairs. It is entirely clear that only by dividing the quantitative indices by the qualitative ones, can a true picture of reality be obtained. Such a picture would be considerably different from the one drawn in flippant articles by the official press. Unfortunately, there are not as yet such indices, with the help of which it would be possible to determine the level of the quality of production and through that, also the actual level of its quantitative growth. This is our first conclusion.

(2) The qualitative indices so far achieved, not only disclose a great relativity of the quantitative indices at the present, but also their possible trend in the future. At the same time, the qualitative indices also demonstrate indirectly the degree reached by the intensity of labor, with which they are closely bound up. Intensity of labor is driven to such limits that the worker who produces the amount demanded of him, is no longer able to direct his attention to the quality. All the data indicate that (further on, we shall once more come back to this) on the given technical basis, we have arrived very close to the boundary, beyond which a further increase in quantity through an increase in the intensity of labor can only be bought at the expense of a deterioration in quality. The quality of production is a signal warning that a further increase in quantity at the expense of an increase in the intensity of labor is no longer possible.

A Few Lessons of the Anarchist Uprisings in Spain

The recent revolt in upper Llobregat, in Callesu Suvia, Berga, Figols and Carcener had completely paralyzed the power of the exploiters for several days. The red flag of the workers waved over the city hall in several of the towns. All of the currents of the Spanish revolutionary movement again tested their theories in practice. The party press in America, which had ignored the Spanish revolution for months and months, all of a sudden broadcast the news that they had established Soviets in several towns in Spain. And among many other things, they said that, the Left Opposition was playing a counter-revolutionary role in the struggle. But a few days passed, and even the blind could see that, said to say, the Communist party was not leading the revolts. Nothing more is said or heard in the Party press or its meetings about Spain, yet the struggle has not stopped, in spite of the fact the Centrist press is silent now, as they were in the previous months.

The leadership of the National Confederation of Labor again showed its hand in stemming the tide rather than fanning the revolt. The vanguard action of the American Stalinists in proclaiming leadership of the struggles was followed by the tail-endism of the Spanish Stalinists in the struggle. The socialist and anarchist role adds new weight to their role of betrayals, all of which is summed up in a recent document of the Spanish Left Opposition published in The Militant, Feb. 27.

But since this document, we have new material on the Anarchists that further confirms the position of the Left Opposition on the role of the Anarchists in the Spanish revolution. The Industrial Worker of March 8, carried an article by de Guzman, from the "La Tierra", translated by M. Olaj. This article proves the anarchists have learned nothing since their master, Bakunin "captured power" in Lyons, France in 1870.

In Spain, "Figols was the first town to revolt and the last to be entered by troops. The town was for five days, from Monday to Saturday, living a regime of libertarian communism." Libertarian communism? And we ask, what may libertarian communism be? We are informed that, "Anarchism has been a reality for a week. And at no place or time were there killings, robberies and excesses which according to the detractors of anarchism are their very essence." These kind souls, these humanitarians, the subjective individuals are more concerned with the bourgeois opinion of them, than they are with the interest of the workers. What of it, if the bourgeois slander revolutionists, call them thieves, murderers, robbers and enemies of society? Can you expect anything else from the exploiters and their flunkies? Have exploiters ever called the exploited nice names when the slave class desire to throw off the burden of exploitation? If the exploiters confine their opposition to "nasty names" we would have no trouble in taking power, but sad to say, this slander is only a slight breeze of the hurricane they let loose on us ever chance we give them. The individualism of the anarchists is more concerned about their subjective feelings than about the interest of the workers.

The anarchists, to make sure the bourgeois learn how Christlike or Gandhian-like anarchism is—"generous and idealist spirits that they were—once triumphant with the social revolution proclaimed, did not think of squaring accounts; they did not want to shed blood, they did not even bother to humiliate them. They seized all arms to prevent the enemy from attacking them; they posted guards to avoid being surprised, and leaving everybody in absolute freedom they continued working the same as before, without thinking for a moment that the triumph of the social revolution would release them from digging coal from the entrails of the earth." More confusion in fewer words is very difficult to write. They "did not think of squaring accounts." They disarmed them and left everybody, "in absolute freedom." Without expropriating and imprisoning the main forces of the enemy class and finishing those who resist, without establishing a Red Guard and a dictatorship of the proletariat, they left the door wide open for the exploiters to return, to reorganize and to annihilate them. Their concept is to—decree the state out of existence; to simply proclaim the social revolution, but reality is not so simple. You can proclaim the social revolution and raise the red flag today and tomorrow find white terror at its heights unless adequate steps are taken to follow up the first victory and to smash the enemy, to smash their state and all means of exploitation that goes with it and establish a workers' dictatorship.

These "generous and idealist spirits" who established "libertarian communism" say, "In every place the Civil Guards, sheltered in their barracks, where they take refuge; the bourgeoisie locked up in their homes, are left alone. The revolution had triumphed and the revolutionists cannot imitate their former oppressors, by forcing them and the others to share their ideas." This is nothing less than a betrayal of the workers. The anarchists do not know the elementary difference between a successful social revolution and a successful battle in a revolution, which, if not immediately followed up—will result in defeat. They do not know the elementary difference between the bourgeoisie as the ruling power. The former exploiters, "are left alone" by the anarchist leaders and the enemy reorganizes its forces after the first wave of revolt and comes back in the form of bourgeois terror, that should by all means cause us to congratulate and honor the "generous and idealist spirits", the anarchists of Spain! The anarchists in Lyons in 1870 decreed the state out of existence and established a "libertarian communism" but before 24 hours had passed, the state, in the form of the National guards, returned and dispersed the rebels. And once again history repeats itself, only this time as a farce.

The Communists and the Agrarian Crisis

The confusion existing in the ranks of the Communist movement on the Agrarian question cannot be settled until we trace it to the source and at the same time present the determining factors of American agriculture. The agrarian question in America cannot be separated from the establishment of the Third International, after the successful Russian revolution and the establishment of the Soviet Power. Up to that time, the Second International had a bundle of confused ideas on the agrarian and colonial questions on the problem of the relationship between town and country. In fact, the Second International revised Marxism on this question, leaving the peasantry and colonies as open stamping grounds for imperialist robbery.

Marx and Engels present a clear analysis of this question in their writings and Lenin and Trotsky (Trotsky, "Our Revolution" 1906) brought this question down to practical working class politics in the 1905 period, so successfully carried out in the 1917 revolution by the Marxists. Through the Third International this material and these lessons have become the property of the whole class throughout the world, expressed by their vanguard. However, since the establishment of the Stalin regime and the gradual crowding to the background of the Marxian ideas, we have witnessed a revival of revisionism on this question. This time, from a different angle than that of the Second International.

This revisionism takes on two different forms, one in the colonial countries, and another in the advanced countries. In turn, the problem as a whole flows from the theory of socialism in one country. In the colonial countries, Stalinism poses the question of the 1905 revolution and not that of October 1917 and comes to the conclusion of the "democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry." Its concrete expressions have been manifold, with outstanding points of revision such as: the four-class-party in China, Workers and Peasants blocks, Peasant International etc. In the advanced capitalist countries and particularly in America its opposite expression is manifested. The problem of the farmers and the agrarian crisis is not understood and Centrist, in refusing to pose this question by showing the proper relation of town and country, has left the door wide open for blunders. They have left unanswered the whole question of: What kind of a revolution? What will it look like? (Lenin and Trotsky answered this for Russia). We cannot be satisfied with merely saying: Soviets and dictatorship of the proletariat. What will the Soviets be like, when we take power, in comparison to the Soviets established by the first workers' class rule and in a backward country with the majority of peasants? In place of these answers we have revisionism for the advanced countries expressing itself as: The "peoples' revolution", Workers and Farmers parties and the Workers and Farmers Government; Self determination for the American Negro and the Anti-Imperialist League, etc.

One question we must settle and that will throw considerable light upon the problem for the advanced capitalist countries is the question of American agricultural conditions today. Once we lay down a Marxian analysis on this question we can more readily come to a proper understanding of the question. The problem for colonial countries will not be taken up here. We will confine ourself to advanced America.

Agrarian Development under Capitalism
A proper elevation of the problem calls for an understanding of its historical development and relation. Under pre-capitalist conditions agriculture and manufacturing were established as a unity with manufacturing subordinated to agriculture (manufacturing used in the obsolete sense—hand-tool production). "Domestic handicraft and manufacturing labor, as side issues to agriculture, which forms the basis, is the prerequisite of that mode of production upon which natural economy rests, in European antiquity and in Middle Ages as well as in the Indian commune of the present day, in which the traditional organization has not yet been destroyed. The capitalist mode of production completely dissolves this connection." (Marx: Capital, Vol. 3, page 913). The capitalist mode of production destroys this unity of agriculture and manufacturing and by the concentration of the means of production and their transformation into capital they are able to expropriate the direct producers and change them into wage workers. These wage workers are struggle against the Stalin regime. Question: Do you still regard the present phase of the Bolshevik revolution as "Thermidorian," and has your view as expressed in your autobiography been borne out, by events since your departure from Soviet Russia? Answer: I have never said that the present stage of the revolution was "Thermidorian." The historic conception of Thermidor has a very definite content: it means a completion of the first stage of a victorious counter-revolution. A Thermidor in the U. S. S. R. could mean nothing else than the coming into power, although at first in a semi-disguised form, of the bourgeoisie, and consequently a breakdown of the October revolution. I have never, at any time or anywhere, said that the October revolution has broken down. This opinion is persistently attributed to me by the Stalin press for purposes which have nothing whatever to do with the interests of truth. What I have asserted and do assert is that there has grown up on the basis of the October revolution a powerful bureaucratic stratum in which both active and passive Thermidorian tendencies are very strong. However, their victory is still far off. The opposition to these tendencies consists of a struggle for the independence of the Communist party, the trade unions and the soviets and for their vigilant control over the bureaucracy. This opinion was not formed by me after my exile from the Soviet Union; on the contrary, it was the cause of my exile. A bureaucracy does not tolerate any attacks upon its commanding role. The danger inherent in the Thermidorian tendencies of a bureaucracy was perfectly clear to Lenin. He gave warning against this danger in his last speech at the Eleventh Congress of the party in 1922. My last conversation with Lenin was devoted to this question. Lenin proposed that I form a bloc with him against that bureaucracy, the focal point of which he considered, and I also, to be the secretariat apparatus of the party led by Stalin. Lenin's second illness capitalist. Hindenburg as the latter candidate, supported by the extreme reactionary parties, signified the monarchy hovering over Germany. The E. C. C. I. then wrote correctly pointing out to the German Communist Party 10th congress, held July 10th, 1925: "The 10th congress of the Communist Party of Germany must frankly admit that the party committed an error by not following the advice given by the Executive Committee of the Communist International after the first presidential ballot and before the election of Hindenburg, namely, to signify to the German social democrats that the Communists were prepared to withdraw their candidate in favor of the social democratic candidate on certain conditions. Such errors and delays are unforgivable in politics and always costly to the party of the revolutionary proletariat."

Germany 1925 is, of course, not Germany 1932. Today there is an objectively revolutionary situation in the country. Today there is the yet more serious and more direct menace of Fascism hovering over Germany. Today so much more is the question of working class unity, of a united front from organization to organization, from movement to movement, of workers under social democratic ideology and those of Communist ideology against Fascism, the vital issue of the moment. It is not yet too late. The German proletariat is still in a powerful fighting position. It has created a powerful Communist Party; but the supreme need is for the party to understand how to apply this essential united front tactic on a genuine and honest basis.

This our German comrades of the Left Opposition have already proposed in a very concrete form embodied in its appeal to the official Communist Party in addition to putting forward a worker's united front presidential candidate also to create (1) Committees of Action consisting of representatives of factories, trade unions, political groups and other workers' organizations.

(2) A Joint Council of Action to be constituted at a congress of delegates from these Committees of Action . . . to represent the proletarian concentration against the concentration of the reactionaries.

(3) The congress must be organized in advance as the proletarian counter-parliament in the event of a Fascist Reichstag, or against an extra parliamentary or parliamentary Fascist government.

(4) The congress must solve three tasks concretely:

(a) the preparation of the general strike to prevent the seizure of power by Hugenberg and Hitler;

(b) the formation of one common, non-party workers' defense corps;

(c) the elaboration of a common minimum program with regard to the next steps to be taken by the Committees of Action.

prevented the carrying out of this plan. Socialist Success, Prepare Ground For Weakening of Bureaucracy

Question: Is there need of modifying the Communist dictatorship in Russia and how should this be modified? Answer: This question is closely bound up with the first two. The economic successes, it is needless to say, have greatly strengthened the Soviet Union. At the same time they have greatly weakened the position of Stalin's official apparatus. In this there is no contradiction. In the first place, it is perfectly clear to all conscious elements of the population of the Soviet Union that the successes in the sphere of industrialization and collectivization became possible only because the Stalin bureaucracy came up against the resistance of its proteges, the kulak, who refused to surrender his grain to the State, and thus the bureaucracy was compelled to take over and carry out the program of the Left Opposition. Stalin has dealt with our program in much the same way that the free-trader MacDonald has dealt with the protectionist program of Joseph Chamberlain, who also in his time was cruelly beaten at the polls. Today Chamberlain (I mean the father, not the son) is in any case more popular in England than MacDonald. To be sure, Chamberlain died long ago. But the principal leaders of the Russian opposition are alive. Rakovsky in Burnaev is attentively following all the processes of industry and politics in the Soviet Union. A second and still more important cause of the weakening of the Soviet bureaucracy lies in the fact that the economic successes have greatly elevated not only the number of the Russian workers, but also their cultural level, their confidence in their own powers and their feeling of independence. All these traits are hard to reconcile with a bureaucratic guardianship. Nevertheless, the Stalin apparatus in its struggle for dominance has carried the bureaucratic regime to its utmost extremes. I want especially to emphasize this fact: the economic successes, as frequently happens in history, have not strengthened but, on the contrary, undermined the position of the ruling stratum. I consider important changes in the methods of the Soviet regime absolutely inevitable, and that, too, in the rather near future. These changes will involve a blow at the dictatorship of the Stalin bureaucracy, and will undoubtedly clear the road for a flourishing of Soviet democracy on the foundations laid down by the October revolution.

Predicts His Party's Return
Question: Do you look forward to your return to Soviet Russia? Under what conditions would that be possible and what would be your program? Answer: I think that the above-mentioned changes will make possible and inevitable a return of the Left Opposition to active work in the Soviet Union. For Support of Bruening?—A Stalinist Slander!

Question: You have been reported as urging the Communists in Germany to support the Bruening Government as a means of staving off the victory of Hitlerism—is that true? Why do you consider the present policy of German Communism erroneous? Answer: Dispatches to the effect that I have urged the German Communists to support the Government of Bruening are, of course, false. The Stalin press has attributed this plan to me, and the idea has been taken up by journalists who do not understand the situation. I proposed to the German Communists to carry out the policy of the so-called United Front. The Communists ought to propose to the Social-Democrats and to the trade unions led by them a program of cooperation, practical struggle against the attack of the Fascists. The Social-Democratic masses quite sincerely desire to wage such a struggle. If the leaders refuse, they will compromise themselves in the eyes of their own masses. If the leaders agree the masses, in practical action, will go beyond their leaders and support the Communists. One must efficiency" and cooperation with the company policy have been put into effect with the consent of the labor officials. Stool-pigeonism is encouraged by the so-called merit mark system. Wage cuts have been voluntarily accepted by the labor leaders for the health of "our industry, or for some other equally foolish excuse. Strikes have been called on a number of small roads and been neglected and permitted to drag on aimlessly for years and finally forgotten. No attempt was made to spread these strikes, so they could be won. There was no picketing, and cars were delivered to and received from these striking roads by union workers on other lines. As a matter of fact, the class collaboration policy has practically wrecked the railroad unions and their only function at present is to collect dues from the members for the benefit of the salaried officials.

However, there is a marked reaction manifesting itself among the members against this cooperation and surrender policy and signs are pointing to the formation of a growing organized minority in the railroad unions who will sooner or later be able to relegate the 15,000 dollar-a-year bureaucrats, with their cooperation policy, to the political dung heap.

learn to make use of disagreements in the camp of opponents and enemies. Only with a policy as flexible as this is it possible to rise step by step to the top. Strategy involves maneuvers as well as assault. I have not the slightest doubt that the German Communist party, in spite of the resistance of the Stalin bureaucracy, will learn this strategy, through which alone bolshevism was able to win the power in Russia.

The Present Crisis: Its effects on Europe and America

Question: What is your view of the present world economic crisis and its implications for the prevailing social order? Do you still look for world revolution as a likely consequence of the crisis or do you believe that capitalism may surmount the crisis and enter upon a period of stabilization? What would be the situation of Soviet Russia in event of stabilization? Has not the world economic crisis placed Soviet Russia before the need of revising her own economic policies? Answer: The present economic crisis is an indubitable expression of the fact that world capitalism has outlived itself as a system. The question of the historic date when it will be replaced by another system will be decided, of course, in different ways for different parts of the world. Present-day Europe has no way out. Even though the automatic working of the laws of the market lead to a softening of the crisis in Europe after a year or two, the crisis will return again in a comparatively short time with redoubled force. The productive forces are being strangled in the national cells of Europe. The dilettante plan of M. Briand for a union of Europe has not emerged and never will emerge from the laboratory of the chancelleries and editorial offices. The ruling classes will cure the crisis with a further economic declamation of Europe and a strengthening of protectionism and militarism. Under these circumstances I see no prospect of a general stabilization of European capitalism.

Question: How do you view the position of the United States in the present world situation? Answer: I think as a result of the present crisis the predominance of American over European capitalism will grow still more pronounced. In the same way, as a result of every crisis, you see a growth in the predominance of the big enterprise over the small, the trust over the isolated undertaking. However, this inevitable growth of the world hegemony of the United States will entail further deep contradictions both in the economy and in the politics of the great American Republic. In asserting the dictatorship of the dollar over the whole world the ruling class of the United States will introduce the contradictions of the whole world in a very basis of its own dominance. The economy and the politics of the United States will depend more and more directly upon crises, wars and revolutions in all parts of the world. The position of "observer" cannot long be maintained formally. I think that America will create the most colossal system of land, sea and air militarism that can be imagined. The conclusive emergence of America from its old "provincialism," the struggle for markets, the growth of armaments, and active world policy, the experience of the present crisis—all these things will inevitably introduce deep changes into the inner life of the United States. The emergence of a labor party is inevitable. It may begin to grow with an "American tempo," leading to the liquidation of one of the two old parties just as the Liberals have disappeared in England.

To sum it up, you must say the Soviet Union will be Americanized technically, Europe will either be Sovietized or descend to barbarism, the United States will be Europeanized politically.

The Communists and the Agrarian Crisis

first concentrated in the developing cities and later, with the development of capitalism, reach out and invade the countryside as agricultural workers almost to the degree that capitalist production subordinate agriculture and molds it to its own liking. "The advent of capital as an independent and leading power in agriculture does not take place generally all at once, but gradually and separately in various lines of production. It seizes first not agriculture proper, but such lines of production as cattle raising, especially sheep raising, whose principle product, wool, offers a steady surplus of the market price over the price of production during rising industry, and this is not balanced until later. This was the case in England during the 16th century." (Marx: Capital, Vol. 3, page 931)

In the first stage of production, its forces work destructively against the pre-capitalist condition of the unity of agriculture and manufacturing. But once it has smashed this relationship, it starts the process of unifying capitalist industry and capitalist agriculture on a new plane. Developed capitalism lays the base for the transformation of agriculture into a modern industry. In the negative sense this is already accomplished in advanced America, but in the positive sense it is not, and will not be until after the seizure of power by the proletariat and the establishment of the socialist mode of production.

The Agrarian Crisis

What is the relationship between agriculture and industry in America and what is the meaning of the agrarian crisis? The agrarian crisis seems to be a permanent feature of American capitalism, and logically so, because it is by the phenomena of the concentration of capital (and land capital is no exception) that American capitalism is further transforming American agriculture to its own liking. The centralization carries with it a greater diversification of the division of social labor, with different sections specializing in different food-stuffs, even through diversified uses of the soil, in order to rotate crops for the greatest exploitation of the capital invested.

"It is the nature of the capitalist mode of production to reduce the agricultural population continually as compared to the non-agricultural, because in industry, (strictly speaking) the increase of the constant capital compared to the variable capital goes hand in hand with an absolute increase, though relative decrease, of the variable capital: whereas

YOUTH CLASS

A class in the A B C of Communism will hold its first session Sunday, March 13, 330 P. M., at 84 E. 10th St. This class has been arranged by the Spartacus Youth Club. Comrade George Ray will be the instructor. All young workers and students who are interested are invited to attend. The Spartacus Youth Club itself will meet at the same address on Sunday, March 13, at 5 P. M. A lecture by comrade Joseph Carter on "The Role of the Socialist Party" will be given. Extensive discussion will follow. The program of discussions for the next few meetings are as follows: March 20, "The Events in the Far East"; March 27, "The History of the Russian Revolution"—a discussion on Trotsky's book, in agriculture the variable capital required for the exploitation of a certain piece of land is decreased absolutely and cannot increase unless new land is taken into cultivation, which implies a still greater previous growth of the non-agricultural population." (Vol. 3, page 747). The expropriation of the peasantry and handicraft labor as primitive accumulation of capital takes on new forms in advanced capitalism with the constant shift of the rural to the urban population and the debt-and-mortgage-ridden farmers over on the increase, in the last analysis resulting in driving them off the land. And if they return, to return as wage laborers or tenants in varied forms.

Effects of the Land Crisis

In other words, "healthy" capitalism, carrying out the capitalist process of centralization, concentration and accumulation, creating laws the capitalists cannot control are doing nothing more nor less than is necessary for a capitalist system. Where the "logical" sees the weakening of its agricultural base and point there to the "agrarian revolution" in an advanced country or to a "Workers and Farmers Government," the fact remains that the opposite is true and the weak spot in this process manifests itself in another sphere of capitalist production. In fact, the further tearing down of outlived agricultural relations and the molding of them to capitalist liking is necessary to strengthen this "industry" that has always lagged behind the general development of industrial capitalism. The agrarian crisis in advanced countries creates friction and steam to be let off. But its weakening effect upon capitalism is expressed primarily in the industrial base of advanced countries. It transforms a decisive section of the farmer class into agricultural workers. It shifts the dead weight of the country to the top heavy weight of the city under capitalism, swelling the proletariat from two angles. It further socializes the mode of production and, with it, the contradiction of accumulation and capitalist appropriation. It disorganizes the whole world division of labor, shaking up not only the internal relations between agriculture and industry but also the external relations between colonial and imperialist countries, in fact all of the contradictions of town and country as such.

The American farmer, since the war, has overproduced foodstuffs and raw material in every line but cannot see his own overproduction, and only points to the tremendous overproduction of the colonial regions, a necessary development and encouragement of industry under imperialism—resulting in the creation of a whirlwind pressure from all sides. "It is precisely the rapidly growing cultivation of such prairie or steppe districts which of late turns the renowned statement of Malthus, that the population 'presses upon the means of subsistence', into ridicule, and has created the reverse of it in the complaint of the agrarians, who wall that agriculture, and with it Germany, will be ruined unless the means of subsistence which are pressing upon the population are kept out by force. The cultivation of these steppes, prairies, pampas, llanos, etc., is only in its beginnings; its revolutionary effect on European agriculture will, therefore, make itself felt later on even more than hitherto." (Engels, Vol. 3, page 785). (To be continued)

BOOK REVIEW

«The Strategy of the World Revolution»

The Strategy of the World Revolution (Part I of the "Criticism of the Draft Program of the C. I.") by Leon Trotsky Published by the C. L. of A. Opposition New York City, 1931

This important document which was originally the second section of the Criticism of the Draft Program of the Communist International was published in the United States by the Left Opposition nearly a year and a half ago. The reason for its publication subsequent to the appearance of the two other sections of the criticism (published as The Draft Program of the Communist International, A Criticism of Fundamentals) was, as is related in the introduction, its complete suppression by the Stalin-Bucharin bloc so that the American Left Opposition was totally unaware of its existence. In the four years since it was written, far from having diminished in its usefulness in relation to the developments of the world revolution, it has, on the contrary, become more valuable, particularly when revolution is again being placed on the order of the day in Europe.

Trotsky on the Character of Our Epoch

Without understanding the nature of the epoch in which we live, the manner and tempo in which events unfold themselves, the enormous weight of the subjective factor in accelerating, precipitating, or retarding changes in the international situation, and without drawing the strategic lessons from the revolutionary convulsions of the post-war period and the Russian revolution, a repetition of the defeats of the world revolution are unavoidable. It is precisely upon these crucial questions that the program of the Communist International fails to give an adequate answer. "Without an extensive, general, dialectical comprehension of the present epoch as an epoch of abrupt turns," writes Trotsky, "a real education of the young parties, a correct strategic leadership of class struggles, a correct application of tactics and a sharp and bold right about face at a turn of the situation, is impossible. And it is just at such a turn that in two or three days often decides the destiny of the world revolution for years to come."

Events in Germany are now converging toward such a decisive point. For this reason the lessons of the defeat of 1923 which Trotsky succinctly reviews in this pamphlet assumes extraordinary timeliness. The German party was unable to reorientate itself toward mobilizing for the seizure of power in 1923 after it had been directed by the Third Congress toward the conquest of the masses through daily work in the trade unions, in parliament, in factories, in the press and so on. The party was confronted with what Trotsky calls the crisis of the revolutionary leadership on the eve of the transition to armed uprising. Elements of the leadership and middle layers of the party succumb to the furious assaults of bourgeois public opinion, to its material and ideological terror, and vacillate at the moment the party must proceed unhesitatingly into the armed struggle.

After the opportunist moment had been missed in Germany, the Comintern leadership instead of recognizing that, as a result of the defeat, they were confronted with a new stage in which it was necessary to retreat, to consolidate one's positions, to wage defensive struggles, entered upon a policy of ultra-Left adventurism. It was at this time in 1924 that Stalin declared: "The social democracy is an objectively more moderate wing of Fascism." But it was not until 1929, when the "third period" swept in that this original idea of Stalin ripened into the flourishing theory of "social-Fascism."

The Illusions of the Anglo-Russian Committee

However, the "Leftism" of 1924 soon converted itself into its opposite, the period of the opportunism of the Right-Center Bloc. Here Trotsky examines the mistakes committed by the Stalin-Bucharin leadership in the maneuvers with the Anglo-Russian Committee. The Left Opposition condemned the policy on the Anglo-Russian Committee not because it is opposed to the united front tactic, as the Right wing stupidly asserts, but because of the illusions with which it was invested. "The Anglo-Russian Committee was perceived not as a purely episodic bloc of leaders that would inevitably have to be and would be demonstratively broken at the first serious test in order to compromise the General Council. No, not only Stalin, Bucharin, Tomsky and others, but also Zinoviev saw in it a long-lasting 'friendship', an instrument for the systematic revolutionization of the English working masses, and if not the gate, at least the threshold of the gate over which the revolution of the English proletariat would stride." Stalin conceived the bloc as a means of preventing military intervention of the imperialist powers in the Soviet Union.

The chapter on "The Maneuverist Character of Revolutionary Strategy" illuminates a tactic that has been systematically abused by the Right wing and deeply confused by the Centerists. Trotsky with scathing irony ridicules those corps of maneuver specialists who imagine that by maneuvers they can solve all the big questions of the class struggle. "Once and for all it must be impressed that a maneuver never decides anything in great matters . . . A correct maneuver can only facilitate the decision by giving the possibility of gaining time or of attaining greater results with smaller forces. Difficulties in principle, on the contrary, cannot be overcome with the aid of a maneuver." What should be the attitude toward the so-called ally? "In a maneuver, one must always proceed from the very worst assumptions with regard to one's adversary to whom concessions are made, or with regard to the dubious ally with whom arrangements are concluded, and not from the best. It must be constantly borne in mind that the ally can perhaps become an enemy by tomorrow." And above all, in every maneuver the independence of the party must be maintained.

Trotsky devotes a chapter to the question of the party regime. In a thoroughly dialectical manner he analyzes the question of groups and factions within the party, shows under what conditions they arise, and under what conditions they are absent; analyzes the question of Bolshevization and leadership, the relation between the C. P. S. U. and the parties of the West. After all the monstrous perversions on these basic questions by the bureaucratic apparatus it is indeed refreshing to read these lines, so lucid and so Marxian.

Lectures on the History of the Communist International

On Wednesday evening, March 16th at 8 P. M., comrade Shachtman will give the second of his series of eight lectures on the History of the Communist International. This lecture will deal with the first congress of the International held in 1919. Comrades and sympathizers who intend to attend this lecture would do well to read "The Manifesto of the Moscow International" which was signed in Moscow in March 1919 by comrade Lenin, Trotsky, Platten, Zinoviev and Rakovsky.

Glotzer's National Tour

In the west comrade Glotzer's national tour has met with success as well as with some difficulties. In St. Louis the meeting was held in the main public library hall with better than 100 workers in attendance. This attendance gives testimony to the growing interest in Communism displayed by the workers there. This became further evident in the discussion following the lecture with many questions addressed to the speaker touching upon the fundamental proletarian problems.

In the mine field of Illinois comrade Glotzer met some difficulties. Our most active comrade and to be away from the preparatory work to take part in negotiations of the union scale committee. In addition, and most important much intimidation already exists amongst the miners, further intensified by the latest Communist persecutions. Under such conditions, as could be expected, the meeting became small but nevertheless gave an opportunity to discuss some of the workers' problems with the live wires present.

There were additional difficulties in Kansas City which were also of the character hitting the Communist movement as a whole. Our comrades were actually unable, even after much effort, to secure a hall. The meeting therefore had to be held in a private but spacious house. It was the same house where one of the existing unemployment councils met. While it is located a good deal out of the way there was nevertheless an attendance of about 40 workers who took serious part in the questions discussed.

YOUTH AFFAIR

On Saturday, March 26, at 8 P. M., a youth affair will be held at The Militant headquarters, 84 East 10th St., for the benefit of Young Spartacus, youth organ of the Left Opposition. All comrades are assured of a good time. There will be dancing, entertainment, and refreshments. The affair is being held under the auspices of the Spartacus Youth Club.

Lenin on the Paris Commune

We reprint below an article by Lenin on the significance of the Paris Commune to the international working class. Lenin and the Bolsheviks absorbed the lessons taught by Marx and Engels on the Commune and found these invaluable in their struggle for the Russian Revolution. On the sixty-first anniversary of the Paris Commune it is fitting for us to reprint this brief writing penned by one who helped carry out the tasks the heroic Parisian Communards set themselves, continued their work, and began the class revenge of the world proletariat against the bloody suppression of the Commune by leading the Russian workers to the victorious Red October.—Ed.

Forty years have passed since the proclamation of the Paris Commune. According to their custom, the French proletariat are honouring the memory of the revolutionary workers of March 18, 1871, by meetings and demonstrations. At the end of May they will again bring wreaths to the tombs of the Communards who were shot, the victims of the fearful "May Week," and over their graves they will once more take the oath to fight untrillingly until their ideas have conquered, until their cause has been completely victorious.

Why do the proletariat, not only in France but throughout the entire world, honour the workers of the Paris Commune as their forerunners? What was the heritage of the Commune?

The Commune broke out spontaneously. No one consciously prepared it in an organized way. The unsuccessful war with Germany, privations during the siege, unemployment among the proletariat and ruin among the petty-bourgeoisie; the indignation of the masses against the upper classes and against the authorities who had displayed their complete incapacity, an indefinable fermentation among the working class, which was discontented with its lot and was striving towards a different social system; the reactionary make-up of the National Assembly, which roused fears as to the fate of the republic—all this and many other things combined to drive the population of Paris to revolution on March 18, which unexpectedly placed power in the hands of the National Guard, in the hands of the working class and the petty-bourgeoisie which had joined in with it.

This was an event unprecedented in history. Up to that time power had customarily been in the hands of landlords and capitalists, i. e., in the hands of their trusted agents who made up the so-called Government. After the revolution of March 18, when the Thiers Government fled from Paris with its troops, its police and its officials, the people remained masters of the situation and power passed into the hands of the proletariat. But in modern society, enslaved economically by capital, the proletariat cannot dominate politically unless it breaks the chains which fetter it to capital. This is why the movement of the Commune inevitably had to take on a Socialist colouring, i. e., to begin striving for the overthrow of the power of the bourgeoisie, the power of capital, to destroy the very foundations of the present social order.

At first this movement was extremely indefinite and confused. It was joined by patriots who hoped that the Commune would renew the war with the Germans and bring it to a successful conclusion. It was supported by the small shopkeepers who were threatened with ruin unless there was a postponement of payments on debts and rent (the Government did not want to give them such a postponement but the Commune gave it). Finally, it had, at first, the sympathy of the bourgeois republicans, who feared that the reactionary National Assembly (the "blackwoodsmen", ignorant landlords) would restore the monarchy. But the chief role in this movement was of course played by the workers (especially the artisans of Paris), among whom Socialist propaganda had been energetically carried on during the last years of the Second Empire and many of whom even belonged to the First International.

Only the workers remained loyal to the Commune to the end. The bourgeois republicans and the petty-bourgeoisie soon broke away from it, the former afraid of the revolutionary Socialist proletarian character of the movement, and the others dropping out when they saw that it was doomed to inevitable defeat. Only the French proletariat supported their Government fearlessly and untrillingly, they alone fought and died for it, for the cause of the emancipation of the working class, for a better future for all toilers.

Deserted by their allies of yesterday and supported by no one, the Commune was doomed to inevitable defeat. The entire bourgeoisie of France, all the landlords, the stockbrokers, the factory owners, all the great and small robbers, all the exploiters, combined against it. This bourgeois coalition, supported by Bismarck (who released a hundred thousand French soldiers who had been taken prisoner to put down revolutionary Paris), succeeded in rousing the backward peasants and the petty bourgeoisie of the provinces against the proletariat of Paris, and in surrounding half of Paris with a ring of steel (the other half was held by the German army). In some of the larger cities in France (Marseilles, Lyons, St. Etienne, Dijon, etc.) the workers also attempted to seize power, to proclaim the Commune, and come to the help of Paris, but these attempts soon failed. Paris, which had first raised the flag of proletarian revolt, was left to its own resources and doomed to certain destruction.

For the victory of the social revolution, at least two conditions are necessary: a high development of productive forces and the preparedness of the proletariat. But in 1871 neither of these conditions was present. French capitalism was still only slightly developed, and France was at that time mainly a country of petty-bourgeoisie (artisans, peasants, shopkeepers, etc.). On the other hand there was no workers' party, the working class, which in the mass was unprepared and untrained, did not even clearly visualize its tasks and the methods of fulfilling them. There were no serious political organizations of the proletariat, no strong trade unions and co-operative societies.

But the chief thing which the Commune lacked was the time to think out and undertake the fulfillment of its programme. It hardly had time to start working, when the Versailles government, supported by the entire bourgeoisie, opened military operations against Paris. The Commune had to think first of all of defence. Right up to the very end, May 21-28, it had no time to think seriously of anything else.

In spite of such unfavorable conditions, in spite of the brevity of its existence, the Commune found time to carry out some measures which sufficiently characterize its real significance and aims. The Commune replaced the standing army, that blind weapon in the hands of the ruling classes, by the armed people. It proclaimed the separation of church from State, abolished the State support of religious bodies (i. e., State salaries for priests), gave popular education a purely secular character, and in this way struck a severe blow at the gendarmes in priestly robes. In the purely social sphere the Commune could do very little, but this little nevertheless clearly shows its character as a popular workers' Government. Night work in bakeries was forbidden, the system of fines, this system of legalized robbery of the workers, was abolished. Finally, the famous decree was issued according to which all factories, works and workshops which had been abandoned or stopped by their owners, were to be handed over to associations of workers in order to resume production. And, as if to emphasize its character as a truly democratic proletarian Government, the Commune decreed that the salaries of all ranks in the administration and the government should not exceed the normal wages of a worker, and in no case should exceed 6,000 francs per year.

All these measures showed with sufficient clearness that the Commune was a deadly menace to the old world, founded on slavery and exploitation. Therefore bourgeois society could not sleep peacefully so long as the Red Flag of the proletariat waved over the Paris City Hall. When at last the organized force of the Government had managed to defeat the poorly organized forces of the revolution, the Bonapartist generals who had been beaten by the Germans and who were brave only when fighting their defeated countrymen, these French Rennekampfs and Meller-Sakomelskys, organized such a slaughter as Paris had never known. About 30,000 Parisians were killed by the ferocious soldiery, about 45,000 were arrested and many of these were afterwards executed, thousands were imprisoned or exiled. In all, Paris lost about 100,000 of its sons, including the best workers of all trades.

The bourgeoisie were satisfied. "Now we have finished with Socialism for a long time," said their leader, the blood-thirsty dwarf, Thiers, after the bloodbath which he and his generals had arranged for the proletariat of Paris. But these bourgeois crows cawed in vain. Six years after the suppression of the Commune, when many of its fighters were still pining in prison or in exile, a new workers' movement rose in France. A new Socialist generation, enriched by the experience of their predecessors and no whit discouraged by their defeat, picked up the flag which had dropped from the hands of the fighters of the Commune and bore it boldly and confidently forward, with cries of: "Long live the social revolution! Long live the Commune!" And a few years after that, the new workers' party and the agitation raised by it throughout the country, compelled the ruling classes to release the imprisoned Communards, who were still in the hands of the government.

The memory of the fighters of the Commune is not only honoured by the workers of France but by the proletariat of the whole world, for the Commune did not fight for any local or narrow national aim, but for the freedom of toiling humanity, of all the downtrodden and oppressed. As the foremost fighter for the social revolution, the Commune has won sympathy wherever there is a proletariat struggling and suffering. The picture of its life and death, the sight of a workers' government which seized the capital of the world and kept it in its hands for over two months, the spectacle of the heroic struggle of the proletariat and its sufferings after defeat—all this has raised the spirit of millions of workers, aroused their hopes and attracted their sympathies to the side of socialism. The thunder of the cannon in Paris awakened the most backward strata of the proletariat from deep slumber, and everywhere gave impetus to the growth of revolutionary Socialist propaganda. This is why the cause of the Commune did not die. It lives to the present day in every one of us.

The cause of the Commune is the social revolution, the cause of the complete political and economic emancipation of the toilers. It is the cause of the proletariat of the whole world. And in this sense it is immortal.

After the Massacre in Detroit

The militant mass funeral of the Ford massacre victims registered the angry answer of the Detroit workers to the wanton murder of last week. The victims were laid to rest with full proletarian honors. The imposing funeral march lent further emphasis to the growing working class demand for unemployment relief.

In this automobile capital the curse of unemployment has become particularly acute. It is openly admitted by the city authorities that the jobless ranks are growing. In this respect the index prepared by the Detroit Board of Commerce gives illuminating figures. It records a recent drop to a present low of 68.6 per cent of what was considered a normal monthly employment average of 100 in 1923-1925 for the whole working population. In the month of February this year there were 50,000 less employed in Detroit than the same month a year ago. With no unemployment relief, save for the scant charity crumbs, the workers' conditions have become ever more desperate. Stark misery and starvation

Remember Our Prisoners

One of the surest tests of the revolutionary qualities of a workers' organization is its attitude toward the working class fighters in the prisons of the class enemy. Remembrance of the class war prisoners must take a practical form—unceasing struggle for their liberation and material provision for their prison needs.

Comrade Morgenstern and Goodman have a special claim on us because they are our own people who have been victimized for their fight for our cause. Their claim on the members and supporters of the Communist League is all the stronger because they have been deserted by the defense organizations maintained by the workers for the benefit of all class war prisoners—the I. L. D. Therefore, let us take care of our own! The Militant deems it a duty to open a prison relief fund for the benefit of our comrades. Our readers are requested to send contributions to this fund c/o The Militant, 84 East 10th St., New York City. Itemized reports of all receipts of this fund will be printed regularly and the proceeds forwarded to the comrades in prison.

Results of the German Elections

Gains of Reaction Serious Warning against Stalinist Policy

Last Sunday's presidential elections in Germany were breathlessly watched by a world torn by economic crisis and apprehensive of social convulsions. For the bourgeois philistine, the elections constitute a fait accompli, an established fact. Thus, for instance, the American press, in its comment on the results of Sunday's poll, sees a decisive repulsion of Fascism and a permanent victory for the "inherently conservative character" of the German people. Hitler's inability to muster a larger vote than Hindenburg to them spells Hitler's defeat. For the revolutionary, for the Marxist, the elections constitute merely a gauge of social and political developments. It is therefore only natural for us to regard the bourgeois press comment with a grain of skepticism. With them, it is a case of the wish being the father of the thought. The American bourgeoisie fears social unrest, abroad as well as at home, worse than the pest. An advance of Fascism can only mean an outbreak of civil war in Germany. To hush away the chimera of such a civil war, its press prefers to overlook the facts.

To be sure, Hitler only rallied 11,500,000 votes to Hindenburg's 18,000,000. But when we consider that the Fascist gain amounted to some 5,000,000 votes more than the 6,400,000 they received in the Reichstag elections in 1930, and when we look at this fact objectively, dispassionately, we cannot fail to come to the conclusion that the elections reflected a tremendous and absolutely menacing advance on part of the Fascists. To be sure, it appears that the Fascists have very little resources left for further progress by purely legal means. The percentage of their vote is considerably lower than in the partial elections in 1931. But that only increases the probability of a forceful attempt at the seizure of power by the Hitlerites. The very character of the social composition of the Hitler camp, the fact that it is subject to violent fluctuations in political sentiment makes the thought of a "peaceful" growing into power of the National Socialists improbable. No one knows this better than Hitler himself. It is only natural to assume that Hitler will act accordingly. The menace of Fascism hangs more heavily over the head of the German working class than ever.

How did the working class forces fare in the elections? The only working class candidate in the field, the candidate of the Communist Party, Ernst Thaelmann, received a total of 4,900,000 out of the 37,000,000 votes cast. All in all, a gain of some 350,000 over the 4,570,000 votes the Communist Party received in 1930. When we compare this gain with the 5,000,000 gain of the Fascists, when we keep in mind the fact that Thaelmann was the only working class candidate in the field—the social democrats renounced a candidacy of their own in favor of the Hohenzollern Field Marshall—and finally when we consider the sharpness of the economic situation, we can only admit that the Communist candidate suffered a disastrous defeat in Sunday's elections. That is the bare fact. The entire import of this fact must be realized by every Communist fighter, by every sincere revolutionist. The lesson of the election must be brought home to the class conscious workers—the conclusions must be drawn from it before it is too late before the decisive blow has been struck.

The election defeat of Thaelmann does not mean a defeat for the working class, a defeat for Communism. That is not decided by election, that is decided in open struggle, in the factories, in the streets. It does mean a debacle for the Stalinist policy of the German party leadership. It should serve as a warning to all serious and devoted workers—Communists in the ranks of the official party. Let us review the facts. The Hindenburg - Bruening - Groener regime has been represented in the eyes of all German workers, the social democratic as well as the Communist workers, as the dictatorship by emergency decree, of wage-cuts carried out by cabinet order, of the reduction of unemployed insurance to the point of starvation; of the abrogation of the most elementary working class rights; of the introduction of National Socialists into the army. No worker could possibly overlook these facts.

The Social democracy, versed in the ways of working class betrayal, called upon its followers to vote for this regime in the presidential elections, nevertheless. More than that, it was actually able to rally its followers behind this hunger-regime almost to a man. That is astonishing at first, but it must be understood. Why did the social democratic workers vote for Hindenburg? The social democratic misleaders called upon their worker-followers to vote for Hindenburg as the "lesser evil" against Fascism. Did the social democratic workers actually believe that this regime of hunger and starvation for the working class will fight against Fascism? Hardly. Why, then, did they nevertheless vote for Hindenburg because the situation seemed hopeless to them, because it was the only choice left to them outside of the united front of the working class.

Whose fault is it that the proletarian united front was not established? Can the social democratic leaders be expected to establish the united front. Never. Their entire composition, their character as lackeys of the capitalist class, as agents of the capitalists within the ranks of labor, makes such a step on their part unthinkable. Yet, what all the workers really desired was a fighting united front against the menace that was directly threatening them, against Fascism. Both social democratic and Communist workers had fallen in the slaughter brought about by the Nazis in their punitive expeditions into Brunswick, both reformist and revolutionary workers were victimized in the daily attacks made upon working class meetings, groups and colonies. It was only natural for the workers to feel the necessity of fighting first and foremost against this danger.

The task of creating a united front of active struggle against Fascism could only be carried out by the Communists, by the revolutionary party. It was the duty of the Communists to force the social democratic leaders, already under pressure from their rank and file, into this united front, to put them to the test before their own followers. That was duty clearly devolving upon the revolutionary party from the general situation. What did the Stalinist leadership do instead. It rejected any united front whatsoever with the "social Fascists" and called upon the social democratic workers to join the "Red united front under the leadership of the Communist party". By the rejection of the Leninist conception of the united front, the Stalinist Central Committee of the German party repelled the reformist workers, left them helpless in the face of the treacherous machinations of their leadership. It was in this manner that the social reformists were able to swing the bulk of the German proletariat behind the candidacy of the Bruening hunger regime.

The result of the German presidential elections is a warning against the nefarious tactic of the German Stalinites. If it is not heeded, the working class of Germany faces disaster. If it is taken into account, the tactic must be changed immediately. More than that, the theory of "social Fascism" which is the source of all these disastrous developments, must be uprooted. It is this theory, which throws all opponents of the revolutionary party into one pot, without distinguishing between them and without exploiting the various conflicts among them; which bears all the earmarks of the Lassallean theory of the "single reactionary mass" condemned and refuted by Marx in his "Criticism of the Gotha Program"; it is this theory that has left a trail of confusion in the minds of the Communist militants and one of disaster in the development of the class struggle.

The main danger seen clearly by every worker in Germany today is the Fascist danger, is the Hitlerite danger. Every worker regards this question as one of life and death. The Communist party of Germany must realize this fact, if it is not to pursue its road to destruction, if the working class of Germany is to avoid extermination at the hands of Hitler's butchers.

The tremendous vote rolled up by the Fascists last Sunday, far from being a setback for the Nazi forces, is only a step in their march toward the seizure of power, toward the open attack against the proletariat. The coming weeks and months will no doubt witness more daring and more impudent assaults upon the workers' organizations by the Fascists than ever before. The workers are bound to feel the Hitlerite cudgel even more sharply than before. Their reactions toward the threat and their feeling for the need of working class unity are going to be much more profound in the future. The tactic of the united front will be on the order of the day more than ever. —SAM GORDON.

New York Marine Workers Go to Trial

The three marine workers, who have been confined in Tombs jail since last November in the New York "Dynamite Plot", went to trial Monday in the court of General Sessions, Division 1. The first three days were consumed in the examination of prospective jurors. As the Militant went to press, eleven jurors had been selected and the defense, conducted by Peter L. F. Sabbatino and Jacob Fishman, had exhausted nineteen of its twenty peremptory challenges.

The prosecution concentrated its objections, in the selection of the jury, on all who had been connected with the labor movement in any way or who were readers of labor or liberal publications. The plan to put the dynamiting charges over on a wave of red baiting was indicated in the detailed questioning of every one called for jury service as to his acquaintance with or knowledge of the various radical labor organizations or the individual members of the Marine Workers' Defense Committee, which is conducting the defense movement in behalf of the prisoners.

The defendants are members of the Independent Tidewater Boatmen's Union. The charges against them have been exposed as a conspiracy against union organization in the New York harbor, and a number of workers' league organizations, including the Communist League of America, joined forces in the Marine Workers' Defense Committee to provide their defense. On Saturday the defense Committee issued a new appeal for the solidarity and support of the workers on the eve of the trial and emphasized the need of funds for the legal expenses. All readers of the Militant are urged to respond to this appeal and to send funds to the Marine Workers' Defense Committee, 82 East Tenth Street, New York.

Next Week's Forum

On Friday, March 25 at 8 P. M. comrade Cannon will speak at the N. Y. open forum at the Labor Temple on Marxist History and Bourgeois Criticism—The History of the Russian Revolution and Its Critics. The lecture will be an oral review of comrade Trotsky's work and reviews of it which have appeared in the press.

NOTE TO OUR READERS

For technical reasons, we have been forced to postpone the final installment of Rakovsky's article on the Five Year Plan until next week.

The Communists and the Agrarian Crisis

In America the problem of city and country has taken on new dimensions. The 1930 census reports a 68,954,823 urban population and a 53,820,223 rural population. The majority are urban, the overwhelming majority are proletarian while, in the country where we seized power first, the overwhelming majority were peasants. Rural, in no sense means farmers. For example of the rural population only 30,447,229 make up the farm population is only 56% of the rural and only 24.8% of the total population. The bourgeois economist presents the problem as though it is about 50-50 for town and country, for "farmers and city people" and the average worker has accepted this trash. The farm population as 24.8% of the total population are by no means farmers. This means all persons living on farms without regard to occupation.

Taking this 24.8% and seeing what makes it up we find it is further narrowed by analysis. Under occupations, gainfully employed, the census lists (1920 figures—the 1930 figures not available, are even more in our favor) as dairy farmers, farmers and stock raisers; 6,201,261, and for dairy farm, farm and stock, laborers; 3,041,027. This means 6 million farmers and 4 million as agricultural workers. But of these 6 million farmers we find (1920 figures) 2,464,804 as tenant farmers, 1,461,306 as mortgaged farmers and 2,074,325 as farmers owning their farms. However, I am sure the 1930 figures, when published, will show even less farm owners today.

The big agricultural population in the last analysis boils down considerably, and the farmer as an ally does not lose any of his significance but he does lose much of his specific weight for America. The farm population as 24% of the total (1920) is composed of about 40% agricultural workers, 25% tenant farmers, 15% mortgaged farmers and 20% farm owners. This does not settle the problem and does not prove that the majority are revolutionary. One knows the majority of the American industrial workers are not revolutionary. However, once we obtain a proper perspective it shows the relation of the workers and farmers in the coming revolution.

This block of agricultural workers on cattle raising and dairy farms are not approached as farmers, but are won as workers. They are not allies, they are ours as a class. The varied forms of cropper dirt farmer and tenant farmer which make up the poor and middle farmer are our allies. As for the owners, yes even some of them will make good allies. As for the capitalist farmer—they are not allies, they are enemies and will be treated as such. We will waste no time in winning them over. Our allies lie in the percentage between the agrarian workers and the capitalist farmers. These must be won. Their relation to the workers in the problem of the American revolution is the most "insignificant" any proletariat in any advanced country has to contend with, maybe with the exception of England. In the Russian revolution, the minority, the proletariat, was the decisive force over the overwhelming majority of peasantry. In America, a revolution which will release the energies of the American proletariat, who stand as the vast majority will call forth proletarian energy unknown in the past.

America has developed its wheat belt, corn belt, cotton belt and has its agricultural states and its industrial states, but as its stands today, it is of no value for analysis of class forces in the revolution. The line of demarcation between industrial and agricultural states is of little value, because the most important industrial states are also the most important agricultural producers, too. Agricultural states as such, only have a meaning when the problem is confined within the states, and we show that the products from agriculture are of greater value than the products from industry, etc. But when one compares the amount and value of the products from agriculture with the agricultural products of the leading industrial states, one finds that the industrial states in many cases are more productive in agricultural products than the agricultural states, and where there is a close margin the industrial states make a good showing for themselves. New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio and the other important industrial states are also states producing more foodstuffs than the majority of the so-called agricultural states.

The industrial centers where the proletariat, the decisive force of revolution, resides, also has in its immediate vicinity the production of the food supply of first importance for short periods. It is not an easy matter to bottle up a proletariat in an industrial center if power is in their hands, with all the avenues of modern transportation to nearby food supplies. The agricultural worker will do his share and the poor and middle farmer must be won over.

The tremendous grain elevators, meat and food storage plants for the products of the country are controlled by the city and who controls the city controls this supply. American capitalism does not worry about peasant economy holding back on it as do some other capitalist nations with carry overs of natural economy where the rural population can hold without the city. The machine development and its use on American farms in a lesser or greater degree forces the agricultural economy to rest upon the industrial city. The methods of farming, storing, transporting, selling, etc., all bring capitalist agricultural relations under the industrial city to which it is bound and from which American agriculture cannot escape, not retreat, not to mention the financial network that encompasses agriculture and ties it, binds it to the city.

In capitalist countries with feudal carry-overs, with peasant economy still lingering, we have a far more difficult problem. Although at that level, capital has already shown itself to be master of the house, it by no means has a free reign. The peasant economy weighs heavy upon capital and its development, but nevertheless, capital, and in turn the proletarian class is the decisive force in the relationship of the class struggle. What is true in these backward sections, where the country can eke out an existence even if the city goes to hell, but where in the city cannot continue without the country; is more so true, in developed capitalist countries like America. In fact, however, the problem is turned around. The city needs the country and has safeguarded this need by a thousand and one ties that bind the country to the city, but the country on the other hand cannot exist without the city—not in advanced America. Not on the present mode of production. That is only possible by stepping back a stage or two and this is not an overnight step but one which would follow a chaos, when neither capitalist nor proletarian rules.

The very connections of city and countries under developed capitalism, gives the American proletariat the advantage of the problem of revolution once this is concretely put on the agenda for the seizure of power. The very relation of forces with the overwhelming majority of the population being proletarian and the "farmers" divided into agrarian workers, tenant farmer, mortgaged farmer and capitalist farmer, with a section of the owner-farmer as allies, makes the problem different and in our favor. The Farmer-Labor Party is reactionary and will only lead the proletariat into the swamp of opportunism, this even Centrism understands now after years of blunders; but the idea of a "Workers and Farmers Government" and the slogan for it that Centrism still peddles, is just as reactionary, and can lead to nothing but national reformism.

The agrarian workers must be won as workers, the middle and poor farmers as allies according to the form of the problem. Negro and white, share cropper, contract farmer, dirt farmer, etc., and the capitalist farmer should not bother us. The agrarian crisis will not let up, even though there will be ebbs and flows, its basic effects will not be remedied through agrarian reforms. For the capitalist system, the remedy is greater concentration and pulling agriculture more into the orbit of capitalist production, putting agriculture more on the basis of an industry of capitalism—but this lets loose dynamite, which has its most deadly explosive effects not in the country but in the city. For the agrarian worker and our allies, the poor and middle farmers, the remedy is nothing short of the Proletarian Revolution and the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat. This is the means of transforming of the negative base of the agriculture industry into an industry of the socialist mode of production, completing the cycle agriculture has passed through—and opening the door to a new positive cycle of its development.

Our Subscription Drive

After a long and hard struggle The Militant became a weekly. The apparatus of its production, so to speak, has been built up step by step by much sacrifice. Now it is necessary to build on a firm foundation its distribution apparatus.

During the period of the present drive, March 1st to June 1st, this effort should take an intensive form. First of all we must get new subs. Friends and sympathizers must be convinced. Wherever possible whole days should be set aside for the carrying out of this task. This drive for new subs must be geared to a high pitch. It must be sustained at that pitch for the duration of the drive.

The literature premium announced in recent issues should be utilized to their full value. We give them again. For the period of the drive we will give with each one year $2.00 sub (52 issues) a free paper bound copy of comrade Trotsky's The Permanent Revolution; with each half year $1.00 sub (26 issues) a copy of the Strategy of the World Revolution; with each trial 50c sub (13 issues) any one of our 10c pamphlets. This premium applies to renewals as well as the new subs. During the period of the drive comrades may offer a combined $2.00 rate for a year's subscription to The Militant and Young Spartacus. There is no literature premium with combined subs.

At the same time we are getting new subs we must see to the renewal of expired and expiring subs, or the gains of new subs will be offset by the losses of these old ones. In the execution of this task the national center is co-operating by systematic notification of the subscriber. If these notices are acted on promptly, the solution of the problem will be fairly easy.

At the present time the results in new and renewed subs are: New York—11; Minneapolis—2; Chicago—1; St. Louis—1; Miscellaneous—10. The increase in bundle orders stands at one in Chicago as reported in the last issue.

Another important method of raising the circulation of The Militant and building up its distribution is the expansion and extension of "mass" distribution.

Drug Clerks Organize

NEW YORK.

The present chaotic condition prevailing in the pharmaceutical industry, which is merely a photostatic copy of the existing chaos in the decaying capitalist structure as a whole, and the intense, almost inhuman exploitation of the drug clerk by a degenerate middle class of independent drug shop retailers, by the ever growing chain store magnates and the rich independent "cut-rate" parasites, are threatening to reduce the standard of living of the drug clerks to the lowest level of existence—to that of the Chinese coolie.

The incurable cancer of capitalism—unemployment—has greatly augmented the misery of the drug clerks and turned two thousand licensed and junior pharmacists of this city into the streets. Some of them have already taken their places on the breadlines. Others are still clinging to the last line of defense, their savings, which they were able to build up during the so-called "prosperity" period thanks to the dreadfully long hours of work which made expenditures other than the mere necessities impossible.

The legendary professional status of the pharmacist in our capitalist society has acted as an emollient to his sore human pride and lulled in him the rebellion against the degrading conditions under which he is working. The sharpening and protraction of the present crisis has dealt a shattering blow to his legendary status and made him realize his true status, that of the wage earner, subject to all the laws governing wage labor under this decaying capitalist system.

The drug clerk has arisen and begun to move. He is moving in the direction of the trade union front.

His vanguard, leaderless, without experience and program, but in excellent fighting morale, has been intercepted by the A. F. of L. bureaucracy and has definitely landed in the right flank of the labor camp.

On March 8, the Drug Clerks' Union was officially christened by Mr. Collins, national officer of the A. F. of L. and chartered as the Drug Clerks' Union of Greater New York, Local 581 of the Retail Clerks International Protective Association.

A brief account of the installation meeting will sufficiently describe the condition of this new-born babe.

The meeting was opened by Mr. Feinstein, president of the union, who introduced Dr. Linville, president of the Teachers' Union. Dr. Linville spoke at great length of the trade union movement, but as betrays a president of an A. F. of L. local, he distorted the revolutionary concept of trade unionism and reduced it to the ideological level of his class, namely the middle class. He finished his oration wishing them success and rightly pointed out the need of a program, which he, of course, hoped that the leaders of the union, with the advice of the national office, will be able to formulate.

Next spoke president Feinstein, whose physiognomy is a true reflection of his intellect and vice versa. He delivered a "speech" of about twenty to thirty words, nine tenths of which he devoted to impress upon the members that he will not tolerate radicals in "his" union. This antiquated mass of stupidity in human form has spent over forty years of his life in the darkest corner of the world, the back of a drugstore, which fully explains his idiotic appearance and low cultural level.

Last spoke Collins of the A. F. of L. This typical labor bureaucrat, in a typical A. F. of L. dialogue, as he himself termed his manner of speech, harangued the young recruits yet untainted by the A. F. of L. philosophy and manifesting a good fighting vitality, and urged them to "hang on" and not to fight.

Here is one of his gems: "Folks, times are bad. Now is not the time to fight. Hang on to your job. Don't fight. Wait."

Immediately after the close of the meeting, the more articulate element came up to the secretary and voiced their disapproval with the president's attitude toward radicals and the "don't fight, wait" idea.

"We came here to do work, not to wait," the cry of one of the militants resounded.

Here we see a familiar scene, so frequently enacted in the labor movement. The rank and file seething with revolt, ready to strike the enemy; the leaders holding them back, telling them that the hour has not yet struck and thus breaking their morale.

Upon the revolutionary drug clerk develops a great task and great responsibility. He must, in the words of Lenin, "brave all difficulties, attacks, insults and persecutions at the hands of the leaders" to gain an opportunity to come forward with a clear program of action which, we believe, will cause a differentiation in the ranks and in this manner render the formation of a strong Left wing possible.

The Dress Strike in Boston

BOSTON.

The cloakmakers under the leadership of the "United Front Committee" went back to work already in some cases under somewhat improved conditions. The cloakmakers under the leadership of the International went back to work with no wage cut.

Wages were cut plenty in the past two years. The International did not make an effort to get anything back. Now an agreement is being made for the dressmakers with no improved working conditions.

The desire for unity among the workers was great. When we came on the picket line it was a united mass picket line. The bitterness the workers felt to each other for the past two or three years on account of the divided struggles disappeared from their faces. Right wing workers and Left wing workers walked arm in arm, discussed plans of taking down shops and other plans. Every one looked brighter, had a smile on their face. The International was desperate to see such friendship among the workers and looked for ways and means to divide them. When the police captain complained to Philip Kramer, the International business agent who came on the picket line with the police captain, about too many pickets, he said, "What can I do? They are from the United Front" and promised that the next day there will be a distinction between our pickets and his pickets.

The next morning they wanted to put arm bands with the A. F. of L. initials on the arms of the International workers, but to their great disappointment the workers refused to wear the bands and be divided. "Unity, Yes, unity! The desire to be united is felt by all the workers. You can see it in their eyes. Why didn't they come to the meeting of the Left wing? We called them, we agitated them, we had conferences. Very few came. Those who have no jobs and are not afraid to lose them are disgusted with the International. Just as many workers are. The others did not come, they were afraid of losing their jobs. What was left for the Industrial Union to do to get these workers? We should have called the International leaders as well as the workers to unite on the basis of one united strike with one set of demands.

This should have been done at least a couple of months before the strike. So the workers of the International would have had time to demand of their leaders to have one united struggle for better conditions.

I feel quite sure the International leaders would refuse such unity. Then we would be able to tell the workers and they would see it clearly themselves, that their leaders are not interested in unity and we could expose them to the root.

Now the strike is at an end. The workers are coming back to work with no retrieval of the slashed wages, no improvements, and the International had a hard time to get an agreement altogether because bosses are interested in signing agreements only on two occasions: when they are forced by the unity of the workers and when they can get something from the union.

Two years ago, the International got agreements by just calling a stoppage and giving the bosses all the concessions for the privilege to collect dues. This year there was not much to be given as the bosses took everything away. Naturally, the shops that were called out by the united front and the Industrial Union could not get much either because they control only a small minority and those that went back did not get as much as still out on strike I can not say now. What they will get when they go back, we will report later.

Stalinist Flattery or Marxist Education

NEW YORK.

It is mildly entertaining to behold Sam Don, the well-known "anti-war expert" come out in the Daily Worker (Feb. 20, 1932) and say that "The Five Year Plan has demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt that Socialism can be built in one country", a statement which corresponds only too well with the utterings of his comrade-in-arms, the eminent Israel Amter, who only a week previous to that explained that same theory of Socialism in one country at an Open Forum of the new "Water Front Section of the C. P. U. S." in the following way:

"The average rank and file worker of the Soviet Union knows more about the theory of Socialism in one country than Trotsky or Cannon, for neither of these men has recently been there. Is it surprising that he should know more about it than some expelled leaders who have even attempted to study the theory? The rank and file worker accepts nothing as final until it has been given actual trial. Trotsky rejects the theory without any effort to demonstrate it."

Now, let us grant that the "average" rank and file worker of the Soviet Union "knows more about the interior of the new 'Palace of Soviets' than Trotsky or Cannon. But does an average rank and file member of the U. S. party know more about it than Trotsky or Cannon? Or does an average rank and file worker of the U. S. party know more about the revolutionary movement in America than Trotsky or Cannon? And what is there to indicate that an average member of the U. S. party knows more about the theory of Socialism in one country than Trotsky or Cannon? After all, the Sam Dons and the Amters must admit that he U. S. party member generally has not seen the Soviet Union and has not lived in a Socialist commonwealth so that he can be said to have any special familiarity with the nature, the problems and the difficulties of such a commodity. The theory of Socialism in one country is to the average worker only an idea, in the U. S. or elsewhere—and certainly, leaders who have given their lives to the study of scientific socialism are far more capable of judging these ideas than the glorified "average" worker. Amter's queer logic, to put it in another way, is equivalent to saying that because the junior of the Daily Worker building is more familiar with that structure than, let us say, Earl Browder, who appears to spend most of his time dining with Kuo Min Tang generals and otherwise revolutionizing the Far East, he knows more about the American revolutionary movement than the latter.

Again, Amter suggested that a rank and file worker in the Soviet Union has studied the theory of Socialism in one country and has learned a great deal more about its correctness than "some expelled leaders who never attempted to study it". We are not old, however, how the average rank and file knows the correctness of this theory—nor how the expelled leaders could attempt to know it, save by comparing the assumption of the theory in question and the fundamental principles of revolutionary internationalism, scientifically. The difference is that the "average rank and file party member" simply believe in a Stalinist theory without much effort at critical thought, while the "expelled leaders" who have given much thought to the question—have discovered the fallacy of national Socialism inherent in it.

Not long ago, an "average type" got up in our Open Forum and sprung a surprise by saying—quite innocently—that the Communist International—if translated into plain American language, would mean—the Russian Patriotic Society! We corrected him at that time by explaining clearly that this is not the case. But we do feel a little bit uncomfortable to have him come around and put up such embarrassing questions again.

If Trotsky and Cannon have never tried to demonstrate the theory of Socialism in one country—and we must give them credit for never having been so foolish—that is because they have shrewdly observed the absurdities of such a theory, because they have a realistic attitude toward the world's revolutionary developments and because they are not the least inclined to mumble nonsense. I do not suppose that any of the leaders of the Left Opposition has ever carried a horse-shoe to bring him luck, but their common sense has made it unnecessary for them to support such foolishness. One glance at Don's and Amter's logic is enough to show it is not worth trying.

Another Expulsion from the I. L. D.

On Thursday, March 10th, I was formally expelled from the Yorkville English Branch of the I. L. D. The main charge was that I was a "Trotskyist", and therefore my criticism of the so-called "united front from below" policy of the I. L. D. was incompatible with membership any longer.

In opening the attack, the organizer of the branch went to some length to state my "disruptive" activities; i. e., I had committed the audacious crime of speaking with members of the branch about the differences between the Left Opposition and the leadership of the official Party, and criticized the policies of the leadership.

No attempt was made to center the charge on inactivity, as my activity in the branch will attest to the fact that I have always volunteered for work and accepted all the tasks assigned to me. It is interesting to note that previous to the horrible discovery that I was a "counter-revolutionary, enemy of the working class", my activity and membership had been considered wholly satisfactory. Comrade Hacker himself, personally asked me to preside as chairman at the second Scottsboro Conference held a few months ago at a large downtown hall. Evidently, the stamp of "renegade" had not yet materialized before his eyes.

The chairman last night, a new member of the branch and, I think, a party member purposely assigned to the branch—since he does not live in our district—refused to permit me the final say. He insisted on his formal right as chairman to be the last speaker. He emitted a long harangue on Trotsky's "menshevism" of 1903, adding incidentally that Trotsky from the time of the revolution until 1923, had done good work, "when he was under the thumb of Lenin" (!) A long attack on Trotsky, not permitting me to answer.

There were seven comrades present. The vote was called for. The chairman, organizer, and Labor Defender agent immediately responded. One young comrade who works for the district and is also a new member of our branch, also voted for my expulsion—because he considered Trotsky an enemy of the working class, although he admitted he had never read a single document of the Opposition! When I explained to him that it was the policy of the I. L. D. to permit workers of any organization to enter the I. L. D. and work for it, he appeared puzzled, but voted for the expulsion, nevertheless. My vote was the only recorded against, the two remaining comrades were for abstaining, admitting that they were not acquainted with the questions—but decided to vote for the expulsion provided that it was to come to the District Committee and that I would be given a chance to appear. Comrade "Schneider, Labor Defender agent, assured the comrades that I would be given a chance to appear. I hold him to his word, as he is a member of the Section Executive Committee, and am only afraid that his confidence in the "workers' democracy" of Hacker and company will not be sustained.

I was accused of being the cause of the failure of the branch to grow. Any comrade who is acquainted with the Yorkville English Branch knows that the reason for the failure to grow has been the lack of consistent, regular activities. I fought continually for a systematic plan of meetings, house to house canvassing, educational lectures, distribution of Labor Defenders before unions, open air meetings, etc. I myself held several open air meetings alone when the district failed to supply speakers. I was suddenly thrown off the list of speakers, and since that time we never held them regularly. I advanced a plan for regular educational meetings every other week: it was accepted—I carried out my share of the work. In all activities, I can say that I did all required of any member of the organization. These things I state, not to gain reward for, but to outline for the comrades the only way that I see to build the branch. If they plan their work thus, the branch will grow—if not, it will remain stagnant as before.

The decision of expulsion is pending before the District Executive Committee. The policy of the I. L. D. is to admit all workers into its ranks, so long as they carry on the work of the organization under its discipline. I claim that I have proved that I have done so and can continue to do so. The only charge is "Trotskyism", which is no valid charge according to the ruling of the I. L. D. itself. I sincerely hope the District Executive will reverse the obviously unfounded expulsion of myself from the Yorkville English Branch of the I. L. D.

ATTENTION, GREEK WORKERS

In New York City two daily Greek bourgeois newspapers are published, the "National Herald" which supports the present "democratic" regime of Greece while the other the "Atlantis" represents the Royalist party of Greece and lately takes a pseudo-labor attitude.

The "Emporos" undertook a one sided struggle against the National Herald overlooking any kind of attack against the "Atlantis" which is more dangerous because it appears with the cloak of liberalism and therefore the "Communists" our Greek organ attacked this criminal neglect of the Greek Stalinism vigorously.

In the next issue of The Militant the Greek Bureau will write extensively upon this serious question which requires a correct and thorough discussion for the enlightenment not only of the Greek speaking Communists but of all Communists as well.

ST. LOUIS WORKERS, ATTENTION!

At a recent Left Opposition forum meeting two members of the official Communist Party during the discussion accepted a challenge to debate the Platform of the Left Opposition. The debate will take place Friday evening, March 25, at the Public Library, 14th St., and Cass Ave.

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

A Shanghai View on Chinese Events

SHANGHAI, CHINA

February 16, 1932

While the principal scene of Japanese military activities in China has shifted, at least temporarily, from Manchuria to Shanghai, Manchuria remains the focusing point of Japan's colonial ambitions on the Asiatic mainland.

The current happenings in Shanghai, where major Japanese naval and military forces are endeavoring to defeat the Chinese 19th Route Army and oust it from Chapel, can be understood only in relation to the immediate pre-eminent political aim of Japanese imperialism, which is to expand its colonial possessions by the annexation of Manchuria and, meanwhile, as a first step, to secure treaty recognition of the position it has taken there. Japanese imperialism hopes, by a display of its naval and military might, and by wreaking havoc and destruction to terrorize the yellow politicians and militarists of Nanking (now Loyang) into signing such a treaty.

The political and military spokesmen of imperial Nippon have declared and announced their intention to respect China's territorial and administrative integrity, guaranteed by the Nine-Power Treaty, and to maintain the policy of the "open door" in Manchuria. A month of journeying through the three Eastern provinces has satisfied the writer—as it would all others with sound eyes and ears—that Manchuria has virtually ceased to be a part of China, and that the policy of the "open door" scarcely continues to exist except in the utterances of Japanese diplomats at Geneva, Washington and elsewhere.

Quite aside from the actual evidence, however, only a dullard could ever have imagined that the military campaigns were undertaken in any other interests than those of Japanese imperialism. Has British imperialism ever shared the spoils of its colonial wars with its trade rivals? Have the imperialists of France, of the United States, of Italy, of Spain ever done so? Has Japan done it in the case of Korea? What basis exists, then, for supposing that Manchuria will prove an exception to the general rule? None whatever.

Since September 18, when the troops of the Japanese garrison at Kwantung marched out of the South Manchuria Railway zone and occupied Mukden and other strategic points, the war of conquest, practically unresisted, has proceeded steadily. Fresh troops and munitions have poured into Manchuria as required. With the taking of Harbin, Japanese control of Manchuria is practically complete, for the retaking of strategic points in Heilungkiang province can be accomplished at any time. General Ma Chan-shan, erstwhile Chinese national hero, has been bargaining with the Japanese military at his headquarters in Hailu for some two months or more, and is now reported to have apologized to his former opponents for obstructing them at the Nonni River. He is clearly ready to strike a bargain on what he may consider favorable terms.

When I arrived at Shangkuan, the evacuation of Chang Hsueh-liang's armies from Manchuria had been completed. Forty-five trainloads of his troops had passed within the Great Wall during the preceding three or four days, without firing a single shot at the Japanese invaders. Thus was completed another chapter in the record of shameful capitulation of the Nanking government and its miserable Manchurian ally. The Japanese forces, having taken Chinchow, were advancing rapidly westward. It remained for them to ride triumphantly into Shangkuan on the Iron road of the Peiping-Mukden Railway to round out what has proved to be, initially, the easiest colonial conquest on record.

As an example of the cowardly refusal of those in power to even attempt to defend China's soil, of their abject surrender to Japanese aggression, I might record that on the day prior to the arrival of the Japanese forces at Shangkuan, a staff officer attached to the Chinese Garrison Headquarters rode out to meet the invaders, to inform them that they would meet with no resistance in the event that they desired to occupy the town. And Shangkuan, lying immediately south of the Great Wall, is outside Manchuria. One cannot doubt that they will prove equally obliging and accommodating should the hungry maw of Japanese imperialism demand the rest of China too. The freshest example is Shanghai (Chapel) where the 19th Route Army is stubbornly resisting the Japanese forces despite the receipt of orders from Nanking to withdraw and surrender the ground without fighting.

Shangkuan apparently forms no part of the immediate objectives of the Japanese Army, belonging geographically to the Tientsin-Peking area. Thus after a perfunctory inspection of the railway station and environs, the Japanese soldiery withdrew. From that station to Mukden, the whole railway line was in their hands. Before the advance westward, the staffs of all stations had fled and had been replaced by the officials and workers drawn from the South Manchuria Railway, Japanese-owned. All normal traffic on the section was obstructed and stopped and the line entirely given over to the transportation of Japanese troops and military supplies. Within a fortnight, the Japanese headquarters at Mukden announced the "independence" of the section and renamed it the Shenyang-Shankaiwan Railway, at the same time guaranteeing the interest due British bondholders.

With this important railway line under their control, together with all branch and feeder lines, and now, lately, the partial seizure of the Chinese Eastern Railway, jointly owned and operated by China and Soviet China with the disbanding of all Chinese administrative organs which made the slightest show of opposition and their replacement by puppet governments; with all activities, governmental and economic, supervised and controlled by the paid servants of Japanese imperialism; with all opposition stifled by military terror, what more is required to complete the picture of Manchuria as Japan's newest colonial possession? It is needless to add that the Japanese drive against Chinchow and points further west was accompanied by those acts of wanton destruction and brutality that are customarily associated with wars of colonial subjugation. Railway stations at places where positively no resistance was encountered by the Japanese troops were wantonly wrecked, and such members of the station staff as remained at their posts were brutally beaten up, in some instances seriously maimed and even killed.

In their triumphant invasion of Manchuria, the Japanese imperialists have not had things entirely their own way. First, they have been obliged to take some steps to allay the "misgivings" of their imperialist rivals, notably the United States, a task which, in the nature of the case, called for not a little ingenuity. In this field, since no other course was apparently open, they have confined themselves to hypocritical denials of any intention to annex Manchuria and to renewed pledges to maintain there, the "open door." The factual answer to the first has already been given above. Manchuria has been annexed de facto if not de jure.

As to the maintenance of the "open door" it is commonly known that at three of the principal ports through which Manchuria's import trade flows, via: Dairen, Antung and Yinkow, goods of Japanese origin are permitted to enter at reduced tariff rates, in some cases duty free, while other foreign goods pay the officially levied duties. With the extension of Japanese control throughout Manchuria it can be expected that this system of preference, which is carried out sub Rosa, will likewise be extended to all Manchurian ports of entry, to the ultimate severe handicapping of trade of Japan's commercial rivals. This is but one example of Manchuria's gradually closing door. The preference enjoyed by Japanese products is at present surreptitious, but the exigencies of the economic crisis, which demands ever new trade outlets, will compel, ultimately, the official and formal sealing of a door which today stands only slightly ajar.

The second difficulty encountered one which grows constantly, is the opposition of the people over whom it seeks to become the overlord. Betrayed and deserted by the armies paid (ostensibly at any rate) to defend them, the peoples of Manchuria have been seemingly slow in developing opposition to the foreign imperialist invaders. In early January, however, the first substantial signs of an energetic partisan movement showed themselves. The remnants of the disbanded Chinese soldiery, mostly of peasant origin, discarded their uniforms and merged themselves with their compatriots in the villages to escape detection by Japanese troops intent on their extermination as "hungerbuds" (bandits).

Forming themselves into small, mobile bands, reinforced by members of the village poor, they swooped down on Japanese outposts under cover of darkness, engaged the defenders in sharp battle, often annihilating them completely, and then retreated into the night richer in arms and ammunition. In this way tremendous losses were sustained by the Japanese forces, especially those guarding small stations on the railway line between Mukden and Chinchow. Japanese reinforcements would endeavor to locate and round up the raiders as soon as it got light, but by then they had melted away into the neighboring villages from which they came, arms concealed, unidentifiable, awaiting their next opportunity.

Realizing the impossibility of tracing these annoying challengers of their might, and seriously perturbed by the losses in men and guns, the Japanese military command in Mukden have been considering punitive expeditions into the villages that flank the railway. It was proposed that in the village closest to the scene of the raid by a partisan band one adult male out of every ten should be taken out and shot as an example of others, and that this measure should be repeated after each raid. So far there have been no reports that such action has been instituted, although partisan activities increasingly harass the Japanese forces and hinder the consolidation of their initial conquest. Were such action taken it would only have the effect of strengthening and intensifying the spontaneous opposition it would aim to crush.

The growth of the partisan movement in Manchuria has had repercussions in Korea, where the movement for independence has been visibly stimulated. The Korean people have never been persuaded of the benevolence of Japanese imperialism, less so today than ever with the fresh example of Manchuria before them. At the same time the Japanese workers at home are voicing strong opposition to their masters' doings in Manchuria, and numerous huge protest demonstrations have been held in leading cities.

All these movements bid fair to hinder, possibly defeat, the realization of Japan's colonial ambitions, and all the scorpions of repression will be released to subdue them.

To counteract the growing opposition of the United States, Japan will seek to embroil the Soviet Union in war, assured that this will draw to her side all the imperialist powers, including the United States. It is plain that the continued "misgivings" of the State Department will shortly find expression in more concrete form than diplomatic notes of protest. Not for much longer will Japan's hollow declarations concerning her aims in Manchuria satisfy her powerful rival.

The final word, however, will rest with the revolutionary masses of the Far East, in alliance with the workers of the Soviet Union and of the whole world.

—C. FRANK GLASS.

The German Opposition at Work

This is the first of a series of articles on the current activities of the German Left Opposition.—Ed.

The tremendous sharpening of class conflicts in Germany, the dictatorship policy of the Brüning government, the fascist danger on the one hand, the treacherous policy of the social democracy on the other, and finally, the false policy and helplessness of the C. P. G. have produced a powerful process of fermentation within the best sections of the C. P. G. and in the ranks of the proletariat as a whole. This process finds its partial expression in a search for a correct line of struggle. The call for a united front of the entire proletarian class in a defense against Fascism is the strongest factor in the German labor movement today.

The Communist party remains impotent in this situation. The present leadership of the party actually declines, by its false policy, to take into account the most important factor, the existence of the proletarian class for a united front. The C. P. G. has succeeded, to be sure, in rallying large masses about it, but it has not succeeded in breaking down the decisive influence of the S. P. G. in the factories, in the trade unions and in the proletarian mass organizations. Thanks to the false policy of the party leadership a centrist party, the Socialist Labor Party, has been able to raise its head. For the moment, the prospect of a change in the line of the party is rather slim ("Social Fascism must first be defeated if Fascism is to be vanquished.")

What did the Left Opposition do in this situation? Do the German comrades know how to intervene in the events, despite their numerical weakness? In order to evaluate the work of the German Opposition objectively, its past development must be taken into consideration. The complete bankruptcy of the Maslov-Fischer Opposition greatly compromised the ideas of the Left in the C. P. G. The policy conducted by the arrangement of the Left Opposition from the cadres of the party. The intrigues of Landau contributed the rest and only helped to make the Left Opposition ridiculous in the eyes of the best sections of the German working class. It was upon such premises that the Left Opposition had to resume its work in Germany. And in this work, it must be remembered, it was faced with a struggle not only against the strongest Stalinist party in Western Europe, but against the strongest Right wing group in the world, the Brandler group, as well.

Political and Organizational Activity

The German Opposition has taken a position on the most important political events in so far as it lay within the realm of its ability. Before the referendum in Prussia, it took a unequivocal position against the "Red" Referendum of the Communist party (carried on in common with the fascists) in its paper, the Permanente Revolution. In its Open Letter to the party it posed, on the basis of an analysis of the situation in Germany, the question of the united front as the central political problem of the C. P. G. Finally, the Left Opposition took a position toward the new centrist party, the Socialist Labor Party, in the form of theses. Within this party, which is centrist in its policy, there are many youths who have placed themselves on the ground of Communism. They reject entrance into the C. P. G. on account of its false policy. At the plenum of the National Committee, a resolution "On the Situation" was adopted.

Lately, the political influence of the Left Opposition has grown appreciably in Germany. The entire press, and especially the central organ of the Communist party, Die Rote Fahne, is forced to take a position toward the policy of the Left Opposition. The campaign against comrade Trotsky is carried on in full swing.

Still, it must be emphasized that the organic growth of the Opposition does not at all measure up to this political influence. That is due, in large part, to the immense objective difficulties, and in part also to the subjective difficulties: the material poverty of the organization in relationship to the necessary work; a hard-fought lack of forces and others.

The first few months after the elimination of Landau and his meagre following were occupied with a tightening of the organization and with the resumption of regular activities by the various local groups. That was a period of internal consolidation for the organization. The next step was the formation of active cadres, the winning over of new members and the reconstruction of our faction inside the party. In this field, the Berlin organization, despite its relative weakness has been able to register good progress. The membership figures rose and in several districts party factions were created. Despite the enormous difficult objective conditions, the group went ahead with the preparation of open discussion meetings, at which new members were enrolled. Numerous speakers were sent out to represent our organization at various discussion meetings.

The Saxon and Hamburg groups have likewise carried on good propaganda activity, especially of late. There too, we have been able to register an increase in membership. Especially instructive are the experiences of the Bruchsal group. In Bruchsal, there is only one organization in the field; there is no party organization. Through the application of the Leninist united front tactic, our Bruchsal comrades succeeded in establishing a proletarian class front, in which the social democratic party organization, the trade unions and all the other proletarian organizations participated. The result of this policy was that the local group was able to more than double its membership (more than a hundred); aside from this, several new local groups have been founded in the vicinity. Furthermore, new groups have been established in the following places: Beuthen, Goerlitz, Breslau, Frankfurt on the Main, the Ruhr, Orlanburg, Magdeburg, Erfurt, etc.

Literature and Press

The organization has from its inception made many efforts toward the creation of an Opposition literature. The material means did not suffice for a regularly appearing newspaper. All efforts were concentrated on the publication of inexpensive pamphlets, in order to carry on our propaganda on the broadest basis. All the writings of comrade Trotsky were published in pamphlet form. From time to time, the circulation of the publications continued to grow. Several mistakes were committed in this field (the issuance of too limited a number of pamphlets, which are today entirely out of print and which cannot be re-

«Stalin and His Creatures» -- The New Anti-Trotsky Campaign

The Daily Worker of March 1 presents us with a new candidate for the profitable honor of flinging mud at Trotsky. This time it is "Bill" Dunne who seeks to climb out of a recent obscurity on a mudslide of his own heaping. Whatever one may think of the suitability of the candidate, one cannot deny him a certain eagerness to earn his spurs no matter how deeply he must sink to find them.

This is not the first time Dunne has joined in the "final" burial of "Trotskyism". When we were first expelled from the American party, Dunne hastened to cable from Moscow a stateless-like protest against our alleged "use of his name", apparently under the flattering illusion that the "use" of his name would be profitable to anybody. Now, laboring under the same illusion, Dunne appears to believe that if he adds his little share of abuse and calumny to the mountains of filth reared by his equally willing colleagues, Trotsky and the whole Opposition will collapse under the strain, to be "deserted by the honest workers still among its crew", those honest, but apparently stupid and "misled" workers for whom every Stalinist functionary sheds tears of commiseration.

What is the occasion for this new outburst which "proves" that Trotsky "has finally joined" the counter-revolution? The interview granted by comrade Trotsky to the bourgeois press in which the views of the Opposition on the shakiness of the Stalin regime are briefly outlined, and the newspaper rumor that Trotsky is to be allowed into Czechoslovakia for three months. At least this is the formal occasion. In reality, the Stalinists are deeply troubled and dismayed. After years of the most venomous persecution, with all the resources of the Soviet power and the Comintern at their disposal, after periodical funerals for the Opposition, the corpse turns out to be more robust and vigorous than ever, while the ground trembles under the feet of the grave-diggers. Nothing else can explain the hysterical and brutal letter of Stalin against Slutsky and the other "Trotskyist smugglers", a letter which breaks a silence on the part of "the greatest disciple of Lenin" which the revolutionary events in Spain, the turbulent situation in Germany, and the world crisis in general have up to now sought in vain to pierce. And like the candle which splutters violently before dying out, the Stalinists have now launched a more than usually poisonous campaign against our great comrade. But like the dying candle, the odor of this campaign is clearly classified. Dunne's slanders are part of this campaign. He flutters with admirable accuracy into the category to which comrade Trotsky referred in his interview and which makes Dunne blue in the face: "Stalin and his creatures".

What is the content (by your leave) of Dunne's abuse? Trotsky is "counter-revolution's outpost in Prinkipo". The "precise moment when the Soviet Union is faced with the sharpest offensive in the present drive of world imperialism", is chosen by Trotsky "to place himself with added venom in the imperialist camp". And, adds Dunne, for whom no secret is inviolate and nothing is obscure, "it is no mere coincidence" that France's puppet government of Czechoslovakia "grants Trotsky permission for a three-months' stay at the very moment he is preparing his counter-revolutionary statement". But here, we regret to report, Dunne's courage fails him. If not his courage, then his inventive imagination. Why does he not conclude boldly that Trotsky is preparing to lead against the Soviet Union the same imperialist troops of Czechoslovakia whom he was driving out of Russia at the head of the Red Army at about the same time that Dunne was publishing Robert Minor's counter-revolutionary anarchist drive about how Lenin and Trotsky were cruelly and despotically strangling the "genuine Russian revolution" of Minor's petty bourgeois friends in Moscow? Only in this manner, we submit, would the article be properly rounded off.

We have another mild criticism to make of Dunne's article. He grows indignant over the fact that Trotsky gave his interview to the Associated Press, "one of the most useful agencies of American imperialism". Dunne is right, only he does not go far enough. He should point out that Trotsky is wrong in trying to break into a monopoly contractually owned by Stalin. We refer to the fact that TASS, the official Soviet telegraphic press agency, has an exclusive reciprocity contract with the Associated Press in this country, so that the correspondents of the former can usually be found in the offices of the latter, and the falsehoods manufactured against Trotsky, in the Stalinist forgery factory at Moscow are promptly transmitted to the American reading public by "one of the most useful agencies of American imperialism". The broadcasting of Trotsky's interview by the A. P. is really a breach of contract with Stalin, and we know of no worthier cause for which Dunne should take up his hollow cudgels.

Still another suggestion: Why should Dunne get so frightened at the prospect of Trotsky coming to Czechoslovakia? Where is Smeral? Is he doing nothing? When it was expected two years ago that Trotsky might get a visa to France, that sterling old French patriot, Marcel Cachin, came running to Bessekovsky, yes, Bessekovsky, the man who was acting as Soviet ambassador in France after the "counter-revolutionist" Rakovsky had been expelled by Briand and Stalin. Cachin begged Bessekovsky with tears in his eyes to see Briand immediately so as to prevent the issuance of a visa to Trotsky. We have no doubt that the Soviet ambassadors and the creatures of Stalin in England, Germany and elsewhere, did the same thing when the proposal came up there for a Trotsky visa. As is known, the social democratic governments of England and Germany, like the reactionary governments of France and Belgium, and the republican-socialist coalition of Spain, all accommodated Stalin and refused a visa. Why should Czechoslovakia prove to be less amenable to Stalin's request? Where is Smeral? He is no novice at negotiating with bourgeois governments on a friendly—Oh, on a most friendly—basis.

There finally remains to attempt an explanation of Dunne's terrific howling. Nobody would conceivably make such a deafening noise, even in so "noble" a cause, if there were not some other sound that had to be drowned out. For example, it is because of his past "noises" that Radek now shouts so lustily against Trotsky. Or, if you want another example, English's or Bedacht's clamor against Lovestone. As even the uninitiated will suspect, the rule holds good in the present case too. In 1926, Dunne wrote back to the United States from one of his periodic trips to Moscow, and was foolish enough to express himself plainly on the internal Russian party conflict. Our readers will remember the period just after Stalin's break with Zinoviev and before the formation of the Opposition bloc. At that time there was an "interlude" in the Stalinist struggle against Trotsky and the Opposition, based upon Stalin's aspiration to bloc with the latter against Zinoviev and Kamenev. It was at this epoch that Dunne wrote with unconstrained joy: "Trotsky is back with a vengeance. His pictures and busts are displayed everywhere next to Lenin's" etc., etc. Eleventh-hour compassion for a man caught short dictates that we resist the temptation to publish in full the hymn of rejoicing Dunne penned at that time to the prospect of Trotsky coming "back with a vengeance".

The point is that this letter was always pretty much of an open secret in the party. Its existence is known to the stern party elders who never forget and rarely forgive. When Dunne's advancement to a higher rung in the hierarchical ladder is discussed in the sacred councils, some defender of the faith (a Browder, let us say, or a Hathaway) will say: "Yes, yes, but what about that letter?" There lies the secret of the terrific noise Dunne makes—not, to be sure, of the shameless vilification, because that is a commonplace with every Stalinist creature who ekes out his place in the party today, but of the unusual loudness. Dunne is simply trying to drown out the haunting echo of his 1926 letter. Sincerely, we wish him the luck his labors merit.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE THREAT OF ILLEGALITY

American capitalism is already giving advance notice of the bloody answer it is preparing to the slaves whom it denies a living within their slavery. In the roar of gunfire at Detroit it said to the workers whom it has thrown onto the streets: "We cannot employ you and we will not provide for you, and if you protest we will shoot you." The massacre at Detroit was followed a few days later by the murderous attack on the Chicago demonstration of the Communists before the Japanese Consulate. Here, as in Detroit, the police were clearly the aggressors. The demonstration was designed as a peaceful one, with Communist direction it could not be otherwise under the given conditions, for it is no part of Communist policy to substitute the futile violence of an individual or of a small group for the intervention of the masses who are not yet active.

We do not credit the story, by means of which the police-murderers are attempting to cover themselves, that the first shots were fired from the crowd, and by a "Communist agitator" at that. Such individual reactions to the regime of brutal repression are of course possible; one may say inevitable. Even if that had been the case in Chicago, the police who forcibly deprived the manifestants of their rights would bear the whole responsibility. But their attempt to pin the accusation on a "known" Communist discredits their story from the start. It is a transparent subterfuge to justify themselves and to frame-up the party.

They are proceeding in the same way at Detroit. The four victims of their gunfire had not been laid away before they began a wild man-hunt for Communist leaders and set the legal machinery in motion to grind out wholesale indictments. They are drawing the noose tighter around the workers' vanguard. They are starting to isolate it from the great mass of discontented workers and to outlaw its activities. The labor passivity that has attended the Kentucky prosecutions and convictions only encourages a similar procedure after every skirmish in other places. The ruling capitalists and their Governmental hirelings, shivering in fear at the coming storm of labor rebellion, would like to cut off and proscriber the conscious and articulate section of the class and deprive the germinating mass movement of legal spokesmen and organizers.

The menace of illegality for the Communist movement is undoubtedly growing, and it calls for the most serious and all-sided consideration. There is no prescription by the aid of which the Party can be guaranteed a legal existence. With the present weakness and isolation of the Party, with the intensification of war danger increasing, and with a powerful ruling class panic-stricken at the prospect of a workers' mass movement to come, but not yet matured and merged with the vanguard, the revolutionary wing may be driven underground in spite of anything it can do.

There is no prescription that will guarantee legality. But within certain limits it can be safeguarded and strengthened by a correct policy. The experience of 1919-21 must be recalled and its lessons assimilated by those militants who have been drawn into the movement, under legal conditions, since that time. The first of these lessons is to value legality; and, without surrendering a single point of revolutionary doctrine or evading a single duty, to fight for it to the end. A retreat into illegality under the present conditions, or even under much more aggravated ones, would signify a retreat from the coming class battles.

THE SITUATION AND ITS TASK

One of the most important problems of American Communist tactics is to maintain an open legal, or at least semi-legal, position until a significant workers' mass movement has caught up with the conscious vanguard and joined with it in a common struggle on the concrete questions of the day. Then the suppression of the Party will be a thousand times more difficult. The numerically weak Party, isolated and fighting virtually alone, is only a threat. The Party supported by a Workers' mass movement is a power.

If we are going to find our way in the charged social atmosphere of these days, the first obligation laid upon us is to see things as they are. History assigns an enormous role to the conscious revolutionaries who foresee the line of march theoretically, but it does not allow us to force events by our own wishes. Marxism is no doctrine of social miracles wrought by small minorities. It has nothing in common with putschism. Even if one is convinced—as we are convinced—that we are near the threshold of great events and great changes in the life of the American working class, it is not permissible to forget for a moment that we alone will not and cannot be the authors of these changes and these events. The future of American Communism is bright with promise, but we will move toward that great future only in so far as the working masses move with us at every step. The material conditions are long ripe for a tremendous upsurge of militant labor. This we know and this is the foundation of our perspectives. But the workers do not react automatically to the material pressure upon them, and there is no rule by which to foretell the extent and tempo of their movement in advance. That must be judged and estimated as it actually unfolds or, at least, as it is clearly intimated. A clear-sighted study of the mood and temper of the workers must precede and regulate the daily tactics and working methods of the revolutionary Party if it really aims to accelerate and influence the collisions of class forces.

Unemployment on the one side and wage reductions on the other are weighing down upon virtually the whole working class of America and ruthlessly changing all the accustomed conditions and standards of life. But in spite of that—and this is the most singular and inescapable fact in the situation—the workers have not yet begun the inevitable movement of revolt. Under pressure of conditions that become more and more intolerable the workers are undergoing a profound mental change. But the outward signs of this change are not yet manifest to any appreciable extent. It is like the slow accumulation of steam in a sealed boiler that has not yet reached the explosive point. The explosion will come, and it may come unannounced; but it is not storm, but rather the dead calm before storm, that characterizes the present situation.

The sporadic movements which flare up here and there are organized by the small Communist vanguard and, for the most part, carried through by them in almost every case. In these actions the Communist workers are distinguishing themselves by their courage and resolution. They are storing up capital and prestige for the future. But the masses are not moving with the Communists. In this disparity there is a great danger that the vanguard will become exhausted and demoralized and unable to handle the real movement when it breaks.

The Communist workers are not the working class. They are only its conscious section, and at present in America they are a small and numerically insignificant section. The Communist workers alone cannot fight real class battles. Their function is to fight with the workers and in their front ranks. The task of the Communists at the moment is to prepare the workers for the coming struggle. The center of this task is the "patient work of explanation": of agitation and propaganda to win the workers over to a course of struggle. There is no substitute for this prosaic task and there is no way to leap over it. A renovation of the Party's tactics in this sense is an absolute necessity. Only in this way can it prepare the coming workers' movement and entrench itself within it.

A FALSE SLOGAN

"The revolutionary fighting spirit of the Communist workers who demonstrated before the Japanese consulates last Saturday is not to be questioned. The firm will to fight against the imperialist war mongers was their animating impulse. And that is all the greater reason for protest against the manner in which the energies of the militants are being misdirected by the false tactics of the Party leaders. It is a cruel irony that the brave demonstration of the Chicago revolutionists, inspired by a hatred of 'their own' imperialists, could give the outward appearance of an 'anti-Japanese demonstration', and be so described by the capitalist press. Such a direction of the struggle does not in the least hamper the war plans of American imperialism. On the contrary it gives them unwitting support.

Of course we support the Chinese people; we ought to expose and denounce the Japanese militarists in our general edily wrong to concentrate the anti-war campaign in America against the government; but in our opinion it is decidedly of Japan. And this is precisely the impression that, in the present situation, the demonstrations before the Japanese consulates are bound to create in the minds of the masses. In actions of this kind only the salient facts stand out. The subsidiary slogans, the other issues which are 'linked up' with the main event, are lost in the shuffle. How quickly wrongly formulated slogans exact their penalty! The popular impression of the Saturday demonstrations as an 'anti-Japanese' affair is the price already paid for the asinine slogan of the Party leadership: 'Drive the Japanese diplomats from the country!'

In this slogan there is the basis for a complete disorientation of the proletarian struggle around the question of the coming war. It fits in with the pseudo-pacifist policy of American imperialism in the East and facilitates its work of delusion at home. 'The Japanese are mad with militarism; they are provoking a world war; but our own government strives for peace, and if it is finally forced into war it will be the fault of Japan'—this is the imperialist propaganda for the coming year which is seeping into the minds of the American people day by day. Does the 'Anti-Japanese' agitation of the Party counteract this poisonous delusion or does

It is the aim of the present lines to indicate—if only in its general outlines—the composition of the political world situation today, as it has resulted from the fundamental contradictions of decay capitalism, complicated and sharpened by the severe commercial, industrial and financial crisis. The following, hastily sketched reflections, far from embracing all countries and all questions, are to be the subject of serious further, collective treatment.

1. The Spanish Revolution has created the general political premises for the immediate struggle for power of the proletariat. The syndicalist traditions of the Spanish proletariat have at once revealed themselves as one of the most important obstacles in the way of the development of the revolution. The Comintern was caught unawares by the events. The Communist party, totally impotent at the beginning of the revolution, occupied a false position on all the fundamental questions. The Spanish experiences have shown—that a frightful instrument of the disorganization of the revolutionary consciousness of the advanced workers, the present Comintern leadership represents! The extraordinary delay of the proletarian vanguard lagging behind the events, the politically dispersed character of the heroic struggles of the laboring masses, the actual assurances of reciprocity between anarcho-syndicalism and social democracy—these are the fundamental political conditions that made it possible for the republican bourgeoisie, in league with the social democracy, to establish an apparatus of repression, and by dealing the insurgent masses blow for blow, to concentrate a considerable amount of political power in the hands of the government.

By this example, we see that Fascism does not at all represent the only means of the bourgeoisie in its struggle against the revolutionary masses. The regime existing in Spain today corresponds best to the conception of the Kerenskiad, that is, the last or "the one before the last" "left" government, which the bourgeoisie can only set up in its struggle against the revolution. But this kind of government does not necessarily signify weakness and prostration. In the absence of a strong revolutionary party of the proletariat, a combination of semi-reforms, left phrases and gestures still more to the left, and of reprisals can prove to be of much more effective service to the bourgeoisie than Fascism.

Needless to say, the Spanish revolution has not yet concluded. It has not solved its most elementary tasks (the agrarian, the church and the national questions) and is still far from having exhausted the revolutionary resources of the masses. More than it has already given, the bourgeois revolution will not be able to give. With regard to the proletarian revolution, however, the present international situation in Spain may be characterized as pre-revolutionary, but scarcely more than that. It is quite probable that the offensive development of the Spanish revolution will take on a more or less protracted character. In this manner, the historical process opens up, as it were, a new credit account for Spanish Communism.

2. The situation in England can likewise be termed with a certain degree of justification, as pre-revolutionary, provided it is strictly agreed, that a period covering several years of partial ebbs and tides can elapse between the pre-revolutionary and the immediately revolutionary situation. The economic situation in England has reached extreme acuteness. Still, the political super-structure of this arch-conservative country extraordinary lags behind the changes in the economic basis. Before taking recourse to new political forms and methods, all the classes of the English nation are attempting time and again to ransack the old store-rooms, to turn the old clothes of their grandfathers and greatmothers inside out. The fact remains, that despite the dreadful national decline there does not exist in England as yet, either a revolutionary party of any significance or its antipode—the Fascist party. Thanks to these circumstances, the bourgeoisie has had the opportunity of mobilizing the majority of the people under the "national" banner, that is, under the most hollow of all possible slogans.

It contribute to it? In the event of war with Japan the Communists will be disarmed if the American imperialists can say: "You were more eager than we were; you demanded the expulsion of the Japanese diplomats while we were still striving for peace."

"The enemy is in our own country!"—this is the revolutionary slogan of Liebknecht and Lenin, the guiding line of the proletarian struggle against imperialist war. Those who forget this for one moment are already on the toboggan to social patriotism. The proletariat in every country has to wage its own specific fight against its own imperialists and work for their defeat. The central task of the American Communists in the question of war is the systematic exposure of the policy of American imperialism which masks the most monstrous imperialist designs with the phrases of pacifism. The fire of the Communists must be concentrated mainly on this Hoover policy if it is to serve the interests of the proletariat. The anti-Japanese slogan contradicts this task, confuses and disorganizes the struggle and even contains the germ of chauvinist deviations. The slogan should be withdrawn before it does further harm.

The World Crisis and Its Revolutionary Implications

By LEON TROTSKY

In the pre-revolutionary situation, the most dull-witted of conservatism had acquired tremendous political predominance. It will in all probability take more than one month, perhaps more than one year, for the political super-structure to become adapted to the real economic and international situation of the country.

There is no ground for assuming that the collapse of the "national" bloc—and such a collapse is inevitable in the relatively near future—will lead directly to the proletarian revolution (it is a matter of course, that there can be no other revolution in England) or to the triumph of "Fascism". On the contrary, it may be assumed with much greater probability that on her path to the revolutionary solution, England will go through a lengthy period of the radical democratic and social-pacifist demagoguery of the Lloyd-Georgiad and of Labourism. These can therefore be no doubt that England's historical development will grant British Communism ample time to transform itself into the genuine party of the proletariat at the moment it will be confronted with the solution. From this, however, it does not at all follow that we can afford to continue losing time with disastrous experiments and Centrist zig-zags. In the present world situation, time is the most precious of all materials.

3. France, which the sages of the Comintern had placed a year and a half or two years ago in the foremost ranks of the revolutionary "upsurge", is in actuality the most conservative country, not only of Europe, but perhaps of the entire world. The relative stability of the capitalist regime in France has its roots, to a large extent, in its backwardness. The crisis has less telling effects on it than on other countries. On the financial field, Paris even attempts to vie with New York. The present financial "prosperity" of the French bourgeoisie has its direct source in the robbery of Versailles. But it is precisely the Versailles peace itself that contains the chief threat to the entire regime of the French republic. Between the size of the population, the productive forces and the national income of France on the one hand, and her present international position on the other, there is a crying contradiction which must inevitably lead to an explosion. To maintain her short-lived hegemony, "nationalist" as well as radical-socialist France is forced to depend upon the support in the entire world, of the most reactionary forces, of the most archaic forms of exploitation, of the abominable Rumanian clique, of the decadent Pilsudski regime, of the dictatorship of the Yugoslavian military; to uphold the dismemberment of the German nation (Germany and Austria), to defend the Polish corridor in East Prussia, to aid Japanese intervention in Manchuria, to spur the Japanese military clique against the U. S. S. R., to come forward as the chief enemy of the liberation movement of the colonial peoples, etc. The contradiction between France's secondary role in world economy and her immense privileges and prebendations in world politics will become more distinct every month, will heap dangers upon dangers, upset her internal stability, promote restlessness and discontent among the masses of the people and create ever deeper political rearrangements. These processes will undoubtedly become manifest as early as the next parliamentary elections.

On the other hand, however, all indications compel us to assume that, if no great events take place outside of the country (the victory of the revolution in Germany or the reverse: the victory of Fascism), the development of the internal relationships in France itself will, in the next period, take a relatively "normal" course which will open up for Communism the opportunity of utilizing a considerable period of preparation in order to consolidate itself prior to the advent of the pre-revolutionary and revolutionary situation.

4. In the United States, the most powerful country of capital, the present crisis has laid bare frightful social contradictions with striking forcefulness. After an unprecedented period of prosperity which amazed the whole world with its fireworks of millions and billions, the United States at once entered a period of unemployment for millions of people, of the most appalling physical destitution for the toilers. Such a gigantic social convulsion cannot fail to leave its traces on the political development of the country. Today it is still hard to ascertain, at least from the distance, any measure of important radicalization in the American working masses. It may be assumed that the masses themselves have been so startled by the catastrophic upheaval in the conjuncture, so stunned and crushed by unemployment or by the fear of unemployment, that they have not as yet been able to draw even the most elementary political conclusions from the calamity that has befallen them. This requires a certain amount of time. But the conclusions will be drawn. The tremendous economic crisis, which has taken on the character of a social crisis, will inevitably be converted into a crisis of the political consciousness of the American working class. It is quite possible that the revolutionary radicalization of the broadest layers of workers will reveal itself, not in the period of the greatest decline in the conjuncture, but on the contrary, during the turn toward revival and upswing. In either case, the present crisis will open up a new epoch in the life of the American proletariat and of the people as a whole. Serious regrouping and clashes among the ruling parties are to be expected, as well as new attempts to create a third party, etc. With the first signs of a rise in the conjuncture, the trade union movement will acutely sense the necessity of tearing itself loose from the claws of the despicable A. F. of L. bureaucracy. At the same time, unlimited possibilities will unfold themselves for Communism.

In the past, America has known more than one stormy outburst of revolutionary or semi-revolutionary mass movements. Every time they died out quickly, because America at every time entered a new phase of economic upswing and also because the movements themselves were characterized by crass empiricism and theoretical helplessness. These two conditions belong to the past. A new economic upswing (and one cannot consider it excluded in advance) will have to be based, not on the internal "equilibrium", but on the present chaos of world economy. American capitalism will enter an epoch of monstrous imperialism, of an uninterrupted growth of armaments, of intervention in the affairs of the entire world, of military conflicts and convulsions. On the other hand, in the form of Communism the masses of the American proletariat possess—rather, could possess, provided with a correct policy—no longer the old melange of empiricism, mysticism and quackery, but a scientifically grounded, up-to-date doctrine. These radical changes permit us to predict with certainty that the inevitable and relatively rapid, revolutionary transformation of the American proletariat will no more be the former, easily extinguishable "bonfire", but the beginning of a veritable revolutionary conflagration. In America, Communism can face its great future with confidence.

5. The Czarist adventure in Manchuria led to the Russo-Japanese war; the war—to the 1905 revolution. The present Japanese adventure in Manchuria can lead to revolution in Japan.

At the beginning of the century, the feudal-military regime of that country could still successfully serve the interests of the young Japanese capitalism. But in the course of the last quarter of a century, capitalist development has brought extraordinary decomposition into the old social and political forms. Since that time, Japan has more than once been on the brink of revolution. But the latter lacked a strong revolutionary class to fulfill the tasks imposed on it by the developments. The Manchurian adventure may accelerate the revolutionary catastrophe of the Japanese regime.

Present day China, no matter how entangled it may be by the dictatorship of the Kuo Min Tang cliques, greatly differs from the China which Japan, following the European powers, despoiled in the past. China has not the strength to drive out the Japanese expeditionary forces immediately, but the national consciousness and activity of the Chinese people have grown enormously. Hundreds of thousands, millions of Chinese have gone through military training. The Chinese will always improvise new armies. The Japanese will feel themselves besieged. The railroads will be of far greater service for war than for economic purposes. More and more new troops will have to be sent out. The Manchurian expedition spreading out will begin to exhaust Japan's economic organism, increase the discontent inside the country, sharpen the contradictions and thereby, accelerate the revolutionary crisis.

6. In China, the necessity of a determined defense against the imperialist invasion will also bring with it serious internal, political consequences. The Kuo Min Tang regime arose out of the national revolutionary mass movement, which was exploited and strangled by the bourgeois militarists (with the aid of the Stalinist bureaucracy). Precisely for this reason, the present regime, shaky and full of contradictions, is incapable of initiating a revolutionary war. The necessity of a defense against the Japanese invaders will turn more and more against the Kuo Min Tang regime and nourish the revolutionary sentiments of the masses. With a correct policy, the proletarian vanguard can, under these conditions, make up for all that was so tragically lost in the course of the years 1924-1927.

7. The present events in Manchuria prove particularly how naive those gentlemen were, who demanded of the Soviet Union the simple return of the Chinese Eastern Railroad to China. That would have meant surrendering it voluntarily to Japan, in whose hands the railroad would have become a weapon against China as well as against the U. S. S. R. If anything at all had hitherto prevented the Japanese military cliques from intervention in Manchuria and if anything may still hold them within the boundaries of caution today, it is the fact that the Chinese Eastern Railroad is the property of the Soviets.

8. Cannot the Manchurian adventure of the Japanese, nevertheless, lead to war with the U. S. S. R.? It is understood, this is not excluded even with the wisest and most cautious policy on the part of the Soviet government. The internal contradictions of feudal-capitalist Japan have obviously unbalanced her government. There is no lack of instigators (France). And from the historical experiences of Czarism in the Far East, we know what an unbalanced military-bureaucratic monarchy is capable of.

The struggle unfolding in the Far East is, it is understood, carried on for the sake of the railroads, but over the fate of all of China. In this gigantic historical struggle, the Soviet government cannot be neutral, take the same position with regard to China as to Japan. It is duty-bound to stand completely and fully on the side of the Chinese people. Only the unflinching loyalty of the Soviet government to the struggle for the liberation of the oppressed peoples can really protect the Soviet Union on the Eastern frontier against Japan, England, France, the United States.

Under what forms the Soviet government will support the struggle of the Chinese people in the coming period, depends upon the concrete historical circumstances. If it had been insane to surrender the Chinese Eastern Railroad voluntarily to Japan before, then it would be just as insane to subordinate the entire policy in the Far East to the problem of the Chinese Eastern Railroad. There are many indications that the behavior of the Japanese military clique in this question bears a consciously provocative character. Directly behind this provocation, stands ruling France. The aim of the provocation is to tie the hands of the Soviet Union in the East. All the more firmness and far-sightedness is required on the part of the Soviet government.

The fundamental conditions of the East: its immense expanse, its countless human masses, its economic backwardness—give these processes their slow, their drawn out and crawling character. In any case, there is no threat of an immediate and acute danger to the existence of the Soviet Union from the Far East. During the coming period, the main events will develop in Europe. Here, great opportunities may arise, but from the same source also, great dangers threaten. For the present, only Japan has tied its hands in the Far East. The Soviet Union must, for the present, keep its hands free.

German Opposition at Work issued now for material reasons). The pamphlets "Against National Communism", "Shall Fascism Really Be Victorious?" and "How Can National Socialism Be Defeated?" have all appeared in a second edition. The latest pamphlets have all appeared editions of 15,000, and have been completely sold out. The present sphere of influence of the Left Opposition will allow us to advance to editions of 25,000. This is a significant step forward.

Due to the reasons mentioned above, the Permanent Revolution could not, at first, appear more than once a month. We had to overcome certain pessimistic sentiments against a more regular appearance. Nevertheless, we have succeeded in issuing the paper as a semi-monthly ever since January 1. That is an unquestionable success for the organization, although this result is by no means up to the mark of political necessity. We are campaigning for a weekly at present.

The successes achieved are the fruits of a systematic work of preparation, which brought about the most effective utilization and application of the forces of which we disposed. We must emphasize that all our work was carried on without any material assistance from the outside. In view of the fact that there are more than 6,000,000 unemployed in Germany today, these material efforts are even worthy of a much higher evaluation. Without overlooking any of the shortcomings that still persist, it is, nevertheless, undeniable, that the German Opposition has overcome the stage of sectarianism and that it is on the road to becoming one of the most active sections in the International Left Opposition.

CLASS IN MARXISM

It is not yet too late to join the class in Marxism taught by comrade Swaback every Thursday evening at eight o'clock, at our headquarters, 84 E. 10th St. Comrades and sympathizers are invited to attend. The subject matter already covered included discussion of "Class Struggles in France, the 18th Brumaire, the Communist Manifesto, the Gotha Program."

Some of the remaining sessions, and they are more than half, will be devoted to analysis and discussion of the dispute with the anarchists, the dispute with the Utopians, historical materialism, and dialectics. We repeat: it is not yet too late to join this class. The fee is small. The next session is Thursday, March 24th.

BACK NUMBERS OF "MILITANT" WANTED

We are preparing files of the Militant for binding. We plan to bind in one volume all the issues from Vol. 1, No. 1 to Volume IV No. 12, the last issue of the semi-monthly Militant. We are missing the following numbers: Vol. 1, No. 1, November 15, 1928. Vol. 2, No. 4, Feb. 18th 1929; Vol. 3, No. 31; Oct. 1, 1930; Vol. 4, No. 2, January 15th, 1931. Vol. 4, No. 4, February 15th 1931. Vol. 4, No. 10, May 15th, 1931. Just as soon as we receive these numbers we will be able to proceed with our binding plans and offer the bound volumes for sale.

New Movement in the Anthracite Growing Rapidly

Strikes are once again spreading through the coal fields. In the Pennsylvania anthracite region a large number of the black towering breakers are shut down as thousands of men have left the collieries. It is what is called an insurgent strike. The combination, of an insurgent movement and a powerful strike, has thrown both alarm and fear into the whole of the enemy camp. As it gained day by day during its first week it met the most terrific opposition from the united forces of the operators, the state cossacks and the United Mine Workers officials.

So far this opposition has not been able to stem the tide. While the state troopers are massed in the territory ruthlessly breaking up "insurgent" meetings and making wholesale arrests, more collieries join the movement.

First of all this strike is caused by the terrible unemployment, the widespread starvation and the operators demands that the collieries sign separate agreements with loss of conditions. Out of the little more than 100,000 miners in the territory at least 60,000 have remained unemployed ever since the crisis began, though largely as a result of increasing mechanization, speed-up and closing down of what is called unprofitable mines. But this is only one side of the picture. On the other hand the strike is an outright revolt movement against the corrupt administration of the U. M. W. One need but recall a few incidents which make up this recent history of rebellion.

Vote Stealing and Convention Packing

At the last elections held in district 1, the opposition slate headed by Maloney undoubtedly carried the majority vote; but to no avail. It was counted out. At the district convention following, this opposition again asserted itself but was squelched with strong arm methods. There is the one incident at the Silver Creek colliery near Pottsville in district 9 where on Feb. 21 a meeting attended by about 3,000 miners unanimously went on record to demand equalization of work, condemned their officials and demanded a special district convention. To these incidents can be added the last U. M. W. convention at Indianapolis where a packed audience steamed rolled every demand and every grievance of the membership. This is, of course, nothing new in the history of the United Mine Workers under the Lewis regime but the constantly accumulating conflicts between the membership interests and the reaction of the officialdom is rapidly approaching a breaking point.

The outstanding demand of the anthracite rebel movement is the one for equalization of work. It particularly reflects the needs growing out of the acute unemployment conditions but it falls short of a program that can fully unite the employed with the unemployed. The movement itself is by no means a Left wing movement. It still harbors much confusion. Its leadership is not at all ready to break with the corrupt traditions of the union bureaucracy let alone to endeavor actually to found the movement on a class basis. But that only demonstrates the need of, and the possibility for real Left wing permeation.

Mine Strikes Elsewhere

We said before that strikes are again spreading through the coal fields and we can add that yet more are in prospect. The anthracite at this moment is merely the most outstanding case. In the Hocking Valley soft coal territory of Ohio a number of mine tipples have been idle since February 1st. Now this strike is also taking on bigger proportions, with more miners walking out in protest against wage cuts. As an indication of how drastic these cuts were one need but cite the example of the Hanna coal company announcing a reduction from $4.30 to $3.20 a day.

In both of these instances, in the anthracite and in the Hocking Valley, the coal miners are fighting a determined battle. The most splendid militancy is displayed on the picket lines. There has been no lack of perfidious efforts to undermine and to split their ranks. That is the job which the operators have assigned to their agents in the union office swivel chairs. But their other weapon is being wielded just as freely. In Pennsylvania the state troopers, in Ohio the national guard are applying the brute force to suppress the revolts.

Rumblings of New Revolts

Down in Eastern Kentucky and parts of Tennessee the coal miners have fought tenaciously against almost overwhelming odds. Yet, when a comparison is made the Northern oligarchs have been able to maintain themselves on an equal footing with the Southern bourgeois in staggering the odds. These recent Kentucky and Tennessee strikes remained entirely isolated and could not hold out when the full weight of the brutal enemy forces began to bear down upon them. These workers are now compelled to drift back again to take up whatever work is being handed out on the same old starvation conditions, or worse

Yet, how far this is from settling the issues becomes very apparent in the added rumblings of new revolts. Such are coming from Illinois. There the coal miners were from their recent opposition of the Edmonson rank and file movement again driven back into the folds of the U. M. W. It was a temporary setback but not a settling of the issues. By April first the Illinois miners' contract with the operators expires. The latter's efforts, to reduce the present wage scale are presented in the open, and in the Southern section it is just as openly conceded that the miners will resist. Thus there may be another spontaneous rebellion in the offing having also a double direction. For while the thieving office squabbles between John L. Lewis, for the International, and John H. Walker, for the district, are not at all settled it cannot be expected that either will sanction a strike. Not even one against a wage cut.

Revolts Localized—Not United

All in all, a look at the mine fields at this moment give ample evidence of signs of stifling worker resistance but as much proof almost of the terrible weakness: of almost numberless spontaneous rebellions and strikes, localized, confused and, while militantly fought, still lacking both perspective and organization. This is precisely as true for the Kentucky and other sections, under the leadership of the Left wing National Miners Union, as it is for the U. M. W. revolt movements; and, for that matter, also for other independent unions such as the West Virginia organization headed by Frank Keeney. One characteristic nevertheless practically all of these movements and strikes have in common, and an important characteristic, namely the fact that they represent the unanimous but sadly divided efforts of the rank and file to direct their struggle equally against the operators and their corrupt agents of the U. M. W. bureaucracy. That alone should indicate the growing condition. (Continued on page 4)

The Workers' United Front in Canada

Due to the extremely difficult conditions under which the labor movement is forced to work in Canada at present, a delay of reports on events there, is inevitable. The article we publish below, although belated, is extremely interesting and instructive. It should serve to stimulate a more active solidarity with our Canadian fellow-revolutionists as well as emulation of their splendid efforts for united working class action.—Ed.

The last maneuver of the Comintern's strategy in the "Third Period" was the policy of antagonistic struggle against both the leadership and membership of the social-democratic and reformist labor movement, because Stalin postulated that they were the Left wing of Fascism. Logically, therefore, they became "social-Fascists". This has now been smuggled away, and the latest policy is a united front with the workers, but not with their organizations or leaders, which means their united front still remains a slogan on paper, the Party still maintaining its isolation from the masses.

While the Daily Worker merrily dazes itself with denunciations of the Opposition, and maintains an absolute silence on the Canadian Party and its illegality, it remained to one of the smallest and weakest sections of the Comintern, the Communist Party of Canada, to establish a policy of the United Front in reality, of all sections of the labor movement. It seems destined in the realm of the revolutionary political movement that the weakest link in the chain is the one to break onto new historical ground.

The series of events leading to the arrest of the eight leaders and to the outlawing of the C. P. in Ontario have already been recounted in The Militant. The Canadian Labor Defense League,

The decree depriving comrade Trotsky and three members of his family of Soviet citizenship rights and condemning them to perpetual exile, is not only an act of vengeance, it is also an act of impotence.

That Stalin was preparing such an act some time ago has been clear ever since last fall. His notorious letter to the editorial board of the magazine Proletarian Revolution served no other purpose than that of preparing a new wave of reprisals. The exceptional law against comrade Trotsky is only the practical fruit of the "theoretical" campaign.

What are the causes that drove Stalin to take such a step? They must have been very serious ones, for the entire disadvantage of raising a new campaign against "Trotskyism" is quite evident.

The principal cause is the fact that Stalin's position has been greatly undermined. To the bourgeois papers it appears that the last conference of the Russian party was the apogee of Stalinist strength. In reality, the conference bore the character of a masquerade designed to dissimulate the weakness of Stalin's position. What do these oaths of personal loyalty to Stalin, which have of late become obligatory, actually signify? They signify that Stalin and his limited clique no longer can count, not only on the party—which they have strangled—but even on the apparatus. Whoever speaks today simply of the Central Committee—is thereby regarded as a concealed Oppositionist by Stalin. Only those who speak of the "Central Committee under the leadership of Stalin" are safe. This formula signifies that if the Central Committee breaks with Stalin, the undersigned, who subscribes to this formula, pledges himself to be for Stalin and against the Central Committee. Precisely in the same manner, at the conference of the Moscow organization, the oath was prepared for the Moscow Committee "with Kaganovich at its head". The personal regime has not only dispensed with the veil of the party but even with that of the apparatus. It has stripped itself bare. It is hard to decide upon so dangerous a measure except in the case where nothing else remains to be done.

The approaching crisis of the apparatus cannot help giving an impetus to the reawakening of the party. Therein lies the danger for the Stalin clique. This clique manifests the greatest suspicion with regard to everything that aims at a reawakening, a revival, a regeneration of the party. The reawakened proletarian nucleus of the party cannot at present find any other direction than that leading to the Left Opposition. Numerous symptoms are already becoming manifest. Pravda was obliged to publish several symptomatic facts in the pre-conference period.

The essence of the matter is that the authority of the Left Opposition grows parallel with the decline of the authority of the Stalinist clique. Despite the fact that Stalinism holds the masses in check, they do not nevertheless stop thinking. The fundamental facts in the struggle of the Left Opposition against the Stalinist bureaucracy remain fresh in everyone's memory. The apparatus at least knows and recalls the documents and the facts. It is precisely because it is well informed that the apparatus is disintegrating. It sees that Stalin has taken an organically incorrect path in all the major questions. Stalin's policy in the German question could only deliver the fatal blow to whatever was left of his authority. Stalin supported the participation of the Communists in the Fascist Referendum and was the author of the capitulationist formula "first the Fascists—then we".

In his pamphlet What Next? (Vital Questions for the German Working Class) comrade Trotsky wrote several weeks ago: "At the last conference of the Party, that is, at the conference of the Stalinist apparatus 'Trotskyism', three or four times before that crushed and buried, was declared the 'vanguard of the bourgeois counter-revolution'. This hardly intelligible and politically altogether terrifying decision lifts the curtain on several plans of an entirely practical order adopted by Stalin in the field of personal despotism. It is not for nothing that Lenin issued a warning" (Continued on page 3)

WHAT NEXT? -- by Leon Trotsky

The following is the introduction to comrade Trotsky's new work on Germany. The first chapter will appear in THE MILITANT next week.—Ed.

Capitalism in Russia proved to be the weakest link in the chain of imperialism, because of its extreme backwardness. In the present crisis, German capitalism reveals itself as the weakest link for the diametrically opposite reason: precisely because it is the most advanced capitalist system, conditioned in its development by the insoluble European dilemma. As the productive forces of Germany become geared more and more highly, the more dynamic power they gather, the more they are strangled within the state system of Europe—a system that is akin to the "system" of cages within an impoverished provincial zoo. At every turn in the conjuncture of events German capitalism is thrown up against those problems which it had attempted to solve by means of war. Acting through the Hohenzollern government, the German bourgeoisie girded itself to "organize Europe". Acting through the régime of Brüning-Curtius it attempted . . . to form a customs union with Austria. It is to such a pathetic level that its problems, potentialities and perspectives have been reduced! But even the customs union was not to be attained. As the witch's house in fairy tales, so the entire European system has for its foundation a pair of hen's legs. The great and salutary hegemony of France is in danger of toppling over, should a few million Austrians unite with Germany.

For Europe, in general, and primarily for Germany no advance is possible along the capitalist road. The necessary resolution of the present crisis to be achieved by the automatic interplay of the forces of capitalism itself—on the bones of the workers—would

The «Revolt» in Congress

An Indication of Radical Changes in Bourgeois Politics

The stormy and more or less spontaneous opposition of the representatives in congress of the petty bourgeoisie to the new revenue bill has found a loud echo in the country at large. The House line-up on the revenue bill reveals a pretty thoroughgoing disruption of the old party lines. Democrats and Republicans of the middle class type joined hands in fighting against a big bourgeoisie coalition of these same parties, whose chief objective at the present is to put over a tax measure—a direct sales tax ranging from 2.25 to 5 percent—to balance the budget at the expense of the lower and middle classes. The official machines of both traditional bourgeois parties united in a defense of the money bags and revealed the absolute uselessness of maintaining their separation. Both showed that they represent one and the same class—the big bourgeoisie. The dispute on the sales tax crystallized in a not unexpected and fairly deep rift in the political make-up of present day capitalist America.

The increasing difficulties of balancing the government budget, due to the rapid decline of foreign and domestic trade brought about by the prolonged world crisis, was bound to pose the problem sharply: at whose expense? The official party machines, after shedding a tear over the "financial principles" they had to drop, very quickly came to an agreement not to disturb big business with this problem, since, they argued, that would only cripple its investment power and thereby prolong the crisis. They thereupon came forward with an innovation in American methods of taxation: the sales tax. The whole burden of making up for the budget deficit was in this manner to be shifted to the smaller business men, and indirectly to the consumer as such. It could not help rousing the already impoverished petty bourgeois to action.

In congress itself, the perturbation of the small business men opened up great possibilities for the demagogues of such notorious tribunes of the people as representative La Guardia, who rallied an opposition of Democrats and Republicans against the machine coalition in a sortie on the revenue bill. The La Guardia opposition has already achieved several parliamentary successes. It has managed to muster a majority for two measures to counter the sales tax proposal, passing on a surtax for incomes of over $500,000 ranging up to 65 per cent on Friday, March 18 and on an increase in the estate tax up to a maximum of 45 per cent, applicable to net estates of more than $10,000,000 on Tuesday last. In addition, the opposition has defeated a measure relieving corporations paying taxes to foreign governments of regular taxation. La Guardia is talking radical, speaking of "conscripting wealth", etc. (The parliamentary movement has in addition, received wide-spread support from a great number of petty bourgeois organizations, which, according to one paper, include some 50,000,000 people.)

To get a picture of the petty bourgeois character of this movement, here are a few of the organizations that have rallied behind the congress opposition: The Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange and Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union, the National Consumers' League, the National Association of Retail Grocers and other retailers' organizations; the Railroad Brotherhoods;

the People's Lobby headed by Professor John Dewey, etc. The scope of this movement is not to be underestimated. It signifies the first large scale attempt to give a political form in the America of the present epoch, to the differentiation within the ranks of the bourgeoisie. As was to be expected, the American reformists, the A. F. of L., find a prominent place in this movement of the Left wing of the bourgeoisie class. La Guardia, by the way, in his statements replying to his big bourgeois opponents, such as the Democratic House leader, leaves the door wide open for the participation of the labor misleaders through a flirtation with some social reforms.

It is an old axiom for Marxist revolutionaries, that the petty bourgeoisie cannot lead an independent political life. It can go only with the big bourgeoisie or with the proletariat—the two chief contenders for power under the present system of society. Where La Guardia and the other leaders of the current movement intend to go is indicated by the former's answer to Rainey's—"Democratic" House leader's—charge that the actions of the House opposition are a move in the direction of Communism. La Guardia replied that it is precisely in order to serve as a bulwark against Communism that the House opposition is carrying on its policy. There is no doubt that within a relatively short time, this "revolt" too will be harnessed to the cart of capitalism as a whole. With the prolongation of the crisis, the growing misery of the middle classes, it is not excluded that the bourgeois regime will seek a new support for itself in a popular movement of petty bourgeois reform such as this. The events around the revenue bill will serve to raise false hopes in the petty bourgeoisie for a way out of its plight. The fading away of these hopes may well give way to despair and political reaction in the form of an American type of Fascist movement. In the meantime, the road is open for activities of a large scope on the part of the petty bourgeois demagogues. Their political transformation, the crystallization of these demagogues into distinct political types is bound to follow in short order.

For the Communists, this differentiation within the ranks of the bourgeoisie represents a perspective for rapid growth, provided a correct policy is pursued. The half-measures of the petty bourgeoisie and the reformists, once they are carried out, are bound to show up all their weakness, all their hopelessness, with especial clarity. It is in practice that the masses learn most quickly. By a clear and intransigent propagation of the working class issue out of the capitalist dilemma, by a correct utilization of the conflicts bound to develop in the future within the enemy camp, by pressing the demagogues to the wall, by forcing them to take a definite position, the Communists will be able to consolidate the more decisive sections of the masses and in the first place, the increasing sections of class conscious workers' around their banner. To hammer out such a policy of revolutionary advance, to prepare the American masses for revolutionary action, it is, however, necessary to clear away all the eclectic confusionism of Stalinist theory and to bring the Communist movement back to the path of Marxism-Leninism.—S. G.

The Raids on Hitler's Nazis in Prussia

As could be foreseen, the outcome of the presidential elections in Germany was attended by a feverish mustering of forces on part of the Fascists. The alleged purpose of the Hitlerite maneuvers is, of course, the protection of the people from "red savagery". In reality, Hitler and his hordes are arming not only to crush the Communist vanguard, but to seize the power and to subjugate the working class organizations as a whole.

The movements of the Nazis were brought to light by raids made on their Prussian local groups upon the initiative of the social democratic Minister of the Interior in the Prussian government, Karl Severing. Documents, outlining the line of action to be taken by the Fascist locals, were seized in these raids. Their plan of action was conceived under the form of auxiliary troops aiding the police against Communist uprisings. Anyone familiar with the situation knows that this "plan" is nothing more than a ruse, that in actuality, it was a matter of a general mobilization of the Fascist forces for decisive and independent action. Severing, who carried out these raids, knew this very well. He knew that he could not count on any support for his measure from the federal government. And he did not get any. The bourgeoisie values its Fascist whip too dearly to really mean to impair it.

In this light, Severing's move was nothing more than an impotent gesture intended to soothe the disturbance within the ranks of the social democratic following. That is about all the "iron front" of the reformists amounts to. The social demagogue, through Severing, once again revealed itself as the prostrate and again Left wing of the bourgeoisie, capable only of leading the workers to the slaughter.

A working class movement, united against Fascism and prepared for struggle, would not have tolerated such a treacherous and deceptive maneuver as Severing's. Within a united front movement, in which the Communists are at their posts, in which the revolutionary party represents the driving force of the proletariat in action, such a gesture would not be tolerated. It would be exposed on the spot before the eyes of all. It would form a step in the consolidation of revolutionary influence within the working class, that is, in the preparation of the proletariat for a decisive contest for power with the class enemy.

This is the crime of the Stalinist leadership of the German Communist Party—that it allows the social democrats to retain their positions within the working class at a time like the present. The Stalinists propound the idea that the Fascists cannot be defeated if the social democrats are not defeated first. This is quite true. But it is precisely the other Stalinist idea, which makes Fascists out of the social democrats ("social Fascists") and confuses the issue for the workers, that prevents the Com-

Statement of Gerry Allard

Oppositionist Answers Stalinist Slanders

It is evident that the Stalinists in their campaign against the members of the Left Opposition, know no limit in their fight to perpetrate their erroneous policies. Neither are they familiar with the most elementary line of ethics conforming with the principles of a revolutionist. The recent charges against me, alleging that I testified in the courts of the capitalist class against active fighters of the class struggle are crude fabrications that cannot stand the least speck of substantiation.

Needless to say, the charges are of the most serious kind. For a fighter in the class war to be charged with open conspiracy with the enemies of the working class in attempting to frame up militant workers and send them to prison, is by far the most contemptible betrayal for which there can never be any pardon. Agent provocateur Leopold of the Canadian Royal Mounted Police is one species of a scoundrel that will be jotted down in the memorandum book of the revolutionary working class. I hurl back in the teeth of the Gebers and Tashes that the allegations are so rotten and lying that it must contaminate the very tongue that irresponsibly frothed these contemptible charges.

Differences with the Party

Seven workers, members of the Communist Party, have been jailed, indicted and released on bond pending trial, simply because they were active in the fight for the advancement of the interest of the Illinois coal miners. They propagated militantly, the idea that the National Miners Union was the only capable organization that could successfully lead the miners in the struggle against the operators. They appealed to the miners to spread their wild cat strike and to transform it into a national struggle. For these reasons, along with the general program of the Party, they are to be imprisoned for long years, unless the masses of coal miners and the entire American labor movement come to their defense. The attack against these seven Communist workers is a direct attack against the Illinois coal miners and the American labor movement. In the course of the Illinois miners' fight, especially during the "Rank and File" movement in Illinois, I differed very seriously with their policies. I followed the general line of the L. O. in the St. Louis convention where the Left Opposition played a prominent part. The convention rejected the policies of the Left Opposition; nevertheless, we were still a part of that movement and throughout the whole movement we have in a minority position. The pressure of the Left wing forces made the rank and file movement split from both branches of the reactionary miners union. The Party pursued an erroneous policy of sectarianism, trailing behind the whole movement. It was my firm opinion in accepting a minority position in this mass movement that events would confirm the correctness of Communist leadership. The party refused this line. It branded every one officially connected with the rank and file movement as fakers. The rank and file were men fresh from the picks. Even if we knew that the rank and file leadership would eventually mislead the miners movement, due to their short sightedness and lack of understanding the laws of the class struggle; it is not enough just to sit back and say, "I told you so!" My understanding of the correct Communist position is to remain with the masses and show them HOW.

In the unemployment movement starting even before the state hunger march, I was active in the work of the unemployed workers. I was elected at a united front conference a member of the state committee. By chance it developed that sympathizers of the Left Opposition had a majority on the committee. The Party, failing to control the movement they had started, began very neatly to sabotage. Later on, in Bloomington, Illinois, I again was elected by the unemployed workers there on the committee. Some of the Party organizers began to cooperate and as a result BLOOMINGTON WAS THE ONLY TOWN IN THE WHOLE HUNGER MARCH THAT RESPONDED WITH A MASS RECEPTION FOR THE HUNGER ARMY. It developed into one of the best down state units of the whole Illinois unemployment movement. This was not enough, the Party began to start the attack against me. A secretary was imported to handle the whole situation. No one ever heard of him. He immediately began to take charge with my whole heard cooperation. It was not a week later he had run away with pennies of the unemployed workers of Bloomington and had stolen a check from the boss that I was working for. I had been in the Party for 8 years and there had never been a speck of irregularities along technical lines, but yet the great "leaders" import an agent that virtually ruins months of tedious work to organize a district that had never known Communist organization before.

These are a few of the detail matters that have caused the Party to be sharply antagonistic towards me. These things along with the fact that I am an applicant for membership in the C. L. A. (Opposition).

My recent activities in the miners' convention at Indianapolis and Springfield have also come under the criticisms of the Party. In this manner, I have been in contact with scores of miners and naturally correctness of policy gains sympathy in due time. The Party therefore has planned a campaign to annihilate me. They plan to frame up charges whereby they can force the League to bring pressure down on me. Anything to discredit Allard will be alright, as long as they get him out of the way. These are the only reasons that I can find for the inventions that they are continuously fabricating about my personal conduct as well as political activities. They have ceased to make it a political struggle by indulging in the personal character of their dissenters.

April the 1st a mass protest meeting has been called by sympathizers and opponents of the criminal syndicalist laws. I have been asked to speak and to possibly act as chairman of this meeting. I unhesitatingly accepted the offer as in line with every revolutionary's duty. This meeting will proclaim to the enemies of the miners that we intend to break the terror that is taking place in Franklin County and the right for workers to assemble and hold speeches.

—GERRY ALLARD.

«The Militant» Needs YOUR Help Now!

With this issue of The Militant the subscription drive will be one third over. It is a logical time to review what has already been accomplished and say what remains to be done.

The standing of new and renewed subscriptions, and new bundle orders is as follows: New York—12; Minneapolis—2; Chicago—1; St. Louis—1; Miscellaneous—11; New bundle orders—Chicago—2, Newark—1.

This is a small increase over last week's report. Thus far the drive can be characterized by the contradiction between the technique of the drive which has been theoretically worked out and its results. We are aware of the low level of the labor movement generally, of the Communist movement, too, and the enormous impoverishment of workers, but we are equally aware of the inducements offered subscribers and the absolute necessity for increasing the circulation of The Militant.

We must put The Militant on a sound financial basis. First of all we must increase its circulation and thereby its political influence. We must stress and stress again that comrade Trotsky's writings appear in it; that with each new subscription or renewal, the subscriber, especially the new subscriber, may add to his library one of the earlier works of comrade Trotsky, viz.: with each $2.00 subscription or renewal, for one year of fifty-two issues, a free paper bound copy of The Permanent Revolution, or a free one year subscription to Young Spartacus; with each $1.00 subscription or renewal for a half year of twenty-six issues, a free copy of the Strategy of the World Revolution; with each 50c trial subscription of thirteen issues a free copy of any of our 10c pamphlets. These premiums apply, only during the period of the drive which ends on June 1st.

During the period of the drive only we also offer a special subscription rate of 25c for eight issues. (There are no literature premiums with these subscriptions. This offer should be a very great inducement to subscription getters. Surely almost any class-conscious worker who is not totally unemployed can afford 25c for a two months' subscription. This offer should result immediately in a large increase in subscriptions.

In addition to getting new subscriptions we must renew expired and expiring subscriptions or each new subscription will be balanced by an expiring one in which case we will have a financial credit and political debit.

It is also absolutely necessary for us to increase the news stand and book store sale. Stands which will carry The Militant must be shown their advantage; the paper appears regularly; their profit is 2c per copy; for unsold copies they receive full credit by simply clipping

Pocket Book Workers Prepare for Strike

It is nine months since the S. P. fakers in the pocketbook Workers Union put over their treacherous agreement, in spite of the fact that the workers voted against it. The Right wing misleaders gave away all union conditions — more than the employers demanded, and with on fight. As a result, the union remains today in the most deplorable condition three months before the agreement expires.

After this rotten agreement was signed, a rank and file movement sprang up under the leadership of the T. U. U. L., as the workers revolted and ousted the administration before their term expired. New elections took place which left the administration badly divided. The rebel Left wing won 14 delegates to the Joint Board, the Right wing elected 16. The rank and file committee elected two of the three business agents, but the Rights elected a manager, secretary-treasurer, two organizers, and one business agent, which gave them a small majority over the rebels. Members were wondering how this divided administration would work. They know that more than half of the administration in control now are the old guard of the Wolinsky, Ship-lakoff gang which were forced out of office a few years ago. They are corrupted and discredited by the membership. How can these two groups work together? Especially when the union faces such serious problems as making the employers live up to the agreement of last June; restoring order and discipline in the union shops; solving the problem of the shops moving out of town; the growth of scab shops; and above all; preparing and mobilizing the workers for a struggle when the agreement expires; and the winning back of the lost conditions which the last administration gave to the employers, without a fight.

At the same time the unemployment situation increases daily in great numbers as a result of which we have today out of 4,500 members, 2,500 unemployed workers. The rest are working only part time. The employers took and are taking advantage of this situation. They do not live up even to the rotten agreement they signed. They reduce wages constantly. They have introduced the speed-up system. Workers are abused and insulted by their bosses and foremen, when they do work a day or two a week. Inside manufacturers give their work to contractors in non-union shops and let their workers starve, which is against the agreement they signed. This is the condition under which the pocket-book workers slave today.

How is it possible that the employers could get away and not live up to the agreement at a time when there is an "important" machinery in the industry?

First, there is the reorganization clause we have had since the last agreement, which was forced on the workers by the betrayers. This clause is a club in the hands of the employers, over the heads of the workers. Under this reorganization clause the employers have a right to discharge ten per cent of the workers during the year, which means five per cent every six months. The employers used this clause as a whip over the workers. It was possible for the employers to speed up the workers, because each worker feared that he would be the one to be discharged when reorganization came around, after the season was over. The employers used another scheme. A few days before reorganization took place, they called the workers into their office and told them if they would take a reduction in wages, they would not be sent away. The workers knowing that there are over 2,500 workers unemployed and that they can't get another job, accepted reductions in wages which amounted to 10, 20 and 30 percent.

Second: the present administration which is known to the workers as the "Fraternal Club" gang, gave the employers a free hand and collaborated with them to bring down wages and undermine the conditions of the workers.

After the employers reduced the wages of the workers, they called the union to a conference and demanded another reduction in wages of 15 percent. The administration was willing to give a 10 percent reduction of wages providing the employers renewed the agreement expiring in June for another year. When the manager reported this offer to a general membership meeting, the workers rejected it. It was decided not to renew the agreement so long as there is the reorganization clause in it, but that the union should prepare and mobilize the workers for a struggle, when the agreement expires. A few weeks later the administration called another membership meeting. At this meeting the "Fraternal Club" administration terrorized the membership and maneuvered to reconsider the decision of the previous meeting. After a lengthy and heated discussion, the "Fraternal Club" gang forced a reconsideration of the decision of the previous meeting. They were victorious once more. All they need is more such victories and the members will do with them what they have done with the last administration. When the administration won their victory this gave them the power to negotiate a new agreement on the basis of a 10 percent cut in wages including the clause of reorganization which the membership so bitterly opposed at the first meeting.

Then our misleaders at the next conference with the Industrial Council proposed to the employers a 10 per cent reduction in wages provided the manufacturers, in turn, prolong the agreement for another year. The bosses politely rejected the offer. They know they can get from the "Fraternal Club" administration 30 per cent in June. This shows how the employers used our practical leaders in an effort to help them destroy the union.

Now when the Right wing leadership have exposed themselves as working hand in hand with the bosses, the rank and file committee have a great opportunity to win over the majority of the workers providing they pursue a correct and clear policy. The numerous blunders of the party and the T. U. U. L. must be avoided by the rank and file committee in the Pocketbook Workers Union.

In June our agreement expires. The bosses, as it looks, have decided to destroy our organization which took so many years of bitter struggle to build. At this moment the rank and file committee have a great task to perform. There are only ten weeks left till June. The rank and file committee must carry on agitation and education and prepare the workers for a militant struggle and for the following demands:

- (1) A 40 hour, five day week which is necessary in order to relieve the unemployment situation and bring jobs to an additional few hundred workers.
- (2) Unemployment Insurance must be revised and should be paid by the manufacturers only. At present the workers pay from their meagre earnings their part of the fund. The only one who benefits by the unemployment fund is the faker, Dr. Hendin, who was rewarded by the misleaders for last year's "good" settlement. He is still getting his $75 a week while the unemployed workers are starving.
- (3) The rank and file committee will have to see to it that militant picketing should take place in order to stop all the scab ships during the first few days of the strike.
- (4) This strike will have to be conducted in a militant fashion not only against the employers but also against the misleaders who are agents of the bosses.

Farmer-Laborites in Minneapolis, Minn.

A new page in Farmer-Labor history has been written. Anderson, the Farmer-Labor mayor of Minneapolis has come out with a new proposal on unemployment. Coming so soon after the forcible breaking up of the February 4th Unemployment Mass meeting on Bridge St., in which six workers were arrested and convicted of "disorderly conduct", the solution offered by the mayor should not be surprising to the workers of this city. In a press statement to the Minneapolis Journal of March 7th, Mayor Anderson proposes to alleviate the depression and cut down the expenses of local administration by conscripting workers now receiving charity to do city work such as clearing snow, road repair, etc., for nothing, that is, in return for groceries. This, he claims, would in some measure repay the city for the charity they now dispense.

In examining this proposal, we see that this is nothing more than an attack on the present public works wage scale, and is a measure which the Chamber of Commerce and the organized bosses capitol should draw some political conclusions from this step taken by the Farmer-Laborite, and examine more closely its connection with the general program of the open-shoppers of this city. The radical pre-election speeches, the lengthy promises to alleviate the lot of the workers, have lost some of their appeal in the light of the actual deeds of the F. L. P. administration. The workers of Minneapolis are looking more and more cynically upon a state and city machinery which has consistently acted in collusion with the Chamber of Commerce. Its role as a democratic cloak for vicious attacks of the bosses has become clear to all thinking workers.

This situation is exceptionally favorable for the Communists. Workers are now beginning to understand the correctness of Communist candidates opposing the reformists, and no longer reproach us for "splitting the labor vote". The workers of Minnesota have no interest in the capitalist parties including the Farmer-Labor Party. The coming elections will show more clearly than ever the growing strength and appeal of Communism for the mass of workers in this state.

Left Opposition Activities in the Middle West

The three days of comrade Glotzer's stay in Minneapolis were crammed full of events fruitful for the Left Opposition. The central propaganda meeting was the debate with A. C. Townley of Nonpartisan League fame. Ileraded as a fire-eating champion of economic and political reforms, the audience of 150 who gathered at the Labor Lyceum were surprised and amused to hear this exponent of rural radicalism relate a series of stories and anecdotes; entertaining in themselves, but having little to do with the subject at hand: "The Cause and Cure of the Present Economic Crisis." It is needless to say that Townley's series of parables on capitalism and numerous thrusts at the Hoover administration could not stand up against comrade Glotzer's clear-cut Marxian analysis of capitalist crises and the prescription of the proletarian revolution as the solution. Following the meeting a quantity of literature was sold.

A crowd of about the same size heard comrade Glotzer in the afternoon at the Communist League headquarters on "Where is Europe Going?" Here a more serious tone prevailed since the speaker dealt with the burning political world problems of the day. Both these meetings were marked by intelligent questions and enthusiastic discussion. Party members were present, and registered their disappointment in finding no counter-revolutionary content to the meetings by a "dignified" silence. Walter Frank, however, did come forward with his own peculiar brand of the theory of socialism in one country that classes could be abolished in Russia alone which forced the speaker to publicly set him right. A number of "German" pamphlets were sold at this meeting.

A third public meeting was held with about 100 University of Minnesota students at Burton Hall who attentively received comrade Trotsky's views on the present world situation. In this case, however, the University authorities discriminated against the sale of Left Opposition literature. A campus detective showed his way through the crowd of students lined up to buy, and brusquely ordered the literature off the grounds. We protested the reactionary organizations are allowed to sell pamphlets, that even the Party sold literature in the same hall when Norman Tallentire and Sender Garlin spoke to the University students. To no avail. His instructions were specific. No Trotskyist pamphlets will be sold. With typical stupidity, a Party nitwit, too timid to take the floor in the meeting, nevertheless loudly proclaimed outside to some students how the counter-revolutionary Trotskyites were in league with the University authorities. Several turned away in disgust.

A group of 12 young workers and students assembled on Saturday afternoon, and after listening to comrade Glotzer's message on the tasks of American Communist youth, decided to launch a Spartacus Youth Club in Minneapolis. A committee on preamble and by-laws was elected and a date set for the first meeting of the club; Saturday, March 19th

2:30 P. M. at the Labor Lyceum, 6th Ave. North and Irving. Indications point towards the development of an active revolutionary youth force in Minneapolis.

An account of comrade Glotzer's stay would not be complete without mention of the banquet in his honor held for the benefit of our publishing activities. After a modest lunch, there ensued some lively entertainment, featuring the much heralded Militant Quartet as well as one of the "Heavenly Discourse" skits entitled "Denver Prays For Rain". Here the laurels must be handed to the Dunne boys, Grant and Miles, as well as to Bill Curran for their dramatic and musical contributions. Glotzer spoke on his visit with Trotsky and the work of the League and brought a rousing collection for Left Opposition publications.

A special organization of the Minneapolis branch was held with comrade Glotzer Monday night where he reported on the work of the European and Chinese sections of the Left Opposition and the International Secretariat. The practical tasks of the Minneapolis League in the coming period were laid out and discussed.

The net financial result of these meetings was a bit over fifty dollars. The political results are positive; organizational, excellent, Minneapolis is looking forward to the next national tour.

Opposition Greeks Answer «Empros»

The "Empros", the Greek organ of the Stalinists in America is carrying on a one sided struggle against the National Herald but overlooking the necessary exposure of the Atlantis.

In our Manifestos last November we attacked this one sidedness and we warned the Greek workers of this faulty and dangerous procedure of the Greek Stalinists, which they are still pursuing in spite of the protests by many party members and sympathizers.

In the current issue of Communists we took up the slanders of the standardized type which was the only reply the Stalinists could give to our criticism of their failing. We told the Greek workers that the real supporters of the Empros are not the Stalinists who direct its policies at present but all the workers and especially the Left Oppositionists who fought within the ranks of the party before they were expelled. We still fight for its correct orientation on the questions of the class struggle and remind the Stalinists that they are not the private owners of the Empros. We demanded again that they must attack the Atlantis the royalist and pseudo-labor paper, in a more bitter way because this sheet exploits the radicalization of the Greek workers. It is doing its utmost to prevent them from joining the fighting ranks of the Communists. The Stalinists refused to attack the Atlantis believing naively that they can utilize this paper in their struggle against the National Herald. But they were sadly disappointed and surprised when this royalist sheet refused to write a single line in defense of comrade Christides, the business manager of the Empros, when he was arrested.

The Atlantis is a class conscious bourgeois newspaper and in case of choice naturally will support the National Herald. This the Stalinists could not understand, unfortunately, not for themselves alone, but for the working class, which expects leadership from the columns of the Empros. The titles of the exposures against the National Herald were written in the typical liberal-American fashion which misleads and confuses. It strengthens the conceptions of bourgeois justice, and at the same time strengthens the patriotic traditions of the ideal Greek State. How otherwise can be characterized the titles: Tatamis before the Hellenic Justice.

Upon the arrest of comrade Christides the Stalinists issued a manifesto appealing to the Greeks of America as if the Greeks in America were all members of the working class they forget that whenever the Greek workers, whether food workers furriers or of any other trade, attempted to reduce their 12-14 hours workday or 7 day week, the Greek bosses did not hesitate to use gangsters or any other conceivable medium of strike breaking against these very Hellenes.

A Communist paper should always expose every lackey of the capitalist class the National Herald and any other organization or individual of the capitalist class is firmly united with the entire structure of their system. Whole precious columns of a Communist paper are devoted to prove that according to the rules of the Greek orthodox Church the editor of the National Herald should not be allowed to maintain his priesthood and to prove that other priests violated this. All these may sound incredible but still they are facts in spite of their paradox. We fear it will continue until the Greek party members as well as the entire party membership demand vigorously in a real Bolshevik manner to get an account from these bureaucrats.

The Greek Bureau of the Communist League of America (Opposition) will not allow itself to become the football of the National Herald or of any such bourgeois agency as the Stalinists became the instruments of Atlantis. They will continue to follow the Marxist-Leninist line and will not compromise with any kind of capitalist lackey.

In the Communists we have urged every worker to support the Empros which is in peril from the attacks of the capitalists.

New York Classes

The first three lectures of comrade Shachtman's series in the History of the Communist International have proved so successful that if the present successive increase in attendance continues. It will be necessary to take a larger hall. The attendance now is over fifty.

The fourth lecture, to be held on Wednesday, March 30th, will deal with "The Struggle for the Conquest of the Masses"—the Third Congress of the Comintern in 1921. Workers attending this lecture would do well to prepare for it by reading comrade Trotsky's Strategy of the World Revolution advertised elsewhere in The Militant.

SWABECK'S CLASS IN MARXISM

The class taught by comrade Swabek in Marxism continues its instructive application of the teachings of Marx and Engels to the fundamental problems of the revolutionary movement of today. The class meets regularly every Thursday evening at 8 p. m. in our headquarters at 84 East 10th St.

The class is still open. The remaining sessions can be taken by registering at once.

«Soviet's Challenge» at the Acme Theatre

The Acme Theatre, 14th Street and Union Square, is now presenting the Soviet film, "Soviet Challenge", an extraordinary and exclusive showing of a picture not seen here before. The picture is based on "The 5th Year" and was produced in the U. S. S. R. by Proletkino. The film shows the progress and achievements in the Soviet Union. On the same program the Acme Theatre will present an added feature, "Songs of The Cossacks" This is the first time this singing picture of the Cossacks has been shown here.

A special feature of "Soviet's Challenge" shows Trotsky at work.

Statement on the Recent Decree Depriving Comrade Trotsky of Soviet Citizenship against the nomination of Stalin to the post of General Secretary: 'this cook will serve us a peppery dish'. . . This cook has not yet exhausted the culinary science completely.

"This prediction of Lenin's is being verified anew. The decree of expatriation was another—and not the last—poisoned dish from the Stalinist kitchen."

The decree is the product of wrath and weakness. The choice of names in the list of those expatriated is dictated by the necessity of a political amalgam. The Thermidorians have always combined the named of their revolutionary adversaries with those of the representatives of the counter-revolutionaries, in their reprisals. The names of Don, Abramovich, Potresov and the others are obviously dragged in by the hair. It is a matter of creating a combine that would be compromising to the name of Trotsky. The necessity of an amalgam is dictated by the very nature of Centralism which cannot help having enemies from the right and the left and which sets itself the task of throwing all into the same pot in order to mask its Centralist character. At the same time the Stalinists continue to fill up the places of deportation. The colonies of Bolshevik exiles in Siberia and Central Asia are constantly growing. Those confined in the solitaires, after serving their time, have been condemned to supplementary confinement. Stalin does not want them to leave the solitaires alive. Only a few weeks ago the old Bolshevik Tsukidze, a member of the Party since 1905, was finished off by a series of ignominious Thermidorian acts. This sick old Bolshevik, instead of being transferred to a place in which more favorable conditions for her state of health exist, as she was promised, was deported to Akomfusk, the worst spot in Central Asia. In reply to her protests, she was beaten. Our unflinching comrade could not resist his maltreatment more than a few months and succumbed. Stalin killed her as he killed Zinadze, Blumkin, and many other revolutionary Bolsheviks. Rakovsky is tied down to Barnoul, in which the harsh climate is practically destroying the health of the old fighter. He is gravely ill. The terror against Rakovsky, besides having general political causes, also has a personal motive. Stalin nurtures an old hatred against Rakovsky which is based on the fact that to the same degree to which Stalin is the incarnation of bureaucratic brutality and disloyalty, Rakovsky is the image of genuine revolutionary magnanimity.

The decree of expatriation against Trotsky and his family has an additional purpose and is linked with the terrorist designs of the White Guards against Trotsky. The Soviet government, which issued the news of a planned assassination by Turkul in the Rote Fahne, attaches an extremely great importance to the information furnished by the G. P. U., which is evidenced by the fact that it addresses itself officially to the Secretariat of the League of Nations, advising it of the danger threatening Lithuania on the part of the same White Guard terrorists. Although he has at his disposal data of such an importance and such concrete facts, Stalin has nevertheless not brought them to the attention of comrade Trotsky, nor to his friends up to the present; neither with regard to the character of the terrorist organization, its composition, its connections, nor its methods, etc. Only by being aware of all these circumstances can the militants of the Left Opposition, in the extremely unfavorable conditions of their exile, take the necessary preventative measures. Comrade Trotsky's companions-in-arms have more than once addressed these demands to the representatives of Stalin abroad. No information, no aid has been given to them. In other words, the Stalinist clique is concealing from Trotsky and his friends all the concrete data which it possesses concerning the planned assassination of Trotsky.

In juridical language, this manner of action is called—in case there is no direct complicity—concealing evidence. Stalin understands that very well. His personal responsibility is only too clear. Seeking for some way out, he came upon the idea of expatriating comrade Trotsky. Stalin believes that if he withdraws comrade Trotsky's Soviet passport, he will thereby diminish his own responsibility in the case of a successful attempt on the part of the white terrorists. In that case, it will not be a matter of a Soviet citizen! This miserable refuge will not be of any avail, just as all the other measures of a similar nature.

This decree, born of wrath and impotence, may cause comrade Trotsky and his family personal difficulties. But it will not change the fact, that today just as on October 25, 1917, Trotsky remains, together with Lenin, the founder of the Soviet Republic and the leader of the October revolution; that he was the organizer of the victory of the Red Army and that he is today the outstanding fighter for the proletarian revolution; while Stalin is only the candidate for the post of grave digger of the proletarian dictatorship.

Nor will this prevent what is inevitable, the downfall of the dictatorship of the degenerated Stalinist clique. This downfall is inevitable. It will not be the preparation for the downfall of the proletarian dictatorship, as the enemy class hopes, but on the contrary, for the degeneration and the bloom of proletarian democracy. It signifies the regeneration of the Comintern. It has become the indispensable premise for the success of socialist construction in the U. S. S. R. and for the development of the international revolution.

opted this resolution; since then the United Farmers of Alberta and the United Farmers of Saskatchewan at their last conventions, and the provincial convention of the Alberta Trades and Labor Councils have also taken this resolution up. In spite of the sabotage by the labor bureaucrats, the mass pressure from the rank and file forced them to take definite action. A notice was also sent out calling an Eastern Canada Emergency Conference in Hamilton, Ontario, for February 6th and 7th, to plan further a program of work. The call specifically stated that the invitation was issued to every body and person in sympathy with the views of the Conference, regardless of political belief or affiliation.

Comrade J. Silver was sent to the Hamilton Conference as the representative of the local Toronto Conference, comrade Panitch represented an auxiliary organization, and comrade Green went as the direct official delegate of the Toronto branch of the Left Opposition; all our comrades were seated.

In spite of the short time and lack of preparation in calling the Conference, it opened with 283 delegates representing 166 organizations, and 117 individuals. The Liberals, as usual, were prominent by their absence. Of the 19 trade unions represented, over half were A. F. of L. locals. The other delegates were from various auxiliary organizations, unemployed associations, language and cultural bodies, I. L. P., etc. Comrade Silver was elected on the resolutions committee and took an active part in the deliberations on that body; comrade Panitch was appointed to the Advisory Committee. The eight arrested leaders, then still out on bail awaiting the result of their appeal, were enthusiastically greeted and appointed as honorary Presidium members.

A. E. Smith presented the political report, giving an outline of the crisis, the reasons for the severe reaction in Canada, and cited the figures of the Class Terror in Canada in 1931, when 720 workers were arrested with 155 convictions; 78 workers were beaten and wounded, 3 miners brutally killed in Estevan, and 96 demonstrations and meetings smashed. The war danger was given emphasis, and a set of organizational proposals were adopted which called for the further broadening of the united front. Tim Buck and Tom Ewen, two of the arrested leaders, in their discussions, emphasized again and again that the Conference was not a Communist organization, but a movement embracing all labor body and liberal elements who agreed with its aims of fighting for free speech and assembly, and the repeal of Section 98. Buck also stated that the pressure of the masses may even force the A. F. of L. to take action, and render them also liable to Section 98.

Perspectives

Due to the bankruptcy of the Stalinist policies, loss of membership, prestige, etc., the Party was forced to adopt the Leninist principle of the United Front. This is a vindication of the program of the Left Opposition. The course taken in this conference is an involuntary admission that their previous strategy was one of isolation, and that to influence the masses, it is necessary to go into their organizations.

The Conference was but a beginning in this development. To embrace a larger number of workers within the movement is now the main task. Without clarity in principle and theory, there can be no stable movement, and the adoption of the principle of the united front has shown what can be accomplished.

Our comrades in the various organizations must see that this movement is not allowed to drift away, but to bring it into further contact with the masses.

Hail the Fourteenth Anniversary of the Red Army!

On the occasion of the fourteenth anniversary of the founding of the Red Army, we reprint below an account of the event by Victor Serge and several of the first Soviet documents bearing on the subject. Victor Serge is the translator of the French edition of the complete works of Lenin. He is a Franco-Russian Communist of long standing and a member of the Left Opposition. The chapter printed below forms part of his work Year I of the Russian Revolution (in French) and is of especial interest at present in view of the Stalinist distortions of revolutionary history in general and that of the Red Army in particular. The Red Army, in the organization of which comrade Trotsky took the leading part, was created as the army of the International revolution. Today, on the fourteenth anniversary of its foundation, with the sharpening of the class conflicts and the immensity of social struggles of an international scope, it is especially well to remember this. Long live the Red Army, the army of the world proletariat!

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE BIRTH OF THE RED ARMY

Finland, the Baltic countries, the Ukraine are occupied by the Austrians and the Germans. The Turks are entering Caucasus, at that time "independent". The British are occupying the Baku. The Rumanians are seizing Bessarabia. The Japanese are landing at Vladivostok (April 6). The revolution is surrounded in a circle of iron and fire. It needs an army. (This army must be created from the void.)

On January 2 (15), while negotiations are going on at Brest-Litovsk, a decree is issued on the establishment of a Red Army of volunteers.

The Red general staff—whatever has remained of the former general staff—calls upon the local Soviets to show their initiative by constituting new corps, the battalion of 150 men to be adopted as the unit. This appeal did not go unanswered. The real Red Army was to be created later, under the cover formed for it by these first improvised units. A Supreme Army Council was formed on

For the Unity of Spanish Communism

An Open Letter of the Spanish Left Opposition Addressed to all Communists

Comrades:

With the publication of the "Open Letter" of the Communist International to the C. P. S., the profound crisis which has been hovering over Spanish Communism as a consequence of the fundamental errors committed by the national leadership with the full acquiescence of the International has broken out into the open. A whole series of mistakes are stigmatized in this document, mistakes that the Spanish Left Opposition was the first to point out at a time when the correction of these mistakes would have marked a victorious advance of the revolution. Only when the mistakes blossoming within the party grow to their full length does the International, which defended and supported these erroneous policies and approved those responsible for them so resolutely, decide to put forward its criticism under the pressure of the rank and file and in the face of evident symptoms of the demoralization of the party, symptoms which are manifesting themselves in their full force. Two days before the publication of the "Open Letter", simple militants who had the courage to bring up criticisms less severe than that of the International in their units—were expelled from the party with the sanction of international organisms. The present crisis was not produced by a logical development of the organization, that is to say, by means of a free discussion within the party, but was fabricated artificially: imposed by the International bureaucracy.

It is logical that the leadership of the International, those most responsible for the mistakes of the Spanish leadership, are doing everything in their power to cover up the catastrophic consequences of the policy pursued in Spain. Historically, the damage caused by these political mistakes is very difficult to make good. When the rhythm of the revolution starts its process of decline, the bureaucracy of the International poses the question of the reorganization of the party. The International bureaucracy gave its assent, its support to everything that deprived the Spanish proletariat of its revolutionary party in the culminating period of the revolution. More than that, the International covered with the cloak of its authority the split in the ranks of Spanish Communism maintained by the official leadership of the party. Practically, the C. I. and the Spanish leadership, the Bullejos-Trilla-Pumarega combine, were the liquidators of the immediate perspectives opened up for the Spanish proletariat by the Fourteenth of April.

In the "Open Letter" of the Communist International are reproduced the same criticisms that, since the beginning of the Spanish revolution, were formulated by the Opposition, and for which it was insulted with the worst sort of epithets. The following accusations are made against the leadership: inability to adapt itself to the masses; sectarian narrowness; anarchistic tendencies; false analysis of the political situation; issuance of slogans incomprehensible to the masses and failure of realizing a serious will to put them into practice; a false conception of the role of the Soviets; failure to understand the meaning of the shop committees; clique control; strangulation of the expression of the rank and file; the split policy in the National Confederation of Labor. The Spanish Left Opposition believes and declares a new change of policy, imposed upon the party in a bureaucratic manner, would not have been brought about without the frank exposure of the mistakes that we have practiced. In this respect, the Opposition sees in these facts a new victory of its defense of revolutionary Marxism, applied to the Spanish revolution and the role of the party.

The Communist Left Opposition, in registering this brilliant victory of its point of view, is obliged to show to all proletarian Communists that the "Open Letter" is a direct result, although a belated one, of our criticisms. This shows clearly that even though we have been expelled from the party, our collaboration with it was undeniably a fruitful one. It would be still greater if the Opposition were allowed to occupy the place that belongs to it within the ranks of the party. It goes to show once more, that if the internal regime were one of free and democratic discussion, which is indispensable to every revolutionary proletarian organization, the criticism would be far less acute than under the present state of division, and the correction of the mistakes would take place more rapidly and more effectively, and would be immeasurably less painful. But the International bureaucracy fears the revolutionary truth and therefore persists in keeping the Bolshevik-Leninists within the ranks of the Opposition, estranged from the party.

The "Open Letter" takes special pains to cover up those mistakes committed by the Spanish party, that derive not from the lack of political understanding on the part of the national leadership, but from the theory that dominates the present course of the International—Stalinism. The root of the evil lies in the whole series of eclectic conceptions that the Stalinist school has introduced into Communism since the death of Lenin. The defeats of the Chinese, the German, the Bulgarian and now, the Spanish revolution are the consequences of the wrong tactics that derives from the disastrous article known as Stalinism.

What solutions are proposed in this "Open Letter"? The whole document is remarkable for its absolute lack of concrete solutions. It does not even propose as a definite condition, the demonstrative elimination of the direct authors of these political crimes which are denounced within it. These leaders served the International bureaucracy too faithfully and are altogether too disposed to continue serving it, for the latter to get rid of them. The solution of the problems is left to the congress of the Party, which is to meet in March, so as to give a certain democratic appearance to the bureaucratic maneuvers that are now being prepared.

The leadership of the Spanish party with the consent of the International expelled all its political opponents, the most capable militants of the party, within the last few months and accused them of the horrible crime of not withholding their criticism of the adventurist policies pursued by this leadership. The leadership was, in this manner, able to maintain the condition of monolithic tranquility. A pogrom atmosphere was created within the party, an atmosphere of terrorism against all independently thinking militants and of a systematic persecution against all sincere militants that disagreed with these methods of the leadership. In the face of the impossibility of any sort of criticism and in the face of the reign of persecution, many old militants left the party. The bureaucratization of the units killed off all their internal political life. The leaders were more interested in upholding the personal prestige of the secretary of the unit than in upholding the political line of the worker-Communists active in the units. The active militants, fearing expulsion from the party, curtailed their own opinions and did not follow the dictates of their conscience. The militants were robotized; what was asked of them was not discipline, but blind obedience.

It is in such a situation that the party convention is being prepared, which can be denounced in advance as a bureaucratic maneuver, with the aim of placating the fermentation within the ranks, resulting from the latest political mistakes of the leadership. Yet, this very International leadership is forced to admit that the party is disorganized and that it is absolutely necessary to reorganize it immediately. The development of events has clearly shown that the Left Opposition was correct and that it was the only one to foresee the policy corresponding to the needs of the party at every step in the revolution. All our activities and all our writings are the proof for this. Once more, the historic necessity of the existence of the Opposition has been justified, on a national as well as on an international scale. Nevertheless, instead of readmitting all the Oppositionists expelled for their opinions into the party, the "Open Letter" demands that the party carry on an "energetic" struggle against "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism". For the purpose of struggling against "Trotskyism", a whole factory of slanders and calumnies against the Opposition and its most outstanding militants will start to function within a short time. It will take recourse to verbal and journalistic violence at first and later on, even to physical violence. In this manner, the party bureaucracy will expiate for the mistakes it has committed, mistakes fatal for the destiny of the Spanish proletariat.

The Communist party will not be able to take the road it must take, if it does not begin its reorganization by completely eliminating the whole leading clique of adventurers which have led to the present situation. These inept and incapable leaders, veritable illiterates in so far as revolutionary Marxism is concerned, are those who are morally responsible for the defeat of the Spanish revolution. All the worker-Communists who love their party must demand the political condemnation of Bullejos and Co. The latter, with a stroke of remarkable political cynicism, are trying to evade responsibility for the debacle by resorting to accusations against the rank and file of the party, who are guilty merely of the crime of being too patient. The Communist workers will not consent any longer to have all the blame for the mistakes which are exclusively due to the party "leaders", cast upon their heads. The national bureaucrats have learned from their international allies the consistent method of submitting the rank and file to a most abominable dictatorship and of casting responsibility for the failures on their shoulders. There is one more thing that the Left Opposition cannot conceal. The present leadership of any other leading body arising from the party itself will not be able to restore its political welfare if it is going to apply to the Spanish movements the internationally disastrous methods of Stalinism. The Spanish revolution is another proof for the world proletariat of how Stalinism leads directly to defeat. This is precisely what the hired Stalinists in Spain are attempting to dissimulate before the working masses.

Just as quality of production sets a limit to the increase in the intensity of labor so the limit to increased intensity in the utilization of equipment is bound up with the problem of the working personnel. Great reserves can be made available for the further use of the old basic capital by making use of more shifts—by transfer to the 24 hour shift. The clarification of the question of the working personnel is not here our problem, everyone who follows this question, cannot but know that this problem cannot be solved in the near future and that, therefore, the reserves available by the increase of shifts can be utilized only to a very small degree. The question of the working personnel arises also, of course in connection with new enterprises but we will not take up this matter in this connection. Here it is important for us to show that the shortage of working personnel bound up with the impossibility of a further "loading" of the existing personnel creates a barrier for the further increase in the quantitative indices by this means.

The third factor lies beyond industry itself although it is closely bound up with it. It is the shortage of agricultural raw materials for light industry. Due to shortage of raw materials the volume of production in light industry fell in two months (May and June) by nearly 30%. During these two months the plan was only slightly over 50% fulfilled. The volume of production in the Fats Industry decreased in April by 15.5%, in May by 15.7%, in June by 38.6% of the figures for May, which means that it practically nearly ceased production. Production in the Food Industry decreased in April by 15.5%, in May by 12.9%, in June by 23.7%. The situation in the Sugar Industry, which was practically at a halt in June, is absolutely catastrophic. For the last year only 42.8% of the production capacity of the sugar industry was realized. From these figures alone we see that we deal not only with individual breaks in certain branches but with a sharp decline of production nearly in the whole light munists not only from defeating both the social democrats and the Fascists, but even from preparing the defense of the working class from ruthless extermination at the hands of Hitler's bands. Therein lies the great danger in Germany.

The only way the Fascists can be defeated is by uniting the forces of the proletariat for action. The only way the social democratic influence can be wiped out from the working class movement is by recognizing their actual role by forcing them into a united front on the basis of a struggle against Fascism, by showing to the workers in the course of united action that the impotent and servile policies of the social democracy can only pave the way for Fascism.

The Severing incident is a striking lesson in proof of this. Severing and the social democrats say they want to fight Fascism. Here they had a chance. Did Severing, who had ground enough from the material confiscated in the raids, proceed to outlaw and disrupt the Nazi organizations? He did not. Service creature that he is, he feared to come into conflict with the federal government, with the Hindenburg-Bruening-Groener regime, which is consciously aiding the Fascists. In a united front movement with the organizations which Severing and his ilk are leading, the Communists could press the social democratic traitors and cowards to the wall. They would be forced to show their color. A Severing could be forced to break with the bourgeoisie — which is unwilling — or be driven out of the movement, in an instance like the present. In any case, the social democracy would lose its identity rapidly and be wiped out. The working class would be solidified and readied for revolutionary action.

The Fascists are concentrating all their efforts on the situation in Prussia. They are waiting for the Landtag (Diet) elections next month before they strike. That is their strategy. They mean to start out with a seizure of power in this central German province first. It is in Prussia that the social democracy has its stronghold. There is not much time to lose. If the Fascists are to be repulsed, if the working class is to avoid defeat, if the Communist movement is to avoid disaster, a complete reorientation of the policy of the German Communist Party must take place. The confusion of "social Fascism" must be cleared up. The Marxist appraisal of the situation given by comrade Trotsky and the Left Opposition must be transposed into the flesh and blood of the German Communists.

industry with a complete suspension in certain branches. Even if the industry itself were in no degree at fault in this matter, the fact of the matter would remain and would have to be reckoned with. In truth, industry is not at fault. We see here the effects which we have warned against several times previously: the delay in the development of industry became the cause for the delay in the development of agriculture.

The above article rightly ascribes the basic causes for the shortage in agricultural raw materials to the following: (1) incorrect price policy; (2) incorrect regulating of the distribution of manufactured goods to producers of agricultural raw materials; (3) the lagging behind of the fertilizer industries. During the current year only 25% of the demand for fertilizers was satisfied. (4) Acute shortage of machines for the cultivation of technical cultures and a nearly complete absence of harvesting machines, due to which the sowing and first plowing of the majority of technical cultures is done by primitive hand method.

All these are direct results of the lagging behind of industry. The study of the question of quantitative indices in connection with the above mentioned factors permits us to make the following fundamental conclusions: (1) the official figures of quantitative growth represent just a statistical fiction due to the ignoring of the quality of production. Only by taking quality into account can we obtain comparable quantity indices. (2) In so far as a quantitative growth actually took place it was based to a decisive degree of the use of a greater number of workers and on the increase of the intensity of labor. (3) In using this method of increase in quantity which contains in itself the conditions leading to its failure and does not at all guarantee the further growth of quantity indices, thus we reach a limit beyond which the further use of this method can give only negative results for the national economy. And this method has now been used to the utmost. (4) The question of the further growth of quantity indices and even of maintaining the level already acquired is directly bound up with the problem of giving industry a new materio-technical base.

This question is decided by the amount of accumulation and capital building of which we will treat further on.

"The above constitutes the last instalment of one chapter of a larger work by comrade Rakovsky. The condition of exile and ruthless physical persecution imposed upon our comrade by the Stalin clique make for the belated publication of his work by the Left Opposition press. At the present time, the whereabouts of comrade Rakovsky are not even known. The repression of the Stalinist against this valiant revolutionary leader have been particularly vicious. The last that has been heard of him is that he was in a frightful and alarming state of health and that no consideration was to be expected of the regime. No revolutionist will forget this crime of Stalinism.—Ed.

Hail the Red Army

The recruitment campaign had very good but inadequate results. On April 1, Petrograd offered 25,000 volunteers, Moscow—more than 15,000. 106,000 volunteers reported in six weeks.

A DECREE OF THE COUNCIL OF PEOPLE'S COMMISSARS

Petrograd, January 15, 1918

The old army was a class instrument of the bourgeoisie for the oppression of the working class. The seizure of power by the laboring class and the class of those who possess nothing has made the creation of a new army necessary. This new army will have the task of protecting the Soviet power and of constituting the base on which the regular army will be transformed into a power founded on the arming of the whole people; furthermore, the new army will serve to support the Socialist revolution that is approaching in Europe.

I.

In the execution of the preceding, the Council of People's Commissars has decided to organize the new army on the following basis and under the name "Red Workers' and Peasants' Army".

1. The red workers' and peasants' army is composed of the most conscious and best organized elements of the working class.

2. Every citizen of the Russian republic over 18 years of age can enter its ranks. All those may enter the Red Army, who are prepared to put their forces and their life at the service of the defense of the conquests of October.

Rebel Miners in Action!

sciousness among the coal miners to the treacherous role of these officials and their growing readiness to combat them. In other words it offers the increasing opportunities for the Left wing to find the common base for these movements and through them to unite for the common immediate objectives.

Of such steps there is no sign whatever. The official Communist Party which is the potential force to give this direction is, when considering this as the essential task, failing just as miserably as the other confused and opportunist groups. The National Miners Union, which it leads, has not yet at any time pursued a policy genuinely aiming at uniting the rebellious movements. It has thereby, in the same manner as the other groupings, been hemmed in within the localizing barriers of each separate struggle, confining itself purely to the spontaneous movement of the workers themselves, lacking perspective, failing actually to organize and losing ground so that it still commands only a few scattered, small and ill-functioning locals. Under such conditions the militancy it displays, the working class and revolutionary propaganda it spreads, becomes entirely too much negated.

A National Perspective for a United Front

While the series of localized spontaneous miners struggles from the past to the present have certainly served to advance the miners to higher levels of experience and consciousness they have most often in their direct implication resulted in defeats and weakening of their organization. The John L. Lewis administration pursued that method as a deliberate policy to serve the operators. But it should have taught us all that when local strikes are so often defeated the object must be the national extension. With the present trend of the struggle, directed, and of necessity so, equally against the U. M. W. official treachery, the national objective must, of course, stand out so much more clearly.

But this is only one side of the question. The other is the need of the actual unification of the rebel movements. Here lies the real task for the revolutionary forces, for the official Communist Party. To talk about establishing "independent leadership" in these struggles, as it does, or to talk about furnishing a program for them without taking into account this burning question of the necessity of a speedy united front of the rebel movements becomes pure nonsense. To proceed to build committees of independent leadership within them endeavoring to struggle independently and in opposition to them is wrong. It is particularly erroneous to endeavor to build the National Miners Union within these rebel movements of the U. M. W. What is needed there is a Left wing of these movements, firmly established, working as part of, and with the movements, criticizing and fighting against opportunist leaders, and working in the closest possible co-operation with the Left wing forces in the National Miners Union. Proceeding from such a basis it should not become an all too difficult task to build a united front in reality of these various movements struggling in common for the common immediate objectives: to dislodge the influence and control of the Lewis machine and for better working conditions. In such a united front movement the Communists would certainly play the main role of leadership provided they pursue Communist policies. They could thus become a much more important factor in uniting the working class against the common enemy.

of the Soviet power and of socialism. For entrance into the Red Army, the following recommendations are necessary: those of the military committee or those of the civil organizations who depend upon the Soviet power, those of the party or the trade unions—more strictly speaking, the recommendations of two members of one of these organizations. In case an entire division enters the Red Army, collective recommendations and a nominal vote are necessary.

II.

1. The families of members of the Red workers' and peasants' army are supported by the state and receive a monthly subsidy of 50 rubles.

2. The invalid members of the families of soldiers, who have previously been supported by the soldiers, will continue to receive aid according to the local statutes and according to the regulations of the local Soviet.

III.

The Council of People's Commissars is the supreme directing organism of the Red workers' and peasants' army. The immediate conduct of the army and its administration are concentrated in the Military Commissariat and particularly in the all-Russian collegium.

WHAT NEXT? -- by Leon Trotsky

signify only the resurrection of all the contradictions on the very next successive stage, only in still more acute and concentrated form.

In terms of world economy, Europe is on the downward trend. Already the forehead of Europe is plastered beyond removal with American labels: the Dawes plan, the Young Plan, Hoover's moratorium. Europe is placed thoroughly on American rations.

The decay of capitalism results in social and cultural decomposition. The road is barred for further methodical differentiation within the nation, for the further growth of the proletariat at the expense of the diminution of intermediate classes. Further prolongation of the crisis can bring in its trail only the pauperization of the petty bourgeoisie and the transformation of ever increasing groups of workers into the lumpenproletariat. In its most acute form, it is this threat that grips advanced capitalist Germany by the throat.

The rottenest portion of putrefying capitalist Europe is the social democratic bureaucracy. It entered upon its historical journey under the banner of Marx and Engels. For its goal it placed the overthrow of the rule of the bourgeoisie. The powerful upsurge of capitalism caught it up and dragged it in its wake. In the name of reform, the social democracy betrayed the revolution, at first by its actions and later by its very words. Kautsky, forsooth, for a long time still defended the phraseology of revolution, making it serve as a handmaiden to the requirements of reformism. Bernstein, on the contrary, demanded the renunciation of revolution: for capitalism was entering the period of peaceful development without crises, and without wars. A paragon of prophets! Apparently, between Kautsky and Bernstein there was an irreconcilable divergence. Actually, however, they symmetrically complemented one another as the right and left boots on the feet of reformism.

The war came. The social democracy supported the war in the name of future prosperity. Instead of prosperity decay set in. Then the problem resolved itself no longer in concluding from the inadequacy of capitalism the inevitability of revolution; nor was it one of reconciling the workers with capitalism by means of reforms. The new policies of the social democracy now consisted in making society safe for the bourgeoisie at the cost of sacrificing reforms.

But even this was not the last stage of degeneracy. The present crisis that is convulsing capitalism obliged the social democracy to sacrifice the fruits achieved after protracted economic and political struggles and thus to reduce the German workers to the plane of existence of their fathers, grandfathers and great-grandfathers. There is no historical spectacle more tragic and at the same time more repulsive than the fetid disintegration of reformism amid the wreckage of all its conquests and hopes. The theater is raving in its straining for modernism. Let it stage more often Hauptmann's "The Weavers": this most modern of modern dramas. But the director of the theater must not forget to reserve the dress circle for the leaders of the social democracy.

Incidentally, however, these leaders are in no mood for the theater: they have reached the utmost limits of their adaptability. There is a level beneath which the working class of Germany cannot drop willingly or for any length of time. Moreover, the bourgeois régime, fighting for its existence, is in no mood to recognize this level. The emergency decrees of Brüning are only the beginning, only feelers to get the lay of the land. Brüning's régime rests upon the cowardly and perfidious support of the social democratic bureaucracy which in its turn depends upon the sullen, half-hearted support of a section of the proletariat. The system based on bureaucratic decrees is unstable, unreliable, temporary. Capitalism requires another, more decisive policy. The support of the social democracy with its one eye ever cocked on its own workers, is not only insufficient for its purposes, but has already become irksome. The period of half-way measures has passed. In order to try to find a way out, the bourgeoisie must absolutely rid itself of the pressure exerted by the workers' organizations, these must needs be eliminated, destroyed, utterly crushed.

At this juncture, the historic role of Fascism begins. It sets on its feet those classes that are immediately above the proletariat and who are ever in dread of being forced down into its ranks; it organizes and militarizes them at the expense of finance capital, under the cover of the official government, and it directs them to the extirpation of proletarian organizations, from the most revolutionary to the most conservative.

Fascism is not merely a system of reprisals, of brutal force, and of police terror. Fascism is a particular governmental system based on the uprooting of all elements of proletarian democracy within bourgeois society. The task of Fascism lies not only in destroying the Communist advance guard but in holding the entire class in a state of forced disunity. To this end the physical annihilation of the most revolutionary section of the workers does not suffice. It is also necessary to smash all independent and voluntary organizations, to demolish all the defensive bulwarks of the proletariat, and to uproot whatever has been achieved during three quarters of a century by the social democracy and the trade unions. For, in the last analysis, the Communist party also bases itself on these achievements.

The social democracy has prepared all the conditions necessary for the triumph of Fascism. But by this fact it has also prepared the stage for its own political liquidation. It is absolutely correct to place on the social democrats the responsibility for the emergency legislation of Brüning as well as for the impending danger of Fascist savagery. It is absolute balderdash to identify social democracy with Fascism.

By its policies during the revolution of 1848, the liberal bourgeoisie prepared the stage for the triumph of counter revolution, which in turn emasculated liberalism. Marx and Engels lashed the German liberal bourgeoisie no less sharply than Lassalle did, and their criticism was more profound than his. But when the Lassalleans dumped the feudal counter-revolution together with the liberal bourgeoisie into "one reactionary mass", Marx and Engels were justly outraged by this false ultra-radicalism. The erroneous position of the Lassalleans turned them on several occasions into involuntary aids of the monarchy, despite the general progressive nature of their work, which was infinitely more important and consequential than the achievements of liberalism.

The theory of "social Fascism" reproduces the basic error of the Lassalleans on a new historical background. After dumping National Socialists and social democrats into one Fascist pile, the Stalinist bureaucracy flies headlong into such activities as backing the Hitler referendum; which in its own fashion is in no wise superior to Lassalle's alliances with Bismarck.

In the present phase, German Communism in its struggle against the social democracy must lean on two inseparable facts: (a) the political responsibility of the social democracy for the strength of Fascism; (b) absolute irreconcilability between Fascism and those workers' organizations on which the social democracy itself depends.

The contradictions within German capitalism have at present reached such a state of tension that an explosion is inevitable. The adaptability of the social democracy has reached that limit beyond which lies self-annihilation. The mistakes of the Stalinist bureaucracy have reached that limit beyond which lies catastrophe. Such is the three-fold formula that characterizes the situation in Germany. Everything is now poised on the razor edge of a knife.

When of necessity one must follow conditions in Germany through newspapers that arrive almost a week late; when one must allow another week before manuscripts may bridge the gap between Constantinople and Berlin; after which additional weeks must pass before the pamphlet reaches its public, involuntarily the question arises, "Won't it be altogether too late? And each time one answers oneself: No! The armies that are drawn up for battle are too colossal that one need fear a simultaneous settlement of the issue at the speed of greased lightning. The strength of facts will make itself heard more imperiously of the German proletariat has not been drained. Its powers have not as yet been brought into play. The logic of facts will make itself heard more imperiously with every passing day. And this justifies the author's attempt to add what he has to say even if it is delayed a few weeks, i. e., an entire historical period.

The Stalinist bureaucracy came to the conclusion that it would be able to complete its labors more peacefully were the author of these pages confined in Prinkipo. It obtained from the government of Herman Mueller, the social democrat, a refusal or a visa for... "a menshevik": in this instance the united front was established without any wavering or delay. Today, in official Soviet publications, the Stalinists are broadcasting the news that I am "defending" Brüning's government in accordance with an agreement made with the social democracy, which in return is pulling strings to allow me the right of entry into Germany. Instead of becoming indignant over such viciousness, I permit myself to laugh at its stupidity. But I must cut short my laughter, for time is pressing.

There cannot be the slightest doubt that the course of events will demonstrate the correctness of our position. But in what manner will history demonstrate its proof: Through the catastrophe of the Stalinist faction, or through the victory of Marxist policies?

Therein lies at present the crux of the entire question. [This question is the question of the fate of the German nation, and not of its fate alone.]

The problems that are analyzed in this pamphlet did not originate yesterday. It is nine years now since the leadership of the Comintern has busied itself with the revaluation of values and with disorganizing the advance guard of the international proletariat by means of tactical convulsions which in their totality fall under the label of "the general line". The Russian Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists) was formed not only because of Russian problems but also because of international ones. Among these, the problems of the revolutionary development in Germany occupied by no means the last place. Sharp divergences on this subject date back from 1923. During the succeeding years the author of these pages spoke more than once on these debatable questions. A considerable portion of my critical works has been published in German. The present pamphlet is in its turn a contribution to the theoretical and political work of the Left Opposition. Much that is mentioned hereafter only in passing was in its time submitted to detailed analysis. Therefore I must needs refer my readers for particulars to my books, THE DRAFT PROGRAM OF THE COMINTERN—A Criticism of Fundamentals, THE STRATEGY OF THE WORLD REVOLUTION, THE PERMANENT REVOLUTION, etc. Now, at the time when these divergences appear before everybody in the light of a great historical task, it is possible to estimate their origins much better and more profoundly. For the serious revolutionary, for the true Marxist such a study is absolutely essential. Ecclectics live by means of episodic thoughts and improvisations that originate under the impact of events. Marxist cadres capable of leading the proletarian revolution are trained only by the continual and successive working out of problems and disputes.

Marine Workers on Trial

The trial of the three marine workers, which was interrupted for a week on account of the illness of Assistant District Attorney Capozzoli, was resumed Monday in the court of General Sessions No. 1 before Judge Allen. With six witnesses for the prosecution already examined, the contents of the state are already before the jury. The great conspiracy announced last November, with such a fireworks of publicity and cries of the red terror, is taking on the character of a farce at the trial. The gigantic "dynamite plot" to "blow up the shipping" in the New York harbor has dwindled down in the actual testimony to the claim that the defendants were responsible in some way or another for a leak about the size of a quarter which was discovered in the bottom of a worn out sand and gravel barge.

The first witness was John Schimmel, night watchman on the barge "Anthony", owned by the O'Boyle Transportation Company, a non-union concern and complainant in the case. Schimmel testified that on November 4, 1931, at about one o'clock in the morning, he heard a noise that brought him on deck to investigate. Finding nothing there, he went to the hold of the boat and discovered a small hole through which water was entering. He also claimed that a man, whom he now "identifies" as Bunker, called to him from the pier to which the boat was moored and asked him if he had a place to sleep that night. On cross examination it was brought out that the only light on the boat was a kerosene lamp on the cabin 70 or 80 feet from the place where he was standing. There were no lights on the pier, and the only street lights were more than 500 feet away. In addition to these difficulties in the way of positive identification under the circumstances, it was brought out in cross-examination that Schimmel was both hard at hearing and afflicted with poor eyesight. It was also shown that he was a non-union man, working for a $1 a day. He was once a member of the Tidewater Boatmen's Union, he said, but admitted he had been "always in trouble with them" and thought "unions were no good".

The next witness, named Murphy, a "runner" for O'Boyle testified that he went on board the good ship "Anthony" about 2 A. M. on November 4th and went into the hold to examine the leak. He found it stuffed up with some material. He also said there was some water in the hold, although on cross-examination, he admitted that he had inspected the boat on the previous day found water in the hold on that occasion. This witness also "found" a battery and some wires and an old alarm clock, which were put in evidence as the instruments with which the shipping in the harbor was to be blown up.

The testimony of Schimmel, the dollar a day hero who had positively identified Bunker, was further discredited by the cross examination of Scarr, of the U. S. Weather Bureau, New York District. As Scarr testified that at 2 A. M. on the day in question, there was a waning moon, and that a shadow cast by a person standing in front of the moon, as it was established the man whom Schimmel "identified" as Bunker stood, would be hard to recognize.

John Hickey, the manager of the O'Boyle Transportation Company, who has been one of the leading fighters against the union in the harbor, gave a touching display of innocence and of disinterestedness in the labor side of the case. It was brought out, on cross-examination, that he has acted as a State's witness in many cases. He "didn't know" if he had any union men in his employ, but admitted that he paid less than the union scale. He didn't know anything about the unions on the water front. "The police," he said, "should know about them." He had never been heard of by the I. T. B. U. before.

This man, who gets a salary of $4500 a year for his efficiency as a union smasher, admitted on cross-examination that he gave money to Hoyle, who is regarded as the provocateur in the case. The cross examination of defense attorney Peter L. F. Sabbatino and the bizzare explanations of the witness on this point, evoked a lot of merriment in the court room. Hickey, who has never been known as a spendthrift, got a fit of magnanimity on the day that the defendants were arraigned. Hoyle, he said, asked him for a quarter for cigarettes. But big-hearted Hickey opened his pocketbook and handed him a bill, with the remark—so he said—"share it with the other boys."—the union men whom he is trying to railroad.

The next witness was Lieutenant Leonard of the Harbor Police Squad. He admitted, by way of confirmation, you might say, of Hickey's contention that the union was no way involved—that the headquarters of the I. T. B. U. had been raided, a police padlock put on the door, and the files taken to police headquarters. Leonard knew, he said, that the defendants were union men but "didn't know anything about the Tidewater Boatmen's union or any other union on the water front."

Further ignorance of any connection of unionism with the prosecution was exhibited by detective Boile, who said he examined Hoyle "in a little room" at the police station and "got a statement from him." Boile knew nothing whatever about unions on the water front, he said, and had never heard of the I. T. B. U., nor of the defendants.

As The Militant goes to press the trial is still in progress, and is expected to continue for at least another week. The Marine Workers' Defense Committee is appealing for financial support for the expenses of the legal defense. The Communist League, which is affiliated with the Defense Committee, decided at its last meeting to concentrate its activities in the next ten days on the raising of funds for the defense. The address of the Marine Defense Committee is 82 East 10th St., to which contributions should be sent.

In case of actual danger, the social democracy banks not on the "Iron Front" but on the Prussian police. It is reckoning without its host! The fact that the police was originally recruited in large numbers from among social democratic workers is absolutely meaningless. Consciousness is determined by environment even in this instance. The worker who becomes a policeman in the service of the capitalist state, is a bourgeois cop, not a worker. Of late years these policemen have had to do much more fighting with revolutionary workers than with Nazi students. Such training does not fail to leave its effects. And above all: every policeman knows that though governments may change, the police remains.

In its new-year's issue, the theoretical organ of the social democracy, "Das Freie Wort" (what a wretched sheet!), prints an article in which the policy of "toleration", is expounded in its highest sense. Hitler, it appears, can never come into power against the police and the Reichswehr. Now, according to the constitution, the Reichswehr is under the command of the president of the Republic. Therefore Fascism, it follows, is not dangerous so long as a president faithful to the constitution remains at the head of the government. Bruening's régime must be supported until the presidential elections so that a constitutional president may then be elected, through an alliance with the parliamentary bourgeoisie; and thereby Hitler's road to power will be blocked for another seven years. The above is, as given, the literal context of the article. A mass party, leading millions (toward socialism!) holds that the question as to which class will come to power in present day Germany, which is shaken to

*The article is signed with the modest initials E. H. They should be engraved for posterity. Generations of workers have not labored in vain. Great revolutionary thinkers and fighters did not journey over this earth without leaving their mark. E. H. exists, stays on his job, and points the way to the German proletariat.

Evil tongues would have it that E. H. is closely related to E. Hellmann, who so besmirched himself during the war by the most sordid kind of chauvinism. Impossible! What such a lucid head . . . ?

Open Letter to the C.E.C. of the U.S.S.R.

With inevitable delay I learn from Pravda of your decision of February 20, 1932, depriving me and the members of my family sharing with me expulsion, exile and work of the rights of Soviet citizenship and forbidding our entry to the U. S. S. R. Wherein my "counter-revolutionary" activity lies, the decision does not say. If we should discount the polemical rituals against "Trotskyism", there were cited in my supposed activity only two instances of my supposed activity which could have been characterized as counter-revolutionary—had they actually occurred.

Pravda of July 2, 1931, carried with corresponding commentaries, a photostatic reproduction of the first page of the Polish newspaper Kurier Podzenny containing an article supposedly by me and directed against the Soviet Union. It is understood that none of you doubted for a moment that this article presents a forgery of a filthy sheet, well-known for its falsifications. The same newspaper shortly thereafter forged documents against Galician (Ukrainian) revolutionaries. Even the bourgeois press, such

The six-to-one decision of the Alabama Supreme Court upholding the death sentences of seven of the nine Scottsboro prisoners is a class verdict. It is necessary only briefly to review the case to prove this and to give the lie to the N. A. A. C. P. saboteurs, the socialists and their liberal supporters like the New Republic, all of whom have claimed that the verdict of guilty and sentence of death were the result of the hatred stirred up by the agitation of the Communists.

The nine Negro boys on their way to look for work were taken off a freight train and charged with stealing a ride. But, upon the subsequent discovery on the train of two white girls, the charge was changed forthwith to rape, which, in Alabama, is a capital crime.

The intention of the Southern bourgeois to dispatch the boys with all possible expedition was clearly revealed by the arrangements made for and conduct of the trial. It was held on fair day in a court house surrounded by a lynch mob, held in check by promises from the militia that verdicts of guilty would be speedily forthcoming. The task of the prosecution was made easier by the collaboration of the N. A. A. C. P. "defense" lawyer who produced no witnesses and refused to ask for an acquittal. The trial required only three days. The verdict was guilty. The sentence was death by electrocution. The entire elapsed time between arrest and conviction was only fifteen days.

The decision of the Supreme Court upholds this verdict and sentence. It affirms that the trial was fair and impartial. It says that the militia which fraternized with the mob while it marched around the court house singing the Star Spangled Banner and stopping only to cheer the verdict of guilty " . . . was notice to everybody that the strong arm of the State was there to assure the accused of a lawful trial."

The six robed and dignified justices found no ground for reversal in the speed of the trial, basing themselves on the precedent created in the speedy trial and execution of Czolgosz, the assassin of McKinley. It is true, they argue, that in the Scottsboro case, no one was assassinated (they intend to accomplish this en masse on May 13th); but, they say, " . . . we are of the opinion that some things may happen to one worse than death and if the evidence is to be believed one of these things happened to this defenseless woman, Victoria Price . . ."

The verdict of the Supreme Court speaks the intention of the capitalist class to make a significant example of these boys; to warn the super-exploited, suppressed Negro masses of a similar fate for all who aspire to political, economic and social equality, and dare to struggle for it. It is the familiar answer of the capitalist class to all working class protest—the frame-up. The verdict is a class verdict. The case is a working class issue.

To this class verdict the working class must reply by a united, fighting, mass movement. The working class must close its ranks. It must say to the capitalist class that it will not permit nine of its members to be electrocuted. Through this case the white and black masses must begin to achieve the unity indispensable for the overthrow of capitalism.

The class verdict must be answered by a class fight. For this the I. L. D. and C. P. must break through the shell of their isolation. They must go to the masses with the proposal to unite on this issue. The logic of the situation leads with irresistible force to the tactic of the united front of working class organizations.

To rely upon a president is only to rely upon "the government". Faced with the impending clash between the proletariat and the Fascist petty bourgeoisie—two camps which together comprise the crushing majority of the German nation—these Marxists from the "Vorwärts" yelp for the night watchman to come to their aid, "Help! Government exert pressure!" (Staat, greif zu!). Which means, "Bruening, please don't force us to defend ourselves with the might of workers' organizations, for this will only arouse the entire proletariat; and then the movement will rise above the bald-pates, or our party leadership: beginning as anti-Fascists, it will end Communist."

The effect which the appeals of the social democracy produce on the state apparatus, on the judges, the Reichswehr and the police cannot fail to be just the opposite to the one desired. The most "loyal" functionary, the most "neutral", the least bound to the social democracy can reason only thus: "Millions are behind the social democrats; enormous resources are in their hands: the press, the parliament, the municipalities; their own hides are at stake; in the struggle against the Fascists they are assured of the support

The intention of the Southern bourgeois to dispatch the boys with all possible expedition was clearly revealed by the arrangements made for and conduct of the trial. It was held on fair day in a court house surrounded by a lynch mob, held in check by promises from the militia that verdicts of guilty would be speedily forthcoming. The task of the prosecution was made easier by the collaboration of the N. A. A. C. P. "defense" lawyer who produced no witnesses and refused to ask for an acquittal. Hearst's Program and the Petty Bourgeoisie

The middle bourgeoisie is pressed between the two great contending classes of today, the capitalist and working classes. It is finding its position more precarious as the contradictions between socialized production and capitalist appropriation increase. The deepening crisis is causing them to move, and at present they are running around in circles. American capitalism is concentrating and centralizing the industrial and financial structure to a "higher" level. This squeezes the middle-class to a greater degree between the embryo battle formations of the capitalists and the workers.

One phase of the middle-class reaction to this development is expressed through the Hearst program. The Hearst papers advocate 15 points as their program for America. It clearly reflects the contradictions of the middle class and at the same time shows that the imperialist offensive pulls in its wake this chain of papers for its own ends. The few sugar-coated measures turn out to be walls which the reformers hope to erect between the Communist forces and the working class. The burden, in preventing the building of these walls, rests upon the Communist Party by means of a correct Marxian struggle for immediate demands as against a reformist policy.

Wants Cheap, Efficient Government

Four of the fifteen measures are advocated for the purpose of obtaining a more centralized, cheap, efficient Government. They call for proportional representation in the United States Senate which would give the middle class and small industrialist a better hand at fighting the monopolies and trusts. They advocate the abolition of the electoral college. They want to end the lame duck sessions so that the new president and congress can sit right after elections. They want the modification of the Volstead Act. These measures would centralize, cheapen and make more efficient the Government apparatus. Where on the one hand, the demand for proportional representation in Congress is intended to satisfy the big capitalists, the modification of the Volstead Act, on the other hand, is designed for the workers in order to catch their votes. The A. F. of L. bureaucracy and a large section of the workers are swept behind the middle class attempt to stem the tide by these measures.

The Middle Class Demands

One plank, "Honest friendship with all nations—entangling alliances with none," is the worn-out attempt to pull the results of the productive forces of American capitalism back into the national boundaries. This plank is hopelessly reactionary and utopian. It can only stir up the nationalism of the exploiting rulers, playing upon the "patriotism" of the working class and middle class youth, and paying the way for a nationalism that develops into dangerous proportion as the crises deepen—dangerous against the working class.

The middle class is not so dumb that they do not see the effects of the crises and trend of imperialism against the workers. And, knowing that an aroused and class-conscious working class may tip over the boat and spill all the profits, they move certain measures as reforms. These reforms have the purpose of creating, instead of a class-conscious proletariat, a contented and docile, American working class. They propose such things as a thirteen month calendar, with all holidays falling on Saturday, and a five day week. But if all holidays fall on a Saturday it will cut from under the five day week. The middle class needs a docile class in order to reap profits in all their avenues of exploitation. They want a Secretary of Education, and Federal control of education. All in all, reforms from the top in order to head off the pressure of the workers from below. Far sighted middle class politicians see the writing on the wall that the blind Stalinists cannot see. The slogan for the Six Hour day and the Five Day week with no reduction of pay—a class slogan of first magnitude for immediate demands, that can be turned against the capitalist class and cement together a larger section of our own class—has been snatched up and exploited by the middle class reformers because the Stalinists don't understand the differences between a revolutionary struggle for immediate demands and a reformist utilization of them.

Jingoism Breaks Through

Three of the measures are outright jingoist planks, natural sequences of Hearst's past Mexican campaign and his present Japanese campaign. Hearst wants the French and English West Indies as part payments of debts. He wants the Nicaragua Canal to be started at once for commerce and defense. He wants the army, navy and aviation under a Secretary of National Defense. An unbroken bridge spans Pacificism, Jingoism and Imperialism. Each serves its purpose in a different way, but all for the same end.

A Dangerous Stalinist Slogan

In the workers ranks also opportunism makes strange bed-fellows. The Social Democratic leaders played their role in this evolution in 1914. In America where pacifism wants the United States to boycott Japan for her present acts in China, the Stalinists want us to expel the Japanese representatives in America. It is true the Stalinists have not travelled the road as far as the Social Democrats did in the last war, but it was just such a way that led the Social Democrats on the path to social-patriotism—by seeing the worst imperialist, not at home, but across the border. The Marxists fight against all imperialists but FIRST and at all times against "their own". It is our special and political task to unmask the treacherous and despicable role of American Imperialism in the Far East, in the League of Nations, in the disarmament conference and at home.

One measure of the Hearst program calls for a five billion federal loan for public works. This measure, as well as others, has enabled him to corral large numbers of workers. Hearst is against the Bankers' role in the form of the two billion dollar credit pool, and he is against a dole (social insurance) for the workers; but he wants a dole of five billion that would be divided among the exploiters with a goodly share going to the middle class and a few crumbs for the workers.

Anti-Working Class Program

The three remaining planks we have not yet spoken of are so clearly anti-working class measures that even the blind could recognize them. Hearst wants a federal tax and excise tax to replace the income tax. True, workers must keep their eyes on the point of production and not devote too much time to beating down the cost of living. They must keep their eyes on the relation of forces between the classes. But the capitalist class can use the lever of taxes and prices and currency manipulations to further worsen the workers' conditions. And at this stage, the sales tax, just like inflation, will take its toll among the workers.

Hearst wants selective immigration and deportation of "undesirable" aliens, etc. Yes, Hearst is longing for the "good old just", for the docile American born worker, who was satisfied with a "full dinner pail". The Hearst program only shows some of the many contradictions of the middle class. In resisting the encroachments of the big capitalists they make a gesture toward the workers. In fear of the militancy of the working class, they support the most reactionary measures. Between these two great classes, the workers and the capitalists, the middle class is fighting for its life.

The stronger the pressure from either side the greater the contradiction in their camp. The Hearst program is aiming both ways, but ends—as all centre forces must end—by helping the strongest forces in the struggle; and since capitalism and imperialism is at present on the offensive, the independent middle class action, in its own special way, works against the proletariat.

Second Month of Militant Drive

As we turn the corner to speed down the second third of the drive there begins to loom before us—June 1st—on which date the drive closes. And behind June 1st looms darkly the period of the summer recession. Against their inexorable approach we are able to record this week some progress over last week's report. The standing of new and renewed subs, and new bundle orders is as follows: New York—17; Minneapolis—5; Boston—4; Chicago—3; St. Louis—1; Newark—1; Philadelphia—1; Misc.—12; New bundle orders: Chicago—2; Newark—1.

The staff of Militant builders is now a little larger and reads as follows: A. Konikov—4; J. Carter—1; W. Curran—1; C. Cowley—1; Zalmanoff—1; L. Basky—1; R. Sacharow—1.

What our comrades and sympathizers must realize is the necessity, the absolute and sheer necessity, of building the circulation of The Militant. On Sept. 29, 1931 comrade Trotsky in sending greetings to El Soviet wrote, "The resolution does not wait. Woe to those that lag behind. With all my heart I wish you may not prove to be lagging behind." Great struggles are preparing in the U. S. The German situation is developing toward a decisive historical moment. In Spain further revolutionary struggles are inevitable. We must not, dare not lag behind.

We must strive with all our power to reach a wider and ever wider circle of Left wing and working class militants. We must penetrate with The Militant deeper into the party and its auxiliaries, into all working class organizations. The technique for doing this is worked out: literature premiums, combined subscription, rates, special rates for bundle orders, a special 25c sub for eight issues, and free mass distributions postpaid to the distributor.

Now, in addition to these inducements we are able to offer a political inducement which in conjunction with the others should be decisive for subscriber and subscription getter alike. We refer to the series of extracts from comrade Trotsky's new work on Germany, What Next? appearing in The Militant.

Among the Drug Clerks

Is the leadership of the T. U. U. L., and especially, of the Medical Workers Union aware that a Drug Clerk's Union was recently organized under the guardianship of the A. F. of L. reactionaries, and is already counting close to 400 members in its ranks?

I read the Daily Worker every day, but I failed to "discover" in its news columns any mention of the existence of such an organization as the Drug Clerk's Union.

Was it printed in such infinitely small type that only a microscope of an appreciable magnifying power could detect its presence? Is it against the principles of Communist theory and practice to divulge news concerning reactionary and reformist trade unions? Or are these "leaders" so preoccupied with building socialism in one country, that such trifles are apt to escape their "vigilant eye"? This "infantile disorder" of ignoring reactionary trade unions, which had afflicted German Communism in its infancy and against which Lenin had so vehemently fought, has since Lenin's death relapsed and appeared again in a different form, but pathologically identical. It has appeared in the form of "social fascism" "united front from below only" and other consequential complications. These acute infantile disorders have, under the personal supervision of "Doc" Stalin, developed into a gangrenous sore permeating the blood stream of the fighting organ of the proletariat with the toxins of "social fascism" and other related toxins and thus isolating it from the living body—the working masses.

It is obvious that a trade union policy flowing from such an attitude towards reactionary and reformist trade unions is fatal to the vanguard and the revolutionary movement. The terrible consequences of such a policy are being daily registered on the pages of the history of not only the American revolutionary movement but of that in all countries where Stalinists are in the leadership.

The medical workers union has, not long ago, made an attempt to organize the drug clerks. It failed. Has this fact ever been disclosed in the official party press? No. Why not?

Is not there anything at all for the revolutionary unions to learn from such an attempt?

The mere fact that the dreadful situation of the drug clerk and the chaotic condition in the pharmaceutical industry has never been analyzed and a program of action has never been discussed, in the party press, is sufficient evidence that the attempt at the organization of the drug clerks by the Medical Workers Union was unprepared, without a clear perspective and program. Hence its failure. This error is, of course, not new in the annals of the Stalinist leadership. From this point of view, one might excuse them for being silent—but what about the drug clerks who are driven by this error into the A. F. of L. camp where certain defeat awaits them?

Among other things the Daily Worker should throw open its columns for an all-sided discussion of the drug clerk problem. A program of action flowing from the actual conditions existing in the pharmaceutical industry and not from the heads of the leaders of the Medical Workers Industrial Union to be worked out for the revolutionary drug clerks inside A. F. of L. drug clerk union.

MINNEAPOLIS STANDING

The rival Militant builders teams of Minneapolis (whom we will call Rangatanz vs. Ringtails) have both held their secret meetings and outlined their plans of action. Both plans are suspiciously alike, and there is mutual recrimination about every scout getting reports, etc. The rules of the contest provide that subs for all Left Opposition organs count as points, the unit being the dollar. All subs, after being reported to the team captains, who keep a record, goes through the hands of comrade Coover, the branch treasurer. He counts and credits the points and sends them in.

At this writing, the standing of the teams is roughly: Team I: Dunn, captain—5 points; Team II: Curran, captain—7 points. This does not include two new newstands secured by Team II.

On the Waterfront

It would be quite proper, though unnecessary, to attempt to describe or analyze the general conditions—unemployment, hunger and wage cuts—on New York's waterfront separately from those of other sections of the city or apart from conditions in other basic industries. But they are not much different from anywhere else, and when one reads in the leading article of the only revolutionary workers' paper on the waterfront, the Marine Workers' Voice, that the sailors and longshoremen are not suffering as much as their fellow workers in other basic industries, then surely one is inclined to take notice of it and to look around for evidence for such a statement.

The same Ray B. Hudson, who "with other 'delegates' to the Soviet Union last fall was repeatedly embarrassed by Russian workers with the question: 'Who elected you?' and who upon further investigation was forced to admit that the 'delegates' were not at all elected but rather 'selected' (his own admission in the Daily Worker of March 26) has the nerve to step out and insult the seamen by saying that the American marine worker is exempt from general suffering and has not felt the crisis as acutely as the other workers! To quote him in the semi-yearly Voice (March-April issue): "... it is of importance to note that no general wage cut has been made in the marine industry. The marine workers have felt the effects of the crisis less than any workers in all the basic industries. Seamen, despite the great unemployment, are relatively better off."

It may be true that Hudson himself still carries some of the weight he said he piled on during his latest visit to the Soviet Union. And it is quite true that he has since held a soft job in the National Office of the Marine Workers Industrial Union, but how can that be taken as an indication of the prosperity of the seamen as a whole?

Before his departure for the Soviet Union, Hudson was made to run around the piers and docks as port organizer and he saw the conditions at a closer range. At that time he could not find words strong enough to depict the misery and starvation of the seamen. Now he accepts the chair left vacant by Mink, who, by the way, taking his turn at "delegating" to the Soviet Union and despite the fact that the crisis has become deeper during the last year and the suffering more acute, the swivel chairs in the National Office have been replenished with new padding and the radiator has been put into condition.

But the unemployed seamen themselves know that they are not much better off than other workers, that the crisis has not diminished any since Hudson's return from the U. S. S. R. They know that war has been cut generally and even more generally than had been expected. They know that graft and bribery in getting jobs are commonplace, that insults and exploitation in the Seamen's Church Institute and the company offices are just as sharp and as heavy as in the shore industries. They also know that the seaman has to wait in a long line before he can register at the office window—often all day, before he is given his flop ticket, that the distances from South Ferry to the "Muni", to the "Gold Dust" or to the Brooklyn "X" are still as hard to tramp with worn-out shoes and socks as ever. They also know that the seaman often has to spend the night in freight wagons and dark doorways, just as the jobless uptown. So why these misstatements, this "exceptionalism" for the seamen?

"The seamen are relatively better off than other workers". Are the officials of the M. W. I. U. waiting for things to become desperate before they make a real move to organize the waterfront proletariat?

Such a "watchful waiting" policy has been in evidence for many months. Despite the fact that an effort at organization is seemingly being made in the columns of the Daily Worker in the form of editorials and resolutions, the actual fact is that the Union has never shown less activity and has never been so disorganized as at the present moment.

Two years ago, when the first convention was held and the Union formed, a splendid start was made. A good basis was at hand. A real representative body of seamen was willing to sacrifice time and energy in building the Union, but it seems the party leadership did its best to keep it from making headway. Many splendid possibilities for the organization of the movement were thrown away. Everything of importance was left to "further consideration" and all kinds of results were promised by the incoming committees, but the ultra-mechanical control by the party leadership and the incompetency of its appointees on the National Committee have throttled the activities of the Union until it has become almost a wreck.

The leading element and the active membership in the Union have melted away like snow in the springtime. The policy of alienating and driving away new elements, promising militants, has been going on in full force. The party and the appointed officials in the Union are afraid and suspicious of any new members who show leadership qualities and gain support from the membership. Such members are soon "disciplined" to remote parts of the U. S. A. For quite a long time local secretary Johannesen was functioning as the driving force on the waterfront. He visited incoming ships and spoke regularly at the open air meetings and Union Square demonstrations, everybody liked his straight forwardness before the membership and his fearlessness in dealing with appointed functionaries. Suddenly he was transferred to Duluth, to take charge of the paper local there, but the party had a hard time to get the New York membership to agree to the transfer.

Only recently Karl Koster was unexpectedly sent to Boston after he had won the real support and cooperation of all the rank and file members of the Union. He had just broken all records in individual efforts of personally lining up new members aboard the various ships in New York harbor, for the Union than any one else. A short while after his arrival, the hall in Boston was closed by the authorities. According to reports, Koster, unable to get permission to return to the New York legal, has been forced to panhandle in the streets of Boston. H. Harvey, the National Organizer, has turned miser, and the last we heard of him was that he was in jail in Pineville, Kentucky for union activities.

So the Union is leaderless and for that matter, also memberless. The defense corps around the stove or the element that takes care of the large kitchen family in the hall are hardly able to act even as speakers at open forums or as chairmen at membership meetings, let alone cope with real organizational work.

All this, at a time when the party has opened up new headquarters for its waterfront section. So far, it has reacted to the new instructions from the R. I. L. U. to build up the union only by sending delegates to the various conferences, more delegates to the First of May celebration in Moscow and still more delegates to the World Union Congress in Hamburg on May 20.

The Union will start functioning again only when the party bureaucrats are driven to the wall, when the party returns to the Leninist line, when inner-party democracy is reestablished. This alone will breathe the breath of life into the Marine Workers Industrial Union again and enable it to gather around the nucleus, the leading element of proletarian fighters who have been expelled or otherwise kept away from the movement. Then the conditions of existence themselves will drive the Marine Workers to unity and aggressive action.

At present, the marine workers should see to it that their rights as members of the revolutionary working class and of the revolutionary union are fully respected. Only by a freedom of criticism which makes possible a collective working out of our common problems, can the marine workers be brought into the line of march of their class, toward the conquest of power over capitalism.

N.Y. Auto Workers

No other industry has suffered as much from the economic depression as has the automobile industry, with its over 50 per cent of unemployment. The automobile manufacturers have taken full advantage of the situation and have cut the wages of the auto workers to the lowest level in the history of automobile production.

No organized effort has been made to resist the terrible exploitation of the automobile workers. The A. F. of L. has time and again passed resolutions to organize this field, but it remains unorganized. The only exception is New York City, where a small local is still struggling along.

On March 1st the automobile bosses in New York notified the union that the men must accept a 40 per cent wage cut or no contract would be signed. More than half the members of the union were out of work and there was no money in the treasury, but the men unanimously turned down the proposition and declared themselves ready for a struggle. A committee was elected to serve notice on the auto body manufacturers and was given full power to act.

When the committee met with the bosses it announced that the union would not accept the cut and that it was ready to fight it out. This had an immediate effect on the employers, and they agreed to talk the matter over, with a view to a compromise. After several days of bargaining a 20 percent wage cut was arrived at. Faced with agreeing to this or accepting open shop conditions, the committee felt compelled to accept and at last a two-year contract was signed by both parties.

Although the 20 percent cut was a setback for the union, it was an unavoidable compromise, remembering the 40 per cent cut that was first demanded, and the unsuccessful attempt of the manufacturers to destroy the union. It was the militancy of the union men that prevented the destruction of their organization. As matters now stand, there is still a nucleus for building up an auto workers' union that may some day be a power in the industry and not have to submit to compromises.

Resolution of the N.Y. Carpenters' Union

We have received the following resolution for publication. Further information is to follow:

WHEREAS—The negotiations for the coming agreement between the New York District Council of Carpenters and the employers are now taking place, and such an agreement must be in the interests of the carpenters, and

WHEREAS—The application of machinery and technical skill in the building industry in general and the woodworking industry in particular has for the past years permanently and disastrously reduced the necessary man-power, thereby necessitating a sharp reduction of working hours, and

WHEREAS—As a result of the application of such modern devices and also as a result of the present economic crisis thousands of men and women have been thrown out of work, and unemployment among the carpenters has reduced them to the point of actual starvation, and

WHEREAS—As a result of the present improper control of jobs by the Union our trade became so demoralized that the carpenters are suffering from such evils as overtime work that is detrimental to the interests of the members, the present system of stewards that has proven to be a failure, the present practice of hiring and firing which is conducted in a discriminatory way so that a selected few are steadily employed, leaving the rest of the men destitute and with no consideration as to the misery they have to face, and

WHEREAS—The above evils can be eliminated only by having a proper and centralized control of the jobs in the form of an Employment Bureau that controls the hiring of men and carries out the rotation of jobs, and that the proper control can be had only if a system of shop and job committees is established, and

WHEREAS—Because of these miserable conditions thousands who are unable to pay their dues are dropping out of the organization and immediate relief must be given to them to prevent a total disintegration of the Union, therefore be it

RESOLVED—That we, the membership of Carpenters' Local Union No. 2090, U. B. of C. & J. of A., assembled in special meeting on February 18, 1932, at 247 E. 84th Street, New York City, hereby go on record for the following:

- Proposals for an Agreement With the Employers
1. Six-hour, five day week on the basis of $1.65 per hour.
 2. Hiring of men to be done through the Union Employment Bureau.
 3. Recognition of the shop or job committee as the representative of the Union.
 4. Firing to be done only with the approval of said committee.
 5. No man shall work more than six hours a day.
 - (a) On overtime no man shall work more than 3 hours, which equals one day's pay.
 - (b) The above two points to apply unless no more men are available in the Employment Bureau.
 6. All overtime to be paid double.
 7. Only union work to be handled by union men.
 8. A guarantee bond to be deposited by the employers to insure compliance with the agreement.

Organizational and Relief Demands

1. Rotation of jobs.
2. In order to enforce the rotation of jobs, the Union shall establish an Employment Bureau for the whole district, the Bureau to be composed of rank and file committees elected from the locals.
3. Said Bureau to have a system of registration of all the members.
4. No man shall be permitted to work more hours than constitutes the union work-day.
5. On overtime no man shall be allowed to work more than half of the specified number of hours that constitutes the work-day, which equals a union day's pay.
6. Abolition of the right of the boss or foreman to hire and fire.
7. In order to fight the present speed-up system and other evils in the shops and on the jobs, shop and job committees to be elected instead of the present system of stewards appointed by the business-agents.
8. Firing to be done only with the consent of the shop or job committee, which shall be under the supervision of the Employment Bureau.
9. A one-year term for District Council Officers and Business Agents.
10. Referendum vote on agreements, election of District Council Officers, and District Council By-Laws and trade rules.
11. All officers and functionaries of our Union to be subjected to recall by a majority vote of the members.
12. Annulment of those small locals that cannot keep up themselves, and the reduction of the salaries of the officers to the union scale of wages of the carpenters in order to effect savings in expenses.
13. All unemployed members to be exempt from paying of dues, and the locals to be exempt from paying the per-capita taxes for their unemployed members.
14. To demand Federal Unemployment Insurance, and be it further

RESOLVED—That in case the employers do not accept the above proposals for the agreement, a strike shall be declared, and be it further

RESOLVED—That a copy of this resolution be sent to the District Council demanding immediate adoption and enforcement of same, and be it further

RESOLVED—That the above program be spread in all the locals in the District for their consideration and endorsement.

IN HONOR OF M. WINCHEWSKY

From workers of Minneapolis, we have received the following resolution in honor of the deceased Jewish poet, Morris Winchewsky. The resolution (addressed to Mrs. Morris Winchewsky and family) reads:

"We, the assembled in the Labor Lyceum at an open forum Sunday, March 20th, representing the I. W. O., the Independent Workmen's Circle, the Workmen's Circle express the deepest sympathy for the loss of your beloved husband, friend and fighter for the revolutionary struggle, Morris Winchewsky, and we pledge to continue his fight in the future.

IN THE INTERNATIONAL OF LABOR

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

For Communist Unity

The revolutionary working class cannot do without this indispensable weapon in the revolution—the Communist party. The congress which has been called must be made a congress of the unification and organization of all the forces of Spanish Communism and not the bureaucratic force that the national and international leaders intend to make of it. In the light of events, it has been proved that the policy proposed by the Opposition is the only one capable of leading the party to victory. All sincere Communists will consider the unification of all the forces of Spanish Communism and the readmission of all the comrades expelled for their opposition views into the unified party, a prerequisite for any further action on part of the party. Such a unification can only take place through the convocation of a congress on the basis of a democratic discussion of all the problems regarding the labor movement and the Spanish revolution and on the basis of the submission of the minority to the majority and will thereby lay the ground for a mass Communist party which will be able to cope with the tasks imposed by the situation. The historic needs of the present hour demand this imperiously. In this sense, the Communist Left Opposition will not fail in its duty. It is confident that the Spanish Communist workers will be convinced that there are no more devoted friends for the party than the members of the Left Opposition. Furthermore, the Opposition has not retracted and will not retract its determined effort to cooperate in the forefront ranks, in the reconstruction of the party and in the application of a correct and coherent policy.

The meet that is to be held at Sevilla, is called a congress of the masses. It would be much more appropriate to call it a congress of the bureaucrats. Despite the deftness with which the stage is being set for this meet, despite the participation of so-called non-party workers' delegations, the congress will remain for every conscientious militant a bureaucratic farce that will only impede real revolutionary criticism. After more than five years of the dictatorship of the Bullojos-Trilla clique, a national congress is being prepared in less than twenty days. This in itself is a sufficiently eloquent fact. What the congress needs is the genuine participation of all those elements who during each stage of the Spanish revolution have pointed out to the party the correct slogans to be employed. These elements are precisely those who constitute the Communist Left Opposition, that is to say, the "counter-revolutionary Trotskyists", against whom the grave diggers of Spanish Communism are at present directing their batteries. There can be no genuine reorganization of the party except on the basis of a unification. The reorganization on the basis of the bureaucrats, without any real internal democracy, cannot in any way solve the urgent problems that come up each day before the Spanish proletariat. What is required is the readmission and the regroupment of all Communists, members of the party or comrades expelled for their views.

There are innumerable reasons why we cannot have any confidence in the good intentions of the International and the Spanish party in respect to the correction of the political mistakes and the internal regime prevailing at the present moment. But, it is especially interesting that within this document (of the C. I.) the greatest tolerance is shown toward the "organization of sympathizers", the Workers' and Peasants' Bloc, the most confusionist and dangerous tendency in the Spanish labor movement, while the most fanatical intransigence is manifested toward the Left Opposition, which is the only one to point out with precision the policy to be pursued, and which has denounced the democratic and petty bourgeois character of the Maurin faction. Nevertheless, the Opposition is ready to give its determined aid to the conscious and sincere militants active in the party, in the work of completing the reconstruction of a genuine party which will be up to the level of its tasks.

As a concession to the unrest stirred up in the ranks, the International, in agreement with the Spanish leadership, has conceived the "Open Letter", which is based on quite correct, but incomplete criticisms. But it is not too much to expect both leaderships to do all in their power to make a dead letter of this document, although this will only disrupt the course of the Spanish revolution. It is the duty of all revolutionary workers who have not been contaminated by the bureaucratic virus to coordinate all their activities with the view of carrying out the turn in practice, with all its consequences, in spite of the national and international leaderships. It is necessary to open up immediately a broad discussion all over the party organizations. But this discussion will not have any actual effect if it does not allow for the active participation of all the members of the Left Opposition, who were the first ones to indicate the mistakes and to explain what the correct policy was, that had to be pursued. The Opposition demands to be heard by all the Spanish Communists and to be allowed to work together with them in the elaboration of our common tasks, to take part in the preparation of the congress of unification and reorganization. Every congress that will take place without the participation of the Left Opposition will be a pure maneuver of a bureaucratic character and will only prove that the leadership of the party fears more than anything to have to face the points of view of the Opposition before the great tribunal of the Communist proletariat.

Communists!

Fight in your units, in your sections, for a party congress that will be a real congress of the unification of the forces of Spanish Communism and not a congress of intrigues which passes one hundred-percent unanimous resolutions.

Demand that all comrades expelled from the party for differences of opinion, be readmitted into the party and permitted to participate in the preliminary work.

Demand that no irresponsible bureaucrat or adventurer be allowed to speak in your units of "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism" without extending an invitation to the Oppositionists to present our point of view.

Fight to have the party congress called only by a committee composed of the representatives of all the tendencies in the Spanish Communist movement.

Do not allow the expulsions that are being prepared behind your backs by the leaders to be carried out before the congress.

We are among the first founders of the party, we have gone through all the persecutions with it and we have the right to be heard before we are condemned.

Long live the Unification and Reorganization Congress of the Spanish Communist Party!

Long live the Unified Mass Communist Party of Spain!

—The Executive Committee of the Spanish Communist Left Opposition.

not remember which one it is, in the numerical order, you were forced to transform into a decree, directed supposedly against thirty-seven persons, including outside of members of my family, over 30 people who were dragged in exclusively for the purpose of political masking. You included in this list leaders of Menshevism expelled from the Soviet Union with my direct participation over ten years ago. Apparently it seemed to Stalin that this was a masterly move. In actuality the yellow threads stick out only too obviously. Pretending that only in 1932 it became clear to you just what kind of work Dan and Abramovich do, you place the President of the C. E. C. in a very uncomfortable position. You yourself cannot help realizing this, but also in this question you are forced to submit to the Stalinist bureaucracy which works ever more rudely, not troubling about the dignity of the highest organs of the Soviet power.

It is too repulsive for me to dwell on other traits and marks of Stalin's fabricated list: In the intentional interchange of names for the purposes of additional "effect" it represents a document of the same moral level as the two above-mentioned forgeries which served as preparations for it.

A Thermidorian Trick

You can connect the Left Opposition with Menshevism only in the order of a police alphabet. In the political order, your Centrism stands between the Left Opposition and Menshevism. No artifices will change that. The decision of February 20 represents a finished amalgam in the Thermidorian style. Centrism, oscillating between Marxism and national reformism, is forced—it cannot be otherwise—to combine and amalgamate its petty bourgeois enemies from the Right and its revolutionary opponents from the Left, in order to cover up by means of such an amalgam, its own emptiness. I wish to remind you that the first advice concerning the expulsion of the Left Oppositionists from the country, was given in print to Stalin by none other than Ustrialov. Your decision will go down in history with the Thermidorian stigma.

Stalin will tell you that it is not a question of "isolated" facts but that the decision is based on the whole counter-revolutionary activity of myself and of my family, in general, which needs no proofs. If this is so why was it necessary to resort to false documents and to introduce elements of an unworthy masquerade into the decision itself? He cannot wriggle out of this. The fact that after nine years of uninterrupted baiting—do not forget that the beginning of the struggle against "Trotskyism" coincided with the death of Lenin—you had to resort to borrowings from the filthy sheets of Polish and German chauvinism in order to pass this exceptional law against me and my family to hide under an amalgam—this fact alone discloses and strips bare to the bone the impotence of all the campaigns against "Trotskyism" and irreparably compromises your last creative act.

An Expression of Impotence

From the point of view of personal revenge—and this element as you well know, enters into all of Stalin's combinations—the decree completely failed to reach its aim. This time Stalin thrust himself out too far from behind the stage and carelessly revealed his real political and moral size. If he forced you to issue—not without timid resistance, I know—this unworthy decree of ostracism, it was only because the profound correctness of the Left Opposition was revealed on all questions without exception, domestic as well as international, on which we waged a struggle all these years. The seemingly aggressive gesture of Stalin is impotent and even pitiful self-defence.

The Opposition fought against the Stalinist faction for industrialization, for planning, for higher tempos of economy, against the stake on the kulak, for collectivization. From the year 1923 on, the Opposition demanded the preparation of a five year plan and itself indicated its basic elements. All the economic successes of the Soviet Union were theoretically and partially organizationally, prepared by the Left Opposition. Your president Kalinin, who supported Stalin from the Right against the Left Opposition, knows more about it than any one else. Yet, in April 1927, Stalin, in the struggle against me, with the support of Molotov, Kalinin, Voroshilov and others, declared that "we need the Dnieprostroys as a mujik needs a phonograph." In this formula is contained a whole historic philosophy. For the struggle against it and for its defeat, Rakovsky is chained down to Barnaul, hundreds and thousands of unbending revolutionaries fill the places of detention and exile, several Bolshevik-Leninists are shot.

New Tendencies in French Politics

World Crisis Reveals Long Latent Contradictions Between Social Classes

Paris, March 9, 1932.

The parliamentary elections are approaching. They are especially important, as they will take place in a period in which the equilibrium established at Versailles is about to topple over, in which a decisive solution is imminent in Germany, in which French imperialism stands at a turning point of its development. When the crisis had already been raging in a good many other countries, France still appeared to be spared from it. The bourgeois press attributed this to the ancient "French virtues" of order, harmony, etc. The socialists followed in its footsteps. A disenchantment became necessary shortly afterwards. With a somewhat different rhythm and with a different amplitude, the crisis spread over France.

But, many of the causes which made possible the great resistance to the crisis will tomorrow become the causes of a tremendous aggravation of the situation. In the first place, there is the existence of quite large intermediate classes, despite the fact that the war made France a highly industrialized nation. These intermediate classes—the peasantry in particular—formed an important domestic market. The tariff walls, rising like in England; the efforts of other nations, like Germany, to develop their own agriculture; the fall in prices have considerably diminished the resistance of the domestic market. On the other hand, the intermediate classes, their eyes turned to their prosperous past, constitute a curbing factor. French industry, which works for the export trade, having certain advantages in the period of "prosperity" through the low wages, has not pushed rationalization as far as Germany has. Thus, with the general decline, French industry is not in a very advantageous position to preserve its place in the world market. The colonial empire, though it is important, does not by far offer any resources similar to those of the British empire. Finally, the reserves of one of the greatest French industries, the tourist industry, which has declined enormously despite the existence of the Colonial Expedition, are no doubt going to diminish even more in the future, depriving French capitalism of millions of francs.

The defeat of Germany and the achievements of the Versailles Treaty gave France a political importance internationally, entirely out of proportion with its economic strength. The crisis is revealing this contradiction more and more every day, and the French bourgeoisie, so proud of its stability in the past, is uneasily expecting dark days in the future. That is, in part, the reason for its desperate struggle for the maintenance of the Versailles Treaty, which is a diplomatic instrument of its past supremacy, as well as for the preservation of its military strength. On the other hand, it is redoubling its offensive against wages and it intends, by inflation or by some other modification of its financial system, to increase its exploitation of the laboring masses and to expropriate the intermediate classes.

These are as yet only its intentions, for the elections have not taken place. Serving as a sort of barometer, they permit us to judge with more or less precision, the realignments of the classes, the general orientation of the toiling masses and of the proletariat in view of the situation. In so far as they present a factor in the class struggle, they should permit the Communist party, with a correct analysis of the existing tendencies and with correct perspectives, to employ a tactic which will hasten the development of the masses in the direction of the Communist solution. There is already, indisputably, a trend toward the Left. At present it is being exploited by the Radical and the socialist parties in a broad campaign "for peace, for disarmament" and touches those masses who are disquieted by the Laval-Tardieu policy that is "isolating" France from the rest of the world and who are anxious to cast off the heavy burden of taxes imposed upon them by the expenses of the monstrous military apparatus of French imperialism. Just to what degree this leftward trend will be transformed into ballots, depends largely upon the events of the movement. The result of the presidential elections in Germany will play its part in one sense or another. But the fact remains that in any case, the leftward trend of the masses will clash with the imperious needs of the French bourgeoisie. This opens up perspectives for great class struggles. The "left" parties and the socialist party will be unable to keep their promises to the proletariat and the intermediate classes. But only to that degree to which the Communist party will be able to reach the hesitating masses and gain their attention, find a bridge to them, will their development take the revolutionary road when the bankruptcy of the other parties will become manifest in the eyes of all. If this does not take place, they will be derailed and used as a mass support for the maneuvers of the worst brand of reaction, of Fascism itself.

Germany After the Elections

and of taking the fate of Germany into its hands, but of one in which they had to decide upon either Hindenburg or Hitler. The lack of ability on the part of the C. P. G. to conduct an extra-parliamentary struggle aided the S. P. G. leaders to reduce the struggle against Fascism to the parliamentary field, to pose the question as: "Hindenburg or Hitler?", to carry out their policy of the "lesser evil".

The National Socialists also achieved a tremendous success. All the theories of the C. E. C. of the party, to the effect that Fascism has reached its high point, were overthrown. The Rote Fahne of September 16, 1930 wrote that the Nazis had reached the culmination point of their rise with the Reichstag elections. The election results prove that they have been able to penetrate into strong proletarian districts. That Hitler was not elected President of the Reich does not at all change the fact that the Fascist danger has become even more prominent. It has been clearly proven that the "Red Referendum" strategy of the C. P. G. leadership with all its programs of national and social liberation and all their variations, its "adaptation" of the phraseology of the Nazis, etc., have not been able to halt Fascism.

Why were the results so unfavorable for the Communists? If the objective conditions are favorable, what is the explanation for the defeat of the C. P. G.? The political line of the party stands to blunt contradiction to the political needs. This is revenge for the Stalinist theory that "social democracy and Fascism are twins", that everybody outside of the Communist ranks is a "social Fascist". Its trade union policy has isolated the party completely among the organized workers. The disastrous trade union course of the Stalinists enabled the treacherous trade union leaders to lead the members of the unions into the Hindenburg-Front. The "united front" tactics of the Thaelmann leadership has created the prerequisites for the establishment of the "iron front". The results in Saxony, where there is no Centre strength and where the other parties in the Hindenburg-Front are mere splinters, prove that the social democratic workers there, who have always stood to the left, have followed the slogans of the leadership entirely. It has been proven once more that reality bluntly contradicts the reports of the Rote Fahne: There is not any disintegration within the S. P. G. and the reformist unions, but rather a complete execution of the slogans of these organizations by their followers. The results show how the workers react to the slogan of the C. P. G., that the S. P. G. is the main enemy now. For them, the main enemy now is Fascism. Only the policy of the Stalinist party leadership gave the treacherous S. P. G. and trade union leaders the opportunity to arouse illusions among the workers that Hindenburg will be a dam against Fascism.

If this does not take place, they will be derailed and used as a mass support for the maneuvers of the worst brand of reaction, of Fascism itself.

The Seventh Convention of the C. P. F.

Where is the party in this situation? What is its orientation? The Seventh Convention of the French party is going to take place in a few days, after a lapse of three years since the last convention. It will be devoted to the policy of the "third period". The balance of this policy is completely negative: loss of membership, loss of influence, deep-going disorganization. Several months ago, on the occasion of a turn, the leadership admitted all this quite unambiguously in documents, of which The Militant has published important extracts. Now, at the time of the convention, nothing of the sort is allowed. This time, it is necessary to "shut their mouths". One huge thesis is the only document presented by the leadership for pre-convention discussion. The entire activity of the past period is skimmed over in less than twenty lines. "Self-criticism" is reduced to its most barren expression. As a perspective for the future, nothing is offered that is not contained in the last general theses of the C. I. A few scanty phrases are devoted to Germany, the word "Fascism" does not even get any mention in them. Discussion has been as restricted as possible. The press has published a few resolutions of approval and several articles by leaders... against the comrades in the sections who dared to think on their own hook. Articles have appeared in L'Humanite in which party members are denounced as enemies. In order to remain within the Stalinist line, the French party bureaucrats are shouting about the "Trotskyist" danger, accusing everyone who opposes them as a "Trotskyist". A real campaign of terror was inaugurated in the Parisian region, where discontent is particularly great and where whole sections are hostile to the leadership, although no clearly different policy has been put forward. The leadership published the names of the more daring comrades in the press. It demanded publicly that only members approving the party policy without any reservations be elected as delegates. Expulsions are being prepared.

The convention will constitute a victory for the apparatus and a defeat for the party in which the crisis can only continue to develop. The policy that has been pursued, is that of the C. I. It has turned its back to the united front, it is opposed to trade union unity. In the question of the elections, the vanguard of the working class is divided under the cover of the formula "class against class", by maintaining systematically the party's candidate on the second ballot even if that is to the advantage of the candidate of the reactionary parties as against the candidate of the socialist party. This so-called tactic of "class against class" repels the socialist workers, strengthens their parliamentary illusions and serves the reformist apparatus of the bourgeoisie. The continuation of this policy—another can hardly be expected from the convention—will only keep on accumulating defeat after defeat.

Progress for the Left Opposition

Nevertheless, there are some germs of regeneration in this situation. We have mentioned above the discontent in the Parisian region of the party. The criticism expressed has often been confused, narrow, but in most cases it was not a reflection of opportunist tendencies, but of healthy proletarian sentiments. For the first time in years, non-oppositionist militants have pushed their criticisms as far as the leadership of the C. I. Thus, one unit speaks against the "policy of Stalin"; other comrades speak of the "responsibility of the C. I." Some comrades refuse to vote against the "Trotskyists" as counter-revolutionists in Sections 3 and 15 of the Parisian region; in Section 4, others declare that "it is not sufficient to tell us that they are counter-revolutionists. It must be proven first." We only cite a few facts among many which the party press itself is publishing.

But all these are only transitory manifestations, very feeble and very instable ones. But a great unrest is taking place in the party. These are voted on, but no one takes any stock in them. A great deal of attention is being paid to what is said about the party, especially to what the Opposition has to say. In the meetings that we hold in various places, in the party meetings in which we participate, we find an entirely different atmosphere from that of last year. There are still many fanatics, of course. But, the majority of those attending wants to listen; they follow our words attentively, party members take part in heated discussions with us. We have been able to extend our contacts, to establish contacts with many party members and to gain sympathizers. In the provinces, we have also made contacts and our influence has grown considerably.

The Ligue Communiste (Left Opposition) has not, unfortunately, as yet been able to transform this gain of influence in an organizational way. We are suffering first of all, from a shortcoming that the French party itself has been inflicted with: the extremely weak conceptions of organizational forms. Then, there are our internal difficulties: we have not as yet benefited from a test of great struggles, so as to be able to distinguish between the various tendencies in the organization. These are the obstacles in the way of an active crystallization of the germs of regeneration within the party. The Ligue is at work, striving to overcome these obstacles.

The New Book on Germany

Beginning with this issue, The Militant will print a series of extracts from comrade Trotsky's forthcoming book on Germany.

In this book, Trotsky, with his usual incisive style, presents a thoroughgoing analysis of the political situation, draws the logical conclusions from it and makes the proposals, necessary for the carrying out of a correct Marxist line, without which the German working class cannot be led to victory.

Trotsky has been accused by the "official" Communist party press of preaching an alliance with Bruening, of subscribing to the social democratic theory of the "lesser evil" and of even more far-fetched things. Find out what he really stands for! Read his pamphlet "Germany—The Key to the International Situation." Read his new work on Germany, appearing serially in The Militant. Send in your order for a copy of the book itself now. Judge for yourself why Germany is of prime importance for the world working class at present. Judge for yourself, what the correct Communist policy, which is the keystone of the entire question, must be. Your advance orders will make it possible for us to have the book ready for sale without delay. The price is: 50 cents.

Fifty Years of Israel Amter

The hard life of the revolutionist is not without its compensations. The fret and travail of the struggle and the gray details of daily work are relieved from time to time by ceremonial affairs and jubilees at which, in contemplation of great men and great events of the past, the militant may refresh his soul and renew his inspiration. The anniversaries of the illustrious dead have been such occasions. But nowadays, with so many heroes still among us in the flesh, the birthdays of our living chiefs become occasions for official celebration. Not long ago the masses were invited to felicitate Stalin on his fiftieth birthday. And now, according to the reports in the Daily Worker, Israel Amter is about to reach the half century mark, and a great outpouring of spontaneous enthusiasm is to be given outlet at an official "mass celebration" of his birthday.

It is needless to say that we welcome this event, for we were converted long ago to the doctrine of "flowers for the living"—that is, if one feels flowery about them. And who could feel otherwise about Amter, who has done so much and isn't finished yet? It is probable that we will not get to the celebration. But anyway we will weave a garland of encomiums in the hope that it will not be entirely buried under the floral offerings.

The ceremonial articles and official greetings which have been printed so far review his life and deeds. We will follow the same pattern. And if we fill in some neglected details, it can be attributed to the fact that we write under less constraint than the others and therefore can speak more freely and sincerely.

One hero began his career as a piano player, and they say he was a good one. But the tunes he extracted from that classic instrument were nothing to the rhythms he produced when he began to play didoes with the Communist movement. Like the jazz composers in the musical field, he specialized in the bizarre and the unique. His self-expression, through the medium of the revolutionary movement, took a distinctively individualistic form. In all that he said and did he was strictly Amter, and nobody else.

Amter made his debut on the national stage of the Party at the first undrained attention by his fearless and untraced attention by his fearless and uncompromising demands for the propaganda of "armed insurrection", to be promoted by leaflets hurled into the midst of the masses from ambush. Soon after he appears, or rather one of his leaflets appears, in the strike of the Brooklyn Transit workers for a wage increase of 50 an hour. With that mastery of the dialectic which already distinguished him, he "linked up" this "everyday demand" of the unsuspecting street car men, with the final goal of their struggle, and called on them to rise, arms in hand, and capture the power-house.

Falling in this maneuver, because of the unreadiness of the workers, and the fact that the "third period" has not yet arrived, Amter made a slight strategic retreat; but only for the purpose of gathering strength for another leap. Keeping his plans to himself, he took the capitalist forces by surprise with a sudden leaflet in the Spring of 1921 entitled "May Day of Revolution". Due to a hitch somewhere, this leaflet didn't overthrow the class regime, but it did overthrow the Central Committee of the Party at a convention a few weeks later. All the members of the C. E. C. swore they had had nothing to do with the leaflet and knew nothing about it, but this did not save them. Amter's propaganda had set a movement in motion that could not be appeased without some sacrifices, and the heads even of the innocent had to fall.

Amter next appeared as one of the co-authors of the famous "Ford-Dubner" thesis, and leader of the "goose caucus". In this thesis our hero, disguised from his enemies by the pseudonym of Ford, advanced the idea that the illegal existence of the Party was a matter of principle, and that the advocacy of a legal organization in itself, a sign of counter-revolution—a subject in which he later specialized and took several degrees. In this affair Amter suffered a temporary setback, due to the Trotskyist influence then prevailing in the Comintern. His thesis was rejected, the movement was legalized, and Amter, defeated but not terrified, went into a temporary eclipse.

It was at this stage in his career that he began to display that remarkable adaptability that enabled him to keep alive politically in any weather. Unlike the illegal "leftists" who kept muttering about armed insurrection after the season had passed, Amter got in step with the times. The Farmer-Labor period had arrived, the Paper-Lovestone group of leaders came to the front and took the place of the wild men of the "goose caucus". Amter was one of those who saw the light. He not only joined the Lovestone faction but became vociferous about it. For several years, right up to the day that the Comintern telegram against Lovestone arrived, Amter was a Lovestoneite in all things great and small.

But even after these years of habitation to the Lovestone formulae and the Lovestone politics he did not become rigid and doctrinaire about it. He retained his flexibility, and finally gave an exhibition of it that will always stand in the history of the party as an example for people who want to know how to change their opinions and change them quick. This was on the day the C. I. cablegram against Lovestone came. He awoke on that fateful morning as loyal and as red-hot a Lovestoneite as you could find with a search warrant. And went through a few morning chores of cursing Fosterites in a routine fashion. At twelve o'clock he received a copy of the telegram to the effect that Lovestone was no longer "kosher". One hour later he was hunting for Lovestoneites to expel from the Party, and was as thick with Foster as one liberty bond with another.

A man with such a political biography could not be denied recognition. He has a fitting place in the top circle of the hierarchy. His fiftieth birthday is a public event and deserves a public demonstration of some kind. We disagree with the official plans only on one point. Why should it be a "mass celebration"? Why not a mass trial?

Impressions of a National Tour

The tour just completed, which carried the writer through the most important industrial cities in the United States and the two most important centers in Canada allowed for some first hand observations regarding the effects of the deep crisis in Canadian as well as American capitalism. It enables one to draw beyond the confines of New York City, and to see the movement in those industrial centers where the American proletariat dominates—in those sections where the existence of the revolutionary movement is imperative, for the future.

That which strikes one immediately is the extent of the economic crisis. Its terrific sweep over the nerve-centers of the country, carrying in its wake misery for the masses. Miles of sidings are occupied by huge numbers of idle freight cars; small industrial towns with factories are silent. Smokeless chimneys! The largest cities have few factories at work. Thousands upon thousands of unemployed workers make up a weary trek. There is hunger while warehouses are filled with food. The vast numbers of jobless proletarians are not confined to any one town, or state. They are everywhere. Discussions with many workers from various sections of the country exhibit their state of bewilderedness. They do not yet comprehend the causes of the vicious crisis. But they are aware that there is something seriously wrong with the character of the system.

There are few movements of the workers. Aside from the attempts of the Communists no movements of struggle exist. Those struggles taking place are under the leadership of the Communist Party. The movements of the unemployed workers are organized by them. But they are still very weak and in many cases ineffectual. Through the policies of the Party these movements have become narrow. They are sectarian and thereby isolated. The tactic of the United Front, the best weapon through which to rally scores of workers is cast aside by the Party and is one of the main reasons for their failure to make greater headway. The unemployed Councils organized by the Party are choked by the heavy arms of bureaucracy and impede their growth. Yet it is significant that the Communists alone have the courage and will to organize the workers in defense of their interests and in a struggle against capitalism. This is apparent everywhere.

Certainly there are attempts of the reformists to counter the activity of the Party. This is to be expected. Whenever and wherever the Communists are active the reformists rise as a wall to prevent their growth and to canalize these movements. Father Cox arose to check the activity of the Communist Party among the unemployed workers. Similar movements exist in other towns. The Socialist Party is conspicuous in the west by its inactivity, more so, by its reformist preachings and aims.

In the face of impending struggles the bourgeoisie is preparing itself. The revolutionary workers must note keenly the developments in Canada. There, the answer of the government to the growing moods of struggle among the workers, as a result of the deep crisis, is shown in the resurrection of the infamous Article 98 of the Criminal Code. It was through this law that six members of the Central Committee of the Canadian Communist Party were arrested and sentenced to long jail terms. We arrived in Canada immediately after the sentence was confirmed and the comrades sent to Kingston. In the Province of Ontario the revolutionary movement

TAG DAY FOR MARINE DEFENSE

The Marine Workers' Defense Committee is organizing a Tag Day collection to provide funds for the legal defense of the three New York marine workers now on trial. The collection will take place on Saturday, April 9 and 10. All organizations cooperating in the Marine Defense Committee are called on to provide collectors. The Communist League, Spartacus Youth Club members must turn out in force, according to the decisions of these organizations. All members report to comrade H. Stone at Militant Headquarters for station assignments.

APRIL "Young Spartacus" OUT!

The April issue of Young Spartacus which is now out on sale, has a number of very interesting articles of particular interest to the youth as well as to adult workers. The character of the present issue is such that its wide distribution among the ranks of Communists and radical youth would be very valuable. Readers of the Militant should order bundles of the Young Spartacus and distribute or sell them.

The table of contents of the current issue is as follows:

ing their property for meetings under the threat of arrest and revocation of license. The publication of revolutionary literature barring literature from the mails (The Freiheit, Party literature, Opposition literature is barred from entry) Those receiving literature are liable to arrest. Anyone arrested on a single one of the charges in this article is guilty until proven innocent. Civil employees are instructed to assume the role of spies and to open any suspicious packages and to forthwith inform the authorities. The American Party which has thus far remained more or less silent about the developments in the Canadian movement must take cognizance of them immediately and understand their significance. It is necessary for our Canadian movement to organize itself with the aim of circumventing the drive against it.

The massacre at Detroit and the planned drive against the Communists there; the attack against the Party in Chicago accompanied by frame-up charges of shooting policemen are beginnings of a definite attempt by the government to bring repressions to bear upon the Communists and the workers generally. Already these events have had deep repercussions among the other workers who are repelled by the brutality of Ford's gunmen.

The Left Opposition is gaining greater support. Our meetings had a larger attendance than previously. There is a definite increase of sympathy and support for our movement. In spite of the efforts of the Party bureaucrats to prevent successful meetings they proved more or less ineffectual. (The meetings will be discussed concretely in a forthcoming article). The workers felt keenly our viewpoint on the German situation, and the discussions at our meetings were of a particularly high level. In many cities, the presence of Party members, and of sympathizers with its line, helped to enliven the meetings through their participation in the discussions. Each meeting brought forth new viewpoints and questions. They helped all the more in clarifying our viewpoint on all questions confronting the International Communist Movement.

There was an obvious increase of interest in our press. This must be said particularly of Unser Kampf. It has created a deep impression on wide sections of the Jewish workers. References were made to recent articles in the Freiheit articles of so low a character that they could be written only by people who have received their political training on the staff of the Jewish Daily Forward. The Jewish workers are particularly incensed with the degenerated babble about the "counter-revolutionary Trotsky".

On the whole we can record a wider influence of the Left Opposition. We must strive in the coming year to increase our organizational strength to correspond to our political influence. There is still too wide a discrepancy between the two.

What is outstanding in the whole situation? The lack of organization of the American workers. The Communist Party is still very small. The great mass of workers are unorganized. But the effects of this crisis are resulting in deep changes in the whole character of the American proletariat. Changes are taking place in their whole ideology. These changes, to be sure, are slow. But they are genuine. The great mass of unemployed workers are still in a dazed state. The workers with jobs are in of the Communists; and even so these mighty gentlemen beg me a functionary, to save them from the attack of another party comprising millions whose leaders may become my bosses tomorrow; things must be pretty bad for the gentlemen of the social democracy, pretty bad for the gentlemen of the social democracy, functionary, to think about my own hide." And as a result, the "loyal", "neutral" functionary who vacillated yesterday, re-insures himself without fail, i. e., ties up with the National Socialists, to safeguard his own future. In this manner the reformists who have outlived their own day, work for the Fascists along bureaucratic lines.

The social democracy, the hanger-on of the bourgeoisie, is doomed to wretched ideological parasitism. One moment it catches up ideas of bourgeois economists, and the next, it tries to utilize bits of Marxism. After citing from my pamphlet the reasons against the participation of the Communist party in Hitler's referendum, Hilferding concludes: "Truly, there is nothing to add to these lines in order to explain the tactics of the social democracy as regards the Bruening government." Remmele and Thalheimer step forward, "Please take note, Hilferding relies on Trotsky." A Fascist yellow sheet steps forward in turn, "Trotsky is paid for this job by the promise of a visa." Next a Stalinist journalist comes to the fore and wires the communication of a Fascist paper to Moscow. The editorial board of the "Izvestia", which includes the unfortunate Radek, prints the telegram. This chain deserves only to be mentioned and passed by.

Let us return to more serious questions. If Hitler can afford himself the luxury of fighting against Bruening, it is only because the bourgeois régime as a whole leans for its support on the back of that half of the working class which is led by Hilferding and Company. If the social democracy had not put through its policy of class betrayal, then Hitler, not to mention the fact that he would have never attained his present power, would have been clutching at Bruening's government as a life saving anchor. If the Communists together with the social democracy had overthrown Bruening, that would have been a fact of the greatest political significance. The consequence, in any case, would have risen over the heads of the leaders of the social democracy. Hilferding attempts to find justification for his betrayal in our criticism, which demands that the Communists take Hilferding's betrayal into account as an accomplished fact.

Although Hilferding has "nothing to add" to Trotsky's words, he nevertheless does add something: The correlation of forces, he says, is such that even in the event of the united action of social democratic and Communist workers, there would be no possibility "by forcing the fight, to overthrow the enemy and to seize power." In this remark, glossed over in passing without any evidence, lies the very crux of the question. According to Hilferding in Germany today, where the proletariat composes the majority of the population and the deciding productive force of society, the united front of the social democracy and the Communist party could not place the power in the hands of the proletariat! When is the precise moment, then, that the power can pass into the hands of the proletariat? Prior to the war there was the perspective of the automatic growth of capitalism, of the growth of the proletariat, and of the equal growth of the social democracy. This process was cut short by the war, and no power in the world will restore it. The decay of capitalism means that the question of power must be decided on the basis of the now existing productive forces. By prolonging the agony of the capitalist regime, the social democracy leads only to the further decline of economic culture, to the disorganization of the proletariat, to social gangrene. No other perspectives lie ahead; tomorrow will be worse than today; the day after tomorrow worse than tomorrow. But the leaders of the social democracy no longer dare to look into the future. Theirs are all the vices of the ruling class doomed to destruction; they are light-minded, their will is paralyzed, they are given to blubbing over events and hoping for miracles. Come to think of it, Tarnow's economic researches fulfill now the same function as did once the consoling revelations of a Rasputin.

The social democrats together with the Communists would not be able to seize power. There he stands, the snobbish, educated, (gebildet) petty bourgeois, an utter coward, soaked from head to foot with distrust and contempt for the masses. The social democracy and the Communist party together hold about 40 per cent of the votes, despite the fact that the betrayals of the social democracy and the mistakes of the C. P. drive millions into the camp of indifference and even National Socialism. Once a fact, the joint action of these two parties alone, by opening before the masses new perspectives, would incommensurably increase the strength of the proletariat. But let us limit ourselves to 40 per cent. Has Bruening perhaps more, or Hitler? But there are only these three groups that can rule Germany: the proletariat, the center party or the Fascists. But a notion is firmly implanted in the heads of the educated petty bourgeois: for the representatives of capital to rule, 20 per cent of the votes suffice, because the bourgeoisie, you see, has the banks, the trusts, the syndicates, the railroads. True, our educated petty bourgeois made ready to "socialize" all these twelve years ago. But enough is too much!

struggle tears away all the covers from the actual relation of forces. During a direct and immediate struggle for power, the proletariat, unless paralyzed by sabotage from within, by Austro-Marxism and by all other forms of betrayal, develops a force incommensurably superior to its parliamentary expression. Let us recall once again the invaluable lessons of history. Even after the Bolsheviks had seized power, and firmly seized it, they had less than one third of the votes in the Constituent Assembly; together with the Left S. R.'s—less than 40 per cent. Yet despite a fearful economic collapse, despite the war, despite the betrayal of the European, and first of all of the German, social democracy, despite the post-war reaction of weariness, despite the growth of Thermidorian tendencies, the first workers' government stands on its feet fourteen years. And what can be said of Germany? At the moment the social democratic worker together with the Communist arises to seize power, the task will be nine-tenths completed.

Nevertheless, says Hilferding, had the social democracy voted against Bruening's government and thereby overthrown it, the consequence would have been the coming of the Fascists to power. That is the way, perhaps, the matter may appear on a parliamentary plane; but the matter itself does not rest on a parliamentary plane. The social democracy could refuse to support Bruening only in the event that it decided to enter upon the road of revolutionary struggle. Either support Bruening, or fight for the dictatorship of the proletariat. No third course is given. The social democracy, by voting against Bruening, would change at once the correlation of forces—not on the parliamentary chess board, whose chess-pieces might surprisingly enough be found underneath the table—but on the arena of the revolutionary struggle of the classes. After such an about-face, the forces of the working class would increase not twofold but tenfold, for in the class struggle, the moral factor holds by no means the last place, particularly during great historical upheavals. Under the impact of this moral force, the masses of the people, one stratum after another, would be charged to the point of highest intensity. The proletariat would say to itself with assurance, that it alone was called to give a different and a higher direction to the life of this great nation. Disintegration and decomposition in Hitler's army would set in before the decisive battles. Battles of course could not be avoided; but with a firm resolution to fight to victory, by attacking boldly, victory might be achieved infinitely more easily than the most extreme revolutionary optimist now imagines.

Only a trifle is lacking for this: the about-face of the social democracy, its taking the road of revolution. To hope for a voluntary shift on the part of the leaders after the experiences of 1914-1922 would be the most ludicrous of all illusions. But the majority of social democratic workers—that is something else again; they can make the turn, and they will make it—it is only necessary to help them. And this turn will be not only against the bourgeois government, but against the upper layers of their own party.

At this point, our Austro-Marxist, who has "nothing to add" to our words, will try once more to bring against us citations from our own books: didn't we write point blank that the policies of the Stalinist bureaucracy represent a chain of errors; didn't we stigmatize the participation of the Communist party in the Hitler referendum? We did write, we did stigmatize. But we wage battle with the Stalinist leadership in the Comintern precisely because it is incapable of breaking up the social democracy, of tearing the masses from under its influence, of freeing the locomotive of history from its rusty chain-brake. By its convulsions, its mistakes, its bureaucratic ultimatum, the Stalinist bureaucracy preserves the social democracy, permits it again and again to regain its foothold.

The Communist party is a proletarian, anti-bourgeois party, even if erroneously. The social democracy, though composed of workers, is entirely a bourgeois party, which under "normal conditions" is led quite expertly from the point of view of bourgeois aims, but which is good for nothing at all under the conditions of a social crisis. The leaders of the social democracy are themselves forced to recognize, though unwillingly, the bourgeois character of the party. Referring to the crisis and the unemployment situation, Tarnow mouths moth-eaten phrases about the "disgrace of capitalist civilization", quite in the manner of a protestant minister preaching on the sinfulness of wealth; referring to socialism, Tarnow talks after the manner of this same minister when the latter preaches about rewards beyond the grave; but when it comes to concrete questions, he assumes another tone: "If on September 14th, this spectre (unemployment) had not hovered over the ballot box, this day would have been written differently into the pages of German history. (Report at the Leipzig Congress)." The social democracy lost votes and seats because capitalism, on account of the crisis, had revealed its authentic visage. The crisis did not strengthen the party of "socialism", on the contrary, it weakened it, just as it depressed the trade turn-over, the resources of banks, the self-assurance of Hoover and Ford, the profits of the Prince of Monaco, etc. Today, one is obliged to look, not in bourgeois papers, but in social democratic press for the most optimistic evaluations of the conjuncture. Trade Relations with the U.S.S.R.

The New York Times of March 19th carried a Duranty dispatch, reporting a front page headline in Izvestia, "Rumors about intention of the United States to recognize the Soviet Union." The rumors are based upon statements emanating from London reading about as follows:

"It is stated here that certain circles in Washington feel that recognition of Russia may establish an equilibrium of forces in the Far East." And then, if these rumors should be confirmed, the first step would be "the sending of a commission to Russia to discuss a trade agreement."

While this dispatch occupied a rather obscure place Walter Duranty is nevertheless known as one of those reporters who keeps his ear to the ground and is "wonderfully" well informed. It should not be understood in this case to mean actual possibilities of recognition. One need not put much credence in such rumors. But Duranty has proven his sagacity in representing the Stalin views as something entirely palatable to the capitalist interests and particularly to guard these interests in presenting the views. However, for the moment that is beside the point. Let us rather dwell for an instant upon the two questions of importance raised in the dispatch.

American Imperialist Aggression

1. The question of possible recognition to establish an equilibrium of forces in the Far East.

2. The question of steps following a possible recognition to discuss a trade agreement with the Soviet Union.

On the first proposition. Does the interest of the United States and of the Soviet Union in the Far East coincide, or even remotely suggest that sort of an equilibrium? Of course not. While both are opposed to Japanese aggression in China obviously it is because of entirely different reasons. The Soviet Union is opposed to Japanese imperialism because it is a threat to its borders, but primarily because it is opposed to all imperialist aggression. The Soviet Union is the opponent of further partitioning in China and a friend and supporter of the revolutionary awakening of the Chinese masses. This is not at all the case of the United States. As far as this most powerful and most reactionary imperialist power is concerned it has one main object in view in attempting to counterbalance the Japanese aggression in China; namely, to, as far as possible, reserve this field for its own ruthless advance to the exclusion of all others. It has its eye on a future Chinese market, in order to climb out of the crisis on the knuckles and bones of the Chinese workers.

It is with this aim in view that the United States endeavors to appear in the hypocritical role of the friend of China—as a "defender" of a defenseless nation. Once more it is attempting to extend its imperialist domain under the mask of being a champion of peace, while feverishly preparing its armed forces for war.

"With this enormous difference of policy in the Far East of the United States and of the Soviet Union, how much more hypocritical must sound the rumors of recognition as a means of an equilibrium of forces. It is therefore much more necessary to call out to the American workers, and to the American Communist in particular, not to fall into the trap set by the pacifist "defender" of defenseless nations. The official American Communist Party has been carrying on a campaign of demonstrations against Japanese imperialism aggression in China. Naturally Communists are opposed to, and should fight against, the Japanese partitioning of China and the suppression of her people. But above all American Communists must tear this deceptive pacifist mask of the American imperialist aggressor. It is well for us to remember that the most powerful and most reactionary imperialist enemy is at home.

The Question of Soviet Trade Relations

The second important question intimated in the Duranty dispatch is the one of trade relations with the Soviet Union. Undoubtedly there are powerful American capitalist groups who turn their eyes toward the vast market in the Workers Republic; the same as there are powerful groups struggling against any relations whatever. In regard to the latter, we need only recall the recent demand made by a group of members of Congress for an embargo on all products of the Soviet Union. But to discuss this question it is necessary first of all to discard also in this instance any belief of possible overtures for trade relations as "peaceful overtures" even though they may here also carry the cover of a hypocritical mask of pacifism.

With the crisis growing in intensity it can be expected that the American imperialist will look for markets everywhere. Capitalism has no scruples. It will trade with the devil himself but will try to cheat him as all robbers do. In turning their eyes toward the Russian market these gentlemen do not for one minute fail to keep in mind their simultaneous effort to break down, if possible, its proletarian regime; to forge an armed ring around its borders. But this is precisely one more reason why the American workers should not only recognize their common interest with their brothers of the Soviet Union but in a most effective way fight for the protection of these common interests. The Soviet Union is compelled to rely on trade with the capitalist world. It needs credits in an increasing measure to continue to build its industries.

Demand U. S. Credits to the Soviet Union
American trade with the Soviet Union grew rapidly up until the end of 1930. From a figure, both export and import included, of $5,998,000 in 1923, to $138,785,000 in 1930. Due to lack of credits from the United States this figure dropped in 1931 to a total of $116,800,000. It stands to reason that only an extension of credits will again increase this figure.

Undoubtedly the first step for American workers to take to counter any mask of recognition as a cover for imperialist designs is to increasingly voice the demand for extension of large scale credits to the Soviet Union. Recently the official Communist party has become compelled to accept the Left Opposition slogan for such credits. But so far only in halfhearted manner. It should be made a live slogan.

It could be made so if the party would set to work seriously and begin an active campaign. We could well conceive of the first steps being taken through the calling of conferences throughout the country of all workers organizations, specifically including the A. F. of L. unions, and to place the proposals before them to demand the extension of credits. With unemployment pressing ever heavier upon the American workers, the prospect of increasing trade would be welcomed by them. A prospect of increasing trade with the Soviet Union, of American factories producing in increasing quantities for the Soviet market and of goods being shipped to help build the industry controlled by the workers there would have double effect here. It would powerfully emphasize the community of interests of the workers in both countries. It would thus also lay a more effective basis for actual working class defense of the Soviet Union in the present situation of ever growing war preparations. The Party should not delay in taking this step.

Stool-pigeon Discredited at Marine Trial

The trial of the three marine workers "Plot", in process at General Sessions Court, reveals clearly the frame-up character of the case and its intent to break the Independent Tidewater Boatmen's Union. The prosecution is determined to embroil the union in alleged dynamite and bombing activities. It is for this purpose that it has propped up as its main witness a shady individual by the name of Hoyle, a stool-pigeon who says he was a member of the Union and who has "confessed" to all sorts of fantastic accusations launched by the District Attorney.

Just to get a picture of the kind of evidence and witnesses the prosecution relies upon, it is significant to review the cross examination of this stool-pigeon by the defense. On the stand Hoyle confessed to breaking padlocks on the powder houses of the Trap Rock Co. He posed as a shrewd detective, hunting down dangerous criminals, yet admit doing the lion's share of the work of procuring the dynamite himself.

Upon the question of the defense attorney: "Did you know you were stealing dynamite?" he answered: "When I found out (!) that I was stealing dynamite, I made up my mind to follow it and see where it went." This in itself is enough to stigmatize the stool-pigeon.

Question by the defense attorney: "When you found out that Soderberg was after dynamite, did you then decide to mislead him?"

Answer: Yes.
Question: "Did you notify the police?"
Answer: "No."

It must be remembered that the prosecution is building up its case exclusively on the evidence of this man. Upon further cross examination it was discovered that this same Hoyle was known in the army as a notorious liar and unreliable individual. On the stand Hoyle time and again contradicted himself as to his concepts of morality, etc. He told stories about a ride for dynamite in which persons participated whom he is unable to identify and whom the prosecution has never bothered to produce. The entire evidence of the stool-pigeon bore an indisputably shady character.

On Tuesday, April 5, Thomas Bunker, one of the defendants, took the stand, declared the whole "confession" of Hoyle a lie from beginning to end. Bunker said that he had not been at the time of the arrest of a member of any organization, but that he was a revolutionist and adhered to the necessity of changing the present system of society. As we go to press, Bunker is still under cross examination. A full report of the proceedings and the outcome of the trial will appear in The Militant next week. In the meantime money is urgently needed for the defense and all workers are requested to hurry with their contributions. Care of the Marine Workers Defense Committee, 82 East 10th St., N. Y. C.

Open Letter to the C. E. C. of the U. S. S. R. -- by LEON TROTSKY

On the international arena, the situation was not much different. This Opposition fought in 1923 against the capitulationist policies of Brandler who was supported on the Right by Stalin; against the Stalinist theory of worker-peasant parties; against the confinement of Chinese Communism within the iron cage of the Kuo Min Tang; against the bloc of the Politburo with the clique of British strike-breakers; against the whole opportunistic, ruinous, shameful, thoroughly treacherous policy of Stalin, who for several years supported the stirrup of Chiang Kai-Shek and exchanged portraits with him on the very eve of the day when Chiang Kai-Shek instituted the blood-bath of Shanghai. You yourselves are sufficiently acquainted with the facts and know that there is not a shadow of exaggeration in my words. It is not for nothing that the history of the Chinese revolution became a prohibited book in the Soviet Union: each page of it burns the fingers of the Stalinist clique.

Wherein does our "counter-revolutionary" activity lie? Among the hundreds of present day Stalinist theoreticians (hired by the day or by the piece) who squirm like worms in the wounds of the world proletariat, there are not a few volunteers willing to change white into black, or into any other color of the rainbow. They will not change historic facts, however, nor shake the foundations of Marxism. The Left Opposition has the right to be proud of its struggle against the Stalinist faction in the U. S. S. R., in Germany, in China, in England, in all parts of the world reached by the hand of the opportunistic apparatus.

Knocking its forehead against the kukulak; deceived in its calculations on friend Chiang Kai-Shek; receiving instead of gratitude, a kick from the British trade-unions, who were rescued by it, the Stalinist bureaucracy made in 1928, a whirlwind turn of 180 degrees over our heads, only to plunge into a monstrous economic and political adventurism, the accounts of which are still to be settled.

And again the Left Oppositionists—the true and only Bolshevik-Leninists in the ranks of the international proletariat—quickly and decisively came out against the bureaucratic adventurism that is armed with the resources of the workers' government. We warned against the irresponsible conversion of the five year plan into a four-year one. Our warning has been fully confirmed. The artificial race, not prepared either theoretically, or practically, not only made it impossible to solve this rather sporting than economic problem, but deepened a series of disproportions which are now, in a purely mechanical fashion, driven into the foundation of the second five year plan. The Opposition warned against the hazardous playing with "complete collectivization" and with the idea "of the liquidation of classes" within the period of the first five year plan. Now "complete collectivization" is halted and "the liquidation of classes" during two or three intermediate stages is transferred to the new five year plan. Also in this form the problem remains a bureaucratic utopia. As a result of forced collectivization and the violation of basic economic proportions, the extremely difficult food and the general material conditions of the working class, remain, unfortunately, a reality.

The working class of Russia has the right to be proud of the truly great technical achievements, accomplished within the last few years. These achievements became possible only after the pressure of realities forced the bureaucracy, after some delay, to make the platform of the Left Opposition, although in perverted and twisted form, the basis of its work. The political consciousness of the workers has risen to new heights. Now no historic force can compel them to renounce the foundations laid by the October revolution and the methods of planned economy verified in actual work. They will crush anyone who tries to drag them back towards bourgeois democracy and capitalism.

But the same workers realize more and more clearly which one of the political groups was the real initiator of planned socialist construction and which one introduced into the economic work, first bureaucratic obstruction, then—the adventurist race with extinguished lights. The workers want to direct economy themselves and not merely to execute plans which the Stalinist bureaucracy makes behind their backs with the cooperation of damagers from the right or from the left. The anxiety of the workers, their dissatisfaction, their as yet mute protests—all this follows the line of criticism of the Left Opposition.

The strengthening of the economic foundation of the dictatorship the numerical growth of the proletariat and the growth of its self-consciousness, lead not to the strengthening but to the weakening of the political position of the bureaucracy. Its ranks begin to scatter. A small minority holds on even more strongly to Stalin as to an anchor of safety. The others look about in search of reassurance. The Bezedovskys, Agabekovs, Dmitrievskys, perverted careerists, clever scoundrels, hundred-per-cent swindlers—how many of them are there in the apparatus—cast about for the nearest fence over which to make a jump into the camp of the class enemy. The honest elements of the apparatus—fortunately, they are a majority—listen to the voices from below, compare the stages passed and the discarded slogans of the years 1923-26-28-30-32,—all these zigzags of bureaucratic blindness, and convince themselves with horror that the Stalinist "general line" is a myth, an illusion, a hazy shadow of the vacillations of the apparatus itself. Thus opens up the chapter of making the settlement for the revision of the basis of scientific socialism, for the brazen violation of the party.

The mistakes and crimes of the bureaucracy for the nine years have not passed unpunished. The Stalinist system is nearing a decisive crisis. The episode with the "half-Trotskyist" Yaroslavsky would have seemed absolutely impossible a year, or a year and a half ago, when I wrote of the first "crack in the apparatus". Now this episode does not astonish anyone, on the contrary, it is accepted as an unmistakable symptom of a deeper process. The Stalinist apparatus has ceased to be the Stalinist apparatus. It has become a system of contradictions and breaks. As the workers become ever more impatient with the bossing of the bureaucracy, the apparatus becomes ever more distrustful of the leadership of Stalin; the two processes are connected with each other. The more fiercely, therefore, is the crowded Stalinist faction forced to fight for the retention of its leading positions.

You started the struggle against "Trotskyism" under the flag of "the old Bolshevik Guard". To the false pretense, invented by yourselves, of a one-man leadership on the part of Trotsky, you counterposed "the collective leadership of the Leninist Central Committee". What has remained of the collective leadership and what has remained of the Leninist Central Committee? The apparatus independent of the working class and of the party prepared the dictator-

Miners Resist New Onslaught

Unification of Rebel Movements Urgent Duty of Revolutionary Party

The insurgent strike of the anthracite coal miners of Districts number 1 and 9 has collapsed. The men who came out are again back at work, with no gains made, browbeaten into submission by the unholy trinity of the coal operators, the U. M. W. officials and the Pennsylvania state police. Those who have been picked as the victims and blacklisted, as a punishment for the insurgency, remain locked out. The thousands of unemployed who joined in the movement are left to shift for themselves and face the continued misery of starvation.

This strike brought out all the deep seated discontent coupled with the sterling spirit of rebellion which is saturating the mine fields. But the conscious expression and conscious direction required to face the overwhelming odds was not yet at hand. The strike was entirely spontaneous in character, its program and objective not clearly defined and its leadership did not in the least rise above that level. Therefore, while the beating back of this insurgent movement, obviously records another working class defeat, it is nevertheless one of these defeats harboring lessons which can become a preparation for future success.

The leaders of this strike were not at all conscious Left wingers, not to speak of being revolutionists. But they found themselves in conflict with the degenerated, corrupt union bureaucrats, and pressed forward by a bureaucracy chafing under growing exploitation. In that sense they expressed the rebellion of the rank and file. How ruthlessly the capitalist owners of industry proceed to break down any resistance, incipient or consciously expressed, is testified to by the fact that five of these strike leaders, undoubtedly with many rank and file members suffering the same fate, were blacklisted and dismissed by the companies immediately upon the return to work. And, of course, in the trial for murder of the Harlan, Ky. strikers is yet more eloquent and more brutal testimony for those who may still have doubts.

Strikes Growing in Other Fields

Badly scattered and isolated within local fields as the miners struggle now are, and have been for quite a long time, their fighting spirit nevertheless remains undaunted. In this we have again a picture of what has been repeated so often before. While the anthracite insurgent strike suffered its set-back, new strikes are developing and growing elsewhere. In that part of the central competitive field embracing Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, and at a few other points, approximately 75,000 miners went on strike on April first. It has been characterized by operators and U. M. W. officials alike as a sort of a truce rather than a strike. In many respects that is true. The operators insist upon a drastic wage reduction. This the miners are dead set against and ready to fight against, so much so, that the officials have not as yet dared to enter into a wage cut agreement and are therefore hiding their time, hoping for better prospects to remain true to their role of being capitalist agents in the workers' ranks.

The "truce" as could be expected remains only so long that it benefits the operators. In Indiana, for example, it has already, at the time of this writing, been broken. The operators have issued an ultimatum to the miners and are attempting to operate with strike breakers. It is backed up by the promise of the governor of the state to have troops in readiness. Once more this verifies our contention that the capitalist exploiters can always rely upon the service of the government and its armed forces against the workers; whether or not they strike in the name of their official union or through an insurgent movement.

Serious clashes have already resulted in Indiana and likewise in Ohio. Scabs have suffered in the determined picketing of the striking miners not even protected by the tear gas bombs used by sheriffs' forces. It is therefore clear that this situation may hold very serious tests in store both in regard to the actual power of resistance of the rank and file miners and their ability to circumvent the officials' slimy maneuvers to accommodate the operators.

Can the Isolated Movements Be United?

A look at the mine fields today proves how complete the disarray destructive has been of the break-up and partitioning of the United Mine Workers and its corrupt officials. It has long ago ceased to be a nationally fighting unit. But should it remain so? That is the most important question. When viewing the latest isolated and localized strikes much food for thought is available for those workers who are ready to do some serious thinking. And it is to those that we particularly address ourselves. Over a period of more than a year the miners have developed serious resistance to the capitalist onslaughts. The militancy displayed parallels their history of the past. This was manifested alike in the Pennsylvania-Ohio strikes last year of the N. M. U., in the anthracite insurgent strike, in the West Virginia strike, led by the Mastette progressive and in the Kentucky miners strikes. It is developing in this present strike. All of them remained localized and isolated without any efforts to unite them into one movement. The official party leadership in its conduct of mine strike policy is not at all exempt from this castigation. And yet, in this lies the real problem which is becoming an ever more pressing one. For effective resistance against the operators and for a serious fight against their servile tools holding office in the U. M. W. the unification of these scattered movements developing from different directions but essentially striving toward the same objective is the first command.

What Should the National Miners Union Do?

What can so far be expected from the official party leadership is indicated in the recent National Miners Union convention. There is no trace of measures being taken toward this essential unification. It is reported that this convention was put through the gymnastics of the usual "searching self-criticism." It discovered again the many weaknesses of "underestimation" and "shortcomings" of the rank and file, of course (!!)—which it summed up in "insufficient con-

Hitler Scoffs at Threat to «Outlaw» Nazis

The press this week reports an intended ban of the National Socialist organizations on the basis of the documents seized during the raids on Nazi headquarters in Prussia, some three weeks ago. It is significant that the rumors emanate from the Prussian ministry of the interior and not from the federal government. All that is possibly true in these rumors is the fact that the social democratic workers are bringing pressure upon the socialist Severing who heads the Prussian ministry of the Interior. So far Severing has only resorted to strong phrases. The federal government remains non-committal and Severing will not by himself act without the consent of the Brüning administration.

The documents seized reveal, however, broadly and precisely outlined plans on part of the Nazis for the seizure of power.

"Among the instructions to local Nazi chiefs," says the New York Times report, "was a document calling for the names of the police, municipal officials, pastors, public school teachers, leading Freemasons and prominent Jews. Other documents contained mobilization plans calling for data on airports, their crews and the number and type of planes. . . . What most sorely tried the patience of Herr Severing was the recurring reference in the confiscated documents to the equipment and personnel of the Prussian police and the location of their stores of arms and ammunition, as well as to the measures prescribed for safeguarding the railway service."

This is enough to indicate with what thoroughness and how seriously the Nazis are preparing for the seizure of power with the aid of army and police officials. To the news that these documents were published and that a ban against his organizations is being planned, Hitler has replied very briefly: "Bah! Piffle!"

Hitler knows very well that he has nothing to fear in so far as the interference of the bourgeois government is concerned. He knows that he already has important positions in the administration apparatus. What Hitler does fear is united action on part of the working class. He knows that a united front of the working class movement alone would strike fear into the hearts of his following. That is why he is proceeding so carefully.

Hitler's strategy at the present moment is concentrated on getting some measure of popular success with which to follow up for the morale of his heterogeneous group to a decisive blow. That is one of the reasons for his "legalistic" policy. He is hoping for a sort of parliamentary victory in the Prussian elections as the proper moment to strike. It is most likely that he will continue along this line until the elections to the Prussian Diet next month. This is the element of greatest value in the present social struggle in Germany. The Fascist leaders are well aware of this.

The official party has appreciably modified its position of "strategic retreat" before Fascism. To a great extent, this has taken place under the pressure of the criticism of the Left Opposition. A further change along the same line is absolutely necessary. The united front of all workers' organizations in the fight against Fascism is imperative. No time is to be lost. The enemy is at the gates of the German proletariat. Stalinist confusionism must be brushed aside, if the proletariat of Germany and with it, the working class of the entire world, is not to suffer a defeat, the disastrous consequences of which can hardly be calculated in advance.

ship of Stalin independent of the apparatus. Now to pledge loyalty to the "Leninist Central Committee" would mean the same as openly to raise the banner of rebellion. The only acceptable formula of loyalty is an oath to the name of Stalin. Orator, propagandist, journalist, theoretician, pedagogue, sportsman—must include in his speech, article, or lecture, the phrase of the infallibility of the policy of the Central Committee "under the leadership of Stalin" which means of the infallibility of Stalin riding astride the Central Committee. This means that every party member and Soviet employee, from the president of the Council of Peoples' Commissars to a modest provincial clerk, must give openly, before the whole country an oath to the effect that in case of disagreement between the Central Committee and Stalin, he, the undersigned, will support Stalin against the C. C. To this level are now practically reduced the by-laws of the party and the Soviet constitution.

This sort of thing is going further and further. The official anniversary article on the Red Army (February 23) states that the "Communist Party" with its Leninist Central Committee headed by comrade Stalin is the leader of all the armed forces of the Soviet Union. This means that the Red Army is called upon to be loyal to the Soviets of the working masses, to the proletariat and its vanguard as long as Stalin will remain "at the head" of the party. This means that on the day when the party will no longer desire this costly leadership, the Red Army will have to support Stalin against the party. There can be no other meaning in the oath to the name of Stalin. This is a new stage in a systematic, planned, persistent preparation of bonapartism. Re-read history!

When you started the struggle within the party under the name of the struggle against "Trotskyism", you formed within the official Politburo a secret Politburo, or "the seven"—against me. You had your secret meetings, your discipline secret from the party, your secret code for communications with agents of the conspiracy in the provinces. The baiting of Trotsky and of "Trotskyism" went parallel with the stifling of the party's independence; one and the other were equally necessary for the triumph of bureaucracy.

Now similar work, although in caricatured, bonapartist form, is being performed on a new historic stage. Doubtlessly the narrow faction of Stalin has its own secret staff, its slogans and pass-words its agents and its codes; the conspiracy against the apparatus is pushed full speed ahead, while the apparatus is still in conspiracy against the party. The despotism of Stalin undermined from below hastens to assume ever more finished forms from above.

The party threatens to intervene in the conflict which has started between Stalin and the apparatus. It must intervene, lest the class enemy intervene. To help the party intervene powerfully is the aim of the Left Opposition. Of this very thing Stalin is in mortal fear. He wants to strangle the party completely before he settles with the apparatus. That is why the XVIIIth party conference was treated to a new campaign against "Trotskyism". That is why this conference was transformed into a roll-call of those loyal to Stalin. And that is why it was necessary to complete the conference by your decision of February 20th. The meaning of this policy is, that each new blow at the party is inseparable from a blow to "Trotskyism". In this lies the strength of the Opposition. In this lies the doom of Stalin.

You long ago substituted for inner-party democracy, "self-criticism". In the beginning it meant that one may criticize any one outside of the Central Committee. Later it means that one may criticize only those whom the C. C. orders to be criticized. Now it means that one may criticize any one but Stalin and must bait any member of the C. C. who does not swear by the name of Stalin. Above the party, above the apparatus, above criticism—stands Stalin. The law of his infallibility takes on a retroactive character. The history of the party is rebuilt around the Stalinist infallibility as around a new axis. Any one who has not succeeded in re-arranging himself, inevitably falls under the knife.

It was found necessary to turn a revolutionary party which bases itself on a scientific doctrine and a great tradition into a temple where Kaganovich, in the role of high priest, burns incense to the idol of eternal perfection. All that is lacking to complete the system is that the dogma of the immaculate conception be added to the dogma of infallibility.

Can there be anything more malignant, more debased and shameful than the introduction of supermonarchical authority into the party of the proletariat. Perhaps you do not know where it leads to: Re-read history. The dogma of lifetime infallibility is the most unquestionable, the most shameful expression of the fact that Stalin's management is in irreconcilable contradiction with the economic, political and cultural development of Soviet democracy, and what is no less important—with the historical problems of the world proletarian vanguard.

Just think of it, only after one decade and a half since the October revolution there stands at the head of the Comintern, Mannilsky. You know this person no less than I do. None of us over took him seriously. During all critical moments he vacillated, was confused and retreated; always and ever he sought a master. In 1918 he declared in print that Trotsky saved Bolshevism from national limitedness. In 1923, once more in print, he called Lenin and Trotsky the creators of the theory and practice of the Communist International. You will say that he was motivated by personal reasons? I will not dispute it. But in that case he miscalculated. "The three" gave Mannilsky an ultimatum: either to start a campaign against Rakovsky who was universally respected, or to be crushed. You know Mannilsky: he chose the first. And now, frightful to think: Mannilsky is the leader of the Comintern!

The strategy of Marx and Lenin, the historical experience of Bolshevism, the great lessons of 1917—everything is distorted, maimed, slandered. Yesterday's mistakes of the bureaucracy are not disclosed and not refuted, are transformed into an obligatory tradition and on each turn of the road serve as traps and pitfalls. The leadership of the Comintern has become an organized sabotage of the international proletarian revolution. Its crimes are countless. And now before your very eyes is being prepared the most terrible of them all.

The theory of social Fascism in which the ignorance of Stalin is coupled with the irresponsibility of Mannilsky has become a noose around the neck of the German proletariat. Under the whip of the Stalinist clique the miserable, confused, frightened, terrified C. C. of the German Communist Party helps with all its might—cannot but help—the leaders of the German social democracy to betray the German working class for crucifixion by Hitler.

And do you think that the forged scrap of paper of February 20th will stop the developments of Bolshevik criticism? Stop us from the fulfillment of our duty? Frighten our adherents? Already in not less than twenty countries there are cadres of Bolsheviks who by right feel themselves to be the continuators of the Marxian tradition, of the school of Lenin, of the commandments of the October revolution. You will not shut them up!

Of course, Stalin has not had his last practical say. The arsenal of his means is known; Lenin weighed them and characterized them. But these means can now suffice only for personal revenge. The blows at the old intransigent fighter Rakovsky, the shooting of the "traitor" Blumkin and his substitution by the real Stalinist Agabekoff, the shooting at Bolsheviks interned in the solitaires, the small, very modest but unnoticeable aid to class enemies against a revolutionary opponent—these are the Stalinist arsenal will yet suffice. But not more than for this!

You know Stalin no less than I do. Many of you, in conversations with me or with persons near to me, evaluated Stalin more than once and without illusions. The strength of Stalin was always, not in himself but in the apparatus; or in himself in so far as he remained the complete incorporation of bureaucratic automatism. Separated from the apparatus, counterposed to the apparatus—Stalin is but an empty space. The man who was yesterday (the symbol of bureaucratic power, will be tomorrow in the eyes of all the symbol of bureaucratic bankruptcy. It is time to do away with the Stalinist myth. It is necessary to entrust oneself to the working class and its real, not fake party.

Read again the resolutions of the plenums of the Central Committee for the years 1926 and 1927, read again the statements of the Opposition, you have a fuller set of documents than I have. And you will be convinced again that the whole evolution of the party, of the apparatus, of the Stalinist clique were foretold by us, all the milestones were indicated before. The decomposition of the Stalinist system accedes with the exact observance of the manner indicated by the Opposition. Do you want to follow this road further? But there is no road further. Stalin has brought you to an impasse. You cannot come out on the road without liquidating Stalinism. You must trust to the working class, give the proletarian vanguard the possibility, through free criticism from top to bottom, to review the whole Soviet system and pitilessly cleanse it of the accumulated rubbish. It is time, finally, to fulfill the last urgent advice of Lenin: to remove Stalin.

In the work of the regeneration of the party and of Soviet democracy the Left Opposition is ready to take a direct part at any time. It can be trusted. It represents a selection of revolutionists, wholeheartedly devoted to the dictatorship of the proletariat. It is a priceless heaven for the crushed, torn party, undermined from the top by careerism and servility.

Great problems are again being placed by history on the order of the day: in the Far East and especially in the centre of Europe, in Germany. When measures of great policy are needed Stalin flinches with petty police measures. The Opposition will step over the decision of February 20th as a worker on the way to work steps over a mud puddle.

Bolshevik-Leninists, forward! Prinkipo, March 1, 1932

Opposition Branch Formed In Newark

Several weeks ago a branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) was organized in Newark, N. J. The branch is rather small, having only six members at the present time, but there is a growing sentiment for the Left Opposition among the Party members and the Communist sympathizers. This fact was amply demonstrated the first lecture arranged by the branch on Sunday afternoon, March 27th, at the Workers' Home, 37-16th Ave. A crowd of forty men and women gave their closest attention to the lecture, delivered by comrade Basky on the World Situation, the Problems and Tasks of the Communist Movement. The speaker gave a historical sketch of the origins and development of the Left Opposition since 1923 up to the present time, counterposing the Marxian program of the Left Opposition to the opportunist policies of the Stalinist bureaucracy.

A large number of questions were answered by the speaker with such an effect that some of the Party sympathizers made a statement that they came to the meeting with a hostile feeling to the Opposition but their feelings were quite reversed. After the meeting some of them declared their intention of joining the branch.

The lecture was followed by a meeting of the branch and a program was decided upon for further activity including a systematic sale of The Militant, and literature of the Left Opposition, a series of open air meetings during the summer, arrangements for other indoor lectures. A still more elaborate program is contemplated by the branch for the fall season, including the organization of an open forum.

Free Speech in the Party?

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The Daily Worker Readers' Forum conducted by the Communist party each Sunday afternoon deserves honorable mention in permitting a hitherto unprecedented step forward in the form of democratic discussion, since the expulsion of the Left Opposition more than three years ago.

Militant Drive Yields Results

It is possible now to say that the drive is yielding results. It is enough to compare last week's standing with this week's report to see what a leap forward the drive has taken. To enable everyone to make this comparison easily we give below both figures. The figure immediately following the city is last week's figure, the second figure is this week's:

New York, last week—17, this week—26; Minneapolis—5-16; Chicago—3-7; Boston—4-4; St. Louis—1-1; Newark 1-1; Philadelphia—1-1; Montreal—0-1; Miscellaneous—12-15.

The drive seems to be developing into a contest between the New York and Minneapolis branches. Our other branches should not permit them to make it a contest between themselves but should make strenuous efforts to overcome their lead.

They can take a leaf from our Minneapolis branch. Comrade Coover in reporting eleven subs, says: "Minneapolis is off to a start on the drive and the other branches are going to have to step on it from now on or take a rubbing and this goes for the New York branch as well as the others. The score at the close of March is as follows: (each $1 for subs counts as one point; 50c as a 1-2 point, etc.) Team 1: Myles B. Dunne, Capt.—Fannie Barach—6 1-2 points; V. Dunne—6 points; Sam Lessin—2 1-2 points; Chester Johnson—21-2 points; total for Team 1 on March 31st—17 1-2 points; Team 2: William Curran, Capt.—Carl Cowl—4 points; Carl Skoglund—2 points; Sam Zalmanoff—2 points. O. Coover—1 point; Total for Team 2 on March 31st—9 1-2 points.

Myles Dunne's Team 1 evened the score with the captain of Team 2, Wm. Curran, when they introduced one of the Team 2 members to turn over to a member of Team 1 money collected for a sub; and then to add insult to injury they outdistanced us during the first month of the sub drive by 8 points. All the Team 2 members swear vengeance and some of our heavy hitters are going to do some battling during the month of April. So Team 1 had better watch their step. Up to April 1st the total points scored by the Minneapolis branch is 17. Watch out New York! We are after you."

This is the spirit, Minneapolis. New York is on its toes, hitting on all six. It's ready to take on all challenges. It retorts that it can't be in on that banquet to be given by the losing team at the close of the drive. It means to come out on top of the heap on June 1st.

Sub getters can take a tip from a subscriber from Wauhan, Minn., who in taking advantage of the combined rate of $2. for a year's subscription to both The Militant and Young Spartacus, writes: "Times continue very hard out here but one must have The Militant and it is hard to pass up a bargain like the present one in the drive." A word to the wise is sufficient.

Another encouraging sign is the increased number of 25c subs for 8 issues. Almost any worker who is not totally unemployed can afford a quarter for eight issues, especially now when interest in Germany is so keen and we are running extracts from comrade Trotsky's latest work on Germany—"What Next?" This is, of course, as good an inducement

The question under discussion last week was that of the war danger. The point of view of the official party was expressed by Norman Bersnick. Comrade Avrin, of the Left Opposition took issue with the speaker stressing the danger to the revolutionary vanguard and the U. S. S. R. emanating from the threat of a Fascist Germany. Comrade Avrin was given the floor three times during the discussion to present the point of view of the Left Opposition before the 300 workers who attended the forum.

This is a step forward in the development of a basis for clarification in the ranks of the party members and sympathizers on the differences between the Stalin faction and the Left Opposition under comrade Trotsky. We hope this form of clarification becomes a part of general party policy, because it is only in this way, in viewing and discussing the differences openly before the party that real clarity and cohesion can be obtained and training provided for firm revolutionary fighters.

Trotsky Meeting in Duluth

DULUTH, MINN.

In spite of definite threats of a "broken head" if he speaks Friday on "Trotsky", comrade Sam Bloomberg, well-known party member and a figure in the Winnipeg General Strikes of 1919, addressed a mass meeting of over 150 attentive workers Friday night in Moose Temple on the "Truth About Trotsky", thus breaking through a ring of slander and intrigue maintained by the Stalinists against the Left Opposition for over two years since the occasion when comrade Shachtman last spoke here. The meeting marks a forward step for the Opposition in a city having a militant class-struggle tradition like Duluth.

It was originally scheduled to be held at Camel Hall. But since that hall is also rented on a monthly basis by the Stalinists, the management was pressed into refusing to allow the hall for a Trotsky meeting. As is to be expected, this bureaucratic attempt to suppress the meeting aroused determination on the part of the workers to hear the point of view of the Left Opposition, and, in spite of a blizzard, made our meeting successful. A few party members and a number of T. U. C. L., F. S. U., I. W.

O. and ex-Party members were present, in spite of the party decision to boycott the meeting.

Comrade O'Rourke, the chairman, who is an old Duluth militant, a R. R. engineer, opened the meeting and introduced comrade Bloomberg. In an hour and a quarter speech, marked by brilliant analysis and conviction, Bloomberg told the story of Trotsky and the Left Opposition, the alleged "differences" with Lenin from 1903 on, the theory of socialism in one country, the role of the Left Opposition in bringing the Communist movement back on the base of Marxism-Leninism. "For years I was prejudiced and poisoned against the Left Opposition by the Stalinist press. It took me two years of study and practical observation to convince me that Trotsky is right and that the hope of the international Communist movement rests in the success of the Left Opposition." Bloomberg's declaration was well received.

O'Rourke then introduced comrade Carl Cowl, the secretary of the Minneapolis branch of the Communist League, who spoke on "Why the Centrist Bureaucracy Defeated the Left Opposition". Citing the defeats of the proletariat in Bulgaria (1923), Germany (1923) Estonia (1924) Great Britain (1926) China (1927) and the stabilization of capitalism connected with these catastrophes, together with the weariness engendered in the Russian proletariat after the heroic straining of forces in the years of the revolution and civil war, Cowl explained the new confidence placed in the petty bourgeois strata of the city and village and in the bourgeois elements of the state bureaucracy who gained considerable strength on the basis of the N. E. P. The centrist apparatus, supporting itself on these elements and exploiting the passivity of the proletariat, crushed the Left, revolutionary wing of the Party and revised the principles of Marxism-Leninism. He depicted the lying and disloyal campaign used to poison the minds of the party members. It is necessary to combat their lies with the truth, their disloyalty by comradely methods, their irresponsibility before the working class by serious work. He called on every member of the audience to hear the other side of the question by reading and subscribing to The Militant and Unser Kampf and Young Spartacus and the pamphlets on specific problems before the world working class. Further, those workers who are in agreement with the principles and aims of the Left Opposition, should not hesitate, but should join our ranks and help our cause.

Comrade Carl Skoglund, member of the National Committee of the Communist League, then took the floor on the German elections and gave an analysis of the dangerous and compromising position the Stalinists were leading the German party into. He explained precisely what Fascism is and the stupidity of the slogan: After Fascism—the Workers Dictatorship, which betrays and disarms the German working class in the primary struggle against Fascism. He revealed the figures in the recent elections and exposed the false analysis of "victory" for the Communists who gained a few hundred thousand votes as compared to six million of the Fascists. The German question will not be solved in the elections or in parliament, he said, but in the class struggle, and finally by the united forces of the proletariat against the reaction.

The speakers were harassed with questions and discussion, a few Stalinists adding to the interest of the meeting by raising the old chestnuts about writing in the capitalist press, adding brazening and others, some of which actually brought laughter from the audience. There were some serious statements of support together with a recount of a number of incidents in Duluth illustrating wrong party tactics, leading to lack of confidence and disrespect and finally isolation from the workers.

After they are distributed and workers have had an opportunity to read and judge for themselves we must follow up with sales of current issues. In this way we can enlarge the readers of our press.

Sub getters should remember that the Opposition press consists of four organs. Where we cannot get a sub for Militant or Young Spartacus because a worker has difficulty in reading English we should try for a sub for Unser Kampf, or Communism, or the Russian Bulletin or Communism.

Now everybody into the drive! Get subs! Get renewals! Hunt up, dig out a newsstand, a bookstore! Order posters! Order and distribute back numbers! Sell current issues! Increase the circulation of the Militant! Make the subscription drive a success! Build the Opposition press!

$10.50 worth of literature was sold, and there was a substantial collection. Three subs were gotten and two new members joined the League. Workers, after the meeting, expressed amazement that they could have been so deceived by the Party press and asked for more such meetings. With the present program of adventurism of the party continuing in force, there is every possibility of building a good branch in Duluth which will be able to help restore the confidence and support of the working class in Communism.

The Struggle Around the Volkszeitung

For some time now, a fierce struggle has been going for the control of the New York Volkszeitung, long established as a working class paper in the German language and at one time a Communist organ. In this struggle, it now appears, the yellow socialists are definitely gaining the upper hand. The editorship is in the hands of a "socialist" of doubtful repute, the policies are at one with those of the treacherous social democratic press in Germany.

The opposition to the socialists is offered by members of the former Lore organization, the "Verband Internationaler Arbeiter". There appear to be among this opposition not a few honest revolutionary workers who feel the disgrace that has fallen upon the Volkszeitung rather keenly. And yet it is precisely the obstinate centrist policy of Lore, the illusions be created about a middle road between Communism and social democracy that is most heavily responsible for this condition. The Left Opposition long ago exposed this deceptive policy and warned in time that it could only lead to abject surrender before the reformists. By cutting his revolutionary followers off from the current of Communism, by wiping out the fundamental and unbridgeable differences between the Communists and the reformists, by vacillating between the two in an attempt to exploit the "shortcomings" of each for centrist ends, Lore merely prepared the ground for the domination of the fakers.

This is a lesson worth while learning. The "logic" of the centrist position is here proven in practice. The honest, sincere workers in the Volkszeitung opposition will no doubt draw their conclusions from it. Theirs is the task now to find the road back to Communism. It is their first duty not to stop with the attack on the shameful pro-Hindenburg articles of the Volkszeitung but to view the implications of the entire German situation today and to make clear for themselves as to which of the Communist currents represents the true needs of the working class. In this, the Left Opposition is ready to give them all the aid at its disposal. It will follow the developments more closely in coming issues of The Militant.

Attention Y.C.L.-ers!

To a Member of the Y. C. L. in Brownsville:

We have received a letter from a member of the Young Communist League in Brooklyn, N. Y., which we are requested to print in the Militant. The content of the letter is a criticism of some of the activities of the Y. C. L. Although we have no objection to printing letters from readers of the Militant, nevertheless we cannot print letters without knowing the identity of the individual who has written the letter. We will of course upon the request of the writer withhold publication of the name, but in order to have a guarantee of the accuracy of the facts and the genuineness of the document we must be informed of the identity of the correspondent. Will the author of the above mentioned letter please communicate with us.

German Opposition Shows the Way A Letter from Czechoslovakia

Communists of Bruchsal Apply Genuine Leninist United-Front Tactics

In the town of Bruchsal, the local group of the German Left Opposition is the only Communist organization. Free from the stranglehold of Stalinism and its disastrous policies, our Bruchsal comrades have been able to carry on the work of the Communist party on their own initiative. Equipped with the Leninist orientation of the International Left Opposition and intent on putting it into practice, the Bruchsal Oppositionists have succeeded in establishing a successful united front of all the local proletarian mass organizations in the fight against Fascism. On the basis of their correct policy and action, they have succeeded in increasing the ranks of Communism one hundred per cent within the last few weeks, gaining in membership and founding new groups of the Left Opposition in the immediate vicinity, raising Communist influence in the local working class into a factor to be reckoned with.

Our Bruchsal comrades are carrying on their struggle with all forces at their disposal. This is in itself important work. But even more important is the example they have shown for our German party as a whole: the example of actual Leninist mass work in the struggle for the defeat of the proletariat and the majority of Fascism. In the present social ferment in Germany, the work of the Bruchsal Oppositionists stands out as a light house illuminating the Bolshevik situation.

We bring below a report of the progress of the Bruchsal Left Opposition.—Ed.

The C. P. G. in Forst Joins the L. O.

Due to the influence of the Left Opposition, the local organization of the C. P. G. in the town of Forst has placed itself on the positions of the Left Opposition. As old comrades, the Communists of Forst have not been able to allow all that they have not previously learned from the C. P. G. to be egged counter-revolutionary. They have decided to fight side by side with the Left Opposition against the false course of the C. P. G., to defend the heritage of Lenin with us.

In view of the present political chaos, the comrades in Forst attempted to form the united front with the social democratic workers according to the Bruchsal example. Unfortunately, it has up to now only remained an attempt, because the S. P. G. workers have in the meantime received instructions from the S. P. G. bureaucracy to create the "iron front." For this reason, the S. P. G. functionaries in Forst informed us, the matter of the united front will have to be postponed until after the presidential elections. All this only shows how strong the hold of the bureaucracy on the social democratic workers still is. In spite of this, we will not rest, as sincere and convinced Communists, until we have opened the eyes of the very last social democratic worker to the criminal actions of his leaders.

How the Party Bureaucracy "Liquidates" the L. O. in Bruchsal
For several weeks, the party bureaucracy has attempted with all possible means to gain a foothold in Bruchsal, in order to smash the Opposition movement.

Miners

tact with the field." One may ask, "Where was the contact if not with the field?" This is about as far as the party leadership's attitude to the antithetic insubordinate strike. In that vital situation it could only find the insufficiency of the demand for "equalization of work." How futile is such analysis when one views the broad sweeps of the many almost simultaneous, isolated rebel movements which the party leadership could not see, or refused to see.

The convention adopted the slogan "face to the field." Essential as this is, it still leaves that main problem of unification entirely out of account. This is the real need of the movement for which the revolutionary party is first of all called upon to advance a solution.

The objective situation in the mine fields is ever more richly providing the material ready to hand. Would it not be a simple measure, entirely in accord with the duty of a revolutionary party, utilizing the National Miners Union as the medium, to approach the rebellious miners everywhere, through their local organizations, through their insurgent groups, to the rank and file direct as well as to their accepted leaders and to their imposed leaders, and seriously demand that in the common interests of all miners steps should be taken for a united front against the common enemy? Would that not be the most effective way to defeat the designs of the imposed leader, the corrupt office holders, as well as to clearly bring out the weakness and insufficiency of the timid and opportunist progressives? Would it not be called by the miners as a serious step toward establishing a new national unity of their ranks.

While the U. M. W. is broken up and scattered in a localized existence, it has not disappeared. A serious united front movement must also proceed by building a Left wing movement within it.

At first they tried to allow us to cooperate in the Red United Front organs. But when the Karlsruhe comrades of the Red United Front wanted to call upon the Bruchsal comrades to speak as reporters before the meetings of the unemployed, the bureaucracy put its foot down and forbade this. They are now attempting to approach the Bruchsal organization by means of the International Labor Defense. The Bruchsal comrades declared their readiness to build up a branch of the I. L. D., on condition that they receive a written guarantee that Opposition comrades will enjoy the same rights within it as all the other comrades. For better or worse, the party bureaucracy had to consent to this. Although we have declared ourselves prepared to begin this work, the bureaucracy does not as yet seem to be satisfied. It has sought out several comrades in Bruchsal to undertake the shameful labors of destroying the Bruchsal group of the Opposition. But what these comrades have done up to now has only turned to the discredit of the C. P. G. They only proved before the Bruchsal workers the correctness of the Left Opposition policy.

In a meeting of the unemployed in Bruchsal, to which these half-baked party comrades invited a speaker from Karlsruhe, these comrades made the proposal that a party comrade be allowed to speak besides the reporter of the Left Opposition, and demanded that their proposal be voted on. Through this stupid manner of action, they only got themselves an overwhelming defeat.

The meeting of the unemployed, with an attendance of 500 workers, decided against 3 votes, to reject the proposal. It is by such methods that the party attempts to win over the masses in Bruchsal.

In the Communist Arbeiterzeitung of February 4, they published an article in which they call the Bruchsal comrades renegades. We are also accused of glorifying the counter-revolutionary Trotsky and of still maintaining the anti-Marxist and anti-Leninist theory of Trotsky about the impossibility of building socialism in one country. We are, they say further, telling fairy tales when we insist that thousands of Opposition comrades are confined in jails in Russia and solitary, who have taken part in the Red October and that the Stalinist bureaucracy does not even shrink from shooting them. All these contentions are merely calumnies against the C. P. G. Another of our crimes consists in the establishment of a united front with the S. P. G. and trade union workers. This is enough to give a picture of the ideological swamp in which the party bureaucracy exists. The Bruchsal workers know very well who comrade Trotsky is and what he has contributed to the Russian revolution. We also know that Trotsky is right when he says that socialism cannot be built in one country. The workers of Bruchsal realize the difficult situation existing for Soviet Russia at the present through the Sino-Japanese conflict, after the Comintern leadership previously missed the revolutionary situation and left Russia an isolated country. Only the extension of the revolution on an international scale can liberate the world proletariat from capitalism, only in this manner can socialist construction be made secure and Soviet Russia defended against the threat of intervention. When the Stalinist bureaucrats characterize this theory as counter-revolutionary, then they only prove that they have thrown Marxism and Leninism overboard.

When these bureaucrats maintain that the Bruchsal comrades have committed a terrible crime by establishing the united front with the S. P. G. and trade union workers, then that only proves that they have left the road of Lenin, which is the only road by which we can escape the claws of capitalism. It is not the Left Oppositionists, but the bureaucrats of the C. P. G. who are the renegades. In closing, we want to call attention to the remarks of one Shafer, a recent convert from the social democracy, at one of the meetings of the bureaucracy arranged for him on his return from Soviet Russia. He said: When the C. P. G. comes into power, the Bruchsal comrades will be the first to be stood against the wall. All comment is superfluous.

The Lying Methods of the Stalinist Bureaucracy

When the Committee of Action consisting of the C. P. G. (Left Opposition), S. P. G. and factory representatives, called a mass meeting of the Bruchsal workers, in which comrade Paul Speck of the Left Opposition addressed the many trade union and S. P. G. workers who had come, the Bruchsal organ of the Centre (Bruen-) ing Party—the Bruchsaler Bote—wrote on November 9, 1931:

"The main speaker of the evening was the Communist alderman, Speck. He demanded united action on part of the S. P. G. and C. P. G. workers in a relentless struggle over the heads of the leaders, against emergency decrees, social reaction and Fascism. All power to the proletarians, he said, we must fight for the dictatorship of the proletariat."

The Bruening paper concluded the article in the following manner: "This is a warning to the social democrats. The social democratic party has taken a dangerous position, for it is not excluded that the Communists will make the attempt to radicalize the moderate social democratic workers. The leaders of the S. P. G. will know what we mean by this."

The Communist Arbeiterzeitung of Feb. 4, 1932, on the other hand, wrote concerning a Communist meeting, in which the Left Opposition comrades of Bruchsal presented their point of view, the following:

"The C. P. G. is being slandered by the Bruchsal Trotskyists. They are not much better in this than the social Fascists. It is therefore not at all strange that these frenzied petty bourgeois have established a united front with the S. P. G. and trade union fakery for the alleged purpose of fighting Fascism. According to them that is the same wise Bolshevik tactic that Lenin applied at the time of the Kornilov putsch. That is a base distortion of history. The Bruchsal workers, who are still following these people, must realize the counter-revolutionary role of this S. P. G. agency. The workers must confine only in the C. P. G., the one revolutionary party."

The juxtaposition of both these articles shows very clearly what the correct Communist policy is. The Bruening people have realized the danger that they face in the united front tactic of the Communists. Therefore, their warning to the S. P. G. leaders and the warning of the radicalization of the S. P. G. followers by the Communists.

If this is a counter-revolutionary tactic—despite the fact that it has clashed upon the opposition of the social democratic Volksfreund—what can be said of a tactic, which in contrast to the former, has not succeeded in preventing the formation of the "iron front," which has led to loss of influence among the workers of the S. P. G. and the trade unions?

A BRUCHSAL COMRADE.

The shutting down of factories has assumed tremendous proportions, the number of unemployed has risen, according to the official statistics, to some 600,000, the figure for the past time workers is even higher. In the most important branches of industry the number of the unemployed amounts to about half the number of those employed. At this, only workers organized in trade unions receive unemployment subsidies according to the Czechoslovakian system of unemployment insurance, so that only about one sixth of the unemployed receive a subsidy from the state at present, while the rest are dependent upon the support of the communities and the population as a whole. Unemployment has been extended even to functionaries and intellectuals. Bankruptcies among small merchants and tradesmen are on the order of the day, the numerous middle peasantry is going under.

The balance of the state budget is shattered and has necessitated a foreign loan, which entrenches the dependence upon French imperialism even more firmly. Chained to the Western robbers, not a natural island but a piece chopped off with the axe of the world war from among similar pieces, bourgeois Czechoslovakia can secure neither peace with its neighbors, nor work and bread inside the country. In vain, the Czech petty bourgeoisie bubbles over with enthusiasm for a Middle European union, which is to form the heart of a united, pan-European, bourgeois Europe and shine all over in the sign of Christ. In vain. For no matter how small the states involved are, the contradictions in the interests that separate the bourgeois rulers are all the greater and a peaceful unification of Middle Europe has as its pre-requisite the uprooting of the competitive interests of the textile manufacturers and hog raisers, of the grain merchants and heavy industrialists. But the root is precisely the private ownership of the means of production. The proletariat alone can serve as the axe.

Political Developments

If under all these circumstances in Czechoslovakia there nevertheless exists or rather—exists, a relative stability of the political regime, then this is to be explained not by the economic basis, but above all, by the conditions which permitted the Czech bourgeoisie to establish its state rule. It could realize its imperialist aims by exploiting the national revolutionary and petty bourgeois democratic illusions of the masses of the people. It had the good fortune, not only to have under its sway patriotic National Socialists and social democrats, but even a leader at the head of the Communist party like the opportunist of European format, Smolensky, who as late as 1923 defended the bourgeois democracy and the unity of the Czechoslovakian state against the oppressed nationalities. And when the advanced Czech workers had gathered sufficient experiences with their "democratic" and national bourgeoisie to crush this opportunism in the party, the leadership of the Comintern, which had in the meantime begun to sink into the morass of Stalinist centrism, hemmed the party which had proceeded in seriously purifying itself, in its development and cast it back into Smolensky opportunism.

Only thanks to this impurity within the party, could the Czech bourgeoisie escape from the most difficult situations without a serious struggle, since the party of the proletariat occupied itself with minor trade union struggles, without giving much thought to the questions of revolutionary strategy. In view of this impurity, the party remained impotent precisely at the moment at which the partial struggles grew into mass demonstrations (as in March 1928). When, later on, the adventurist course which had begun in February 1928 in the entire International, was imported into Czechoslovakia as well, it led to the big crash of the so-called Red Day. The impotence of the party policy was quite evident and spontaneous excitement seized the whole party leadership in order to save the face of the Comintern leadership, the Jilek leadership, which had obediently carried out the Moscow instructions, was sacrificed. The new leadership continued the policy of the Red Day and brought the adventurist policy to a high pitch in the leadership of strikes and by its trade union tactics, through which it facilitated the split of the red trade unions by the right wing opportunists and renegades.

By raving about immediate struggles for power precisely at the time when it was necessary to strengthen and to build up the positions of the party in the factories and the trade unions, the party leadership undermined its former positions and was in no condition to lead the dawning leftward movement of the working class along revolutionary channels.

With two half-hearted turns to the "right," the first in October 1930, by the reclamation of the struggle for partial demands and the second in the fall of 1931, by a fifty per cent change in the united front and trade union tactics, the party sought, with a certain amount of success, to overcome its isolation, but could not change anything in the basic false strategic line. In order to understand this, we must cast a brief glance on the political situation in Czechoslovakia.

Present Political Currents

For several years there has been ruling in Czechoslovakia a broad coalition of Czech national democrats (the party of the industrial and financial bourgeoisie), the Czech and German agrarian capitalists, the Czech clerical party, the National Socialists (who in contradistinction to Hitler's National Socialists are parliamentary democrats), the Czech and the German social democrats. The activities of this administration, in which there are six socialist ministers, are characterized above all, by the rise in the agrarian and industrial tariffs, the increase in the military budget, the decrease of the meagre social legislation, the suppression of the Communist press, the oppressive taxation against the tolling masses, especially the peasants in Slovakia and the Carpathians, and by shootings against defenseless workers, even when they demonstrate merely for limited economic demands. The sharp procedure of the police and the gendarmerie appears to the workers to be all the more provocative, since the strike movements in the last few years have been, despite the official party reports, rather slight and have nowhere gone beyond the framework of local struggles.

In connection with the economic situation and the activities of the government, the voices of discontent among the reformist majority of the working class are constantly growing and find their expression in the meetings of the trade unions and the "socialist" parties. The economic successes of socialist construction in the Soviet Union, and especially the fact that unemployment over there appears to have been overcome, are driving the masses toward the Communist party and open up tremendous possibilities for agitation and action on the part of the party. But the centrist party leadership is still repelling these vacillating masses, but not merely restricting itself to attacks on the trade union leaders, by declaring its intentions of "exterminating" the trade union organizations themselves, without being able to substitute for them anything but the puny "Red Trade Unions" which carry on local and isolated strikes from time to time with great advertisements, the results of which are by no means an attraction for the working masses. On the other hand, it is attempting to arouse the workers by abstract enthusiasm for Soviet Russia and to cure their reformist and bourgeois democratic illusions by strong words like "social Fascism." All that is achieved by this is the isolation of the Communist workers from the masses, the repulsion of the dissatisfied workers into the arms of the trade union bureaucrats or under the influence of the Fascists.

The Policy of the Left Opposition

In contrast to these tactics, the Left Opposition raises the demands flowing from the direct needs of the workers and demands a common struggle of all workers' organizations and especially of the trade unions on this basis. Against the coalition policy of the bourgeoisie, it counter-poses the united struggle of the proletariat, to be led by democratically elected organs of the working class. In place of the phrases about social Fascism it offers a concrete explanation of the interconnection between the reformist party, parliamentarism and the economic domination of capital in general. Precisely by not restricting itself to exposing the fakeries of individual reformist leaders, as the Fascists and in imitation of them, the Stalin bureaucrats do, but rather by pointing out the basis of the capitalist system and by pointing to the road of the united struggle of the proletariat, the Left Opposition carries on the struggle against social democracy and Fascism in reality.

Prague, February 1932

—O. FRIEDMAN.

Germany after the Presidential Elections

The C. P. G. has not been able to carry out extra-parliamentary actions for some time. Extremely weak in the factories, in the mass organizations of the proletariat, with a membership composed, from 75 to 80 per cent, of unemployed workers, with a Red Trade Union Opposition forming an ever more negligible minority of the working class as a whole, the party cannot conduct successful strikes or instigate extra-parliamentary action. The party bureaucracy also realizes this. That is why the activity of the C. P. G. was turned to the field of parliamentary action, that is why the party has been directed toward referendums and elections. By successes in the parliamentary elections, the Thaelmann leadership had hoped to conceal the astrophysical effects of its policies from the party membership. The party bureaucracy will, no doubt, once more attempt to attribute the guilt for the results to the rank and file, through the use of "Bolshevik self-criticism." But no arguments of the Thaelmann leadership will be able to change the fact that the results of March 13 signify the utter bankruptcy of the Thaelmann policy, the utter political impotence of the Comintern leadership and of its spiritual leader, Stalin.

The results of March 13 demand imperiously a complete turn on the part of the party, the complete renunciation of the present policy. Out with the theory of "socialism in one country," which is the root of all the evil in the policy of the Comintern and the C. P. G.! We must orientate ourselves toward the actual organization of the West European revolution. Out with the theory that the S. P. G. is the main enemy at present! That only leads to the conclusion that Fascism is the "Lesser Evil!" The wheel must be turned toward: the erection of the united front between C. P. G., S. P. G., S. L. P. G., trade unions and the other decisive proletarian mass organizations. The theory of social Fascism must be uprooted, the R. T. U. O. policy must be given up, mass work must be carried on in the trade unions. It will not do for us to command the working class, we must struggle for the sympathies of the workers who are still outside the ranks of Communism for it is precisely upon them that the decision rests.

The German workers must utilize whatever time is still left, to make all the necessary preparations for the coming battle, which will be an extra-parliamentary battle. Fascism is not yet defeated, it is still struggling for power.

In international bourgeois opinion, Czechoslovakia has always signified a protective wall of peace and order. It arose on the ebb of the social and national struggle of the Czech petty bourgeoisie and workers against the Habsburg monarchy, the Roman church and the German bourgeoisie and out of the necessity of the entente powers to plant a military base between the dangerous countries of their defeated enemies in the war, between Germany, Austria and Hungary, from which side there was the threat of revenge struggles and revolutions against the new imperialist balance of power. In this sense, the bourgeois designation is to a certain extent correct. And even when the powerful wave of the industrial crisis swept over America and Europe in 1929, it appeared to be repelled by the "island of peace and order." The Czech bourgeoisie, which incorporated with its industrial and agrarian territories, the backward field and forest economy of Slovakia and the Carpathians as a sort of a substitute for the Austro-Hungarian customs field that it lost, and which exploited the national hopes of the Czech masses in order to lower the standards of living below the average of the West and Middle European countries, basing itself upon French imperialism to raise its commodity and capital export, at first appeared to escape the general economic misery. But it was soon to be proven that the shrinking of the foreign markets, the rise of the competitive and customs struggles among the international groups of capitalists and the decline of the purchasing power of the impoverished peasant masses inside the country would not fail to leave their effects upon the main industrial and commercial sections of Czechoslovakia.

The Economic Situation

The shutting down of factories has assumed tremendous proportions, the number of unemployed has risen, according to the official statistics, to some 600,000, the figure for the past time workers is even higher. In the most important branches of industry the number of the unemployed amounts to about half the number of those employed. It could realize its imperialist aims by exploiting the national revolutionary and petty bourgeois democratic illusions of the masses of the people. It had the good fortune, not only to have under its sway patriotic National Socialists and social democrats, but even a leader at the head of the Communist party like the opportunist of European format, Smolensky, who as late as 1923 defended the bourgeois democracy and the unity of the Czechoslovakian state against the oppressed nationalities. And when the advanced Czech workers had gathered sufficient experiences with their "democratic" and national bourgeoisie to crush this opportunism in the party, the leadership of the Comintern, which had in the meantime begun to sink into the morass of Stalinist centrism, hemmed the party which had proceeded in seriously purifying itself, in its development and cast it back into Smolensky opportunism.

Only thanks to this impurity within the party, could the Czech bourgeoisie escape from the most difficult situations without a serious struggle, since the party of the proletariat occupied itself with minor trade union struggles, without giving much thought to the questions of revolutionary strategy. In view of this impurity, the party remained impotent precisely at the moment at which the partial struggles grew into mass demonstrations (as in March 1928). When, later on, the adventurist course which had begun in February 1928 in the entire International, was imported into Czechoslovakia as well, it led to the big crash of the so-called Red Day. The impotence of the party policy was quite evident and spontaneous excitement seized the whole party leadership in order to save the face of the Comintern leadership, the Jilek leadership, which had obediently carried out the Moscow instructions, was sacrificed. The new leadership continued the policy of the Red Day and brought the adventurist policy to a high pitch in the leadership of strikes and by its trade union tactics, through which it facilitated the split of the red trade unions by the right wing opportunists and renegades.

By raving about immediate struggles for power precisely at the time when it was necessary to strengthen and to build up the positions of the party in the factories and the trade unions, the party leadership undermined its former positions and was in no condition to lead the dawning leftward movement of the working class along revolutionary channels.

With two half-hearted turns to the "right," the first in October 1930, by the reclamation of the struggle for partial demands and the second in the fall of 1931, by a fifty per cent change in the united front and trade union tactics, the party sought, with a certain amount of success, to overcome its isolation, but could not change anything in the basic false strategic line. In order to understand this, we must cast a brief glance on the political situation in Czechoslovakia.

Present Political Currents

For several years there has been ruling in Czechoslovakia a broad coalition of Czech national democrats (the party of the industrial and financial bourgeoisie), the Czech and German agrarian capitalists, the Czech clerical party, the National Socialists (who in contradistinction to Hitler's National Socialists are parliamentary democrats), the Czech and the German social democrats. The activities of this administration, in which there are six socialist ministers, are characterized above all, by the rise in the agrarian and industrial tariffs, the increase in the military budget, the decrease of the meagre social legislation, the suppression of the Communist press, the oppressive taxation against the tolling masses, especially the peasants in Slovakia and the Carpathians, and by shootings against defenseless workers, even when they demonstrate merely for limited economic demands. The sharp procedure of the police and the gendarmerie appears to the workers to be all the more provocative, since the strike movements in the last few years have been, despite the official party reports, rather slight and have nowhere gone beyond the framework of local struggles.

In connection with the economic situation and the activities of the government, the voices of discontent among the reformist majority of the working class are constantly growing and find their expression in the meetings of the trade unions and the "socialist" parties. The economic successes of socialist construction in the Soviet Union, and especially the fact that unemployment over there appears to have been overcome, are driving the masses toward the Communist party and open up tremendous possibilities for agitation and action on the part of the party. But the centrist party leadership is still repelling these vacillating masses, but not merely restricting itself to attacks on the trade union leaders, by declaring its intentions of "exterminating" the trade union organizations themselves, without being able to substitute for them anything but the puny "Red Trade Unions" which carry on local and isolated strikes from time to time with great advertisements, the results of which are by no means an attraction for the working masses. On the other hand, it is attempting to arouse the workers by abstract enthusiasm for Soviet Russia and to cure their reformist and bourgeois democratic illusions by strong words like "social Fascism." All that is achieved by this is the isolation of the Communist workers from the masses, the repulsion of the dissatisfied workers into the arms of the trade union bureaucrats or under the influence of the Fascists.

The Policy of the Left Opposition

In contrast to these tactics, the Left Opposition raises the demands flowing from the direct needs of the workers and demands a common struggle of all workers' organizations and especially of the trade unions on this basis. Against the coalition policy of the bourgeoisie, it counter-poses the united struggle of the proletariat, to be led by democratically elected organs of the working class. In place of the phrases about social Fascism it offers a concrete explanation of the interconnection between the reformist party, parliamentarism and the economic domination of capital in general. Precisely by not restricting itself to exposing the fakeries of individual reformist leaders, as the Fascists and in imitation of them, the Stalin bureaucrats do, but rather by pointing out the basis of the capitalist system and by pointing to the road of the united struggle of the proletariat, the Left Opposition carries on the struggle against social democracy and Fascism in reality.

Germany after the Presidential Elections

The C. P. G. has not been able to carry out extra-parliamentary actions for some time. Extremely weak in the factories, in the mass organizations of the proletariat, with a membership composed, from 75 to 80 per cent, of unemployed workers, with a Red Trade Union Opposition forming an ever more negligible minority of the working class as a whole, the party cannot conduct successful strikes or instigate extra-parliamentary action. The party bureaucracy also realizes this. That is why the activity of the C. P. G. was turned to the field of parliamentary action, that is why the party has been directed toward referendums and elections. By successes in the parliamentary elections, the Thaelmann leadership had hoped to conceal the astrophysical effects of its policies from the party membership. The party bureaucracy will, no doubt, once more attempt to attribute the guilt for the results to the rank and file, through the use of "Bolshevik self-criticism." But no arguments of the Thaelmann leadership will be able to change the fact that the results of March 13 signify the utter bankruptcy of the Thaelmann policy, the utter political impotence of the Comintern leadership and of its spiritual leader, Stalin.

The results of March 13 demand imperiously a complete turn on the part of the party, the complete renunciation of the present policy. Out with the theory of "socialism in one country," which is the root of all the evil in the policy of the Comintern and the C. P. G.! We must orientate ourselves toward the actual organization of the West European revolution. Out with the theory that the S. P. G. is the main enemy at present! That only leads to the conclusion that Fascism is the "Lesser Evil!" The wheel must be turned toward: the erection of the united front between C. P. G., S. P. G., S. L. P. G., trade unions and the other decisive proletarian mass organizations. The theory of social Fascism must be uprooted, the R. T. U. O. policy must be given up, mass work must be carried on in the trade unions. It will not do for us to command the working class, we must struggle for the sympathies of the workers who are still outside the ranks of Communism for it is precisely upon them that the decision rests.

The German workers must utilize whatever time is still left, to make all the necessary preparations for the coming battle, which will be an extra-parliamentary battle. Fascism is not yet defeated, it is still struggling for power.

In international bourgeois opinion, Czechoslovakia has always signified a protective wall of peace and order. It arose on the ebb of the social and national struggle of the Czech petty bourgeoisie and workers against the Habsburg monarchy, the Roman church and the German bourgeoisie and out of the necessity of the entente powers to plant a military base between the dangerous countries of their defeated enemies in the war, between Germany, Austria and Hungary, from which side there was the threat of revenge struggles and revolutions against the new imperialist balance of power. In this sense, the bourgeois designation is to a certain extent correct. And even when the powerful wave of the industrial crisis swept over America and Europe in 1929, it appeared to be repelled by the "island of peace and order." The Czech bourgeoisie, which incorporated with its industrial and agrarian territories, the backward field and forest economy of Slovakia and the Carpathians as a sort of a substitute for the Austro-Hungarian customs field that it lost, and which exploited the national hopes of the Czech masses in order to lower the standards of living below the average of the West and Middle European countries, basing itself upon French imperialism to raise its commodity and capital export, at first appeared to escape the general economic misery. But it was soon to be proven that the shrinking of the foreign markets, the rise of the competitive and customs struggles among the international groups of capitalists and the decline of the purchasing power of the impoverished peasant masses inside the country would not fail to leave their effects upon the main industrial and commercial sections of Czechoslovakia.

The Economic Situation

The shutting down of factories has assumed tremendous proportions, the number of unemployed has risen, according to the official statistics, to some 600,000, the figure for the past time workers is even higher. In the most important branches of industry the number of the unemployed amounts to about half the number of those employed. At this, only workers organized in trade unions receive unemployment subsidies according to the Czechoslovakian system of unemployment insurance, so that only about one sixth of the unemployed receive a subsidy from the state at present, while the rest are dependent upon the support of the communities and the population as a whole. Unemployment has been extended even to functionaries and intellectuals. Bankruptcies among small merchants and tradesmen are on the order of the day, the numerous middle peasantry is going under.

The balance of the state budget is shattered and has necessitated a foreign loan, which entrenches the dependence upon French imperialism even more firmly. Chained to the Western robbers, not a natural island but a piece chopped off with the axe of the world war from among similar pieces, bourgeois Czechoslovakia can secure neither peace with its neighbors, nor work and bread inside the country. In vain, the Czech petty bourgeoisie bubbles over with enthusiasm for a Middle European union, which is to form the heart of a united, pan-European, bourgeois Europe and shine all over in the sign of Christ. In vain. For no matter how small the states involved are, the contradictions in the interests that separate the bourgeois rulers are all the greater and a peaceful unification of Middle Europe has as its pre-requisite the uprooting of the competitive interests of the textile manufacturers and hog raisers, of the grain merchants and heavy industrialists. But the root is precisely the private ownership of the means of production. The proletariat alone can serve as the axe.

Political Developments

If under all these circumstances in Czechoslovakia there nevertheless exists or rather—exists, a relative stability of the political regime, then this is to be explained not by the economic basis, but above all, by the conditions which permitted the Czech bourgeoisie to establish its state rule. It could realize its imperialist aims by exploiting the national revolutionary and petty bourgeois democratic illusions of the masses of the people. It had the good fortune, not only to have under its sway patriotic National Socialists and social democrats, but even a leader at the head of the Communist party like the opportunist of European format, Smolensky, who as late as 1923 defended the bourgeois democracy and the unity of the Czechoslovakian state against the oppressed nationalities. And when the advanced Czech workers had gathered sufficient experiences with their "democratic" and national bourgeoisie to crush this opportunism in the party, the leadership of the Comintern, which had in the meantime begun to sink into the morass of Stalinist centrism, hemmed the party which had proceeded in seriously purifying itself, in its development and cast it back into Smolensky opportunism.

Only thanks to this impurity within the party, could the Czech bourgeoisie escape from the most difficult situations without a serious struggle, since the party of the proletariat occupied itself with minor trade union struggles, without giving much thought to the questions of revolutionary strategy. In view of this impurity, the party remained impotent precisely at the moment at which the partial struggles grew into mass demonstrations (as in March 1928). EDITORIAL NOTES

SCOTTSBORO

The Scottsboro case reveals American capitalism in one of its most hideous aspects, and offers to the Communists an exceptional opportunity to deal the whole system a mighty, world-resounding blow. The deliberately-planned assassination of the unfortunate negro children is notice to the entire world that imperialist America, this pretended pacifist and friend of justice, is in fact a monster. The endeavor to thwart its bloody designs in the present case calls out the deepest and best human instincts. The words solidarity and justice acquire fresh values, they become new again in the struggle for the liberation of the helpless young negro boys who await their fate in the Alabama jail. It is hard to think of a cause that could appeal more strongly to the hearts of the workers and all the oppressed than that of these obscure and friendless symbols of a doubly persecuted race and class.

From the revolutionary standpoint, the struggle, of course, goes far beyond the immediate objectives of the court appeals. To save the lives of the intended victims and restore their liberty is indeed our aim; but the only hope of accomplishing this is to set a really immense movement into motion. And such an achievement could have great implications for the strengthening of the Communist influence over the workers and the Negro masses. All of this is bound up together with the concrete fight for the freedom of the prisoners. To separate the one from the other, as the liberal and socialist snivellers try to do, would only make the sacrifice of the prisoners doubly certain.

The problem consists primarily in the mobilization of the white workers for the fight. In our opinion it is incorrect to view the Scottsboro case as a "Negro issue"; it is wrong to direct the main agitation toward the negro people and concrete the organization work around them, including their churches and lodges. Such a tactic will not be able to arouse a movement of the necessary breadth and power. And, moreover, it will fail even to make the desired impression on the Negro people.

There is no doubt that the Negro masses burn with indignation at the Scottsboro outrage and suffer their own thousand-fold wrongs again in sympathy with the prisoners. But along with that they cannot help being conscious of their position as a hopeless racial minority. What they need to inspire them for struggle is the prospect, or at least the hope, of victory. Direct agitation alone will never suffice for this. The sight of a significant movement of white workers fighting on their side is the agitator that will really move the Negroes and make them accessible to the Communist organizers of that movement.

The central problem of the Scottsboro defense movement is the organization of the white workers for the fight. Once a good start is made along this line, the enlistment of huge Negro contingents in the common struggle will be a comparatively simple matter. In this question, as in every important undertaking in the class struggle, the trade union movement exhibits its decisive importance. The trade unions ought to be alive at this moment with Communist agitation on the Scottsboro case. Here is an unexampled opportunity to explain to the organized workers the necessity of solidarity with their black brothers, and to dramatize the argument with the monstrous story of Scottsboro.

Assuming a Communist Party that knows how to work in the trade unions, a big response can be expected from this agitation. The sympathies of the organized workers can be quickly crystallized into a network of conferences. The movement of the unions in this direction will give a tremendous impetus to the propaganda among the Negroes; they will join in the movement with enthusiasm and hope. The concrete demonstrations of white and Negro solidarity, ominously foreshadowing their coming union in the revolution, will impress the judicial hirelings more than a thousand lawyers' briefs; will make them pause and weigh the possible consequences of their murders. The Communists, as the organizers and leaders of the unprecedented demonstration, as the loyal and capable champions of the most oppressed and persecuted, will gain an enormous prestige.

In such a perspective there is nothing fantastic. It assumes merely an active Communist party which understands the essence of the Negro question, which applies the tactic of the united front, and has not isolated itself from the trade union movement. Even in the present situation the deficiencies can be made up by a timely correction of policy. The best way to serve the Scottsboro case is to press for this.

WHY SO HOT?

We have been watching with considerable interest, and even with a little alarm, the steadily rising temperature of the editors of the Workers' Age about "the poison of chauvinism" which is seeping into the Party in their absence. If it is a real fever, and if it hangs on much longer and continues to get hotter, something is bound to happen, either to the patient or to the thermometer.

Of course, it may be an artificial temperature. We have heard of such cases. A few years ago a girl in the middle West baffled the doctors with what appeared to be a chronic fever, far higher in degree than the human system normally can withstand. Every time they took her temperature the thermometer registered 110 or over. In spite of that the patient appeared to remain hale and hearty and in good appetite, as everybody will admit is the case with the burned-up Lovestonettes. The mystery was solved when the doctors caught the patient napping and discovered that her temperature had been induced by hot water bags concealed about her person. She was only fooling.

If the Right wingers are simulating delirium by some dodge of this nature, an extenuating circumstance must be acknowledged: It is not often that they have a chance to get excited about the opportunism of other people. And they naturally make the most of it. We now learn from the Workers' Age that the Stalinists' demand for the expulsion of the Japanese diplomats from America is chauvinistic, and that chauvinism in turn is "the crassest form of opportunism." This is precisely the way they characterized "Trotskyism" a few years ago. But, as the saying goes, every season has its vegetable, and we will not stop to quibble over definitions. The point now is that the Lovestonettes, viewing the present situation darkly, expect things to get worse and worse. Chauvinism, they say, "is being pumped into the veins of our Party, in ever greater quantities and in ever more virulent forms."

Are they really so disturbed? And if so, why? It is true that the slogan of the Party leaders is a false one, and it is likewise true that it contains the germ of a social-patriotic deviation. But the motivation of the slogan is far from outright chauvinism. As a matter of fact it is not inspired directly by the attitude of the Stalinists toward American imperialism, but by their mistaken conception of the defense of the Soviet Union, which they disconnect from its basic foundation of internationalism and international revolution. Under the tutelage and corrupting pressure of Stalin these ex-revolutionists and hired functionaries have replaced proletarian internationalism with the theory of socialism in one country. "Socialism" is to be built in the Soviet Union, and the mission of the Comintern is . . . to prevent intervention. The revolutionary workers in the other countries are assigned to the debasing role of pacifist frontier guards.

Motivated by these conceptions, the Stalinists of the American Party, imagining the chief danger to the Soviet Union at the moment to be an attack by Japan (and there also mistakenly), can think of nothing else but to concentrate their attack on Japanese imperialism. The conclusion is not without a certain logic. It is false because the theory from which it flows is false to the core.

But the Right wing were united with the Stalin Centerists in the manufacture of this counterfeited theory, and they still defend it no less ardently. National socialism is the foundation theory of Right wing politics. That is why their agitation against a slogan that derives from this theory sounds the more artificial as it increases in volume. This suggests the idea that they have a perfect control over their own fever. In this case an early return to normality on their part may be expected.

Book Review:

THE STRANGE CAREER OF MR. HOOVER—Under Two Flags
By John S. Hamill. Wm. Faro, Inc.
384 pages, $3.75

This book is a forerunner of a series of books now published on the life of Hoover. In spite of its attempt at sensation throughout, the book has value in portraying the character of the individual who stands at the head of the American government. To the author the character of Hoover is responsible for the present crisis and the general difficulties confronting the economic life of the country. The individual is all-important and therein lies the explanation of everything—that is the explanation of Hamill. If someone else were president things would be different. With this approach we have nothing in common. We regard the individual as part of the system of capitalism and its politics. We are concerned with the way and wherefore of the choice of the capitalist party at the helm of the government. In this sense the book offers an excellent explanation. It shows Hoover in his true light—as the individual who is best suited to lead his class and follow the dictates of Wall Street. More than that it is a profound exhibit of Hoover's class ideology and his hatred for the working class.

The book begins with Hoover's orphanage and his boyhood life with his uncle, a real estate "shark," in Oregon. His uncle was in the business of selling real estate that never existed. The town where these lots were supposed to be, could not be found to this day, even by the official surveyors of the government. Hoover got his first training here. His uncle, a fraudulent land speculator was his first teacher.

At that time the Leland Stanford University was being organized and Hoover was dispatched there as a student. The records of the school show him to be an extremely poor student who could not master the rudiments of English. Here he studied geology, on the basis of which he later passed off as a mining engineer. But a school just organized could not afford to fail its students and Hoover was graduated notwithstanding his poor scholastic achievements.

The most important turning point in his life was his job with the Bewick Moring & Co. of London. This concern dealt in mine speculations. Hoover was hired not as a geologist but as "a claim jumper, a snooper and a spy." In a word he was to be a promoter for this company. His work consisted in going to Australia as their "mining engineer" to send in reports on the conditions of the gold mines owned and promoted by this dubious company, whose standing in London's financial circles was extremely low. There his task consisted of sending in glowing reports of gold to be mined. On the basis of his reports which were published, new stock was put on the market to be sold. When the public had been sufficiently duped, stock sold for hundreds of thousands of dollars, Hoover's task then turned to that of sending in detrimental reports. The result of these reports would be a decline in the stock values of this or that company. The "insiders" knowing the outcome in advance, would sell out their stock and leave the "public holding the bag." Or the process was worked in the reverse. With a poor mine that would not yield repayment for initial work, Hoover was to send in reports showing that these mines would yield anywhere from twenty to hundred percent profit. Again stocks sold by the hundreds of thousands. The "insiders" were becoming rich—the public duped again and left "holding the bag." This was the manner in which Hoover served his apprenticeship with this company until he became one of its partners. He had proven himself.

The whole history of his work was that of manipulating stocks to the advantage of Moring, Stanley Rowe, himself and one or two others. Once a partner, Hoover began to show more interest in the work. In Australia he becomes known as a hater of labor. There he attempts to get the ban on Asiatic labor lifted in order to bring in cheap labor from the Orient with the object of destroying the then powerful Australian miners' union. On failing in this attempt, he begins a campaign "against the present high rates of working costs." In other words, lowering wages, increasing working hours, and refusing to make better the working conditions of the mines. The death rate among the miners grows at an alarming pace. He wrote at that time: "The disregard for human life permits mining by economy in timber and the aggrieved relatives are amply compensated by the regular payment of $30 per man lost." And again, "Men were cheaper than timber."

The company expands. In China Hoover's object was exploiting and robbing the Chinese of their holdings. He participated in the steal of the Kaiping Coal mines, even to personally rob a safe to steal deeds covering the ownership of this rich mine. We find him in South Africa promoting fake mines and filching the small stockholders of Britain. The "promoter" together with his associates conceives of a daring plan. Why not hire coolie labor to work the mines in the Transvaal region. The big campaign begins. In China the workers are promised a virtual fairyland if they would agree to work in the Transvaal mines. The result: 200,000 Chinese were sold into slavery. Hoover's Chinese Engineering and Mining Co., Ltd. did the job. And why not? They received $10 for each Chinaman secured and $25 each for passage to South Africa on their own ships. From Johannesburg he wrote the following, describing this slave business as: "the great science of extracting the greatest possible amount of money from some other human being."

The war breaks out. Hoover discovers another "business". Preying on the charity angle we see him now organizing the food relief to Belgium. This "job" consisted of buying huge food supplies, secured through the money raised by exploiting the sentiments of the people during the war, and then selling this food to Belgium at huge profits. It was easily done, since the head of the Belgian Relief was his business associate, Francqui, who assumed the role of the virtual dictator of Belgium in those days—the government having moved its capital to northern France upon the occupation of Belgium by the Germans. But it was precisely in those years that Belgium experienced the largest crops and during the first years of the war had more than sufficient food. Through arrangements with the Germans, the Belgium produce was to be sent to Germany, and the food Hoover supplied was to go to Belgium. Germany paid for its food to Belgium and Belgium paid for its food to Hoover. Between Francqui and himself the spoils were divided.

The rest of his career is well known. He returned to the States after twenty years' absence. He was made. Hoover becomes a "worker" for the government. He becomes a member of Harding's cabinet and participates in the infamous oil scandal. The myth of the "great engineer" is thrown at the people. He is elected president and in that capacity has more than once exhibited his intense hatred for the working class.

Hamill effectively destroys the myth of the "engineer" who was really a promoter and who in all the years of his business life helped in a grand steal that even made the ordinary business "ethics" blush with shame. The author points out a mining engineer must know chemistry, physics, mechanics, electricity, assaying, metallurgy—and of all these Hoover was totally ignorant. But he was suited for his job with Bewick, Moring & Co. He manipulated stocks, welched on his debts, was sued by China for his steal of the Kaiping Mines and through these years developed into the fit candidate of president.

He stands out today, built up by a great organizing campaign, as an able representative of the capitalists with an intense hatred of the working class. He is a typical representative of Wall Street who adorns the presidential chair with all the qualities needed for one whose job consists of leading his class against the workers. Selling Chinese workers into slavery, manipulating stocks, fraudulent mine promotions, sponging on charity and the sentiments of the people built up during a war period, making himself rich by intense exploitation of mine workers he has succeeded—from promoter to president; really not a strange career at all.

DEMOCRACY AND FASCISM

by LEON TROTSKY

The XIth Plenum of the E. C. C. I. came to the decision that it was imperative to put an end to those erroneous views which originate in "the liberal interpretation of the contradictions between Fascism and bourgeois democracy and the outright Fascist forms" . . . The gist of this Stalinist philosophy is quite plain: from the Marxist denial of the absolute contradiction it deduces the general negation of the contradiction, even of the relative contradiction. This error is typical of vulgar radicalism. For if there be no contradiction whatsoever between democracy and Fascism,—even in the sphere of the form of the rule of the bourgeoisie,—then these two régimes obviously enough must be equivalent. Whence the conclusion social democracy=Fascism. For some reason, however, social democracy is dubbed social Fascism. And the meaning of the term "social" in this connection has been left unexplained to this very moment.*

Nevertheless, the nature of things does not change in accordance with the decisions of the E. C. C. I. plenums. A contradiction does exist between democracy and Fascism. It is not at all "absolute", or, putting it in the language of Marxism, it doesn't at all denote the rule of two irreconcilable classes. But it does denote different systems of the domination of one and the same class. These two systems: the one, parliamentary-democratic; the other, Fascist, derive their support from different combinations of the oppressed and exploited classes; and they unavoidably come to a sharp clash with each other.

The social democracy, which is today the chief representative of the parliamentary-bourgeois régime, derives its support from the workers. Fascism is supported by the petty bourgeoisie. The social democracy without the mass organizations of the workers can have no influence. Fascism cannot trench itself in power without annihilating the workers' organizations. The parliament is the main arena of the social democracy. The system of Fascism is based upon the destruction of parliamentarism. For the monopolistic bourgeoisie, the parliamentary and Fascist régimes represent only different vehicles of domination; it has recourse to one or the other, depending upon the historical conditions. But for both the social democracy and Fascism, the choice of one or the other vehicle has an independent significance, more than that, for them it is a question of political life or death.

At the moment that the "normal" police and military resources of the bourgeois dictatorship, together with their parliamentary screens, no longer suffice to hold society in a state of equilibrium—the turn of the Fascist régime arrives. Through the Fascist agency, capitalism sets in motion the masses of the crazed petty bourgeoisie, and bands of the de-classed and demoralized lumpenproletariat; all the countless human beings whom finance capital itself has brought to desperation and frenzy. From Fascism the bourgeois demands a thorough job; once it has resorted to methods of civil war, it insists on having peace for a period of years. And the Fascist agency by utilizing the petty bourgeoisie as a battering ram, by overwhelming all obstacles in its path, does a thorough job. After Fascism is victorious, finance capital gathers into its hands, as in a vise of steel, directly and immediately, all the organs and institutions of sovereignty, the executive, administrative and educational powers of the state: the entire state apparatus together with the army, the municipalities, the universities, the schools, the press, the trade unions, and the co-operatives. When a state turns Fascist, it doesn't only mean that the forms and methods of government are changed in accordance with the patterns set by Mussolini—the changes in this sphere ultimately play a minor role—but it means, first of all for the most part, that the workers organizations are annihilated; that the proletariat is reduced to an amorphous state; and that a system of administration is created which penetrates deeply into the masses and which serves to frustrate the independent crystallization of the proletariat. Therein precisely is the gist of Fascism.

The above is not at all contradicted by the fact that, during a given period, between the democratic and the Fascist systems, a transitional régime is established, which combines the features of both: such, in general, is the law that governs the displacement of one social system by another, even though they are irreconcilably inimical to each other. There are periods during which the bourgeoisie leans upon both the social democracy and Fascism, that is, during which it simultaneously manipulates its electoral and terroristic agencies. Such, in a certain sense, was the government of Kerensky during the last months of its existence, when it leaned partly on the Soviets and at the same time conspired with Kornilov. Such is the government of Brüning as it dances on a tightrope between two irreconcilable camps, balancing itself with the emergency decrees instead of a pole. But such a condition of the state and of the administration is temporary in character. It signals the transition period, during which the social democracy is on the verge of exhausting its mission, while, in that same period, neither Communism nor Fascism is ready as yet to seize power.

The Italian Communists, who have had to study the problems of Fascism for a long time, have protested time and again against the wide-spread abuse of these concepts. Formerly, at the VIth Congress of the Comintern, Ercoli was still formulating views on the question of Fascism which are now credited as "Trotskyist". Ercoli at that time defined Fascism as being the most thorough and uncompromising system of reaction, and he explained: "this administration supports itself not by the cruelty of its terroristic acts, not by murdering large numbers of workers and peasants, not by applying on a large scale varied methods of brutal torture, not by the severity of its law courts; but it depends upon the systematic annihilation of each and every form of the independent organization of the masses." In this Ercoli is absolutely correct: the gist of Fascism and its task consist in a complete suppression of all workers' organizations and in the prevention of their revival. In a developed capitalist society this goal cannot be achieved by police methods alone. There is only one method for it and that is by directly opposing the pressure of the proletariat—the moment it weakens—by the pressure of the desperate masses of the petty bourgeoisie. It is this particular system of capitalist reaction that has entered history under the name of Fascism.

"All questions as to the relation between Fascism and social democracy," wrote Ercoli, "belong to the same sphere (the irreconcilability of Fascism with the existence of workers' organizations). It is in this relation that Fascism clearly differentiates itself from all other reactionary régimes established hitherto in the contemporary capitalist world. It rejects all compromise with the social democracy; it persecutes it relentlessly; it deprives it of all legal means of existence; it forces it to emigrate."

So reads an article published in the leading organs of the Comintern! Subsequently, Manuilsky buzzed in Molotov's ear the great idea of "the third period". France, Germany and Poland were assigned to "the front rank of the revolutionary offensive." The seizure of power was proclaimed to be the immediate task. And since, in the face of the uprising of the proletariat, all parties, except the Communist, are counter-revolutionary, it was no longer necessary to distinguish between Fascism and social democracy. The theory of social Fascism was ordained. And the functionaries of the Comintern lost no time in re-aligning themselves. Ercoli made haste to prove that precious as truth was to him, Molotov was more precious, and he . . . wrote a report in defense of the theory of social Fascism. "The Italian social democracy," he announced in February 1930, "turns Fascist with the greatest readiness." Alas, the functionaries of official Communism turn funkies even more readily.

As was to be expected, our criticism of the theory and application of "the third period" was decreed counter-revolutionary. Nevertheless, the cruel experiences that cost the proletarian vanguard dearly, forced an about face in this sphere also. "The third period" was pensioned off, and so was Molotov himself—from the Comintern. But the theory of social Fascism remained behind as the lone ripe fruit of the third period. No changes could take place here: only Molotov was tied up with the third period; but Stalin himself was enmeshed in social Fascism.

DIE ROTE FAHNE begins its researches into social Fascism with Stalin's words, "Fascism is the military organization of the bourgeoisie which leans upon the social democracy for active support. The social democracy, objectively speaking, is the moderate wing of Fascism." Objectively speaking, it is a habit with Stalin, when he attempts to generalize, to contradict the first phrase by the second and to conclude in the second what doesn't at all follow from the first. There is no debating that the bourgeoisie leans on the social democracy, and that Fascism is a military organization of the bourgeoisie; and this has been remarked upon a long time ago. The only conclusion which follows from this is that the social democracy as well as Fascism are the tools of the big bourgeoisie. How the social democracy becomes thereby also a "wing" of Fascism is incomprehensible. Equally profound is another observation by the same author: Fascism and social democracy are not enemies, they are twins. Now twins may be the bitterest enemies: while on the other hand allies need not be born necessarily on one and the same day and from identical parents. Stalin's constructions lack even formal logic, to say nothing of dialectics. Their strength lies in the fact that none dares challenge them.

* Metaphysicians (people who do not reason dialectically) assign to one and the same abstraction two, three or more designations, often directly contradictory. "Democracy" in general and "Fascism" in general, so we are told, are in no way distinguished from one another. But in addition there must also exist in the world, on this account, "the dictatorship of workers and peasants" (for China, India, Spain). Proletarian dictatorship? No! Capitalist dictatorship, perhaps? No! What then? A democratic one! Somewhere in the universe, it appears, there exists a pure classless democracy. Yet according to the XIth plenum of the E. C. C. I., democracy differs in no wise from Fascism. That being so, wherein does "the democratic dictatorship" differ from . . . the Fascist dictatorship?

Only a person utterly naive will expect to get a serious and an honest answer to this fundamental question from the Stalinists: they'll let loose a few more choice epithets—and that's all. And meanwhile the fate of the revolutions in the Orient is tied up with this question.

War and Social Chauvinism

Alarm Signals Against Jingoist Trends in the Communist Party

In the Daily Worker we read:
"In an article in Izvestia, Radek said:
"If challenged, the Soviet Union will have a right to seek temporary allies among the capitalist powers, which at the present stage do not infringe on her frontiers or interests."
"The article implied that the United States would be the natural ally of Japanese sentiment in America."

Russia under such circumstances and said that there was a growing "anti-Japanese" sentiment in America.
The Daily Worker, on its own account, adds in approval:
"Not rejecting any possibility, no matter how temporary and slight it can be, to utilize the contradictions existing between the imperialists for the purpose of strengthening the position of the proletariat and the oppressed peoples, in their class struggle, this proposal means a new step of the peace policy of the Soviet Union."

Stalin, Izvestia, Radek and the Daily Worker advance this reactionary anti-Communist idea in the name of Leninism.

In 1918 replying to the social patriots of Western Europe, in "What is a Peace Program?" Trotsky wrote:

"Social patriotism, which is in principle, if not always in fact, the execution of social reformism to the utmost extent and its adaptation to the imperialist epoch, proposes to us in the present world catastrophe to direct the policy of the proletariat in the direction of the 'lesser evil' by joining one of the two groups. We reject this method."

In March 1918, in his theses on Brest-Litovsk, Lenin wrote categorically:
"Our policy must be based, not on a choice between two imperialisms, but on the possibility of strengthening the socialist revolution, or at least, on the necessity of enabling it to offer resistance until the other countries join the revolutionary movement. . . . We have always fought our own imperialism, but the overthrow of the imperialism of one country by means of an alliance with the imperialism of another, is a line of action that we reject both on reasons of principle and because we consider it inadmissible."

There is the answer to Stalinist nationalism, made by Lenin and Trotsky fourteen years ago!—M. S.

The problems of war put all policies and groups to the highest test. The world war submitted the international social democracy to its severest test, and the result of the slow poison of opportunism which had been eating into it during the whole pre-war epoch was revealed in one illuminating flash. August 4, 1914 was not the beginning of the degeneration of the social democracy, it was the culminating point of a process of decay which had set in long before. The pre-war Left wing, whose revolutionary superiority lay in its mastery of Marxian analysis and foresight, traced the flow of social patriotic poison through the veins of the social democracy and sought to check it at every juncture.

The same task devolves upon the revolutionist today. It is all the more imperative for our Communist movement at the present moment for two reasons: 1. the theory of socialism in one country opens the veins of the Communist parties for the free infusion of nationalist poison; 2. the sharpening of the world imperialist conflict, which has already broken out in a miniature world war in China, is posing all political questions starkly.

That is why every Communist worker must raise a loud cry of warning against the treacherous proposals advanced in the leading editorial of the Daily Worker on April 12, 1932. The editorial, completely devoid of a breath of proletarian revolutionism, is one of the most disgraceful pieces of cynical flattery with chauvinism that has ever appeared in the Communist movement.

Let it be emphasized that we are not confronted here with some accidental "American aberration." The well of inspiration from which the proposals are drawn is the official mouthpiece of the Soviet government, the Moscow Izvestia. According to a sensational capitalist press dispatch which the Daily Worker reproduces as authentic, Radek, writing in Izvestia on April 10, declared: "If challenged, the Soviet Union will have a right to seek temporary allies among the capitalist powers which at the present stage do not infringe on her frontiers or interests. . . . Japan would be insane under such circumstances to create new fronts and arouse against herself a great country which at present stands aside in the struggle that is tearing the imperialist world to pieces."

The article has but one meaning, as is recognized by the capitalist press and the Daily Worker: The Soviet Union is warning Japan against overt hostile acts with the threat of an alliance with imperialist America. We may therefore assume that in the event of a war, the Soviet Union would enter into a "temporary alliance" with Wall Street and Washington for the purpose of defending its frontiers against a Japanese invasion and . . . of helping American imperialism in turn to replace the Japanese in the domination of the Pacific and the Orient. Such an alliance, presumably, is "also" in the interests of imperialist America, the country "which at present stands aside in the struggle."

Where is the "temporary alliance" or any other kind of alliance with the American working class, that is, with the only class in this and every other country that provides any guarantee against a successful attack upon the fortress of the proletariat? Where is even an "alliance" with the Chinese people who have a really revolutionary interest in crushing the Japanese imperialists? It does not exist in what the Daily Worker, with unconscious omniscience, calls a "new step in the consistent and decisive policy of the Soviet Union". That does exist is an unprecedented, reactionary, unprincipled, "diplomatic" proposal which splits right in the face of what Lenin wrote expressly on the question of the impossibility for the Soviets to join hands with one imperialist power for the struggle against another.

But it is not entirely unprecedented. In 1923-24, Bucharin advanced the theory that since Germany, under the Versailles system, had become a "semi-colonial country", it was conceivable for the Soviet republic to make a military alliance with it against the Entente. Even this "modified" version was treated very coldly, and aroused the protest of the Bolshevik elements in the International. But at least Bucharin presented a certain "motivation" for his theory: Germany was a "semi-colony" fighting the imperialist powers; in allying itself with Germany, the Soviet republic would also be helping to "emancipate an oppressed nationality."

But who is to be emancipated in the newly proposed alliance? Is America to be liberated from the Japanese yoke?

Biased Judge Convicts Marine Workers

The three New York marine workers—Soderberg, Bunker and Trajer—who have been on trial for the past three weeks in the Court of General Sessions, were found guilty by the jury after five hours' deliberation on Monday, April 11. Sentence will be imposed on April 25th. The men were charged with a conspiracy to dynamite barges in the New York harbor in a struggle between the boat owners and the Boatmen's Union. The conviction carries with it a penalty of from twelve and one-half to twenty-five years in the penitentiary.

One of the chief factors in the result of the trial was the flagrant unfairness manifested by Judge Allen in his rulings. Throughout the trial and especially on all the important clashes between the prosecution and the defense attorneys, the bias of the judge came into play to help the prosecution. For all who were present in the court room, the trial, as it progressed from day to day, was a graphic illustration of class justice, and likewise of the fallacy that militant workers can get a fair trial in the courts of capitalism.

But in spite of that, the acquittal of the defendants seemed to be a certainty up until the very last day of the trial. The flimsy case of the prosecution had been hammered down, and its witnesses—consisting exclusively of policemen and stool pigeons—had been thoroughly discredited. Then the prosecuting attorney backed by Judge Allen executed one of the most outrageous and illegal moves that the history of the frame-up game has yet produced. Soderberg, one of the defendants, had testified the bestial tortures which the police had inflicted upon him at the time of his arrest, and showed to the jury the blood-stained shirt which he had worn at the time of the beating. This testimony, which supplemented that of the other defendants and of the worker Larry Murphy who had been under arrest and present at the time of the beatings, made a tremendous impression in the court room. The mute evidence of the blood-marked shirt spoke louder of all.

The shirt shown in evidence was light grey in color. The district attorney then immediately introduced the police photograph of the defendant taken on the day of the beating. This photo showed Soderberg wearing a white shirt on that day, and the district attorney then raised a big hue and cry and charged a deliberate attempt to introduce false evidence. At the next session of the trial, just before the case was to go to the jury, the attorneys for the defense, Peter L. F. Sabbatino and Jacob Fishman produced photographs experts who were prepared

And if the war breaks out with a Soviet Russia-United States alliance in existence, what is to be the attitude of the revolutionary proletariat in this country? Logically, it should do everything to remove all obstacles standing in the way of the maintenance of the alliance. It should consequently refrain from disturbing the economic and political relations in the country so that the effectiveness of the American partner in the alliance is not diminished. It is, in a word, to renounce class war and embrace the policy of civil peace with its bourgeoisie. This was the Bucharinist conception, in essence, for Germany in 1923; no other meaning can be extracted from the proposal "unofficially" made in the Soviet government organ by Radek.

The Daily Worker, entirely consistent with the theory of socialism in one country, which means in practice the abandonment of every revolutionary principle in the alleged interests of defending the Soviet Union from military attack, picks up the Radek thread with all its implications elaborated upon even more shamelessly. Taking Radek's cue, the editorial writer proceeds to address himself to the American ruling class in order to show it that its best imperialist interests lie in a break with Japan and an alliance with the Soviets. Yesterday's blaring headlines which announced to the readers that the United States is behind the whole anti-Soviet move, Crucial Moment Nearing in Germany!

Statement of the National Committee, Communist League of America (Opposition)

The run-off elections in Germany last Sunday revealed another substantial advance for Fascism and at the same time a considerable loss of ground for the Communist party and with it for the German workers. The results of the poll in the second ballot are a danger sign for the entire working class. Although the vote in itself is not decisive for the future of Germany—that must be settled, in the last analysis, outside of the parliamentary arena—the reflection it offers the line-up of the social forces is an alarming indication of the trend of events. If this trend is to continue, it can only mean one thing: a crushing defeat of the German workers in the decisive combats to come.

Hitler received 13,417,460 votes as against 11,389,285 on March 13. Thaelmann, the Presidential candidate of the Communist party, received 3,706,388 votes as against the 4,983,197 votes he received in the March elections. This constitutes a loss of 1,276,809 votes. Hindenburg increased his vote by more than 700,000 and Hitler by more than 2,000,000.

Hitler received an approximate percentage of 38.6 per cent of the total vote cast, compared with the 30.1 per cent that fell to his share in March. The Fascist gain in Berlin, in Red Berlin, amounted to 200,000 votes, while the Communist total dropped 112,000 from the figures of the first ballot. In other working class districts a similar situation is to be noted. These facts cannot and must not be overlooked. They tell the world in an altogether too clear language that the class enemy is making enormous strides forward at a time when the working class is continually gliding down from one dangerous position to another.

What Vote Indicates

The vote in itself is an indication that a good many workers voted for Hindenburg with the idea, as a last resort, to stave off the advance of Hitler. The inability of the official Communist party, with its absolutely disastrous policy of the "Red United Front"—which seeks to commit the workers in advance to accept its leadership—to rally the masses for a unified class front against Fascism, left broad layers of workers in despair. The vote for Hindenburg appeared to them to be a way out.

The responsibility of the social democratic traitors in this situation has already been established. It is only natural to expect the co-workers of Noske and Scheideman to create the illusion in the minds of their worker following that Hindenburg will stand up as a bulwark against Fascism. The slander of the Stalinist press that Trotsky and the Left Opposition concur in this and that we urged the workers to vote for Hindenburg is too despicable an invention to deserve any notice at all. The position of comrade Trotsky and of the Left Opposition as a whole is recorded in the pages of the periodicals of the International Left and all the attempts of the Stalinists to distort our position merely have the object of covering up their own criminal policies. It is these policies that are responsible for the terrible setback in the elections, it is these policies that endanger the very existence of the German working class.

The Communist party is the only genuine party of the working class. Its actions, its strategy, its tactics effect the very life of the class as a whole. It is in this sense that we must mercilessly stigmatize the present policy of the German Stalinists, with all the confusion it creates through the theory of social Fascism and all the isolation it has brought the revolutionary vanguard through the slogan of the "Red United Front" under the leadership of the Communist party—which poses before the workers a bureaucratic ultimatum instead of patiently striving to convince them of the correctness and inevitability of the Communist road—as a policy which can only prepare the defeat of the working class. The masses of German workers, alienated by this policy, have been driven by desperation to take refuge in illusions. This accounts for the loss in the Communist vote. The menace of Fascism, with the destruction of the last vestiges of labor organization that it brings with it, is staring them in the face. They feel that Fascism, above everything else, must be beaten off at all costs.

Growing Resentment of Workers

It can hardly be assumed that all the thousands of workers who have voted for Hindenburg see in him an actual dam against the ravages of Hitlerism. The experiences of the recent raids on the Hitlerite headquarters and the absolute refusal of the Hindenburg government to take drastic action against the provocations of the Nazis could not help but open their eyes to a great extent. The future actions of the government will only continue to enlighten the workers to the true character of the social democrats' new militarist hero. The moment the Communist party takes the step toward the creation of a genuine united front of all workers' organizations in the fight against the Fascist danger, the social democratic workers will desert the Hindenburg Front en masse and recognize their class duty and the way to carry it out. Their present support for Hindenburg is not a firm support, it is a result of a sentiment of impotence. Only the Communist party, with a sincere class policy, can sweep away this feeling of impotence and make the working class aware of its tremendous strength.

The German bourgeoisie, pushed to the wall by the overbearing economic crisis, surrounded by a chain of hostile capitalist nations equally seized by the crisis, will take the only road that is open to it. That is, the attack all along the line against the working class. The Brüning emergency decrees are only a beginning. To gain success at the expense of the proletariat, the German bourgeoisie must strip it to the bone. For that it is necessary to make the workers defenseless, to rob them of the possibility of common action, to destroy all their forms of organization. That is the specific task of Fascism. That is why the bourgeoisie is not aggressive against the party of Hitler, against the party which rallies under its banner the hosts of the desperate petty bourgeoisie, the bloody reserve agency of capitalism.

The German workers will realize this more and more in the coming weeks and months. The Fascists, encouraged by their parliamentary successes, will grow more provocative, will move more rapidly toward the open seizure of power. The elections to the Prussian Diet on April 15 the advance toward the planned Nazi coup d'Etat. The more than 7,000,000 votes Hitler has polled in Prussia, the more than 800,000 votes he received in working class Berlin, the capital of Prussia, are alarm signals for the Communists.

Only a sweeping change in the self-destructive policy of the German Communist Party can save the German working class from crushing defeat. That alone can create the possibility for a successful repulsion of the class enemy. Such a change requires a sincere offer to all working class organizations, social democratic, trade union, cooperative, etc., to join in a united front of class action against the Fascist foe, in the factories, in the streets, in militant defense organizations. Such a united front of action will make it possible for the Communists to convince the working classes even in the few short weeks or months that remain, that the only way to resist Fascism is the way that leads directly to the proletarian dictatorship. It will enable the Communists to force the social democratic fakery, who may join the united front under the pressure of their following, to show up their true colors.

Already, under the pressure from their own rank and file, Severing, Breitscheid, Braun and company are forced to feign aggression against the Nazis, to speak sharply to the Brüning government to take steps for the disbanding of the Fascist organizations. But the words of the social democratic traitors will remain empty phrases as long as they succeed in keeping their followers from being confronted by Communist criticism at every step and stage, as long as they can succeed in isolating the masses behind them, from the clear-cut and inspiring proposals of the Communists. This treacherous conduct of the social democrats can be exposed and defeated this urge for decisive action on the part of their rank and file can be given a proper outlet only by the establishment of the real, broad, class united front.

The suicidal policy of Stalinism, the theory of social Fascism which alienates the social democratic workers, the slogan in the form of an ultimatum—the "Red United Front under the leadership of the Communist party"—which paralyzes the Communist vanguard—must immediately be cast aside. A united front of all proletarian organizations, which gives each tendency in the working class the opportunity to point out its solution before the workers, must be set up at once. The Communists must take the course of patiently explaining the inevitability of the revolutionary way out for the working class. They must fight for the support of the workers, not demand it of them with a haughty, bureaucratic command. It is not enough to call the social democratic demagogues by their name, it is necessary to defeat them, by exposure in the full view of the masses. It is not enough to claim to be the only party of the working class. It is necessary to prove it to the proletariat in action, in daily struggle with the other tendencies, so that every worker can judge for himself.

The decisive hour is drawing near. The working class has the power to stand the test. The Communists must make them conscious of this power. Victory is attainable if the working class is guided by correct policy. The Communist party is the key to the solution. The present policy of Stalin-Thaelmann presents the greatest danger and the greatest obstacle for the German working class, for world Communism. Communists of the entire world, raise your voice against it before it is too late. Demand that the Leninist policy of the International Left Federation be substituted for the policy of Stalin and Thaelmann. To guarantee this change of policy, demand that the Left Opposition be readmitted into the party!

Foodworkers Roused Against Bureaucrats

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Some time ago, the Cooperatives in which the C. P. is in control closed their restaurants and stores, allegedly for alterations. Immediately thereafter, the management of the Cooperatives issued a leaflet to all its neighborhood patronizers, in which it announced a thoroughgoing reorganization of the stores and restaurants and promised "better, cleaner and cheaper service."

Last Saturday, the cooperative restaurant on Allerton Avenue reopened. It turned out that some forty workers were fired from the various enterprises controlled by the Cooperatives. The whole force protested against this action, especially in view of the fact that new men had been hired who were not members of the Food Workers Industrial Union.

A meeting was called at which Joseph Zack, of recent date high priest of the New York organization of the T. U. U. L. spoke for the leadership of the Food Workers Industrial Union, urging the workers present to take a "broader view" of the whole question, to consider the advantages for the moment in general if the reorganization was accepted. The workers present could not see things his way. They could not understand why a reorganization for the benefit of the whole movement must necessarily be brought about at the expense of many among them sacrificing their jobs. They could not understand how the abolition of union control in the Cooperatives would aid the movement. Many of those present spoke with passion and protested against the bureaucratic proceedings.

Zack answered with threats of expulsion from the union and warned them that they would meet with the "fate of Trotsky." This only served to stir the indignation of the workers even more. Many shook their fists at the T. U. U. C. representatives, but the latter felt himself protected by many of the newly hired people and continued with the decision to elect a committee for the purpose of appealing directly to the

T. U. U. L. center, to foster. With the committee elected, the meeting adjourned.

The foodworkers of the Cooperatives have expressed their determination to act as union men act against scabs. Many even began to discuss the prospect of picketing the cooperatives. The situation among them is tense. The sentiment against the bureaucracy is at a high pitch. In the Food Workers Union as a whole, this sentiment is quickly spreading, for there is talk that the camps controlled by the party are like-wise to undergo a "reorganization". The party bureaucrats are telling the workers to "mind their own business" and that they must have the interests of the movement as a whole at heart. The workers are countering the attitude of the bureaucrats with the cry: "Who built the union?" They do not want to forget the sacrifices, often bloody sacrifices, they made for their union. They feel that union conditions must begin within the enterprises under control of the party and the Communist movement. "How can we ask the bosses to recognize the union" many of them ask, "if our own workers organizations are not to recognize it?"

The final decision of the party and the leadership of the union is still pending. The incident in the cooperatives has showed up the bureaucracy in the Stalinized party and in the revolutionary organizations controlled by it as a full grown menace. It is merely an indication of how saturated the Communist movement is with this disease. The roots of this bureaucratic growth should be exposed. All Communist workers must turn their serious attention to them.

This disgraceful intention of the Stalinist bureaucracy must not be realized. The reaction of the foodworkers to it is a healthy reaction and deserves the support of all sincere Communists. It is high time for the party comrades to stay the hand of the bureaucrats. The outrageous action of Zack and company should be repudiated. A drive must be initiated against bureaucraticism all along the line.

ORGANIZATION NOTES

The ideas of the Left Opposition are making their way despite all obstacles. Our members are learning to swim against the stream and their persistent efforts are bringing substantial, if not spectacular, results. The manner in which the Minneapolis branch carries on its activities is a good example. It is one of our oldest branches which was organized at the inception of the Left Opposition in America.

The Minneapolis branch has certain advantages. Before coming to the support of the Left Opposition many of its members had been deeply rooted in the labor movement. This record affords them respect in the minds of the workers. It means also a degree of experienced leadership already established. Our membership there cannot easily be ignored by the trade union bureaucracy nor by the official party functionaries. The slanders of the latter have therefore also been less effective.

Comrades from Minneapolis have made several trips covering the approximate distance of 150 miles up the head of the lakes. Each time some small measure of progress was made. Now there are more direct results to show. As The Militant readers already know, comrade Bloomberg of Duluth became a convinced supporter of the Left Opposition. He set to work ably and energetically, organizing a public meeting and comrades Cowl and Skoglund from Minneapolis made another trip to Duluth to speak together with Bloomberg at the rousing meeting there. Our Minneapolis branch is now considering the project of sending an organizer to Duluth to follow up and build the movement there.

In the present circulation campaign the Minneapolis branch has attained excellent results. The manner in which it carries the campaign through it is about the best. The outstanding feature is the fact that the membership participates collectively, the new members and the younger comrades and the more experienced membership all taking part and scoring their points.

The branch has its weaknesses too. For example, it allowed itself to be too easily out-manuevered by the Stalin petty functionaries from direct participation in a Mooney Conference organized by them. But that only contributed subsequently to the complete stagnation of the Mooney movement in Minneapolis. Such out-manuevering is not likely to happen often. The fact that our members are deeply rooted in the labor movement makes their participation necessary. It has also made possible that they could be the driving force in many serious attempts of the organized workers to guard their interests more effectively. Our comrades played a leading role into local railroad workers' council, as well as in the movement in opposition to the A. F. of L. bureaucrats. The lesson in Minneapolis membership has learned quite well, that is to utilize every opportunity for propaganda for our views. The branch has thereby been able slowly and persistently to increase its membership.

NEWARK, N. J.—

In this city, as reported, we now have an active functioning branch. It is our youngest and its membership is not yet very large. It has, however, made an excellent start. First of all, it is beginning by sending in prompt remittance of all materials received and for literature distributed. And that is of quite serious account in the revolutionary movement today.

The Newark branch, immediately upon its formation, organized a public lecture at which comrade Louis Basky spoke. That was the beginning. The intention is to follow up with more lectures. Since then it has in a systematic and planned manner visited meetings of workers and of workers' organizations, well supplied with our literature. A regular sale of The Militant is being established. New subscribers have been turned in, and already a considerable amount of our pamphlets have been disposed of. The Newark branch has thus made a good beginning.

N. Y. ACTIVITIES

The past winter months have witnessed a substantial increase in practically all activities of the New York branch. The issuance of Unser Kampf, Young Spartacus and Communists drew a number of the comrades into real active work. Distribution of the papers has meant added burdens for the membership. In spite of that the younger comrades distributed their paper before many Y. C. I. units and other places. The Jewish comrades literally spread their paper far and wide. "Communists" created a stir among the Greek workers. Practically all outstanding news stands and meetings of Jewish workers have been covered.

The acquisition of the group of Greek workers, the formation of the Spartacus Youth Club and the Unser Kampf Arbeiter Club have attracted new and good elements to the branch. Most of these new comrades have already partaken of considerable activity and helped to some extent to relieve the weight of the whole work from the comrades who bore it until now. With these additional members, the branch is already planning to increase the number of open air meetings over those held last year. Two years ago the branch was able to hold but one meeting per week. Last year we succeeded in holding two per week, and this year there will be an attempt to have three. Through this medium, much literature was disposed of last summer; expectations are for an increase this summer.

The weekly forums have been quite well attended, some weeks drawing a capacity crowd. The most successful single activity has been the class in "History of the Communist International", led by comrade Shachtman. While advertised as a class, it has in reality almost become a second weekly open forum, judging by the attendance. From thirty-five to fifty people have attended every session, giving rise to prospects for several classes next fall. The class in Marxism, conducted by comrade Swaback, entered into a thorough discussion of important works of Marx. Comrades of the class were drawn into a closer study of these works by acting as reporters, thus enlivening interest and argument. From the experiences with classes thus far, the N. Y. branch should be ready to start a "Workers' School" of its own, next fall.

The last week added another activity in the form of a special drive for the Marine Workers' Defense Committee. The pledge of the national organization for an additional $100 has been met. Four open air defense meetings were held by the Youth Club and branch in the past two weeks, with from two to four dollars collected at each meeting; and interest and sympathy with the frame-up victims evidenced at each meeting. On Saturday and Sunday, April 9th and 10th general collections were held. The Spartacus Youth Club members soon found the technique of how to get something in the collection boxes and enthusiastically did their bit. Members are visiting unions and other workers' organizations and getting results—if not always from the leadership at least from the rank and file.

The main problem of the branch remains building up its contact with the Party and sympathizers around it.

Two Reformist Meets

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Two state conventions of rival reformist parties were held last week in the Twin Cities—the Socialist Party on April 28th at Labor Headquarters, Minneapolis, and the Farmer Labor Party on April 29th and 30th in the St. Paul Auditorium.

To give a brief political characterization of these assemblies, it can be said that aside from the difference in size and excitement, both have adopted on almost identical program of practical reforms with vague references to a new society.

The Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota is unique in American politics in being the only third party to elect a governor (Floyd B. Olson), state and congressional officials and a U. S. Senator (Shipstead). It is not surprising, therefore, that the St. Paul auditorium hall was jammed to the doors (about 1200) with a motley delegation of farmers, bankers, lawyers, labor officials and a sprinkling of rank and file members.

The Socialist Party state gathering of about 50 met in Labor Headquarters, Minneapolis. I say gathering advisedly, since it was not a delegated body, there being no functioning units in the state. All those who "consider themselves as socialists" were invited to attend the state "convention".

While the F. L. P. declared for a "new social system", the S. P. called for "the abolition of capitalism". The S. P. demand for "Unemployment Insurance, full cost to the boss", is countered by the F. L. P. "federal and state unemployment insurance . . . the industries, corporations . . . must bear the burden of this protection." The socialist proposals for a graduated income tax with emphasis on the rich takes the form in the F. L. P. platform of a "graduated, progressive income tax, the proceeds to be used to reduce the present tax burden of the farmer and small home owner." They both declare for the old-age pension and the shorter work day.

The only point of real difference in the two parties is the purely parliamentary one of national candidates. The Socialists endorsed Norman Thomas and Mayor Hoan of Milwaukee for the head of their national ticket. The F. L. P. leaders apparently plan an election deal with the democrats behind Roosevelt in return for state support of the latter for the F. L. P. candidates. Therefore, when Slonin, late committeeman of the S. P. and delegate to the F. L. P. convention in an impassioned speech, threatened to withdraw from the body if the "fusion" measure passed, a storm of raillery opened up from the floor. The motion to leave the matter in the hands of the state executive committee finally passed. So the clique in control of this going concern is free to make any deal they care to.

In spite of all the ballyhoo of the liberals there is little indication of a national third party ticket. Julius J. Reiter of Rochester reported a conference of the "National Farmer Labor Party" held at Omaha in February. His heated argument for the endorsement of a third party presidential candidate, or at least, the nomination of F. L. P. presidential electors, fell on deaf ears. The prevailing sentiment, as expressed by numerous speakers, was that the capital of the Party was not to the detriment of the offices already achieved in Minnesota.

Although the S. P. convention elected a state executive, state secretary and state organizer, and some half-hearted speeches were made to stage an S. P. "comeback", there is nothing to indicate that it will not go back to sleep after the elections for another four years . . . at least in Minnesota. The putting up of a socialist ticket in the event of the F. L. P. endorsement of Roosevelt might give it a spurt of life—for the period of the campaign—but little more. I say this in view of the fact that in Minnesota the F. L. P. has completely usurped the functions of the S. P.—in fact, the latter is merely a loose faction of the former.

So much for the news. In next week's Militant the writer will attempt to present a political analysis and draw conclusions with regard to the role of the Communists and the Left Opposition.

Movie Chains Try to Smash Union

NEW YORK N. Y.

Sign Writers' Local 230 in New York of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America is a typical A. F. of L. craft union. Its administration is a graft-ridden, business agent-executive board regime. The business agent receives about $120 a week; the executive board members also receive salaries. A former business agent was expelled because of his open collusion with the bosses; he took money from them and winked at violations of union conditions like an owl which cannot see in the daytime. Such people have no interest in maintaining union wage scales and conditions. Their sole interest is in their weekly checks and in the graft they collect. The workers were aware of this but remained indifferent as long as work was steady. Now they are resentful but helpless and they do not as yet know what to do.

The local has about five hundred members. They are first, second, third, fourth and fifth year apprentices, helpers, mechanics and designers. For the privilege of being an apprentice a worker had to pay the union bureaucrats an initiation fee of from $5 to $50; a mechanic $150; a helper $500. The union controls about sixty small shops. The other four hundred shops are non-union. Many of the bosses of the union shops are members of the union.

The wage scale was as follows: for apprentices, from the first to fifth year: $3.15 to $11.50 a day; for helpers: $10.50; designers: $20.00. The helpers constitute a large majority of the workers in the trade.

Through one pretext or another this scale was undercut by the bosses without protest from the workers or the union. The workers did not protest because of the wage scale because sixty per cent of them were unemployed and those at work were working part time. They were afraid to say so.

The Turn in the Industrial Union

TORONTO, ONT.

Before beginning the discussion on the new turn in the industrial union policy it is worth while going back to spend a few minutes on its preceding history. While I am limiting my remarks to the Dressmaker local of the Toronto Needle Trades, it was this Union that was first organized and upon which the greatest hopes and possibilities were placed.

The organization of the Industrial Union closely approximated the defeat of the Left wing in the Amalgamated where for over a year the Lefts were in control. The formation of the Dressmaker local, met with good response. Several hundred workers immediately joined. Due mainly to lack of decision and leadership, the union soon began disintegrating.

A year or so later the union was again reorganized on a very much smaller basis. About this time or soon after third period trade union policies were introduced. Unions under reformist leadership became "company unions", strikes called by the reformists were branded as "fake stoppages in the interests of the bosses"—unity of the workers was limited in the slogan of join our union—boring from within the reformist unions was discarded for fear of activating them.

Disintegration and isolation continued and a year later the third period trade union policies were intensified with the addition of the slogan of unity with the workers in their shops, boycott of their organizations.

The strike called by the union had all the earmarks of adventure and failed. True to their colors, the reformists did their part, by sending their members to replace the strikers. The strike called by the International Union which the Industrial Union sabotaged also landed on the rocks.

The net profit of both strikes was that the workers are disgruntled and disillusioned, and ignored both unions despite the very bad conditions prevailing in the trade. Mass meetings called by the Industrial Union have dwindled down to hardly more than local meetings, while the attendance at local meetings is very small. The standing of the International is no better.

The delegates to the last congress of the R. I. U. returned with the crepe for the third period policies. Unions under reformist leadership are no longer company unions. Strikes called by the reformists are recognized as strikes that can be developed into real struggles over the heads of the leadership. Boring from within is again accepted. Even the united front from below now includes unity proposals made directly to the reformist unions.

Thus far the new turn would seem to indicate a partial return in the direction of real Communist policies. A real Communist turn on the part of the leadership demands open admission before the whole working class and the union of their previous false policies and premises on which they were built. The broadest discussion and lessons are to be drawn. Finally, the placing of the responsibility on the responsible parties, it is needless to remark that the centrists won't do this. For them it suffices to throw the blame vaguely on "certain local leaders."

What lies underneath this new turn?

I have no information to show that it is pressure from below. Certainly not from the Canadian Communists and Left wing forces. One might almost draw the conclusion that the leadership themselves have recognized the depth of the failure of their policies and isolation from the masses, have become frightened of the tomorrow when they will be called to account and are attempting to return to the only policy left open to them in the hope of forestalling their complete exposure.

To sum up. The beginning of a return by the centrists in the direction of a Leninist trade union policy will strengthen the position of the Left wing Communists in particular and the Left wing forces in general. Two indications point out also to the liquidation of third period tactics in the political field as well. The question is, will not the new turn have the tendency to disclose more fully the opportunism underlying the theory of "socialism in one country" and the false policies that flow from it in all fields of work? I think it will. Will not the Centrists bureaucracy become weaker and the Left Oppositionists stronger? I again reply in the affirmative.

Governmental Red Baiting

Uneasy lie the heads that prosecute Communists; this is the inference one takes with the issuance of a pamphlet by the attorney-general of Ontario, giving the judgment of the Supreme Court of Ontario stating the "reasons" and "justification" for declaring the Communist Party an illegal organization in Ontario.

The case has reached its final stage as far as legal process is concerned. The eight have been in jail for some weeks, and now Attorney-General Price has adopted a procedure, for the first time in juridical history in Canada, of issuing a public pamphlet, spreading propaganda to popularize the verdict.

Certain sections of the petty-bourgeoisie and liberals are uneasy over the suppressing of civil liberties, especially in Toronto, where even some religious organizations have felt the ban. The judgment gives legal sanction to this policy of suppression. The workers have not given the acclaim to the sentencing of Reds that the authorities expected. As comrade Cannon stated, the social conditions did not need the outlawing of the Party, and Bennett's adventure has raised certain sections of parliamentary circles, and even of his own party, against his dictatorial methods.

The undercurrent causes the reactionary press to print continuous editorials venomously denouncing those who even dare criticize Section 98, or the case, and at other times trying to pacify them into believing that outside of the Reds, those who keep within the law have the right of free speech. Of course, to keep within the law one has to keep his mouth shut. If there was no disquietude over the case why do they not let the matter drop, why do they find it necessary to keep formulating "public opinion"?

But it is to the working class that a final reckoning will have to be made. Marie Antoinette told the hungry to eat cake; Mayor Walker told them to eat ice cream, and now Attorney-General Price gives the working class—pamphlets.

—S. GREEN.

This was the situation when the wage agreement with the bosses expired on March 30th. The union proposed to the bosses a renewal of the wage scale. This was nothing but a gesture as the scale was not being enforced. To allow the unrest of the rank and file the union bureaucrats proposed in addition to the renewal of the wage scale that helpers be permitted to do part of the apprentices' work. This would enable the bosses to lay off some or all of their apprentices and increase the work of the helpers. It is the old A. F. of L. trick of playing off one section of workers against another. The union further proposed the introduction of split time at the "discretion of the union" and under the control of the union. The time cards of the workers were to be sent weekly to the union headquarters.

To this the bosses replied with proposals of their own. Of the sixty unionized shops some ten or fifteen do work for the moving picture chains: Loew, R. K. O.; Warner Bros., etc. These outfits would like to either employ non-union labor or union labor at open shop rates. Best of all they would like to smash the union. In the present situation they see their opportunity. They have taken the first step.

Upon their instigation the bosses rejected the terms of the union; they want the right to hire and lay-off and fire at will; they want to strike out from the agreement the clause requiring them to get the union's permission for overtime work.

This is important to the shops doing theatrical work. The chains always shoot only by overtime work. The chains propose a 25% wage cut. These terms would reduce the union to a meaningless shell.

The union bureaucrats would have accepted these terms were it not for the dissatisfaction of the rank and file which forced a strike. The strike is now taking place. Picketing is being organized. Acid was thrown on a sign at the Astor Theatre. Twenty shops have settled on the union's terms. But not the shops which get the moving picture chains' orders. They are holding out.

The attempt of the chains to smash the union is reflected in the struggle inside the union. The workers in the shops which get the chains' orders, who are a numerical minority in the union, are more steadily employed than the workers in the other union shops. With sixty per cent of the membership unemployed, this numerical minority almost alone carries the financial burden of the union on its back. It is more outspoken and hostile to the bureaucracy. But the bureaucracy always manages to out-vote it.

The rift between this minority and the bureaucrats supported by a majority of the membership came to a head with the expiration of the wage agreement and the exchange of terms. This theatrical show card minority anxious to continue working was opposed to the strike. It was and is willing to arbitrate with the idea of settling for a ten per cent wage cut. It has no interest in the strike.

It has called a secret meeting to discuss plans for the formation of a separate organization independent of local 230, and for a settlement on the basis of a ten per cent wage cut. This extremely short sighted policy will get these workers nowhere. If realized it will break the union, accomplish the aim of the chains and their own isolation, leaving them to the mercies of the powerful chains who will, of course, proceed to lower their living and working conditions even further through additional wage cuts, speed up and lay-offs.

In the ranks of the theatrical show card writers and in the union generally are several Left wing workers. These workers should immediately work out a program and present it to the union membership.

They must explain to the theatrical show card writers that they have embarked on a suicidal course both for themselves and the union as a whole. They must show their fellow workers that this is playing the game of the chains who alone will benefit from it. Against the split they must propose a fighting unity of the whole union against the chains and the bosses for concrete demands to be worked out by the membership.

To the union membership as a whole they must propose as an indispensable prerequisite for the fight against chains a fight against the bureaucracy in the union and its scheme of setting off one section of the workers against another. Instead of split time they must propose the wholly practicable slogan of the six hour day without reduction in pay. And to this they must add unemployment insurance at the expense of the bosses. They must also propose the elimination of the five categories of apprentices since the introduction of machinery and mechanical methods of production have largely eliminated the necessity for skilled use of the brush. Finally they must propose organization of the unorganized shops. As a prerequisite for this they must abolish the initiation fees.

BACK NUMBERS OF "MILITANT" WANTED

We are preparing files of the Militant for binding. We plan to bind in one volume all the issues from Vol. 1, No. 1 to Volume IV No. 12, the last issue of the semi-monthly Militant. We are missing the following numbers: Vol. I, No. 1, November 15, 1928. Vol. 2, No. 4, Feb. 18th, 1929; Vol. 3, No. 31; Oct. 1 1930; Vol. 4, No. 2, January 15th, 1931. Vol. 4, No. 10, May 15th, 1931. Will comrades who have these numbers please send them in at once. Just as soon as we receive these numbers we will be able to proceed with our binding plans and offer the bound volumes for sale.

Militant Drive at Half Way Mark

With the issue of The Militant the subscription campaign is half over. Although we got under way slowly, we are now moving ahead. Subs and renewals are coming in. Last week we reported 72 subs and renewals. This week the figure stands at 87. The staff of Militant builders has risen from 17 to 21.

The standing of the branches is substantially the same as last week:

New York	32
Minneapolis	24
Chicago	7
Boston	4
St. Louis	1
Newark	1
Philadelphia	1
Montreal	1
Miscellaneous	16

New York and Minneapolis branches accounted for fourteen of the fifteen subs reported last week. No other branch reported. What is the matter, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Newark, Boston, Montreal? Are you going to let New York and Minneapolis have it all their own way?

And what is the matter with Cleveland, Youngstown, Kansas City, New Haven, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh? Are you going to be left out of it? There are only six weeks left to June 1st. Get busy.

The race between New York and Minneapolis is getting closer and hotter. Last week the difference between them was ten subs. This week it has been cut to eight. Will Minneapolis make good its promises to give New York a drubbing? (Confidentially—New York is getting worried.) It is understood, of course, that we are strictly impartial.

The Minneapolis team standing ($1 is one point) for the week ending April 6th was:

Team No 1—24 3-4 points
Team No 2—17 1-2 points.
The branch total is 42 1-4 points. This total does not include the subs the Minneapolis branch is steadily sending in for Unser Kampf and Young Spartacus .

A new bundle order was reported last week from Duluth, Minnesota, by comrade Carl Cowl of our Minneapolis branch. Verily, this is a branch! No other bundle orders were reported. What is wrong, comrades? Newsstands, bookstores, which will carry The Militant exist. They must be found out. And then they must be revisited. If comrades will send in lists for their cities, we will run them in The Militant. This should help.

No requests from out of town were received last week for bundles of sample copies for free distribution. Yet it is astonishingly easy to make these distributions. In the needle trades market in New York last week four comrades distributed 1000 Militants, Unser Kampf and leaflets in fifteen minutes. A comrade who went out on another occasion to make a free distribution of back numbers was kept breathlessly whirling around, trying to put Militants into the workers' outstretched hands. Last summer in Cleveland hundreds of copies were distributed in this way. And these distributions of back numbers increased the subsequent sale of current issues. Comrades, it can be done. It is being done to some extent. But not enough. Order back numbers now!

Are you comrades taking full advantage, as an inducement for getting subs, of the appearance in The Militant of extracts from comrade Trotsky's latest work on Germany, WHAT NEXT? Are you making use of the literature premiums: a free paper bound copy of The Permanent Revolution with each $2-1 year sub of 52 issues; a free copy of The Strategy of the World Revolution with each $1-half year sub of 26 issues; a free copy of any of our 10c pamphlets with each 50c trial sub of 13 issues. Are you making use of the $2 rate for a combined one year sub to The Militant and Young Spartacus? Are you using the 25c sub rate for 8 issues which is good only during the period of the drive? The promise of the first half of the drive must be turned into success during the remaining six weeks. We have important tasks to perform. We must put The Militant on a sounder financial basis so we can continue without retrenchment the fight for the regeneration of the Party and the Comintern.

If every comrade will take it this way and put his shoulder to the wheel we can move forward. Let us make the growth of the staff of Militant builders a criterion of the response to our appeal. Here are the 21 Militant builders and their records in the campaign: C. Cowl—5; A. Konikow—4; V. R. Dunne—4; F. Barach—3; L. Basky—3; C. Skoglund—2; M. Dunne—2; C. R. Hedlund—2; J. Carter—1; R. Ruskin—1; W. Curran—1; Zalmanoff—1; R. Sacharow—1; W. Herman—1; A. Swaback—1; A. Grotzer—1; L. Logan—1; Kaidis—1; M. Engel—1; G. Ray—1; M. Sterling—1. Let us increase this list. Let us increase the number of subs per builder.

Once more—everybody into the campaign! Get subs! Get renewals! Get bundle orders! Make free distributions! Sell current issues! Make the sub drive a success! Increase the circulation of The Militant, Unser Kampf, Young Spartacus, Communism, the Russian Bulletin! BUILD THE OPPOSITION PRESS!

Reviews and News of the Working Class and Revolutionary Movements

What Really Happened at Shanghai

Japanese imperialism has succeeded in breaking the heroic struggle of the Shanghai masses, in taking Shanghai and the surrounding territory. This success was not due simply to the technical and military superiority of Japanese imperialism. The Chinese counter-revolution under the leadership of Chiang Kai-Shek capitulated before the enemy because of the fear that the steadfast struggle of the Shanghai workers would in the end be directed against them. For this reason, Chiang Kai-Shek disarmed the Shanghai workers who were engaged in a struggle against the Japanese army. This is the way the former ally of Stalin fights for the national liberation of China. It is once more made clear that the national liberation of the colonies can only come about by a victorious proletarian revolution.

The entire press, and the Communist press in particular, have continually brought reports of the heroic struggle of the Nineteenth Route Army against the Japanese imperialists. The party papers reported that this army mutinied against the Nanking government and organized the military resistance by itself. According to these same sources the army had become a sort of rallying point for the popular masses of Shanghai. It was also reported that this army disarmed divisions that remained loyal to Nanking.

What sort of an army is it? The entire Comintern press maintained an icy silence on this question. Yet, it is impossible that these facts were unknown to the Comintern leaders. Aside from the information apparatus of the Comintern and the Communist press, there is also a press service of the U. S. S. R., Stalin, Manulsky, Thaelmann and Co. knew very well what was going on in Shanghai.

What happened at Shanghai? What did the Nineteenth Route Army do? To which party did the army appeal? The Nineteenth Route Army appealed to the Communist Party of China. Why did the Comintern leaders conceal this joyful news from the Communist parties and the world proletariat? The Nineteenth Route Army was looking for the C. P. of China. Day after day it was covering the walls of Shanghai with the message: Communist Party, come to our side, we want to join you! (This news comes from the official reporter of the Pravda, and was divulged at a closed session. It does not hail from a "counter-revolution Trotskyist"). All its efforts were in vain, the C. P. did not come to its side. The C. P. could not be found in Shanghai, in the outstanding center of China. What a frightful fact!

It is becoming clear only now, why the Comintern press kept quiet about the actual happenings within the Nineteenth Route Army. Had the Comintern leaders made these happenings known, every thinking Communist would have asked: were the reports at the last E. C. C. I. plenum regarding the strength of the C. P. of China correct? According to these reports, the C. P. of China had hundreds of thousands of members, the Shanghai organization of the party was one of the strongest. The conclusion that every Party comrade must draw is that these reports were sheer deception. That is the only answer there is.

The Stalins and Thaelmanns who bear the full responsibility for the disastrous defeat of the Chinese proletariat in 1927, who have wrecked the Communist Party of China, had to conceal the truth regarding the actual conditions of the C. P. Ch. from the party membership so as to make them forget their catastrophic policies in China. And because this policy is being avenged in China, because there is not in fact any Communist Party there to lead the masses in struggle, the Stalinist bureaucracy had to withhold the joyful news that a whole army went over to the C. P. This is one more terrible lesson of the disastrous policy of the Stalinist leadership which is wrecking Communism.

How much confidence can a Communist have in the data furnished by the Comintern leadership regarding the existence of a Soviet China in part of the country? Who will believe Muenzenberg, the General Secretary of the "League Against Imperialism and Colonial Oppression", an organization which according to the conceptions of the Comintern leaders is to lead the anti-imperialist struggle, when he says at a public meeting: "In China we have a Soviet Republic with 70,000,000 inhabitants and with a Red Army of 300,000 men." We ask:

Nine Years of the Struggle of the Left Opposition: - 1923

The first struggle in the Russian party around which the Left Opposition took shape occurred in 1923 between the 12th and the 13th party congresses. It was concerned with four questions of fundamental importance: (1) the relations between the city and the country, the key question for the proletarian dictatorship in Russia which is based upon the alliance of the workers and the peasants; (2) the problem of a plan in the development of economy, which continues to run through all the subsequent internal struggles like a red thread; (3) the question of the internal party regime, which the passage of the years has only rendered infinitely more acute; and finally, (4) the questions of revolutionary strategy raised by the abortive German revolution of 1923 and the Bulgarian revolution of the same year. The last point we will deal with in our next article. Here we will occupy ourselves with the first three points which are so inextricably intertwined.

To present the dispute of 1923 clearly means to dig under a veritable mountain of thick filth and falsification with which the bureaucracy has covered the true essence of the problem for nine years. It may perhaps best be understood by first giving an account of the situation existing in those days. In this way it will be possible to examine the contenting views against their natural background.

The Program for Workers' Democracy

As far back as the 10th Congress of the party, when the counter-revolution and the civil war had been liquidated on every important front, a program intended to terminate the atmosphere of "war Communism" in the party and to substitute for it "workers' democracy" was adopted under the leadership of Lenin. "The needs of the current moment," read the resolution of the congress, "demand a new organizational form. That form is workers' democracy. A course of workers' democracy shall be adopted with the same decisiveness, and as energetically carried into execution, as in the period just past the course toward militarization of the party, to the extent that this does not meet an obstacle in the need for struggle with the counter-revolution."

The outbreak of the counter-revolutionary uprising in Kronstadt and the subsequent promulgation of the New Economic Policy (NEP) resulted in the execution of the 10th Congress program being arrested for the time being. But the problem of democracy in the party lost none of its actuality, particularly in view of how matters began to develop in the country as a whole and in the party specifically. The problem was aggravated by the following circumstance:

In the summer of 1923, Russia experienced a severe economic crisis which became popularly known by a famous designation of Trotsky's as "the scissors crisis". The name was derived from the symbol of the widening blades of a scissors, one blade representing the price of agricultural products and the other the price of manufactured objects, the latter of which increased with the decrease of the former. To draw together the blades of the scissors, that is, to bring the prices of agricultural and industrial products into greater harmony, became the intensely urgent problem of the Soviet power, particularly calculated to establish a corresponding political harmony between the proletariat and the peasantry on the one hand, and between both of them and the Soviet power on the other hand.

Although the 12th party congress in April 1923 had dealt formally with the question, not a single practical step had been taken to solve the problem. To the contrary: the summer and fall crisis was proof that the situation had worsened. Industries, finding it hard to dispose of their products, slowed up their production and consequently found it increasingly difficult to pay wages regularly. When they were paid it was in the form of a depreciated money which could not satisfy the needs of the workers. The number of unemployed was on the increase. Manufactured goods, therefore, were not only unavailable to the peasants, but also to the workers. To add to the difficulties, strikes—a phenomenon rare and alarming under the Soviets—broke out in various parts of the country.

The mounting dissatisfaction of the workers found expression in the party, too. In distorted form, it was reflected notably in the formation of two secret groups, the "Workers' Group," with distinctly Menshevik ideas, and the "Workers' Truth Group," with anarcho-syndicalist ideas. Even when the groups had been discovered and their leaders expelled, the questions nevertheless remained: How shall their appearance be explained? And the answer which met with growing agreement was that these phenomena were the result of the internal party regime of "war Communism," which continued to live after the period of war Communism in the country had died out.

Trotsky's Intervention

On October 8, Trotsky wrote to the Central Committee to express his opinion on the whole matter. In it he pointed out that repressive measures alone could not solve the problem. The crisis was due to the inadequate application of the 12th congress decisions on the organization of industry, especially with regard to the concentration of industry and the necessity of a plan. (Here, by the way, can be traced the origin of the struggle for a plan in economy which the Bolshevik-Leninists commenced and which the bureaucracy resisted for years afterwards.) Finally, he showed, the crisis was due to the inability of the party masses to exchange views, to exercise any influence upon the leadership, or to participate in the affairs of the state—a condition resulting from a hierarchical and bureaucratic regime in the party with the principal mass of the officials appointed from above instead of elected by the membership.

How serious the bureaucratic distortion of the party had become may be seen even more clearly from the following two incidents. Lenin, desperately ill, was unable to participate directly in the affairs of the party. But even from his sick-bed, he was in a position to see how matters stood and how great was the danger to the party and the revolution. Late in 1923, only a very short time before his death, he drew up one document after another directed against the secret clique of Stalin-Zinoviev-Kamenev-Bucharin which had already constituted itself with the determination to perpetuate themselves in control. It is in this period that Lenin wrote his numerous letters against Stalin, then the letter breaking off all personal relations with Stalin, and finally the famous "testament" in which he proposes that Stalin be removed from the post of party secretary. In one of the documents he wrote at that time, later known to the party as "Better Less and Better", Lenin wrote scathingly about the "Rabkrin" at the head of which stood Stalin: "Our new Commissariat of Workers' and Peasants' Inspection, we hope, will leave behind the quality which the French call propreté, which we may call a ridiculous affectation and a ridiculous self-importance, which is the last degree characteristic of all our bureaucrats, Soviet bureaucrats and party bureaucrats alike. In parenthesis be it said that we have a bureaucracy not only in the Soviet institutions but in the party too."

How far the bureaucratism had already gone in the party was described at that time, among others, also by Bucharin, who was one of the leaders in the fight against Trotsky and the Opposition.

C. P. of China? You will not say that such an action was impossible because of technical reasons, and transport reasons. For revolutionaries there are no such obstacles.

Are the data furnished by Muenzenberg correct? Or are they only another link in the chain of deceptive reports? The party comrades must know the truth. Revolutionists do not fear to realize their own weakness. Self-deception is the greatest disaster for the Communist movement. We have had enough disappointments. Think of Lenin, who set up the principle of openly pointing out our weakness before the mass—not only before the members of the party. Therein lay the tremendous strength of the Leninist party and its superiority over all enemies.

—R. WELL.

In one of his speeches in 1923, he made these illuminating remarks:

"If we conducted an investigation and inquired how often our party elections are conducted with the question from the chair, 'Who is for?' and 'Who is against?' we should easily discover that in the majority of cases our elections to the party organizations have become 'elections' in quotation marks, for the voting takes place not only without preliminary discussion, but according to the formula 'Who is Against?' And, since to speak against the authorities is a bad business, the matter ends right there. Such is the election of the secretaries of our lower branches.

"If you raise the question of our party meetings, then how does it go here? Election of the presidium of the meeting. Appears some comrade from the district committee, presents a list, and asks 'Who is against?' Nobody is against, and the business is considered finished. With the order of the day, the same procedure. The chairman asks, 'Who is against?' Nobody is against. The resolution is unanimously adopted. There you have the customary type of situation in our party organizations. . . . It goes without saying that this gives rise to an enormous wave of dissatisfaction. I gave you several examples from the life of our lower branches. The same thing is noticeable in a slightly changed form in the succeeding ranks of our party hierarchy."

It is as a remedy for this whole state of affairs that Trotsky proposed the realization in life of the decisions of the 12th party congress on plan in economy and for a genuine workers' democracy in the country. Let us emphasize here that the demand for workers' democracy raised so pointedly here was presented only as a revolutionary Marxist can: Not as an abstraction, not in the name of that "pure democracy" at whose shrine the Mensheviks worship so piously, but as a concrete need of the hour. Trotsky's demand for workers' democracy was presented in direct connection with the needs of the socialist industry and the satisfaction of the needs of the working class. And when one takes into consideration, further, the fact that Trotsky raised the whole problem in connection with the "scissors crisis" and the discontentment of the peasantry, that he presented the solution with an eye towards strengthening the bonds between the proletariat and the peasantry, it is already sufficient for a refutation of the absurd and unscrupulous inventions about an alleged "under-estimation of the peasantry" which the bureaucrats soon discovered to be the fundamental deviation of "Trotskyism".

are forgotten as lightly as they were conceived. Instead we read this solicited advice to the American bourgeoisie concerning the recent Tardieu-MacDonald conference:

"At this conference two questions were discussed simultaneously: the situation in the Far East and the common repudiation of paying war debts to the United States. It is also no accident that the attack against the dollar has been strengthened to an unparalleled degree directly after this conference. The American 'economists' are trying to find the routes of this attack in the collaboration between French and English newspapers. It would be better for them to cast a glance deeper and to look into the Quai d'Orsay and Downing Street, where the French and English foreign policies are worked out." (Our emphasis).

With this paragraph, the statesman of the Daily Worker seeks to do the detective work for the American bourgeoisie, neither more nor less. "On Guard," he cries in effect, "France and England are planning to repudiate your war debts. This is the conference which strengthened the attack on 'our' dollar. This attack is not being conducted by isolated newspapers. The real enemy is the French bourgeoisie, the English bourgeoisie. They are also ones who back Japan. You would be foolish to tolerate Japan's advances upon the Soviets."

Is this the first concrete result of the new Stalinist "temporary alliance"? Has the American party already become diplomatic adviser to the Hoover government? And has a more treacherous trap been prepared in the Communist movement in recent times than this one?

Developments in Spain

MADRID, March 24, 1932

The Communist Party of Spain has just held its Fourth National Convention at Seville. The few Spanish workers who even after the regional conferences still believed that the convention would mean the preparation for a strong Communist party and the first decisive step toward Communist unification have seen their hopes shattered. The convention of official Spanish Communism was a real "anti-Trotskyist" gathering. Only that part of the Open Letter of the Communist International, which calls upon the C. P. S. to undertake a forceful attack against the Communist Left Opposition was under discussion. We witnessed there how the leaders of the C. P., without without any transitory topos, gave up their conception concerning the insignificance of Trotskyism in Spain" and adopted the point of view that Spain is the only country in which the Communist Left is actually important. They declared that it was a serious mistake on their part to disregard the enormous importance that "Trotskyism" had acquired in this country. The regional conferences which preceded the National Convention were dedicated almost entirely to the discussion of the "Trotskyist" problem and the National Convention only presented a resume of the regional conferences.

During the last three weeks "Trotskyism" has been propagated in Spain much more effectively by these self-same Stalinists than by our own work within the last two years. Today "Trotskyism" is being spoken about in Spain, in the working class organizations, in the coffee houses, in the theatres—everywhere. In this sense, we have sufficient cause to be satisfied and we owe thanks to the Stalinist bureaucracy for the good work they have carried on for us.

Nevertheless, it is deplorable that the first convention held by the Spanish Communists since the coup d'Etat of Primo de Rivera in 1923, meeting at a moment when a serious depression is beginning within the labor movement of Spain, should not have taken under consideration any other problem outside of that concerning "Trotskyism"—and that in an altogether superficial and subjective form—especially in view of the tremendous tasks facing the Spanish proletariat and its vanguard in particular.

The Open Letter of the Communist International, assuming the air of a teacher, merely repeats our own criticism of the leadership of the Spanish Communist Party, stigmatizes the mistakes committed but gives no solution for the future aside from demanding a fierce attack against "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism".

Paradoxical as it may seem, the convention of the C. P. S. did not take up the present situation. Sad as it is, we must say this openly. Not a single thesis was presented to the convention, which in itself was a convention for the liquidation of the Communist Party of Spain.

Meanwhile the Political situation lends itself magnificently to the development of revolutionary action and the creation of a strong Communist party. The republican government, although it appears to be consolidated, finds itself in need of resorting to acts of violence in order to maintain itself in power. Bourgeois reaction has been able to readapt itself and to raise its head once more after the panic which had seized it in the first days of the new regime. This is due to the obvious depression that has of late set in within the labor movement. It is undeniable that the Azana government, still under the "Leftist" label, embodies the preparation of the coming into power of a government which, apart from being reactionary in general, will be particularly anti-working class in character and at that in a less concealed form.

Unemployment is becoming more acute every day. In spite of the depression within the labor movement, strikes have not ceased to appear, although they give evidence of less intensity than several months ago. The labor crisis will continue to grow from day to day and the workers' movement will very soon resurge with even greater combativity than heretofore. The workers will defend their right to live and will engage in struggles of even greater importance and sharpness than those in the past. The anarchists and the anarcho-syndicalists have showed that they are incapable of leading the proletariat to victory. Although the anarchist working class elements have showed an admirable spirit of militancy and heroism. Nothing can be expected from the social democratic traitors. The hope of the working class rested with the Communist party and the latter deceived it in its hope. This is the great responsibility of the Stalinist bureaucracy. This responsibility signifies incompetence and a lack of understanding on the one side; sectarianism, arrogance and the lack of the most elementary notions of responsibility, on the other hand. The Stalinist leaders have not been able to wrest away the masses from the influence of the democratic illusions, denying these democratic illusions and prescribing a leap in one step and without any transition, from the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera to a Soviet regime, although at present they lose themselves in the biggest confusionism with regard to slogans of a democratic character and believe that in order to come to the proletarian dictatorship it is necessary to "pass through the democratic stage of a workers' and peasants' government" (the same slogan that "guided" the Chinese revolution of 1923-27). They are the only ones responsible for the masses turning, after losing all their confidence in the present republic, to the bourgeois "leftist" radicals. The establishment of the "left" radical bourgeoisie as a party defending the democracy is something for which the Stalinist bureaucracy is largely responsible. The leadership of the C. P. S. was unable to explain to the masses the deception of bourgeois democracy. It merely aggravated things, when at the time the masses were intoxicated with the notion of democracy, it demanded "all power to the Soviets", to Soviets that did not exist except in the fancy of the Spanish disciples of Stalin.

It is necessary to destroy the democratic illusions of the masses; it is necessary to wrest them away from the influence of the radical bourgeoisie. The official Communist party has not been able and is not yet able to do this, because its leadership has deserted the correct Bolshevik line. It is precisely for this reason that the C. P. S. is uninterruptedly disintegrating and being destroyed. The best militants of the Communist party keep on moving in the direction of the Communist Left Opposition, are constantly increasing our ranks.

This is the present situation and these are the problems facing the Spanish proletariat at the present moment. Under these historical circumstances, our third National Conference is going to meet. Before this conference there is presented in the form of theses, an arsenal of documents on problems which the Communist Left Opposition will have to solve. Today the Communist Left Opposition is the organization toward which the most conscious proletariat of Spain turns its eyes. A large current of working class opinion is making its way toward us, putting its faith in the Communist Left Opposition of Spain. The responsibility of our organization in this historical moment is the responsibility of the real Communist party of Spain, of the genuine vanguard of the Spanish proletariat. Conscious of our duties and responsibilities, we are going to meet at our National Conference on March 28. The achievements of this conference will be the subject of our next article.

LEFT WING VICTORY OR TREACHEROUS BARGAIN?

The recent elections in Local 9 of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union are an event of great significance for the Left wing labor movement. In these elections the Left wing, under the direct leadership of the Communist Party, elected five delegates to the national convention of the union out of a total of seven. Since Local 9 is one of the largest and most important locals in the union, having approximately 7,000 members (cloak finishers), the momentous import of the election result can be seen at once. On the face of things it would appear that the Left wing has captured one of the main strongholds of the "company union". If this is really so, if the Left wing, which was expelled from the International and compelled to form its own union, and, then, in its convention two years ago, declared the I. L. G. W. U. to be a "company union" and forbade the formation of any organized movement within it, can come out now as the victor in the elections to the convention—then this is indeed an amazing testimony of the strength of the Left wing and of the Communists in the needle trades. If it is a genuine victory it portends momentous developments in the entire movement.

But here we run into a number of disturbing facts which are well known to the workers in the trade and its close observers. There are three groups in the local which have tested their strength in a number of struggles. The strongest group is the so-called "Center", consisting of anarchists supported by the Lovestonites and their sympathizers in a "Progressive Bloc", and its strength is certified by the fact that it controls the present administration of the local. The second group, from the standpoint of numerical strength, is composed of the Schlesinger Right wing forces who have constituted the opposition to the "progressive" administration of the local. The third group, the weakest numerically and one that came to life only recently and has played very little part in the life of the local, is the "Left wing" group directed by the Communist Party.

This is the situation out of which the election "victory" of the Left wing emerged like a miracle. And as we examine another fact the strange story becomes stranger still. Despite the existence of the three clearly defined groups, there were only two slates in the election. The "Progressives" had their candidates, and so did the Left wing. But the Schlesinger group, the black and yellow gang that has been distinguished always by its voracious appetite for office, was overcome with modesty and put up no slate of its own! And when this illuminating circumstance is considered in connection with the result of the election—the victory of the weakest group over the strongest group—there is only one possible conclusion: the right wing forces voted for the Left wing candidates!

Already the victory, so bright and alluring at a distance, begins to look bad and to smell worse. However it came about it is the sort of thing which shames and discredits the Left wing movement. The Communist leaders who gained this shoddy success seem to be anxious to avoid discussion of it. Perhaps that is why the Daily Worker, which usually screams in big headlines about the smallest accomplishments, real or imaginary, passes the cloakmakers' election off with a two inch notice on an inside page on April 8th. And even that little notice contains an outright lie that cannot possibly deceive any worker who knows about the needle trades. The left delegates were elected, they say, "despite all efforts of Schlesinger and the fake progressive anarchist-Lovestone combination". Do they want anybody to believe that the Schlesinger group voted for the "Progressive Bloc" candidates and that the Left wing defeated their combined forces? That requires more faith in human credulity than even Barnum had. The best that any needle trades worker in the market will say for that explanation is that it is just another lie of the Daily Worker, and what's another lie more or less?

The victory was a fake; that much is absolutely clear. But another question remains to be answered: Was it the result of a treacherous horse-trade with the Right wing fakers (Foster and Co. have played that rotten game before), or was the Left wing the victim of favors it did not want? There are people who say openly that it was a bargain. The Lovestonites, as is their custom whenever anything happens, tell about a secret meeting, about which they, as usual have "inside information", between the Right and Left leaders where the deal was made. We can afford to pass this by. There are more reliable means of judging the affair than the dubious gossip of the Lovestonites. The Left wing delegates will have to show by their stand at the convention whether they are obligated to the Schlesinger gang or not.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE "COMPANY UNION" THEORY?

At the convention of the Needle Trades Industrial Union two years ago the I. L. G. W. U. was branded a "company union" and organized work within it was forbidden as an opportunist illusion. At that time, in our comments on the convention, we pointed out the falsity of this theory and the tactical conclusions drawn from it. Our arguments were unavailing and the theory and the tactics had to run their course. This course, strewn with tragedy for the Left wing, is just about finished. The facts of life have spoken their own word against these conceptions. The most revealing fact of all is the election in Local 9. The Daily Worker's comments on this event, miserable and scanty as they are, leave very little to be said for the "company union" idea.

If you hide a smile and admit their claim that the Left wing has really carried the elections in a genuine fight what remains of the dictum of two years ago that an organized Left wing struggle in the International is not only wrong, but also hopeless? This Local alone has three or four times as many members as the Industrial Union. To win over a majority of these members for the Left wing, after the very attempt had been forbidden as a deviation, shows a terrible contradiction between the theory and the event.

And that is not all. According to the Daily Worker, the victorious left delegates "ran on a program of class struggle, a program against clique control of the International, for a real strike under rank and file leadership". We think the delegates were right in advocating "a program of class struggle". But a company union has never yet been converted to such a program. To advocate such a program in the union is to admit the possibility of reforming its present character. But the Stalinists prohibited organized work in the International precisely on the ground that it was a company union and therefore couldn't be reformed.

Further, the Daily Worker says the left candidates had a program "against clique control of the International". Again we say they were right. But if you are against clique control of the International, you are saying thereby that you are in favor of a different control by a different leadership. What has this to do with the teaching that the union is a company union and, consequently, by its very nature, controlled by the bosses and subjected to no change? The program of the left delegates is in fact a direct contradiction to the whole conception of "company unionism". But still the Party generals continue to mutter the phrase. This is trying to walk north and south at the same time.

A third plank in the program "a real strike under rank and file leadership" is an expression of I. W. Wism that flagrantly violates Communist fundamentals. It deserves a separate discussion.

WHY DID THE RIGHT SUPPORT THE LEFT?

If one acquits Foster of a backroom bargain with Schlesinger the reasons which prompted the black hundred forces to support the Stalinist candidates must be explained. These people are not generous; they don't give something for nothing. And they are not foolish either. Even without a direct agreement they could act in this case, in the way they did, with full deliberation, counting on the policy of the Stalinists to help them as it has in the past. The Schlesinger administration in the International is being pressed hard in the pre-convention campaign by the "Progressive Bloc" opposition. They have observed the present ultra-radical policy of the Party without interest, and certainly not without profit. According to the ruling theory of the Party, the Lenin teachings on the united front are out of date; all groups and factions not under the immediate domination of the Party are lumped together in one "social-fascist" mass; there can be no temporary agreements, even on the smallest questions, with any of them. Seeing this policy—and no doubt agreeing with it heartily—the Schlesinger forces, unable to elect their own delegates in Local 9, set out to cut down the representation of the "Progressive Bloc." To accomplish this they voted for the Left wing delegates.

Did they get a direct promise that the Left wing delegates at the convention will fulfill their expectations that they will confine themselves to phrase-mongering denunciation and take no practical steps to unite the opposition? This question need not be answered in advance. But the Left wing workers in the needle trades have every right to demand that the left delegates clear themselves of this suspicion by their actions. These delegates will occupy the strategic position at a significant moment in the needle trades struggle. Many workers will judge them and the movement they represent, not by what they say there but by what they do there. The Left wing workers have heard enough of the frothy pseudo-radicalism of Stalinism. In the meantime they have been compelled to yield position after position to the Rights, and through them to the bosses. It is time for a decisive turn. The convention of the International is the place for it.

The first duty of the Left wing dele-

The Mooney Case and the Party

The hypocrisy of Governor Rolph of California is now clearly revealed by the succession of delays in announcing decision in response to the pleas of Mooney's lawyers for a pardon. At first an announcement appeared of a decision to be reached by the end of February. It became next postponed to the middle of March, then to the end of March and now again to April 21. Will there be further postponements?

That Rolph is able to postpone his decision from month to month is damning testimony to the weakness of the movement for Mooney's release. This is the sixteenth year of Mooney's imprisonment. No one so much as dares to question his innocence. It is a universally accepted fact. Mooney is the outstanding symbol of capitalist class vengeance, of the American frame-up system. His cause is dear to the American workers. Yet Rolph can play "cat and mouse with the life of an innocent man . . ."

And the Daily Worker can say on April 11, "Governor Rolph has been waiting for a favorable opportunity to hand down an unfavorable decision during a moment of working class passivity. Instead the working class is more alert than ever on the Mooney issue!" This gem of bureaucratic optimism appears under the head, "Force Unconditional Freedom of Mooney."

How do the C. P. and the I. L. D. propose to force Mooney's unconditional freedom? The Daily Worker says that only a mass movement can force Mooney's release. But do they propose the creation of a mass movement? Do they propose a series of united front conferences to build this mass movement? They do not. They propose merely "This week must see a special burst of protest." What form shall it take? "There must be a rising flood of letters, telegrams, resolutions, to Governor Rolph at Sacramento, California, demanding immediate and unconditional release . . ." And that is all!

Are we for this rising tide of letters, telegrams and resolutions? We are. Will they force Mooney's immediate and unconditional release? They will if they are backed by a united, fighting working class movement. Not otherwise. This must be organized at once. It is not too late. The I. L. D. and C. P. must take the lead. Their leadership is making no move in that direction. The rank and file must make its voice heard together with that of the Left Opposition.

gates to the convention is to frustrate the calculations of the Schlesinger machine and to clear the Left wing of suspicion in the elections. They must raise there the banner of unity in the needle trades, and make the convention the starting point of a new campaign to unite the needle trades workers into a single organization for a common struggle. The slogan of unity is the slogan of the day. It has more power to move the workers than any other because it corresponds most to their needs. By its false policy, the party leadership, which is also the leadership of the Left wing, has surrendered this slogan. That is one of the chief reasons for the defeat of the Left wing and the advances of the reactionaries. The left delegates at the convention of the International, acting in accord with the Industrial Union on the outside, have a rare opportunity to turn the tide on this decisive question. That will be a powerful blow to the Schlesinger machine, and a proof that it miscalculated in the elections in Local 9.

The second task of the left delegates at the convention is to bring forward a united front program for the convention struggle. If the Schlesinger people can vote for the Left wing delegates because they count on their refusal to combine with the "progressive" opposition, then that fact in itself is a sufficient condemnation of the policy. The Party press these days is full of talk about "working within the reactionary unions", but this talk doesn't mean much without a realistic tactic. The united front of progressive and oppositional forces against the reactionary leadership is just a tactic, and a most necessary one. We have no confidence in the leaders of the "Progressive Bloc". But the very fact that they come out as an opposition to Schlesinger and talk in radical terms is a proof of the sentiments of the workers behind them. The Left wing must find a road to these workers.

To do this they must force the "Progressive Bloc" leaders to the wall with proposals of a fighting united front against Schlesinger and his gang. Who gains by the counterfeited radicalism which rejects such a policy? The Schlesinger machine on the one hand, and the anarchist-Lovestone combination on the other. The Left wing and the workers lose all along the line. This is the bitter history of the past few years. Is it not time to turn the helm? The convention of the International is the place to make the turn.

DEMOCRACY AND FASCISM

by LEON TROTSKY

"As regards 'the class content' there are no distinctions between democracy and Fascism," lectures Werner Hirsch echoing Stalin (DIE INTERNATIONALE, Jan. 1932). The transition from democracy to Fascism may take the character of "an organic process", that is, it may occur "gradually" and "bloodlessly". Such reasoning might dumbfound anyone, but the epigones have inured us from becoming dumbfounded.

There are no "class distinctions" between democracy and Fascism. Obviously this must mean that democracy as well as Fascism is bourgeois in character. We guessed as much even prior to January, 1932. The ruling class, however, does not inhabit a vacuum. It stands in definite relations to other classes. In a developed capitalist society, during a "democratic" régime, the bourgeoisie leans for support primarily upon the working classes which are held in check by the reformists. In its most finished form, this system finds its expression in England during the administration of the Labor government as well as during that of the Conservatives. In a Fascist régime, at least during its first phase, capital leans on the petty bourgeoisie which destroys the organizations of the proletariat. Italy, for instance! Is there a difference in the "class content" of these two régimes? If the question is posed only as regards the ruling class, then there is no difference. If one takes into account the position and the inter-relations of all classes, from the angle of the proletariat, then the difference appears to be quite enormous.

In the course of many decades, the workers have built up within the bourgeois democracy, by utilizing it, by fighting against it, their own strongholds and bases of proletarian democracy: the trade unions, the political parties, the educational and sport clubs, the co-operatives, etc. The proletariat cannot attain power within the formal limits of bourgeois democracy; but can do so only by taking the road of revolution: this has been proved both by theory and experience. And these bulwarks of workers' democracy within the bourgeois state are absolutely essential for the taking of the revolutionary road. The work of the Second International consisted in creating just such bulwarks during the epoch when it was still fulfilling its progressive historic labor.

Fascism has for its basic and only task, the razing to their foundation of all institutions of proletarian democracy. Has this any "class meaning" for the proletariat, or hasn't it? The lofty theoreticians had better ponder over this. After pronouncing the régime to be bourgeois—which no one questions—Hirsch, together with his masters, overlooks a mere trifle: the position of the proletariat in this regime. In place of the historical process they substitute a bald sociological abstraction. But the class war takes place on the soil of history, and not in the stratosphere of sociology. The point of departure in the struggle against Fascism is not formed by the abstraction of the democratic state, but, by the living organizations of the proletariat, in which is concentrated all its past experience and which prepare it for the future.

The statement that the transition from democracy to Fascism may take on an "organic" and a "gradual" character can mean one thing and one thing only and that is: without any fuss, without a fight, the proletariat may be deprived not only of all its material conquests—not only of its given standard of living, of its social legislation, of its civil and political rights—but also even of the basic weapon whereby these were achieved, that is, its organizations. The "bloodless" transition to Fascism implies under this terminology, the most frightful capitulation of the proletariat that can be conceived.

Werner Hirsch's theoretical discussions are not accidental; while they serve to develop still further the theoretical oracle of Stalin, they also serve to generalize the entire present agitation of the Communist party. The party's chief resources are in fact being strained only to prove that there is no difference between Bruening's régime and Hitler's régime. Thaelmann and Remmele see in this the quintessence of Bolshevik policy.

Nor is the matter restricted to Germany only. The notion that nothing new will be added by the victory of Fascists is being zealously propagated now in all sections of the Comintern. In the January issue of the French periodical Cahiers du Bolchevisme, we read, "The Trotskyists behave in practice like Breitscheid; they accept the famous social democratic theory of the 'lesser evil', according to which Bruening is not as bad as Hitler, according to which it is not so unpleasant to starve under Bruening as under Hitler, and infinitely more preferable to be shot down by Groener than by Frick." This is not the most stupid passage, although—to give it due credit—stupid enough. Unfortunately, however, it expresses the gist of the political philosophy of the leaders of the Comintern.

The fact of the matter is that the Stalinists compare the two régimes from the point of view of vulgar democracy. And indeed, were one to consider Bruening's régime from the criterion of "formal" democracy, one would arrive at a conclusion which is beyond argument: nothing is left of the proud Weimar constitution save the bones and the skin. But this does not settle the question so far as we are concerned. The question must be approached from the angle of proletarian democracy. This criterion is also the only reliable one on which to consider the question as to when and where the "normal" police methods of reaction under decay capitalism are replaced by the Fascist régime.

Whether Bruening is "better" than Hitler (better looking perhaps?) is a question which, we confess, doesn't interest us at all. But one need only glance at the list of workers' organizations to assert, Fascism has not conquered yet in Germany. In the way of its victory there still remain gigantic obstacles and forces.

The present Bruening régime is the régime of bureaucratic dictatorship, or more definitely, the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie enforced by means of the army and the police. The Fascist petty bourgeoisie and the proletarian organizations seem to counterbalance one another. Were the workers united by Soviets; were factory committees fighting for the control of production, then one could speak of dual power. Because of the split within the proletariat, because of the tactical helplessness of its vanguard, dual power does not exist as yet. But the very fact that mighty organizations of workers do exist, which under certain conditions are capable of repelling Fascism with crushing force, that is what keeps Hitler from seizing power and impart a certain "independence" to the bureaucratic apparatus.

Bruening's dictatorship is a caricature of Bonapartism. His dictatorship is unstable, unreliable, short-lived. It signalizes not the initiation of a new social equilibrium but the early crash of the old one. Supported directly only by a small minority of the bourgeoisie, tolerated by the social democracy against the will of the workers, threatened by Fascism, Bruening can bring down the thunder of paper decrees but not real thunderbolts. Bruening is fit for dissolving parliament with its own assent; he'll do to promulgate a few decrees against the workers, to proclaim a Christmas truce and to make a few deals under its cover; to break up a hundred meetings, close down a dozen papers, exchange letters with Hitler worthy of a village druggist—that is all. But for greater things his hands are too short.

Bruening is compelled to tolerate the existence of workers' organizations because he hasn't decided to this very day, to hand over the power to Hitler, and inasmuch as he himself has no independent means of liquidating them. Bruening is compelled to tolerate the Fascists and to patronize them inasmuch as he mortally fears the victory of the workers. Bruening's régime is a transitional, shortlived régime, preceding the catastrophe. The present administration holds on, only because the chief camps have not as yet pitted their strength. The real battle hasn't begun. It is still to come. The dictatorship of bureaucratic impotence fills in the lull before the battle, before the forces are openly matched.

The wisecrackers who boast that they do not recognize any difference "between Bruening and Hitler", are saying in reality: it makes no difference whether our organizations exist, or whether they are already destroyed. Beneath this pseudo-radical phraseology there hides the most sordid passivity; we can't escape defeat anyway! Read over carefully the quotation from the French Stalinist periodical. They reduce the question to whether it is better to starve under Hitler or Bruening. To them it is a question of under whom to starve. To us, on the contrary, it is not a question of under which conditions it is better to die. We raise the question of how to fight and win. And we conclude thus, the major offensive must be begun before the bureaucratic dictatorship is replaced by the Fascist régime, that is, before the workers' organizations are crushed. The general offensive should be prepared for by deploying, extending, and sharpening the sectional clashes. But for this one must have a correct perspective; and first of all, one should not proclaim victorious the enemy who is still a long way from victory.

Herein is the crux of the problem; herein is the strategic key to the background; herein is the operating base from which the battle must be waged: Every thinking worker, the more so every Communist, must give himself an accounting and plumb to the bottom the empty and rotten talk of the Stalinist bureaucracy about Bruening and Hitler being one and the same thing. You are muddling! we say in answer. You muddle disgracefully because you are afraid of the difficulties that lie ahead, because you are terrified by the great problems that lie ahead; you throw up the sponge before the fighting is begun, you proclaim that we have already suffered defeat. You are lying! The working class is split; it is weakened by the reformists and disoriented by the vacillations of its own vanguard, but it is not annihilated yet, forces are not yet exhausted. No. The proletariat of Germany is powerful. The most optimistic estimates will be infinitely surpassed once its revolutionary energy will clear the way for it to the arena of action.

Bruening's régime is the preparatory régime. Preparatory to what? Either to the victory of Fascism, or to the victory of the proletariat. This régime is preparatory because both camps are only preparing for the decisive battle. If you identify Bruening with Hitler, you identify the conditions before the battle with the conditions after the defeat; it means that you admit defeat beforehand; it means that you appeal for surrender without a battle.

The overwhelming majority of the workers, particularly the Communists, does not want this. The Stalinist bureaucracy of course, does not want it either. But one must take into account not one's good intentions, with which Hitler will pave the road to his Hell, but the objective meaning of one's policies, of their direction, and their tendencies. We must disclose in its entirety the passive, timidly hesitant, capitulating and declamatory character of the politics of Stalin-Manulsky-Thaelmann-Remmele. We must teach the revolutionary workers to understand that the key to the situation is in the hands of the Communist party; but the Stalinist bureaucracy attempts to use this key to lock the gates to revolutionary action.*

New Stage in Needle Trade Fight

A Campaign for Unity is now the Order of the Day

The convention of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union stands in the center of a series of developments and events which signalize a new stage in the needle trades struggle. This occasion can be the starting point for the revival of a genuine labor struggle against the bosses and a new advance of the militant section of the movement. The conditions now are present for the rapid transformation of the existing state of affairs in favor of the workers and their revolutionary vanguard. In order to make this possible the Left wing is obliged to make an objective examination of the whole situation as it exists in reality, and to elaborate a new line of tactics which proceed from it. The leading idea in this departure is a new and correct formulation of the slogan of unity. Bound up with it, and indispensable to its effective application, is a reconsideration of the present attitude with regard to the problem of work within the reactionary union.

The appearance at the I. L. G. W. U. convention of seven delegates—five from Local 9—one from Local 1, and one from Local 38—even though their election was accomplished under shady circumstances—denotes a recognition in fact of the necessity for a systematic struggle within the Right wing union. It is also a proof of the fruitful possibilities of this struggle. This was clearly indicated long ago, from a practical as well as from a theoretical standpoint, despite all the fulminating agitation to the contrary by the people who deduce tactics out of their own heads and not from the facts of life.

The election of the Left wing delegates is an expression of the fact that workers, who are sympathetic to the aims of the Left wing, are compelled by the force of circumstance to belong to the Right wing union. The organized Left wing, under the direct influence of the Communist Party, had to seek an approach to these workers and provide a focal point for their protest. This is the meaning of the Left wing campaign for the election of delegates to the convention. The Party was dragged at the tail of a movement which came into existence in spite of the astute "theories" which prohibited it. The problem now is to recognize the vital progressive character of the unauthorized movement and provide it with a bold and realistic leadership.

The program on which the Left wing delegates campaigned for election ("for a program of class struggle," "against clique control in the International," etc.) refutes in life the worthless contention, imposed upon the Left wing by the Stalinist muddlers, about the International being a "company union" and therefore not a proper field for systematic work and not subject to reformation in its practices by an organized struggle of the militants within it. The circumstances which compelled the workers to re-enter the Right wing union imperiously command the revolutionary militants to adjust themselves to the situation and organize a struggle there, in coordination with that of the Industrial Union. The old policy which has artificially divided and thereby demoralized this struggle must be replaced by a policy which unites and revitalizes it.

These developments, among others, are signs of a relationship of forces between the Right and Left unions in the field which cannot be ignored in the elaboration of the Left wing tactics of the day. On the contrary, they must be taken as the basis from which the tactics ensue. Aided by the bosses and the police on the one side, and the consistently false policies of the Party leadership on the other, the Schlesinger union, which was badly shattered in the split, has been able to re-constitute itself to a very large extent. At the same time, and by dint of the same factors, the organization of the Industrial Union has been reduced and relegated to a small sector of the trade and has been unable to lead the struggles of the needle trades workers on a sufficiently broad scale to beat back the encroachment of the bosses.

What the Past Developments Teach

The justified aspiration and the heroic struggle of the workers to replace the reactionary unions with a militant industrial union did not meet with success. The best militants were isolated into a small organization which, lacking a mass membership, lacked the power to enforce its demands. On the other hand, the masses of workers, driven by the pressure of circumstance into the faked-controlled union and lacking the directing nucleus of conscious militants, could not organize an effective struggle within the union.

As a result of all this the fighting capacities of the workers in the trade have been weakened and they have had to suffer a steady deterioration of their conditions. The strikes of the Industrial Union yielded no concrete results, and each failure had the effect of still further undermining the confidence of the workers in the prospect of any progress along that line. The traitors at the head of the International, freed from the pressure of a genuine fighting opposition, were able to transform the official strikes into decorative affairs which left the conditions of the workers no better than before, and in some cases worse. The morals of the masses in the needle trades has suffered heavily under these repeated blows. Pessimistic moods, induced by the apparent hopelessness of victory while the union organizations are split apart, spread a paralyzing influence over the "market" and undermined the struggles in advance.

The slogan necessary to revive the fighting spirit and fighting capacities of the needle trades workers, and to restore the decisive influence of the Left wing, which is a condition for victorious advances, is the slogan of trade union unity.

This slogan can move the workers more than any other precisely because it corresponds to their most burning needs and expresses their deepest impulses. But in spite of that, or rather just because of that, there can be no trifling, no phrase-mongering bluster, no demagogic pretense with this great slogan. Whoever really wants to get the attention of the needle trades masses and to influence them seriously must remember one thing: they have been fooled enough, they are on guard for tricks in the name of "unity," they have to be convinced that the slogan is both sincere and realistic.

"Unity from Below" or Genuine Unity?

The Party bureaucrats overlooked this point, and this is one of the main reasons that their bombastic agitation around the question of "unity," and their gross perversion of the Lenin teaching on the subject yielded such miserable results and gave the game to the bosses and their labor agents every time. The demand for "unity" under the leadership of the Communists predetermined in advance—as the demoralized functionaries of Stalinism have been presenting the question—cannot unite anybody except those who are already convinced of the necessity of this leadership. The "unity from below" ballyhoo is part of the same futility. But the problem of the day is to unite the great masses of the needle trades workers, including those who are indifferent and even hostile to Communism, for a common trade union struggle for concrete demands. This is what the workers want, and this is what they need. The slogan of unity must be formulated in such a way that it conforms to this situation and appears to the workers as both realistic and realizable.

At the time when the Industrial Union still contested the field seriously with the International—when the struggle for supremacy remained undecided—the slogan of unity, as formulated by the Left Opposition, was applicable to the situation (the amalgamation of the unions into a single organization by means of a joint convention). The present conditions and relationship of forces between the unions dictate a reformulation of the slogan of unity which, without yielding anything in principle, will correspond more closely to the realities of the situation. From this standpoint the latest meeting of the National Committee of the Communist League, in agreement with the needle trades group, decided to recommend to the Party and the Left wing the slogan of unity, with respect to the International, be formulated now as follows: "Readmission of the Left wing into the International in a body, without discriminations and with full membership rights." Together with this a general campaign should be carried on for the amalgamation of all the unions in the various trades into a single organization embracing the entire industry.

This slogan, which flows out of the actual state of affairs, will also impress the workers as both reasonable and realizable; it will reawaken their confidence and their aspiration for an effective union. At the same time it will open the way for the Left wing to the masses of workers now separated from it in the Schlesinger union.

The Industrial Union, which holds its Plenum on May 1st, the day before the opening of the convention of the International, should put forward the slogan in this way and elect a delegation to present the question before the International convention. Simultaneously, the Left wing delegates to the International convention, acting in concert with the Industrial Union at every step, should begin a fight in the convention in favor of the slogan. Such an action on their part, following the action of the Industrial Union's Plenum, will immediately change the character of the convention, and change it most radically.

The Slogan as a Challenge to the Progressives

The more-or-less sham battle between the Schlesinger machine and the "Progressive Bloc," with the Left wing negotiating on the sidelines—for which the stage is now set—will give place to a realignment of forces and a real fight. Let the "Progressive Bloc" dare to oppose this slogan! Their rank and file supporters, who want unity and a militant policy and mean it earnestly, will at once begin to shift over to the Left wing. If the "Progressives" accept the slogan it will be the means of developing a struggle on a broad front that will soon go beyond the bounds of the pseudo-progressive program. In a few decisive steps the Left wing can regain its position as the dynamic force in the whole

The Intensified Wage Cut Drive

Many credulous workers have suffered from the illusion, and possibly still do, that wage reductions will bring an increase of jobs. To those there have been a number of decisive and hard-hitting answers given in the rounds of wage cutting which have followed one another in rapid succession during this crisis and with the unemployment figures still mounting.

The most recent wage reductions actual or contemplated, are symptomatic of the fact that the formerly more privileged strata of the working class are now ever more becoming the victims, the same as the lower paid, unskilled ones.

Failure of the Danube Union Conference

The Conference which was held last week in London of delegations from Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy to consider plans for rescuing the Danubian States, Austria, Hungary, Roumania, Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia from economic and financial bankruptcy, ended in a complete failure. Germany and Italy did not agree to the plan elaborated by France and supported by England on the ground that the French Plan deprives them of their rights of "the most favored nation" guaranteed them under their commercial agreements with the Danubian States.

The plan in brief is the following: the five small states are to lower their tariffs with reference to each other by 10 percent or more maintaining at the same time the existing tariffs in regard to outside countries. The outside countries are to agree to a lowering of tariffs on the agricultural products of the Danubian States.

Germany also had a specific ground for her objection to the plan because under it, Czechoslovakia, an industrial country, is granted the privilege of a preferential tariff on her products which will afford her a possibility of eventually driving Germany out of the Danubian market.

Italy refused to support the French Plan because it would strengthen the French Little Entente in Central Europe. Thus the plan of Great Britain and France to "rescue" the Danubian states from disaster failed because of their own imperialist designs and that of other European powers.

The plight of the Danubian States, which grew out of the former Hapsburg Empire after the last World War is a result of the Versailles "Peace" Treaty, which divided up the old Austro-Hungarian Empire in small parcels, forced them into narrow national boundaries, as beasts in the cages of a Zoo, and compelled them to conduct their own economies independently on the basis of their meagre economic resources. The competition, tariffs and other national restrictions augmented by the various national historical controversies and mutual distrust, continually hindered the economic development of these countries and rendered them a toy in the hands of the imperialist powers. During the period of capitalist stabilization they managed with great difficulty and with the aid of loan from British, French and American banks to maintain their precarious existence. The crisis and the high interests on the loans, however, have finally led them to economic and financial bankruptcy.

The victims of the deplorable situation thus brought about are, of course, the broad masses of workers and peasants. Millions of unemployed and ruined peasants are doomed to starvation and suffering. The bourgeoisie of these countries are receiving the systematic aid of the big imperialist powers in all their plans of saving themselves at the expense of the broad masses and also crush every resistance against the terrible exploitation. The price that the bourgeoisie is requested to pay for that service is their consent to be utilized by the imperialists in their fight against the proletarian revolutions and the U. S. S. R.

Poland, Czechoslovakia and Rumania are virtual vassals of France and figure in all the schemes of French imperialism to provoke a war with the Soviet Union. The present scheme of France is to draw in the rest of the European countries into the Little Entente and augment her hegemony over the whole of Europe. Should she succeed in this scheme there will be created a monstrous power that will present the greatest danger to the existence of the Soviet Union.

About a year ago Germany attempted to establish a customs union with Austria which could eventually also include other European states. The late Aristide Briand employed his diplomatic talent and France's financial power to frustrate Germany's plan, and he succeeded. The French bourgeoisie envisaged in Germany's plan the danger to her hegemony and did not permit it to be carried out.

However, the interests of finance capital urgently require the adoption of a method by which to save the capitalist system in Europe. The narrow nationalist boundaries in which the small Danubian states are cramped in are a hindrance to their economic development which endangers the investments of the financiers and drives the peoples to revolt. They are consequently compelled to bring about some sort of a union among the small states in order to stimulate industry and commerce and save their investments. Their plans, however, are constantly clashing with their own contradictions, with the mutual rivalries and the strife for hegemony among the European powers. In each plan brought forward there brazenly protrudes the sinister aim of this or the other imperialist power to strengthen her hegemony over the other.

In the rivalry of the imperialists for "aiding" the impoverished small European countries there are revealed its true character of a conflict for hegemony, a conflict that recalls to memory the period preceding the last world war and which carries the germs of a similar outcome in a much more horrible shape, the danger of a world war of monstrous dimensions.

The Solution Lies in the Proletarian Revolution

The real solution to the plight of the peoples in the small European countries, lies in the hands of the European proletariat, in the direction of a proletarian revolution. Capitalism is unable to solve all the contradictions that have accumulated in the course of its development. Imperialism has brought ruin and bankruptcy to the broad masses and the small oppressed peoples. All its financial and diplomatic plans can only stave off the moment of its catastrophic collapse, but by no means, avoid it. The hour of the proletarian revolution has struck. Its beginning is on the order of the day in Europe, in Germany in the first line. The Communist Party of Germany is advancing the slogan of a Soviet Germany. What a Soviet Germany means for the whole of the European continent and particularly for the small European

The following speech was delivered several weeks ago in the Prussian parliament by comrade Oskar Seipold, speaking in the name of our German brother section the Left Opposition of the C. P. G. From the parliamentary tribune the spokesman of the Left Opposition hurled the challenge of united proletarian action against the hordes of Hitler, mercilessly exposing the bourgeois "democratic" politicians and the social democratic lackeys for the role they are playing in paving the road for Fascism.

Making concrete proposals of mobilizing the workers for a genuine struggle against the Nazi danger, he forces the reformists to show their true colors, thus pointing the way to an effective Communist policy and permitting the masses to judge between the Leninist tactic of the Left Opposition and the impotent confusionism of the Stalinists. In these tense days, when the whole world looks anxiously to the outcome of the historic struggle now going on in Germany, the speech of comrade Seipold deserves especial attention on the part of all class conscious workers.

Rep. Seipold (Left Opposition of the C. P. G.): The nations of the entire world and especially we in Germany, are at present living under such conditions, that every serious conversation turns directly to the questions of high politics and the questions of high politics—to that of the revolution. In the history of Parliamentarism, when it was still developing progressively and did not as yet fall into living decay, the question of the budget was always a question of high politics: Whoever has the key to the cash box, is the master of the household. When we pose the question of sovereignty in Prussia and Germany today, then we get as an answer that everything, budget and government, has at present only a temporary, unstable, provisional and hardly serious character. Budget and government are already waiting for an actual master of the household. But at present there are still administrators of the second rank in power. To be sure, administrators of capital! Least of all, is the Prussian government enduring, stable, serious in character. Prussia was at one time at the head of the Hohenzollern reaction; today it has become the tailend of the November revolution. Hitler is zealously sharpening his knife to cut off his tail. But he promises to do this with strict legality, to move within the framework of the Weimar constitution. You do not believe this? Then, you have not read the biography of the Corsican bandit who maintained in court, that he cut off the heads of his victims with such a diligent exactitude that he did not even disturb the circulation of the blood or their respiration. Hitler has undoubtedly learned his state surgery from this gentleman. Thirteen years ago, after the overthrow of the Hohenzollerns, the working class was factually master in the German household. The state based itself on the workers' and soldiers' councils. The bourgeoisie was forced to recognize the workers' and soldiers' councils for better or worse, as the fundament of the state. But the working class was lulled to sleep by the leaders of the S. P. G. and the key to the house was stolen away from underneath its rest cushion. In this manner, the proletariat was again sold out to the bourgeois and betrayed. The social democracy promised to bring about prosperity and socialism democratically, to open the road to the golden mean, Germany and the world were to flourish under the protection of the League of Nations. Today, in the Far East, we already hear the thunder of cannon, despite this "protection," despite this "League of Nations." How many other illusions this party has spread, this party which believes in Wilson and Briand, which can have confidence in Bruening and hope in a Wilson, but cannot trust to the power of the proletariat and remains hostile to the only revolutionary workers' state in the world, the Soviet Union! In 1918, the social democrats renounced the path of revolutionary force in the name of "pure democracy." And after that? They have in the name of all this prepared and abetted the path of Fascist reaction, of counterrevolutionary force. They rejected Lenin and sowed the seed for that hiring of capital, for Hitler. While the Fascist bandit is sharpening his knife to cut off the head of the German working class, the social democratic leaders insist emphatically, that everything will be in order. For they have raised all in the spirit of democracy, including Hitler. The Heidelberg Program expresses itself in a similar vein: that

In New York City the printers and the building trades are having their scales "adjusted." Intimations are made in no uncertain terms by the United States Steel Corporation directors that their several hundred thousand workers are due for another cut.

A few months ago the New York printing employers associations made a demand upon the allied trades for a 20 per cent reduction. Their contracts had not yet expired but this did not in the least deter the employers from calling upon their old friend Major Berry, President of the Pressman's Union. Major Berry came to their assistance, once again playing the role he has so often before played, namely to break the workers' ranks. In the name of the union he accepted a 7 per cent reduction for the pressmen. After that treacherous break the other unions began to follow suit: The mailers, the paper handlers, the cutters and the bookbinders similarly accepted cuts. Only the typographical union, the Big Six, is still holding out. It is holding out by virtue of the fact that the membership almost unanimously set themselves against the demand. But the officials, who, for the time being at least, had to pay heed to this decision, are trying to turn the tables in a different way. They are merely emphasizing the fact that the union contract does not expire until Sept. 31 this year, thus intimating that after that date the prospects of their following in the footsteps of Major Berry are likely to improve. That however, in the first instance depends upon how well the membership are able to prepare to frustrate it and to resist the attack.

Another Privileged Trade Hit

After the consistent barrage of the newspaper campaign, always holding up the building trades workers as a horrible example of "high pay and little work," the official wage reductions are beginning to keep step in city after city. Unofficially, of course, the level of actual wages paid has long ago been reduced. The employers undoubtedly know well enough that an official sanction for a reduction now will also make a further downward step in the actual level possible. In most of the larger cities the official reduction has already taken place; but there are no particular indications that even the season, which should now be at hand, will anywhere approach an absorption of the jobless builders.

Last week the New York Building Trades Employers Association broke off all parleys and sent the unions an ultimatum to accept a 20 to 35 per cent reduction. It was done by the simple process of posting notices. The reduction will involve some 115,000 workers. It is to take effect May 1, and is scheduled to run until December 31, 1933. In this manner the employers aim to also gain a more propitious time for expiration just prior to the beginning of the winter months. But it should not be forgotten that they do not at all propose to sign any kind of agreement, thus leaving themselves the option of decreasing further reductions whenever they see fit. Yet in this respect also, the calculations would still depend upon what the organized workers may have to say about it.

It is reported that the New York Building Trades Council, through President Falkett, has announced that it will resist. How much confidence can be placed in this announcement one may gather from the offer already previously made by the council to accept a 15 per cent reduction. And it becomes a good deal clearer by the observation that at this time no steps whatever have been taken for organizational preparation to resist.

Obviously, as far as the wage cutting campaign is concerned, there is today little distinction made between the organized and the unorganized workers. That this could become possible is, in the first instance, an expression of the advantage taken by the employers of the severe unemployment crisis. But it can also largely be ascribed to the complete failure of the present union leadership.

In view of what is happening to the Greek Opposition Holds Convention

ATHENS, GREECE—

Our National Congress took place in Athens on March 25-26. Forty-eight delegates were present from all Greece, representing 2,000 members. The Congress was preceded by 3 Regional Conferences (1) Macedonia & Thessaly district, (2) East Macedonia and West Thrace, (3) Athens, Peloponnesus & Islands. The national and international problems were discussed in the organization nuclei before the Congress and the conclusions arrived at will be published in Davlos, No. 3. (Theoretical Organ of the Greek Left Opposition).

The Congress took the opportunity of reviewing the long and hard history of our organization, the roots of which are found in the First Congress of the Socialist Labour Party (now C. P.) in 1918, through this long period up to now. The experiences accumulated will encourage us to continue on the path laid down by the forerunner of our organization, the "Communist Union" which formed the Left wing of the Congress of the S. L. P. in 1918, and whose ideas (the necessity of a homogeneous nucleus, the formation of cadres, the assimilation of Bolshevik experience, etc.) are forming the foundation upon which our organization rests. We feel certain that our Congress will be a landmark in the history of the revolutionary movement in Greece.

We are preparing a report on the Congress for the International Secretariat and for the national sections.

LETTERS FROM THE MILITANTS

Among the Unemployed

NEW YORK, N. Y.

The 826,000 persons, consisting almost entirely of workers and their families, who are completely dependent upon the various city relief organizations for their food and shelter, are about to learn once more the blessings of living in a capitalist society. This vast number does not include the thousands, who have been refused aid on one shabby pretext or another, nor does it include the tens of thousands of others, who have been patiently starving while their cases are being "investigated."

In the N. Y. Times of April 5th, Frank J. Taylor, Commissioner of Public Welfare, stated that the Home Relief Bureau, taking care of 125,000 families, would due to lack of funds immediately close fifty of its seventy-five precinct relief stations and that food allowances, averaging about four dollars a week per family, would be cut ten per cent. He admitted that this cut would compel those receiving this small amount to live on a very monotonous diet and that malnutrition, that is, starvation, and illness would be the result of it, affecting especially children.

In the same article it is stated that the daily outlay of $78,000 is to be cut to $30,000, which means that over half of those workers and their families now receiving aid will be refused further assistance. But this is by no means the complete story. The Times carried an article on Monday, April 11th, stating that the $32,500,000 which the city has been doling out since last fall, is practically exhausted and that unless further funds are raised all relief will come to a standstill on June 1st. $32,500,000 may seem to many an enormous sum of money, but it is less than the wages the millions of unemployed workers in this city would ordinarily earn in two weeks!

Touched by the misery of these "poor unfortunates" the Commissioner calls for an additional $20,000,000 to continue the "good work". But that the city has definitely decided to pass the buck is proven by the inauguration, some three weeks ago, of the "Block-Aiders". The plan of this organization is to collect money on each block in the city to support the unemployed living on that block, and by these means placing the burden directly upon those workers who still have jobs. While these workers whose wages have been cut in half are saddled with this huge task, the civic association, composed of bosses and property owners, are clamoring for a reduction in taxes and are demanding that the city reduce its expenses by cutting the relief appropriations and by firing large numbers of its employees. They are well aware that these measures will swell the ranks of the unemployed, but they are concerned only with their own profits.

That the workers, all of whom are faced with these prospects, have not in any considerable number begun to fight against them is evident. This is due primarily to the fact that the only party capable of leading them, the Communist Party of America by its false policies and inadequate slogans, has succeeded under Stalinist leadership only in cutting itself off almost entirely from the masses. That the working class of America as a whole is backward is well known, but the pressure of conditions, that is, unemployment, wage cuts and starvation cannot help but move them to action within the coming period.

Economic Crisis Continues to Deepen

The crisis is still deepening. It is enough to look at the latest Annalist (April 15) to find abundant evidence to that effect. The graphs show that pig iron and steel ingot production have fallen to new lows for the entire period since 1919. All the other indices of the country's production are likewise moving downward.

The expected spring upturn has proved to be another disappointment to the Babsons and the people who still swallow their stuff. The economic messianism of Ford took the form of a machine gun fusillade.

The purveyors of bourgeois optimism now restrict their hope to more qualified formulations than they used formerly. Thus the New York Times of April 18: "During the last week some officials expressed, with what has been described as 'cautious optimism', the view that the worst features of liquidation may be over and that a turn in the tide has come or soon will come, with a slow recovery from economic depression in this country." Expressions heard now are

DEBATE

On Friday, May 6th at 8 P. M. at the Labor Temple, the Spartacus Youth Club will debate the Young Peoples Socialist League on: Socialism vs. Communism. Can the Program of the Socialist Party Emancipate the American Worker? Comrades Glotzer and Ray will defend the Communist position. Frank Palmer of the Federated Press will be the chairman. Both sides are busy preparing.

From a Ford Worker

THE MASSACRE MODEL

The agencies and shops of the Ford Motor Co., on account of the low prices and low running expenses of the Ford cars, kept comparatively busy through the deepening depression. But it reached them, too. The shops became empty. Men were laid off. Dealers went bankrupt. The Ford Motor Co. kept silent. Dealers suffered nervous tensions. While the public was told at regular intervals that thousands of men were going back to work and prosperity, the dealers heard nothing. The Ford Motor Co. had a new car ready for the public. But in the low market it would have been merely another car. "It was scrapped." The Ford Co. pursued a policy of watchful waiting. Now it is ready to spring, the real thing. The curtain is lifting and with the V8, the Massacre Model, we behold a new phase of development of the capitalist system. The great advertising machine works better than ever before. While the big press is humming with the heroic attempt of Henry Ford to crank up the stalled machinery of production once more, the Ford dealers and their employers are rounded up and submitted to truly high pressure sales oratory. The high official of the Ford Motor Co. speaking at the roundup in Ohio treated his audience as so many children. He never once even touched the fundamental function of the capitalist system of production; the increasing number of all kinds of commodities produced by labor displacing machines, which less and less people are able to buy. No, the blame was put on the dealers and their employers. It is the failure to meet the customer with the right service smile sticking out of a brand new theater usher uniform. It is the failure to paint a white border around the floor 6 inch high and 6 inch wide, that caused the prospective customer not to rush in. There is nothing wrong with the country physically, it is all mental. "Worry kills, work thrills—now go to work and Spring is not far off." "To be sure there are hardships and suffering. There are employers who toss sleeplessly on their pillows trying to make things meet on pay day. But there are heroes among you who decline to lay off men, who look optimistically into the future. Be glad that you are still hanging on. We ought to have enough decency not to bite the hands that feed us (the speaker was hitting at the grumblings of the dealers). What would you do without the Ford Motor Co. providing jobs for you?" Here the writer broke the spell and made the mental note that the workers of America and the whole world will give the only reply to that question in the not too distant future. A reply that will startle the Fords and the Schwabs, the Rockefellers and the Morgans. The workers will give them a tremendous kick in the pants and take away from them the means of production and organize it on a different basis—production for use and not for private profits—will provide a job for every one wanting one.

All this while no hands are working on the V 8. The Massacre Model in small numbers is rushed from one showroom to another. The "thousands" of men are still waiting at this writing for the final word to start in (middle of March). It is a life and death question for the American workers to learn to understand the functions of this vicious capitalist system of ours and prepare for its destruction in order to make room for the new system of production. And don't let them kid you, if they yell "Communists", "Bolsheviks", "Reds".

Opposition Press Drive: May 1 - June 1

The final month of the Militant subscription drive has been incorporated in a campaign to secure the Left Opposition press. This campaign will open on the first of May and close on the first of June. Its objective is to build a solid foundation for our papers. Its central slogan is BUILD THE OPPOSITION PRESS. Its goal is $1,000. This is to be distributed as follows: 50% to The Militant; 30% to Unser Kampf; 10% to Communism; 10% to Young Spartacus. This division is exclusive of remittances made during this month for subs and bundle orders. These proceeds will be turned over to the proper organs without division but will be included in their totals.

Quotas have been assigned to the branches. They are: New York—$400; Minneapolis—$180; Chicago—$100; Toronto—$70; Boston—$40; Philadelphia—$40; Cleveland—$40; Newark—$35; Kansas City—$30; St. Louis—$25; Youngstown—$10; Los Angeles—$10; New Haven—$10; Montreal—$10.

If any branch is of the opinion that its financial ability has been underestimated in these quotas we will gladly raise its figure with appropriate self criticism. On the other hand nothing can persuade us that any quota should be lowered. Each week we will publish the quota and results attained by each branch for all to see.

These quotas can be realized by working along the lines already worked out and described below.

CAMPAIGN SCHEDULE

The first week of the campaign, May 1 to May 6 inclusive, is to be devoted to an organized distribution of recent back issues of our papers, and simultaneous and subsequent follow-up sales of current issues together with sales of our literature. The back numbers will be sent out simultaneously with this announcement. The branches should immediately inventory their stocks of literature, and if short, should order at once.

The second week of the campaign, May 8 to 14 inclusive, is to be devoted to collections. This should be a concentrated, organized drive. Everyone who has an iota of sympathy for the ideas and struggle of the Left Opposition should be ferreted out and asked to help with donations and pledges. All donations and pledges should be solicited for payment during the month. We are counting upon all our members and supporters to take collection boxes and work actively in this collection.

The third week, May 15 to May 22 inclusive, is to be devoted to a canvass for new subs, renewals, and bundle orders for news stands and bookstores. The organization in the second week of the campaign should be swung into line for this work. In this work the literature premiums, combined sub rates, the timeliness of comrade Trotsky's writings, especially on the German question, news stand posters, return privileges on bundle orders should be utilized to the utmost.

The fourth week, May 23 to May 30 inclusive, is to be devoted to the organization of affairs for the benefit of our press. These affairs can be either indoor entertainments in rented halls or private houses, or outdoor picnics, hikes; whatever conditions make easiest and most productive. If possible the affairs should be held during the week-end on May 28, 29, or 30 so that the entire League can wind up the campaign at the same time on a national scale.

Each branch should elect a committee to organize its share of the campaign work. The committee must report all results by air mail. The reports must be in the mail not later than noon on Monday following the close of the preceding week. This is necessary to make The Militant on time. All reports will be published in all our organs. All material necessary for the campaign will be supplied by the national office.

APPEAL TO SYMPATHIZERS

In cities where we have no branches we appeal to our readers and sympathizers to give us a concrete manifestation of their support by actively joining in the campaign. If they will write us immediately we will outline for them a plan we have already worked out.

All comrades should understand that with our extremely slender resources we are issuing four organs in three languages. The revolutionary movement has rarely witnessed a similar achievement. We are determined to continue, to go ahead as soon as possible. What we need at the present time is a sounder financial basis, an increase in our technical equipment, a wider circle of readers.

All three are, of course, inseparable. They can be achieved only simultaneously. That is why our campaign is organized along the lines described above. We are confident that whoever sees the problem this way will contribute his

MILITANT AFFAIR

On Saturday, April 30 at 8 P. M. the New York branch of the League will hold an affair at its headquarters, 84 East 10th Street, for the benefit of The Militant. This affair is being organized by the captains of The Militant subscription drive teams, comrades Crane and Bord. The entire proceeds of the affair will be turned over to The Militant. Admission is by ticket and is only 25c. Tickets can be purchased at the door by those comrades whom we fail to reach through the mail or otherwise. The unique feature of the affair is that everyone who pays for a ticket is entitled to an eight issue sub to The Militant for himself and a friend. Out-of-town branches please note, time and energy to—BUILD THE OPPOSITION PRESS.

Early this week comrade Coover reported nine subs to The Militant and three to Unser Kampf. This shot Minneapolis to the head of the list in the standing of the branches. And we were going to report it this way. But just as we were going to press New York crossed the tape with one sub, its long contribution for the week, and they were tied. At this rate Minneapolis will realize its intention of giving the New York branch a drubbing. The standing of the branches is as follows:

Minneapolis	33
New York	33
Chicago	8
Boston	4
St. Louis	1
Newark	1
Philadelphia	1
Montreal	1
Miscellaneous	18

This makes a total of 100 subs against 87 last week, an increase of 13. No new bundle orders are reported.

The situation in Minneapolis can be seen from comrade Coover's words: "The No. 1 Team (Myles Dunne, Capt.) totaled 3 1-2 points for the second week in April making that No. 1 Team's standing 28 1-4 points; while the No. 2 Team (Wm. Curran, Capt.) again increased their weekly total by getting 9 1-2 points, making their total 27 points. Not quite enough, however, to catch up with the No. 1 Team."

"Total points for the Minneapolis branch for April 13 stood at 55 1-4. The next two weeks are going to bring forth some keen competition between the rival teams as the team having the highest total on Wednesday, April 27 are to be the guests at an affair to be put on by the other team. League members and sympathizers should get their subs into the hands of one or the other of the team captains before April 27th."

What is there to say about this except—other branches please copy.

The New York branch is holding an affair for The Militant on April 30. It has a unique idea which can be copied profitably by the other branches. The admission price of 25 cents entitles the ticket holder or a friend to an 8 issue sub to The Militant. The affair is described elsewhere in this issue.

The staff of Militant Builders is growing. It now includes 25 comrades, an increase of four over last week. Minneapolis is more than ever its mainstay. The staff and its record follow: C. Cowl—5; A. Konikov—4; V. R. Dunne—4; F. Barach—4; L. Basky—3; C. Skoglund—3; M. Dunne—3; C. R. Hedlund—3; O. Coover—2; J. Carter—1; R. Ruskin—1; C. Forsen—1; H. Capellis—1; L. Roseland—1; R. Sacharow—1; S. Zalmanoff—1; W. Herman—1; A. Swacke—1; A. Glotzer—1; L. Logan—1; Kaldis—1; G. Ray—1; M. Sterling—1; W. Curran—1.

We expect that the press campaign will see this staff grow to many times its present size. The question now is—will Minneapolis have a pushover, or are the other branches going to wake up and give it a fight?

In addition to Trotsky's initial letter of October 8, the Central Committee received, on October 15, a letter signed by 46 of the most prominent Russian Bolsheviks, including Platakov, Preobrazhensky, Sosnovsky, Blabolodov, Sapronov, Muralov, Antonov, Kossior, Serebriakov, Rafael, Rosengoltz and others, which presented virtually the same criticisms and plan of action as were contained in Trotsky's letter. A short time later, Radek also added his voice to the others, even if more cautiously.

The Bureaucrats "Yield"

Under such a bombardment, the majority of the Political Bureau was compelled to act for fear that the wave of discontent would become so mighty as to sweep them away with it. A faint-hearted resolution on workers' democracy was drawn up which met with an instant rejection from Trotsky. Knowing that he represented to the full the hopes and aspirations of the great bulk of the party membership, and especially the masses of the youth who were chafing under the yoke of an arrogant apparatus, the Political Bureau majority was compelled to scrap its own resolution and appoint a commission resulted in the resolution being written essentially by his pen. Its final publication as a unanimous document on December 7 constituted a tremendous victory for the fight initiated by Trotsky.

Unfortunately, the victory was a short-lived one. It had been agreed in the Political Bureau, on Trotsky's proposal, that he would popularize the program of workers' democracy in the ranks, while the rest of the Political Bureau members would "restrain it from excesses from above". So overjoyed at the resolution were the party members, that the discussion in the ranks broke loose with a turbulence that indicated many months, and perhaps years, of pent-up sentiments. Even non-party workers followed the discussions with a keen interest. Pravda alone had to publish from 20 to 30 columns of discussions and motions each day. All questions were put and discussed freely and frankly. The popularity of Trotsky and those who had associated themselves with him, grew by leaps and bounds. Stalin, Zinoviev and Co., who had stood in the way as long as they could, came in for heavy criticism which boded them no great good.

Canadian miners

In the lignite coal mining industry of Saskatchewan another wedge has been dug into black layers of coal.

The developments are at present taking place in the southern portion of that Province, at Beinfalt and Estevan, the centre of the soft coal mining camps, controlled by British, American and Canadian capital. The town of Beinfalt is a typical company town of about 2,800 people, containing all the primitive conditions of civilization, wooden shacks, earthen streets, company stores, etc., and none of its amenities, as far as the miners are concerned. The bosses of this district are virulently against the workers organizing into unions of any kind and when, under the pressure of their conditions, the miners came out on strike under the banner of the Left wing Mine Workers' Union of Canada against their low wages and intensified rationalization, for an equitable distribution of work and the right to appoint their own checkweighman, the operators had their tools on the municipal council of the nearby town of Estevan, where the miners usually meet. Resolutions were railroaded through prohibiting the miners meeting in halls or parading through the streets, using this as a means to hinder the miners in their organization. It is also believed the U. M. W. A. gave the bosses their best advice on how to break a strike.

From the sparse reports received here, the union was successful in calling out a large proportion of the miners, who decided to hold a parade and demonstration in Estevan. It took place on September 29th, 1931. With the sympathy and support of the poor farmers of the district, the parade started off in 80 cars and trucks filled with miners and their families. Upon reaching the town they were met by a cordon of Royal Canadian Mounted Police armed with all the instruments of warfare; three of the trucks turned off the highway into the town, the occupants dismounted and the police came after them and arrested their leader, a miner. Their comrades in other trucks came down and proceeded to see what was the matter; the police, without warning, immediately opened fire on the defenseless men, women and children, who tried to defend themselves by throwing stones at the mounties. Three miners killed and a number injured. Peace, order and good government prevailed!

Six hours later, after the local authorities had been in telephone conversation with the provincial Attorney-General, warrants were issued for the arrest of all Left wing leaders in the district, no doubt at the instigation of the Section 98 Premier, Bennett. 25 miners were arrested, including three of their leaders and charged with "unlawful assembly, rioting, etc. al. The trials", which have been termed by defense counsel as "the great frame-up in the Province of Saskatchewan and the Dominion of Canada" have just concluded. Naturally, all were found guilty by the judge and jury; most of them were placed on bond or given short terms of imprisonment. A Builer, in charge of women's work, who was not even in the demonstration and to whom the jury recommended leniency, was sentenced to one year at hard labor plus a $500 fine; Sam Scarlett received one year plus $100 and I. Minister, two years at hard labor. The judge was especially vicious with those comrades who expressed their working-class sentiments openly in court. For instance, one J. McLean, a checkweighman, who incurred the hatred of the bosses, and whose crime consisted in refusing to cheat the miners, was about to be placed on suspended sentence, and the judge was expressing hypocritical solicitude from his sick wife. McLean informed the judge that his wife needed bread and not judicial sentiment—and McLean was given eight months at hard labor. These cases are being appealed.

The suffering of the miners in the West has made them militant, and sporadic strikes are still taking place. A call has been issued for a general strike, and under proper Left wing leadership this strike activity may be developed into homogeneous action. The miners in Canada and the U. S. A. are beginning to move, and may become the harbinger of the upward swing in the workers' struggles.

Information as to the exact economic influences in the coal industry in the West, the status of the miners, striking and non-striking, employed and unemployed, what role the reformists are playing there, and in general, the correlation of forces, is sadly lacking in the Party press here. Reports issued are merely of an informative and news character. The Estevan case has aroused intense feeling in the West. It should be made a national issue among the workers of the whole Dominion, and linked up with the general terrorism prevailing in Canada which was given the lead in Toronto with the outlawing of the Party and sentencing of eight of its leaders.

Wage Cut Drive

organized sections it is no surprise at all to learn of the announcement made by the President of the Board of Directors of the U. S. Steel Corporation that new wage reductions are under consideration. To be under consideration by this board usually means to become an unfulfilling reality, only the question of time being involved.

From the A. F. of L. Executive Council there have been many grandiose declarations for maintenance of the workers' purchasing power. Wage reductions mean the opposite. It should therefore be about time that the rank and file ask these gentlemen just how serious they mean their declaration. But it is yet more important for the rank and file to realize that nothing will stop this constant reduction of their standard of living except an effective fighting resistance.

It is this fact that created alarm in the ranks of the bureaucracy. In their secret factional meetings (as Zinoviev later revealed), it was decided to launch a campaign against Trotsky in order to discredit him and the Opposition, and thereby to strengthen the domination of the bureaucracy in the struggle against workers' democracy in the ranks.

The pretext for the campaign was a series of articles written by Trotsky, later collected under the title of "The New Course", in which he elucidated the whole situation with such a wealth of ideas, a Marxian clarity of thought, mastery of the historical dialectic and profundity of analysis as will make it for decades a model of classic revolutionary writing and a textbook for the Russian revolution.

Between the time of the sudden decision of the conspirators and the convocation of the 13th party congress a few weeks later (January 1924), the Russian party was treated to one of the most disgraceful and criminal spectacles known in the working class political movement. Without warning, without rhyme or reason, a thunderous barrage was laid down against "Trotskyism" and Trotsky. Out of the archives of the historical past was dragged the theory of the permanent revolution, its whole meaning deliberately distorted, transformed into an "underestimation of the peasantry" and a "skipping over stages" and the resulting caricature attributed to Trotsky.

The press, completely in the hands of the bureaucracy, began a concerted heavy drive to discredit Trotsky and the Opposition. White Guard lies spread during the civil war about Trotsky's "differences with Lenin on the peasant question", were not only revived, but officially incorporated in the indictment against Trotsky. Trotsky was falsely accused of "arousing the youth against the Old Guard". He was accused, again falsely, of standing for permanent factionalism in the party. And in every nucleus, using that very same system which Bucharin denounced so sharply in the speech we quoted above, under the lash of Zinoviev, Kamenev, Stalin and Bucharin, the members were compelled to vote condemnations of Trotsky. The various parties of the Comintern were ordered to endorse the "majority of the Old Guard" and to denounce Trotsky, in face of the fact that 99% of the Comintern membership had never seen the documents in question, had never read Trotsky's articles. This poisonous system of political discussion continued in later years until it ate into the very heart of the International. Voting by command, voting by faith, voting in ignorance and under bureaucratic compulsion—this was the despicable and self-destructive method used to get the "unanimous" denunciations of the Opposition.

Zinoviev's Revealing Admission
Two and a half years later, the whole tragic burlesque of the first "anti-Trotskyist" campaign was exposed by Zinoviev and Kamenev when they broke with Stalin. They revealed how the whole thing had been manufactured in secret, how "Trotskyism" had been invented for factional purposes. These two were the leaders, the main "teachers" in the struggle against "Trotskyism". The declaration signed by them in 1925 is therefore of fundamental and decisive importance for every revolutionist in estimating the 1923 struggle at its real value.

"At present, there can no longer be any doubt that the kernel of the 1923 Opposition was right in warning against the danger of abandoning the proletarian line and of the growth of the apparatus regime. Dozens and hundreds of leaders of the 1923 Opposition are, to this day, kept away from work in the party and there are among them old worker-Bolsheviks, tempered in the struggle, strangers to careerism and arrivism, in spite of the discipline and endurance which they have manifested."

Due to the exceptional importance and interest of the events now taking place there, we are devoting the International Page of the present issue to the situation in Germany. Directly below, we are publishing the Appeal of the German Left Opposition to the Congress of the Socialist Labor Party (S. A. P.—Sozialistische Arbeiter Partei), the new Centrist party under the leadership of Left wing social democrats who were recently expelled from the reformist S. P. G.—Ed.

To the members of the S. P. G. (Socialist Labor Party of Germany) and of the S. J. V. (Youth Section).

To the delegates of the Party Conference.

Only a few months after the formation of your organization there takes place the congress of your party. We turn to you on this occasion to direct your attention in comradely fashion to those problems set on the order of the day by the present situation.

The formation of the S. A. P. reflects the deep crisis of the capitalist economic system on the one hand, on the other, the class betrayal of the social democracy and also the grave political errors of the leadership of the Communist Party of Germany. These three factors determine also the basis of existence of your party. The deep economic crisis and the enormous sharpening of the class struggle bound therewith do not permit for any length of time the existence of a party vacillating between reformism and Communism. The complete bankruptcy of reformism, the now open betrayal of the S. P. G. and the Second International in the ranks of the social democratic workers to the point of breaking with reformism.

As a result of your incorrect appraisal of the Communist party you have not succeeded in introducing clarity as to the revolutionary way out but, on the contrary, have only arrived at a stage of considerable ideological confusion in the ranks of your own party concerning the fundamental problems of the revolutionary movement.

Only when you achieve full clarity concerning these fundamental questions will you be capable of leading your members and sympathizers along the right road—along the road of the proletarian revolution.

On this ground we consider it our duty to present to you our view on these questions in dispute and to call your attention to the dangerous consequences of your incorrect understanding of these important fundamental questions.

Struggle against Pacifism!

Please tell us, comrades of the S. A. P. if you want to make a revolutionary Communist party out of the S. A. P., how can you then permit in the pages of your newspaper the rottenest kind of pacifism? For example, the S. A. P. organ of the 7th of February contains profound speculations as to whether the plan of the French imperialists is a "work of peace" and concludes by calling it "the only constructive plan". On the 8th of March, Kleinest not only dedicates a most respectful notice to the memory of the renegade Briand, under whose administration (in France) the largest number of striking workers were shot down, but even declares concerning his Pan-European idea that "it reveals indeed that far-reaching socialistic tendency which bears in itself to a large extent the idea of organized economy."

This is the same "socialistic tendency" which the social democratic leader and later editor of the D. A. Z., Paul Lensech, had already discovered in war economy. If the whole of pacifism is nothing but a bourgeois fraud perpetrated on the working class, then this special sort of pacifism, irrespective of the motives which give rise to it, is clearly the work of agents of French imperialism. Comrades of the S. A. P., how can you tolerate such ideas?

To the nationalist idea of defeated German imperialism the revolutionary proletariat opposes not a nationalist "liberation program" and certainly not the idea of a "united" Europe under the hegemony of the French bourgeoisie, but the idea of the Soviet United States of Europe.

The pacifistic conception is in no way the monopoly of Kleinest. You all know that Kuenter's group is not better by a hair, yes, you must make clear to yourself that the centrist leadership of Seydewitz-Rosenfeld represents the same point of view in spite of all radical phrases. That is clear from their behaviour in the Reichstag when they voted against the proposal of the C. P. G. (in their opinion national-Communist) to withdraw from the League of Nations.

*Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung—reactionary newspaper.

Besides, pacifism in the S. A. P. has its special meaning. Since reformism does not dare openly to enter the field of internal politics in the present situation, it betakes itself to the field of external politics where it intends to hide its face better from the workers.

The revolutionary workers have nothing in common with the renegade Briand and with the imperialist Tardieu. It is a violation of revolutionary thought to swear in the same newspaper by Briand, Leon Blum, Paul Faure, Paul Levi and by Liebknecht and Lenin.

If you want to make a revolutionary party out of the S. A. P. you will draw the conclusion that membership in it is incompatible with Brandism and pacifism. There can be compromise between bourgeois pacifism and revolutionary internationalism.

Does the "Declaration of Principles" Create Clarity?

In so far as the S. A. P. separates itself from the S. P. G. and the Second International in its "Declaration of Principles" and recognizes the dictatorship of the proletariat it takes a step forward. But in so far as it wishes to establish its position toward the C. P. G. and the C. I. it does not go beyond general, unprecise formulas. In this respect it undoubtedly reflects the centrist conceptions which are hidden behind general formulas and even openly avoids the revolutionary terminology used in the entire Marxist-Leninist literature. Just one example of this. After it is stated correctly in paragraph 3, part 2, why the proletariat must destroy the bourgeois state and build its own, it is stated in paragraph 4 that this is the expression of the revolutionary dictatorship of the proletariat. Why not "the state form of the victorious proletariat" is the dictatorship of the proletariat", etc.? Do not somehow the conceptions Kautsky-Bauer hide behind these formulations? It must be said clearly that the dictatorship is irreconcilable with every form of bourgeois democracy. The core of the entire declaration doubtless is contained in the following paragraphs 9, 10 and 11. They present the necessity for and the role of the S. A. P., neither more nor less, in relation to the S. P. G. and the C. P. G. In paragraph 9 their unbridgeable difference from the S. P. G. and the Second International is set down and the winning of social democratic workers to a revolutionary policy is given as the important task. In paragraph 10 it is set forth that the Communist party and the C. I. showed themselves unable to give leadership to the proletarian masses in the revolutionary crisis and that the organizational system of the C. I., as it has developed itself, makes the regeneration of the revolutionary workers movement difficult. We must affirm that both in freeing of the S. P. G. workers from reformism and in winning of C. P. G. workers, the S. A. P. has proved unsuccessful until now. Why? Have you given thought to this?

You could not win S. P. G. workers because you yourselves are not fully clear as to the way out of this frightful situation for the working class. On the one hand you have contempt for the League of Nations, on the other hand you vote against the C. P. G. proposal for withdrawal from the League; on the one hand a clear front against French imperialism, on the other, words of praise for one of its most subtle representatives, Briand; on the one hand recognition of the dictatorship of the proletariat, on the other visible currents for the "overcoming" of capitalism by democratic means. With such ideological confusion a S. P. G. worker cannot be won for the revolution. And how does it look with the winning over of the C. P. G. worker? "Inability of the C. P. G. and the C. I." "Organizational system of the C. I." It is impossible to win over the Communist workers with such general and hazy slogans. The Communist workers have fought reformism for some time, even when Seydewitz-Rosenfeld, "for the sake of discipline", were covering up all the betrayals of reformism. It is not sufficient therefore to be correct on a few separate tactical questions as against the C. P. G. but it is incumbent on the S. A. P. to explain fundamentally what separates it from the C. I., if the differences are mainly merely of a tactical and organizational nature, why then a new party? Why not concentrate all forces for the reform of the C. I.? Why not support the Left wing of the Comintern and the C. P. G. in its struggle to reform the C. I.? These questions must be answered clearly and unequivocally.

It is not accidental that the weightiest part of your "Declaration of Principles" is also the weakest and the most general in form. Here you must show clearly what you want!

Socialism in One Country or Revolutionary Internationalism?

Opposed to the centrists in control of the S. A. P. stands a Left wing. Unfortunately clarity could not develop there, indeed at times the will for it was lacking.

The clearest document of the Left wing S. A. P.—comrades is the declaration of Rueck-Duby-Schaber. This document repeats the most mistakes of Stalinist centrism in the international, especially Russian, questions. It separates itself from Stalin, exactly like Brandler-Thalheimer do only on German questions of second rate importance.

The shameful end of the Brandler group has made clear that without clarity in international questions neither a revolutionary organization nor a revolutionary line can endure.

In contradiction to this we consider it our duty to present several fundamental considerations. Although the limits of this document do not allow us a complete presentation of all the important questions of Comintern policies, we find it necessary to take up the decisive experiences of the last 9 years.

The leading role of the Communist party of the Soviet Union in the Comintern arose because of the victory of the proletarian revolution in the S. U. through which the Communist Party of the S. U. became the only party in the C. I. which assembled the tremendous experiences of a great revolution. From these experiences the young Communist parties should have learned and made their own the strategy and tactics of the struggle for the conquest of power of the proletariat. As long as the Communist Party of the S. U. pursued a policy based on the experiences of the proletarian revolution, the leading role of this party exerted a positive influence on all sections of the C. I. That was the period in which Lenin and Trotsky stood at the head of the C. I.

Through the introduction of the N. E. P. in 1921 in the S. U. which was made necessary by the failure of the European revolution to materialize, there began a strengthening of the bureaucracy in the Soviet Union. Simultaneously with this process went on the process of gathering the revolutionary proletariat of Europe for the decisive battles facing them. In the middle of 1923 the C. I. had to undergo tests of momentous historic significance.

In Bulgaria the Communist party was confronted with the task of leading the Bulgarian proletariat and the village poor to victory by utilizing the differences between the Stambulsky regime, the representative of the rich farmers, and the Fascist party under the leadership of Zankov, the representative of finance capital. The leadership of the C. I. and of the Bulgarian party refused to take advantage of the differences between the Stambulsky regime and Zankov, they maintained neutrality as they were of the opinion that democracy and dictatorship were one and the same. This political stand led to the victory of the Fascist dictatorship in Bulgaria. The result was the destruction of over twenty thousand revolutionary workers and peasants.

In Germany in 1923 the situation was extremely tense. It demanded imperatively a revolutionary solution. The Communist party at that time became a mass party not only by its numerical strength but by its extra-parliamentary influence. The masses looked toward the C. P. G. awaited from it the solution. At that time not only Brandler and Thalheimer but the entire Comintern leadership failed it. Characteristic for that situation is the fact that Stalin demanded from the German Communist Party the restraining of the armed uprising, while Trotsky demanded the immediate organization of the uprising. The German defeat of 1923 signaled the danger which can be characterized as the crisis of revolutionary leadership on the eve of the transition to armed uprising.

The new defeats on the international arena, after the proletarian revolution in Europe previously had failed to appear, led to a further strengthening of capitalist elements and the bureaucracy in the S. U. From this moment on begins that process in the C. P. G. of S. U. which finds its expression in the negation of the international character of the Russian revolution and in the development of the theory of "socialism in one country".

These theories led first in the years 1923-1928 to the policy of building socialism in one country with the help of the kulak, the rich peasant, in the course of which the Left Opposition under the leadership of Trotsky were condemned and persecuted on account of their demand for industrialization and collectivization. This theory was relinquished in 1928, when under pressure of objective difficulties and the criticism of the Left Opposition, Stalin turned to the ultra-left course of bureaucratic tempos for the reconstruction of economy without any consideration of the objective and subjective possibilities.

The theory of socialism in one country is a reactionary theory which contradicts the foundations of Marxism-Leninism. The present weakness of the C. I. can be explained only by this theory. The following quotation shows how far this theory is removed from Lenin's conceptions. Stalin says (Pravda, No. 28 of Nov. 12, 1926):

"The difference of opinion consists in this, that the party considers it possible to overcome fully and completely the inner contradictions and possible conflicts by the inner power of the revolution itself, while comrade Trotsky and the opposition believe that these contradictions and conflicts can be solved only on the arena of the international proletarian revolution."

Lenin says on this subject:

"Poor Russia will become rich when it throws aside every misgiving, every phrase, when it grinds its teeth, gathers its strength, strains all its nerves and muscles and grasps that the salvation is possible only on the road of the international socialist revolution along which we are already marching" (Lenin, Vol. 15, page 165). "We have always declared and repeated that old Marxian truth that for the victory of socialism the combined efforts of the working class of several advanced countries are needed" (The Infantile Disease of Leftism).

How far removed are these conceptions of Lenin from the hymns of victory of Stalin and Molotov at the 17th party conference over the beginnings of a classless society in the S. U. This is the sharp difference between national Communism and revolutionary internationalism.

democracy is humanizing the enemies of the working class. Now, you can rest assured: when Hitler lets your head roll, then you can assume with certainty, your political integrity will have very little left to lose by this operation. Hitler's announcements are calculated for blockheads and have the interests of scoundrels and fakers at heart. The growth of the Hitler party unfortunately proves that stupidity in the German nation is not yet rare. But Hitler is miscalculating when he believes that he will be able to deceive the German working class as Wels, Hilferding and company have. In 1918 Herr Hilferding attempted to coordinate the Weimar constitution with the workers' councils. In 1932 he is no doubt racking his brain over how it is possible to conciliate the tailend of the Weimar constitution with the Fascist armories. But Herr Hilferding may have to conclude this theme in the emigration, if the outcome of events is to depend upon the leadership of the social democracy. His fate would be that of the Italian social democrats, who also fought against the methods of Bolshevism so long until they played the Italian proletariat and the Italian people into the hands of the hangman Mussolini.

A Communist deputy said in the Reichstag: "We do not fear the Nazis. For when they come to power, they will very soon exhaust themselves". Comrades, Communists, that is a fundamentally wrong point of view. For, we must not wait. We must not consider the seizure of power by the Nazis as a simple test for Hitler. That may be the point of view of the bourgeois democrats. But it is in no case a Communist point of view. Power in the hands of the Nazis would mean jail for the working class, the gallows for its vanguard, Golgotha for the producing people. (Rep. Kasper—C. P. G.: But who said that?)—Remembered, on October 15, I believe, but we can look that up—We must gather the working class for struggle before Hitler's dream of a Third Empire has become a reality. We must unite the working class in a single united front.

(Intervention from the Communist benches: And that is why you wiped the mandate from us!)

I am utilizing my mandate in the interests of the proletarian revolution. But this united front cannot be decreed in advance, by saying to the non-Communist workers: Come to us, recognize us as your leaders, then we will create the united front with you! You can only get the leadership by gaining the confidence of the German proletariat in the dynamics of the struggle. Lenin said: Without confidence, there can be no hegemony and the Communist party should and must become the hegemon (leader) of the working class. But whoever says: We do not fear the Nazis, let them come to power—is already to fear frightened to death by them, is scared to the marrow of his bones; his heart is in his boots; he draws the conclusion that it is no longer possible to prevent the Nazis from seizing power and is consequently ready for a capitulation before Hitler without a struggle. (Shouts from the Communist benches)

—We shall discuss elsewhere as to how far you have got with your policy of the Red Trade Union Opposition, the "Red" United Front, the "national and social liberation". Just to what extent you have already proved sufficiently and will prove even more clearly in the future.

But this capitulation, this belief that the victory of Fascism can no longer be avoided, is concealed under false optimism, on the grounds of an inevitable and self-understood bankruptcy of the Nazis. Naturally, everything on earth ends at some time. Even the domination of the hangman Mussolini will have to come to an end and the end of the Czarist power could be foreseen many years ahead of the time. But that does not change the fact that two revolutions were necessary to defeat Czarism and that in the meantime Czarism succeeded in plunging the entire Russian people into an imperialist war. We say to the false optimists who console us with the coming bankruptcy of the "Third Reich": Do not dare lull the German proletariat to sleep! Do not chloroform it with sweet promises, do not dare undermine its will power—now, when the will to struggle is the first and foremost condition of victory!

(Laughter among the Communists)

We are not for "national and social liberation" as you are. We revolutionary Marxists know that as long as the people is divided into classes, every conception has a class content. When social democratic workers often say: Yes, we are for democracy, but for a pure democracy, they also forget that in a class society, democracy can only be a class concept. We Bolshevik-Leninists have no illusions and will not allow anyone to put any illusions over on us. What a horrible historical catastrophe it would be for the world proletariat, if the Nazis were to come into power in Germany! Once come into power, Hitler could only become the executioner of the German proletariat and the agent of French, British and American capitalism. And the war for "social and national liberation" which Hitler would conduct, could only be turned against the East and not against the West. That does not mean at all, against Poland. For Hitler and Pilsudski can very easily find common ground against the Soviet Union. To allow Hitler to get into power would mean betrayal against the first workers' state in the world, against the Soviet Union. And that means, to betray ourselves doubly.

No, the working class of Germany does not want Hitler to study his state surgery on its neck, nor on its body. We must not wait until Hitler's power falls into bankruptcy. We must throw Hitler overboard, before his dream has become a reality.

(Very true! from the benches of the social democratic party.—Intervention from among the Communists: Who is "we"?—We, the Left Opposition of the C. P. G., even though we are not for the "national and social liberation of the German people" as you are, but for the proletarian revolution.

(Hear, Hear!—from the Communists) because we know in the capitalist world the "people" is divided into classes. Friedrich Engels said: After the working class has conquered power, it will dictate the laws itself and in such a manner, that the capitalist class will disappear and become alike to the others. To that extent, to which the capitalist class will disappear, the proletariat also will dissolve itself because it will have no more classes against itself and the intervention of the proletarian state will become ever more superfluous, first in one sphere and then in another, until the state will wither away of itself.

Now, the Vorwaerts of March 15 writes in an editorial that hails from Paul Loebe:

"The first blow: 'Onward, Iron Front!' The Iron Front has stood its first political test splendidly. It has done its share to spoil the 'day of certain victory' for the knights of the swastika."

It is ridiculous to believe that the fate of the German people can be decided by parliamentary elections, or that the decision will be arrived at according to the parliamentary calendar. The fate of the German people will be decided by steel and lead. Only blind men or people who purposely close their eyes can believe that the problem of the fate of the German people can be decided by some sort of parliamentary elections—be they Presidential, Reichstag or Landtag elections. Hitler's assurances of legality are nothing more than a thin veil of cunning, with which he means to cover his plans. Bruening's speeches against Fascism are not worth a Pfennig more than Hitler's oaths of legality. All are gliding along the ether of neutrality. But statesmen have never lied so much as they have since the time that the radio was put at their disposal. The fate of the German people will not be decided by speeches, but as I have already said, by the open struggle of the classes with steel and lead. For it is toward this road that the Fascists are advancing and the working class must know this. The working class must fight mercilessly against all lies that attempt to soothe, against all illusions that attempt to lull them to sleep, no matter from what source. In order to be able to fight against Fascism effectively, it is necessary to unite the factories, the shops, the working class quarters, the millions of unemployed within a single front, with the aim of throwing back the watch-dog of capitalism, the Fascists. For when the watch-dogs are beaten down, the master is in danger. The workers have no time to lose, they must organize themselves for defense, for struggle, for attack and for victory. Hitler intends to militarize Germany in the interests of capital. The German proletariat will show him that it is only willing to be militarized in the interests of the proletarian revolution. Against Fascism, which we consider the last stake of capitalism, we revolutionary workers, we Leninist-Bolsheviks will fight in the foremost front with our brother workers as the vanguard of the revolution. The Fascist wave will and must smash up on the granite of the proletarian forces. When the capitalist class of Germany, which has become involved in its own contradictions and crimes, will push Hitler on the road to the overthrow, we shall take up the challenge in full preparedness. We shall say: Capitalism has wanted this; very well, we will raise our hand to its throat, our knee to its breast!

(Intervention by Rep. Paul Hoffman)—Yes, you are good "theoreticians", we have seen that repeatedly from your tactics, from your "United Front" only "under our leadership". You demand leadership a priori, because you are not sure whether you can win it. This is what Platnitsky also said at the XI Plenum of the E. C. C. I.: "The German Communists have committed a mistake by issuing the slogan 'No Social Fascists in the Strike Leadership' during the metal workers' strike. That was not quite correct."

(Rep. Paul Hoffman: Quite correct!)—That was not quite correct, says Platnitsky.

(Rep. Paul Hoffman: That was quite correct!)

—In our opinion it was altogether wrong, in yours it was quite correct. In Platnitsky's opinion it was "not quite" correct. And why was it wrong in our opinion? If there are 50 Communists and 150 or 250 social democrats in a factory, then you can of course, manage to build some sort of "strike leadership" in which the Communists will have a "majority". But this strike leadership has no real basis, it is a fictitious structure and can never reflect the actual desire for struggle in the factory. In this manner, you remain up in the air with your centrist tactics. . . . In this manner you have isolated the party of the proletariat.

(Laughter among the Communists) And all this at a time in which all the objective premises are favorable for the Communist party.

On the State Budget

Your budget does not in the slightest degree give expression to the actual tasks and requirements of the country. Your budget is constructed in such a way, as if everything were "normal". If the Prussian government were thinking seriously of fighting against Fascism, then that would be expressed in the budget, but there is not even an inkling of that in it. Who can offer resistance to Fascism?

(Shout from the Communists: You!)—These shouts are worth as much as the shooters. Neither the police nor the Reich's army, but only and solely the working class. Therefore we must aid in this aim, to organize and to arm it. Only in this manner can the question of a serious struggle against National Socialism be posed. Among the workers there are many who have served as soldiers, but the youth which has not yet learned to handle weapons, is the most numerous section. The opportunity must be created to train the young workers in handling weapons. It must be decreed: In the factories, one hour a day is to be devoted to military training. One day in the week street training and field maneuvers are to be held.

(Rep. Kasper—C. P. G.: Who is to decree this?)

—Patience. I will also speak about that. The unemployed are to train with the workers in the factories, in which they have formerly been employed; special supplementary training can also be provided for the unemployed. For this purpose, a sufficient amount of weapons must be put at the disposal of the workers. The costs of the weapons and the training must be borne by the state. The government of the social democrat Braun will not by far attempt to do anything of the sort, for it would be a misdemeanor from the point of view of the high art of the state or that of proper parliamentary etiquette, and against the obedient devotion to the bourgeoisie. No that cannot be demanded from the great men of the S. P. G., whose aim in life it is to ape the bourgeois statesmen and to betray the interests of the proletariat.

(Disorder in the House)

But only in this way can it be proved by documents that the speeches of the ministers are a hollow sham.

Now on the Press!

Problems of the Chinese Revolution

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE 1925-1927 CHINESE REVOLUTION?
WHY WAS THE SITUATION LOST BY THE PROLETARIAT?
WHAT IS HAPPENING IN CHINA NOW?
WHAT SHOULD THE COMMUNISTS DO?

These questions and many more are posed and answered in this book. In Trotsky's own words: "The lessons and problems in the strategy and tactics of the Chinese Revolution constitute at the present time the greatest teaching for the international proletariat."

Statement on the Situation in the International Left Opposition

The National Committee, having considered and discussed the most important parts of the material bearing on the present situation in the International Left Opposition, and the French section in particular, has come to the following conclusions:

1. The most important feature in the internal life of the International Opposition in the past two years, has been the struggle to free the movement from the influence of alien elements who paralyzed its activities by sterile intrigues, distorted its principles in practical application and hampered its development as the guiding force of the proletarian vanguard. We are and have been fully convinced of the progressive and revolutionary quality of the struggle for these ends which has been led by comrade Trotsky. It has been an unavoidable and necessary stage in the preparation of the International Left Opposition to fulfill its great historic tasks. The National Committee is in full solidarity with the estimate of this struggle and the perspectives of the International Left Opposition outlined in the circular letter of comrade Trotsky under date of December 22, 1931.

2. The correctness and necessity of this struggle to purge the movement of alien elements is demonstrated, among other things, by the positive results in the German section after the liquidation of the worthless intrigues of Landau and the freeing of the section for its actual revolutionary tasks. The leadership of the German section, which has taken shape in the struggle against Landau and his sterile factional regime, must be given all possible international assistance and support in its tremendous responsibilities and opportunities. The necessity of the struggle for internal renovation is shown with no less force—although in a negative manner—by the present state of affairs in France. The demoralization there ensues directly from the fact that the two-year struggle has not been brought to a conclusion.

3. In our opinion the present situation in the French League—which ought to be a matter of grave concern to the entire International Opposition—is not a new one. We regard it rather as the rear-end of the struggle to clear the section of the influence of unassimilable and careerist elements, which has been unduly prolonged. The task there, as we see it, is not to seek a solution of the crisis from the standpoint of the episodic questions and differences. This only blurs the real issue. What is necessary is a decisive course toward the liquidation of the crisis.

needle trades situation, beginning with the International.

It goes without saying that this formulation of the slogan of unity has nothing in common with the liquidationist program of the Lovestonesites. The Left wing suffered a defeat in its major undertaking to replace the reactionary union with another one. That must be frankly acknowledged. But it still retains its basic nucleus of the most reliable and tested militants. It still remains an organized force. This force must be kept intact and demand reincorporation into the International as a fighting unit. This should be the line of its fight, not a capitulation and the individual re-entry of its members into the International on the terms of Schlesinger. The masses will support this proposition, including those inside the International at present and thousands who are standing aside from both unions, discouraged and waiting for some new turn in the situation.

But, Foster and Browder will answer, Schlesinger and his black-and-yellow gang will not agree to this proposal. The slogan of unity, as the Communists present it, is not designed to meet the approval of the labor fakery but to facilitate the struggle of the workers against them. The new campaign for unity, along the lines we have suggested will start the re-organization of the workers around the banner of the Left wing. The Left wing will rise again as the authentic spokesman of the masses. On this basis the genuine unification of the needle trade workers struggle will take place, with or without the wishes of the socialist betrayers.

tion of the crisis by a firm stand against the representatives of the disintegrating tendencies. Among these we count the leaders of the Jewish group, and we particularly condemn their attempt to set up a nationality group as a faction within the League and their resignation from the National Committee in the name of such a group. Such methods and practices are incompatible with Communist organization. No less harmful, in the drawn-out internal crisis of the League, have been the ambiguous and diplomatic maneuvers of Naville, against which we have recorded ourselves in our previous resolution. In our opinion it is most necessary for the French League to bring the internal controversy to a conclusion, to draw clear and precise lines and make a selection on that basis.

4. The proposal of comrade Trotsky for the reorganization of the International Secretariat, by constituting it out of representatives of the most important sections who will be responsible to their sections, is the most feasible plan under the circumstances. As the experience of the past few years has shown, the International Opposition has not yet developed to the point where a secretariat based on the selection of persons—free from accountability to the respective sections—could fulfill the office. The Secretariat must become a responsible body standing above the intrigues and helping to liquidate them. We are of the opinion that comrade Mill misused the office of International Secretary and erred fatally by identifying himself with the factional struggle in the French League against the leadership. Thereby he helped to negate the whole progressive struggle against Landau-Naville-Rosmer and, at the same time, undermined the authority and discredited the International Secretariat. The reorganization of the Secretariat as a responsible body will help to shield it against such a fate by rendering it less susceptible to personal moods and vacillations.

5. The difficulties of distance, etc., make a timely and effective participation of the American League in the internal questions of the European sections extremely difficult, and preclude altogether any pretensions on our part to play a leading role in their solution. We must not undertake that. Nevertheless we consider it desirable to participate more directly in the work of the International Secretariat through an elected representative and the National Committee will propose to select such a representative of the American League as soon as possible. It is necessary to acknowledge a slackness in our international activities and duties, the nature of which and its basic causes have been accurately described in comrade Trotsky's circular letter. In order for our League to be useful in the solution of the internal problems of the European sections, and to educate itself in internationalism in the process, it must firmly organize a collective participation. The National Committee as a whole must familiarize itself with the international questions and bring a collective judgment to bear upon them. The most important material must be translated and supplied to the League membership for information and discussion. The progressive elements in all sections, which are struggling for the liquidation of circle psychology, sterile intellectualism and worthless factional intrigues, and for the consolidation of genuinely revolutionary cadres, must be assured at every step that they have a conscious and resolute ally in the American League.

Failure of Danube Union

countries is needless to state. The situation in all countries is bound to change radically in the event of a victorious proletarian revolution in Germany. It is one of the by no means small tasks of the proletarian revolution to come to the aid of the small nations with a clear program for solving their vital and pressing problems. The Comintern and the German Communist Party, however, completely ignore the international situation and advance no slogan outside of the general slogan of a Soviet Germany and the abstract slogan of "Defend the Soviet Union". The fact that Hitler is successfully exploiting the existing situation in Europe and reacting on it in his propaganda deserves to be mentioned. There can be no doubt that the German delegation to the London Conference on the question of the Danubian countries was compelled to take a position of defiance towards France under the pressure of Hitler's propaganda. Has the German Communist Party made clear the Communist position on this question to the broad masses in Germany and the rest of the European countries?

The Slogan of a Soviet United States of Europe

In the year of 1923, at the time of the occupation of the Ruhr and the resulting revolutionary situation in Germany the Comintern under the pressure of comrade Trotsky adopted the slogan of a Soviet United States of Europe. But the leadership had nevertheless remained hostile to it. Later it entirely abandoned it on the ground that, in Stalin's declaration, it was impossible to foresee whether it would be necessary to apply the slogan of the United States of Europe after the proletarian revolution. Subsequently the slogan of a Soviet United States of Europe had been declared "Trotskyism" and bitterly attacked by the Comintern leadership. But this slogan has been and is today more than ever of vital importance to the European proletariat because it flows from the very character of the present epoch of the economic development.

The main characteristic feature of the present epoch is the international scale of the productive forces which come into conflict with and are breaking through the national boundaries. Hence, the national conflicts and the imperialism which oppresses and strangles the small nations. The last world war was a direct result of the above process of the development of the productive forces. Since the world war this process has greatly increased, and the contradictions of capitalism with it. Socialism which is progressive and must base itself on a higher development of the productive forces, surely cannot be driven into the framework of national boundaries. On the contrary, the international character of the productive forces under socialism will greatly increase. Socialism will spread itself over the face of the whole world. There is where it derives its international character and on which is based the slogan of a Soviet United States of Europe.

"The term: The Soviet United States of Europe expresses the idea that socialism is impossible in a single country. It cannot even attain its full development within the limits of a continent. The Socialist United States of Europe represents a stage of a historical slogan on the road to the Socialist World Federation." Leon Trotsky, The Militant, Dec. 7, 1929.

The present leadership of the Comintern, naturally, cannot adopt this slogan because it contradicts Stalin's theory of "socialism in one country." This false theory is the main source of all tactical mistakes and its bankruptcy in problems of the greatest importance to the international proletariat.

Execution of Scottsboro Boys Stayed

Two developments in the Scottsboro case within the past week testify to the protest it has aroused in the working class. The execution has been stayed to June 24 upon the appeal of the I. L. D. to the U. S. Supreme Court. No doubt the bourgeois tiger still feels that its prey is secure. It feels that it can afford this small concession and expects that its judicial superior will confirm its finding.

The State Department has applied to the Governor for information about the case for transmission to U. S. consulates abroad. Unquestionably this is a reaction to the working class pressure abroad being brought to bear on the diplomatic representatives of dollar imperialism.

In the consciousness of the international working class the memories of the Sacco-Vanzetti and Mooney cases are still green. They do not need legal proofs of the innocence of the Scottsboro boys. The American frame-up system is familiar to them. In this case they see another attack on the international working class.

And they are protesting. They hold meetings and send cables of protest. The mother of one of the boys, Mrs. Wright, will tour Germany under the auspices of the International Red Aid to speak for all nine of the boys.

Will the U. S. Supreme Court confirm the decision of the Alabama Supreme Court? It may. It may reserve it. One thing is sure. Only an aroused working class movement can save these nine members of our class. Between now and June 24 the time is short. The small concessions the capitalist class has yielded must be a stimulus to yet greater activity.

Our protest must be organized. Of this there is yet little sign. The I. L. D. is not doing it. The C. P. is not doing it. They limit themselves to calls for demonstrations in the Communist press.

This is not sufficient. Only a comparatively small number of workers read the Communist press. Only a small number respond to the party's calls. The overwhelming bulk of the working class is still non-Communist. It must be approached thru the press it reads, thru the organizations it supports.

For this is required the tactic of the united front of working class organizations. This the party and the I. L. D. should take the lead in organizing. There is no other way to build a mass movement to free the Scottsboro boys.

BUREAUCRATIC ULTIMATISM

by LEON TROTSKY

When the newspapers of the new Socialist Labor Party (the S. A. P.) criticize "the party egoism" of the social democracy and of the Communist party; when Seydewitz assures us that so far as he is concerned, "the interests of the class come before the interests of the party," they only fall into political sentimentalism, or, what is worse, behind this sentimental phraseology, they screen the interests of their own party. This method is no good. Whenever reaction demands that the interests of "the nation" be placed before class interests, we, Marxists, take pains to explain that under the guise of "the whole", the reaction puts through the interests of the exploiting class. The interests of the nation cannot be formulated otherwise than from the point of view of the ruling class, or of the class pretending to sovereignty. The interests of the class cannot be formulated otherwise than in the shape of a program; the program cannot be defended otherwise than by creating the party.

RELATION OF PARTY TO CLASS

The class, taken by itself, is only material for exploitation. The proletariat assumes an independent role only at that moment when from a social class in itself it becomes a political class for itself. This cannot take place otherwise than through the medium of a party. The party is that historical organ by means of which the class becomes class conscious. To say that "the class stands higher than the party," is to assert that the class in the raw stands higher than the class which is on the road to class consciousness. Not only is this incorrect but it is reactionary. There isn't the slightest need for this smug and shallow theory in order to establish the necessity for a united front.

The progress of a class toward class consciousness, that is, the building of a revolutionary party which leads the proletariat, is a complex and a contradictory process. The class itself is not homogeneous. Its different sections arrive at class consciousness by different paths and at different times. The bourgeoisie participates actively in this process. Within the working class, it creates its own institutions, or utilizes those already existing, in order to oppose certain strata of workers to others. Within the proletariat several parties are active at the same time. Therefore, for the greater part of its historical journey, it remains split politically. The problem of the United Front—which arises during certain periods most sharply—originates therein.

The historical interests of the proletariat find their expression in the Communist party—when its policies are correct. The task of the Communist party consists in winning over the majority of the proletariat; and only thus is the socialist revolution made possible. The Communist party cannot fulfill its mission except by preserving, completely and unconditionally, its political and organizational independence apart from all other parties and organizations within and without the working class. To transgress this basic principle of Marxist policy is to commit the most heinous of crimes against the interests of the proletariat, as a class. The Chinese revolution of 1925-1927 was wrecked precisely because the Comintern, under the leadership of Stalin and Bukharin, forced the Chinese Communist Party to enter into the party of the Chinese bourgeoisie, the Kuo Min Tang, and to obey its discipline. The experience resulting from the application of Stalinist policies as regards the Kuo Min Tang will enter forever into history as an example of how the revolution was ruinously sabotaged by its leaders. The Stalinist theory of "two-class workers" and peasants' parties for the Orient is the generalization and authorization of the practice employed with the Kuo Min Tang; the application of this theory in Japan, India, Indonesia, and Korea has undermined the authority of the Comintern and has set back their revolutionary development for a number of years. This same policy—perfidious in its essence—was applied, though not quite so cynically, in the United States, in England, and in all countries of Europe up to 1928.

UNCONDITIONAL INDEPENDENCE OF C. P. UNDER ALL HISTORICAL CONDITIONS

The struggle of the Left Opposition for the maintenance of the complete and unconditional independence of the Communist party and of its policies, under each and every historical condition, and on all stages of the development of the proletariat, strained the relations between the Opposition and the Stalinist faction to the breaking point during the period of Stalin's bloc with Chiang Kai-Shek, Wang Chin Wei, Purcell, Radich, La Follette, etc. It is quite unnecessary to recall that both Thaelmann and Remmele as well as Brandler and Thalheimer, during this struggle, were completely on Stalin's side against the Bolshevik-Leninists. It is not we, therefore, who have to go to school and learn from Stalin and Thaelmann about the independent policies of the Communist party!

But the proletariat moves toward revolutionary consciousness not by passing grades in school but by passing through the class struggle, which abhors interruptions. To fight, the proletariat must have unity in its ranks. This holds true for partial economic conflicts, within the walls of a single factory, as well as for such "national" political battles as the one to repel Fascism. Consequently the tactic of the United Front is not something accidental and artificial—a cunning maneuver—not at all; it originates, entirely and wholly, in the objective conditions governing the development of the proletariat. The words in the Communist Manifesto which state that the Communists are not opposed to the proletariat, that they have no interests separate and apart from those of the proletariat as a whole, carry with them the meaning that the struggle of the party to win over the majority of the class must in no instance come into opposition with the need of the workers to keep unity within their fighting ranks.

DIE ROTE FAHNE is completely justified in condemning all discussions concerning the contention that "the class interests must be placed above party interests." In reality, the correctly understood interests of the class are identical with the correctly formulated problems of the party. So long as the discussion is limited to this historic-philosophical assertion, the position of DIE ROTE FAHNE is unassailable. But the political conclusions which it deduces therefrom are nothing short of mockery of Marxism.

The identity, in principle, of the interests of the proletariat and of the aims of the Communist party does not mean either that the proletariat as a whole is, even today, conscious of its class interests, or that the party under all conditions formulates them correctly. The very need of the party originates in the very fact that the proletariat is not born with the innate understanding of its historical interests. The task of the party consists in learning, from experience derived from the struggle, how to demonstrate to the proletariat its right to leadership. While, the Stalinist bureaucracy, on the contrary, holds to the opinion that it can demand point blank obedience from the proletariat, simply on the strength of a party passport, stamped with the seal of the Comintern.

CORRECT CONCEPTION OF THE UNITED FRONT

Every United Front, which doesn't first place itself under the leadership of the Communist party, reiterates DIE ROTE FAHNE, is directed against the interests of the proletariat. Whoever doesn't recognize the leadership of the Communist party is none other than the "counter-revolutionary" himself. The worker is obliged to trust the Communist organization in advance, on its word of honor. From the identity, in principle, of the aims of the party and of the class, the functionary deduces his right to lay down the law to the class. The very historical problem which the Communist party is yet to solve—that of uniting the overwhelming majority of the workers under its banner—is turned by the bureaucrat into an ultimatum, into a pistol which he holds against the temple of the working class. Formalistic, administrative and bureaucratic thinking supplants the dialectic.

The historical problem that must be solved is decreed as solved already. The confidence yet to be won, is announced as won already. That, it goes without saying, is the easiest way out. But very little is achieved that way. In politics one must proceed from facts as they are, and not as one would like them to be, or as they will be eventually. The position of the Stalinist bureaucracy drawn to its conclusion leads, in fact, to the negation of the party. For what is the net result of all its historical labor, if the proletariat is obliged beforehand to accept the leadership of Thaelmann and Remmele?

From the worker desirous of joining the ranks of the Communists, the party has a right to demand: You must accept our program and obey our regulations and the authority of our electoral institutions. But it is absurd and criminal to present the same a priori demand, or even a part of it, to the working masses or workers' organizations when the matter is broached of joint action for the sake of definite aims of struggle. Thereby the very foundations of the party are undermined; for the party can fulfill its task only by maintaining correct relations with the class. Instead of issuing such a one-sided ultimatum, which irritates and insults the workers, the party should submit a definite program for joint action: that is the surest way of achieving leadership in reality.

BUREAUCRATIC ULTIMATISM LEADS TO NEGATION OF THE PARTY

Ultimatism is an attempt to rape the working class after failing to convince it: Workers, unless you accept the leadership of Thaelmann-Remmele-Neumann, we will not permit you to establish the United Front. The bitterest foe could not devise a more unsound position than the one in which the leaders of the party place themselves. That is the surest way to ruin.

The leadership of the German Communist Party stresses its ultimatism all the more sharply by the casuistical circumlocution in its proclamations, "We make no demands that you accept our Communist view beforehand." This rings like an apology for policies for which there is no apology. When the party proclaims its refusal to enter into any kind of negotiations with other organizations but offers to take in under the party leadership those social democratic workers who want to break with their organizations without their being obliged to call themselves Communists, then the party is using the language of pure ultimatism. The reservation as regards "our Communist views" is absolutely ludicrous: the worker who is at this very moment ready to break with his party and to participate in the struggle under Communist leadership, would not be deterred by the fact that he must call himself a Communist. Jugglery with labels and subtleties of diplomacy are foreign to the workers. He takes politics and organizations as they are. He remains with the social democracy as long as he does not trust Communist leadership. We can say with assurance that the majority of social democratic workers remain in their party to this day not because they trust the reformist leadership but because they do not as yet trust that of the Communists. But they do want to fight against Fascism even now. Were they shown the first step to take in a concurrent struggle, they would insist upon their organizations taking that step. If their organizations balked, they might reach the point of breaking with them.

(From WHAT NEXT?—Vital Questions for the German Proletariat)

Shall Tom Mooney Stay in Jail?

Governor Rolph of California has announced his decision refusing to grant Tom Mooney's appeal for a pardon. This should neither prove startling, nor record disappointed expectations on the part of revolutionists. But it should serve to settle once and for all any illusions which have existed in the minds of credulous workers. We can now once more affirm that for militant workers there is no redress in appeals to capitalist justice.

Undoubtedly many workers have held such illusions. Moreover they have been deliberately and deceptively nourished. Not so much for the purpose of maintaining expectations, but rather to prevent and to disorganize any serious efforts to actually set in motion the only real means at the disposal of the working class to force the jail doors open—its own mass pressure. The facts of this contention have been clearly established. We do not address it as a charge to the steeped in corruption and perfidy officials, of the A. F. of L. No, their crime was infinitely worse. Their special representations, particularly those in the state of California, have already been exposed as the actual connivers in the frame-up game. But there were special capitalist agents selected to nourish the illusions.

Tom Mooney, when informed of the decision, said: "It is a class decision with a class motive, and along these lines it shall be fought out in the future." These are serious words coming from the lips of a sterling fighter. In reality that has been the only way ever to fight it out. But the American workers did not yet fully see that, and were held back.

The effective organization of that fight is now more than ever on the agenda. But it cannot fulfill its objective without all workers being given the most ample opportunity of participation. To overlook that, or to put obstacles in the way of its realization, condemn any efforts to isolation and impotence. Such could only directly and criminally play into the hands of the rapacious jailors of Tom Mooney. It becomes, of course, a question of fighting back the capitalist offensive all along the line. It embraces the issue of release of all class war prisoners.

That Tom Mooney particularly symbolizes the body and spirit of all these class war victims is so amply illustrated in his call issued after receiving this recent decision. In part it says, "I am ready and willing today as always to give my life to the cause of the toilers of the world regardless of race, creed, color or nationality. This decision in the face of world-wide protest against my brutal frame-up, is an insolent and sinister challenge hurled by a doomed capitalist system into the teeth of the entire working class."

"I call upon the united militant and revolutionary working class of the entire world to accept this challenge. They must close ranks and raise louder than ever the demand that the plunderband of California let go their victim."

"They must fight not only for my freedom, but for the abolition of the capitalist system."

But to discharge our duty to this call

SERIES ON DIALECTICAL MATERIALISM

On May 13 at the Labor Temple comrade Swaback will give the first of a series of four popular lectures for workers on Dialectical Materialism. The four lectures will be delivered on four successive Friday nights. The admission price will be 15c per lecture. Comrade Swaback will undertake an exposition of the subject from its many aspects.

May 13—The Historical Struggle between Materialism and Idealism.

May 20—Dialectical Materialism Applied to Nature.

May 27—The Materialist Conception of History.

June 3—Dialectical Materialism Applied to Society.

To the Readers of "The Militant"

To Our Readers and Supporters:

Gratifying results have been obtained in our subscription drive. It gives us an excellent basis for a yet more effective wind-up during the coming month, May 1 to June 1. Its goal is $1,000. It should be translated in to reading. More power to the Left Opposition press.

This proposal we address not only to our members but to our supporters and readers as well. In the subscription drive a couple of our branches have participated excellently and set a splendid example. Some of our readers have done their bit. But our aim is to extended it during the final month to include the activities of all.

One month of efforts to build the Left Opposition press. This is a modest request. We have published our proposal as to how we aim to attain it. We want to extend the circulation of our various papers and secure their financial foundation. With the help of all supporters of as revolutionists should do we must again remind of the previous call sent from St. Quentin prison, in which Tom Mooney, in full realization of the enormous task ahead, demanded that a genuine united front movement be organized to force this plunderband to let go of their victims. In such lies also the guarantee for more effective steps toward the abolition of the capitalist system.

Tom Mooney's call was then and is now primarily addressed to the revolutionary workers to the Communists, for them to take the initiative. There is no other force in the movement fully conscious of the goal and with sufficient vitality to take the initiative. It is high time that the official party leadership realizes that this it must undertake.

The State and the Trade Unions in Canada

TORONTO, ONT.

In his final address to the jury at the historical trial that outlawed the Communist Party in Ontario, the Crown Prosecutor declared that "the trade unions were not being attacked... every institution throughout the country protected the trade union movement" (Mail and Empire, Nov. 13, 1931). It is the purpose of this article to show that on the contrary, the legal status of the Canadian trade union movement, precarious enough before the repression of the Communist party, is more completely at the mercy of the capitalist state than ever. For the trade unions (we do not mean the officialdom) to accept the suave assurances of the Crown at their face value would lull them into a state of false security.

I. Hostility to freedom of association in general is an early juridical phase of the capitalist reconstruction of society. The last decades of the eighteenth century industrial and agrarian revolutions released business enterprise from the fetters of feudalism and mercantilism in favor of freedom of competition and contract. The French Declaration of Rights and the American Declaration of Independence breathe the same spirit of optimistic (and "rugged") individualism as Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations": The democratic state is conceived as a mass of free citizens, each of whom is an ultimate source of sovereign authority, which would be impeded by "artificial" groups. The end of law was to secure the absolute and universal natural rights of individuals, a conception very congenial to the English courts where for a century and a half the doctrine of laissez-faire masqueraded in the guise of "public policy".

In the eyes of the law, the wage-laborer was on a footing of formal equality with all other citizens. But whatever the philosophical speculation of Rousseau, the device of universal suffrage merely ignores economic classes; it does not destroy them. Sovereignty in reality passed from the landed interest to the money power. The "new freedom" brought glittering prizes to the capitalist entrepreneur: to the proletarian it brought the factory system, low wages, long hours, slums and unemployment. Divorced from the ownership of the means of production, the wage-worker had only a Hobson's choice. From the very outset the employer was a combination in himself. To speak of the freedom of the labor contract under these circumstances was a mockery. In the later stage of capitalist consolidation and monopoly, the unorganized worker is more than ever a helpless figure in his own fate.

Trade unionism was the organized refusal of the workers to submit passively to the rigors of the sacred "wage fund" and the "inexorable laws of supply and demand." The trade unions, in Marx's phrase, were centers of resistance to the encroachments of capital. Neither the Left Opposition it can be attained. It is urgently needed. Will you readers put your shoulders to the wheel with us?

This month's campaign includes our press as a whole. The funds received will be divided on a proportionate basis between The Militant, Unser Kampf, Young Spartacus and Communists. It does not matter whether your help be an outright contribution or a subscription for a friend or comrade. Many of you comrades, who read this notice, are not in a position to participate jointly with our membership in the campaign. It is to you particularly that we address this request: Will you lend us your assistance during this month as generously as you have in the past? Will you make a serious effort to send a contribution, either as an outright donation or a subscription, direct to our office.

Thanking you in advance, we remain:

value of the workers' commodity labor power, nor his standard of living, in general are fixed automatically but by way of struggle. The first attempts, however, to combine in trade unions encounters the savage repression by the State. A series of combination acts in Great Britain declare a trade union an unlawful society and the strike a crime. The penal codes of other countries likewise deem "collective bargaining inconsistent with 'liberty'." Nevertheless, the workers organize secretly and strikes break out despite long terms of imprisonment for the leaders.

Against the right to combine, the capitalist courts invoked two doctrines (a) the doctrine of conspiracy and (b) the common-law rule holding as unlawful all combinations in restraint of trade. Originally limited to specific offences, the judges, when faced with the problem of association, extended the conspiracy doctrine to combinations of workers. Conspiracy was the agreement "to commit any unlawful act or any lawful act by unlawful means." The attempt of "Old Toryism" to enforce customary wage rates fixed by Justice of the Peace, long after the craft guilds had lost their power, was doomed. The Combination Laws, passed in additional fear of the French Revolution were repealed in 1824-25. The judges, however, gave form to the doctrine that a conspiracy in restraint of trade is indictable independently of statute.

The growing resistance of the workers, and the strength of their political agitation, combining with the circumstances of an expanding capitalism, resulted, though with considerable unevenness, in a stage of concessions. The Trade Union Acts of 1871 and 1906 gave the unions in Great Britain particularly, immunity from liability under the doctrine of conspiracy in both its criminal and civil aspects. That was a period when "democratic" reformism appeared to have achieved great triumphs. Combination was no longer unlawful. The right to strike and to picket were freed from the fear of the injunction (we are not here speaking of the United States). Domestic and inter-union affairs were more or less safe-guarded from the jurisdiction of the courts. Their funds were protected against embezzlement.

But a reactionary counter-current was at work even then. Already in 1902 the impeccably Fabian Webb had to record in their "Industrial Democracy" that "the public opinion of the proletariat and professional classes is in fact even more hostile to trade unionism than it was a generation ago... Under this adverse bias the courts of law have for the last ten years been gradually limiting what were supposed to be the legal rights of trade unions." At the present day, the capitalist class is once again engaged in sharp restriction of trade union activities. The Emergency Powers Act and Trade Union Act of 1927 are scarcely to be regarded as landmarks of greater class harmony in England, which experienced the great General Strike.

In the United States, Canada, and Australia, in addition to the former merely permissive, there is now coercive legislation regarding strikes and lock-outs. Australia and New Zealand, the stamping fields of "Labor Governments", have made compulsory both arbitration through administrative tribunals and compliance with the award. Statutes forbid the boycott, peaceful picketing and even the simple strike. Use of the injunction to enforce compliance with these prohibitions is sanctioned and violation of the statutes made punishable by criminal proceedings. The high-water mark of the capitalist control, or rather dissolution, of the trade unions was reached by the Fascist government in Italy which declared its policy to be the break with laissez-faire liberalism and the socialism of class-welfare. The independent unions have been outlawed. Strikes are repressed like sedition. The Fascist "unions" are incorporated in the state-machine, under the supervision of a "Minister of Corporations."

Demonstrate on May Day!

The forty-fourth International Labor Day on May 1, 1932 takes place at a time when the decline of the capitalist system is reaching new depths, when the most intense and most wide spread of its economic crises is approaching unprecedented aggravation. Factories, shops, magazines, ships are lying fallow; trade is at its lowest ebb, the bourgeois factions are wrangling among themselves to unburden themselves of the load of taxation upon one another's and the working classes' shoulders; more than 30 million workers walk the pavements in search of jobs the world over; those still at work suffer one wage reduction after another; poverty and wretchedness lurks in every corner.

The wise men of the bourgeoisie have seen all their utopian schemes, all their plans, all their remedies blown up like toy balloons by the ravages of the economic chaos. Only one country has thrown a ray of light into the world darkened by the shadow of the capitalist system. That is Soviet Russia, the land of the proletarian dictatorship.

The successes of socialist construction in workers' Russia have shown to the workers of the world the possibilities of socialism, their solution to the present anarchy. In spite of the mistakes of the Stalinist leadership, in spite of the backwardness of the country, the example of socialist planning and control in Russia has shown to the workers of the world how to avoid unemployment, how to build up and maintain industry for the benefit of those who run it, for those who toil.

International Labor Day 1932 reveals the irreconcilable contradiction between the socialist system and the capitalist system. In their agony, the defenders of the capitalist system are trying to save themselves by plotting the destruction of the Soviet Union and the utter subjugation of the workers the world over with it. The Soviet Union is faced with the threat of an attack from Japanese imperialism in the Far East and from the rapidly growing Fascist reaction in Germany. A tremendous and immediate danger is hanging over the head of the Soviet Union and the working class: the menace of Hitlerism which is out to crush the strongest ally of the U. S. S. R.—the powerful German proletariat.

The First of May, International Labor Day originated as a holiday of the American workers, it grew out of the struggle for the eight hour day in the eighties of the last century. The international working class made the holiday of the American proletariat its own holiday, a day of international working class solidarity. On the First of May, this

An intensive campaign is being conducted at present throughout the country to put our press on a sounder financial basis and increase our circle of readers. In connection with this drive the New York Branch of the League is holding an affair at its headquarters, 84 East 10th St., on Saturday, April 30th at 8 P. M. The proceeds of the affair will be turned over to Press Fund.

From present indications the affair will be a success. Tickets are selling well. An entertaining program has been arranged, including a singer, recitations etc. Admission is by ticket and is only 25c. The unique feature of the affair is that everyone who pays for a ticket is entitled to an eight issue sub to The Militant for himself or a friend. Come and help us to enjoy ourselves.

THE STALINIST-LOVESTONE UNITY NEGOTIATIONS! NEXT WEEK

The outstanding and most significant new development in the internal struggle of the American Communist movement is represented by the unity negotiations between the Stalinist Party officials and Lovestone, the leader of the expelled Right wing. In next week's Militant we will publish a report of these negotiations with an analysis and comment by James J. Cannon.

Marine Workers Sentenced to Jail

The three militant marine workers involved in the "bomb plot" frame-up in New York harbor have been sentenced by the capitalist court to long sentences in Sing Sing. Soderberg received from 12 to 25 years and Bunker and Trejor from 5 to 25 years each. The first two are to be deported when they have served their terms. The prisoners were denied the right to reply to the sentences.

The dastardly frame-up of the harbor bosses has received legal sanction from the capitalist government. The class conscious workers of the country must be aroused against this new outrage of capitalist class justice. We must not allow the class enemy to throw these three militant union men into his dungeons. That means their destruction. It is the duty of every revolutionist to

Every class conscious worker, every member of the revolutionary working class of America will demonstrate on May 1 under the banner of the Communist party. The American workers must gather on this day to voice their unflinching support of the Soviet Union against

After the Recent Elections in Prussia

The Prussian elections of April 24 made the National Socialist Party of Adolf Hitler the strongest party in that German province, which by virtue of the fact that it contains nearly two-thirds of the entire population of Germany and holds within its boundaries the most important industries in the country, represents the key position to the Reich as a whole.

The Fascist victory signifies not only an advance over the last Landtag elections (their success there has been properly described as phenomenal—a rise from 9 seats to 159, but also a high point in their steady increase of strength as a whole. In the run-off elections for the presidency on April 10, they received some 32 per cent of the total vote. Last Sunday they received 35 per cent of all votes cast.

The Hitler forces are flushed with victory. It is inconceivable that they should not exploit the moral strength of their success for decisive actions. While keeping up the mockery of legalism, Hitler is already warning the government itself against... illegal actions. How Hitler will proceed with the seizure of power, whether he will be able to establish a coalition with the Catholic center party or whether he will resort to a coup d'Etat is inconsequential. He is determined upon drastic measures. He is on the threshold of fulfilling the task assigned to him by the needs of the German bourgeoisie—that of throttling the working class of Germany.

Wherein Lies the Responsibility of the Social Democrats?

In its editorial on Tuesday, April 26, 1932, the Daily Worker poses the question as to who is responsible for the menacing advance of Fascism. It comes to the conclusion that the social democracy with its theory of the "lesser evil", with its support of the notorious emergency decrees of the Brüning government, with its deceit and systematic misguidance of the workers, has paved the way for Hitlerism. Is this true? Unquestionably true. No one who claims to be a revolutionist can deny it. But can anything else be expected from the traitors of August 4, 1914, from the henchmen of Noske and Scheidemann? Hasn't it been an A B C fact for Communists that the social democrats can play no other role than that of selling out the working class? And isn't it precisely the duty of the Communists to break through the deception and the betrayal of the social democracy in order to rally the working class against Fascism, against the class enemy?

The Stalinist scoundrels of the Daily Worker blame the social democrats for Hitler's forward march. We consider the treacherous preparatory work of the party of Wels and Breitscheid as a matter of fact.

"... a new argument is brought forward," writes the Daily Worker editorialist, "the argument that the Communists are responsible because we do not form a united front with the social democrats. This new position is also supported by the... Trotsky-Cannon renegades." And he goes on to show that Norman Thomas also uses this new argument. But he omits one little thing: That we start out on the premise that the social democrats are established betrayers of the working class, on the premise that it is necessary to wrest the millions of workers still under their influence away from them—which can only be done by means of a united front struggle in which the workers themselves can judge—whereas Norman Thomas and the other social democratic lackeys merely utilize the mistakes of the party leadership to achieve the function assigned to them: namely, to lead the workers to the slaughter under the sign of the "lesser evil". That the social democrats will try to exploit the shortcomings and errors of their Communist opponents is only natural. But how does this fact in any way excuse these errors and shortcomings? That is something that yet remains to be explained by the Daily Worker.

The proletarian Communists in the ranks of the International will not much longer allow themselves to be confused by the demagogic comparisons the Stalinist leadership makes between the social democrats and the Left Oppositionists. They will call the slanderous order, they will demand a political answer from them. (The events themselves are opening up the eyes of the workers. They want to know, why—with all the undeniably favorable objective conditions for revolutionary progress, with all the betrayals of the social democrats—their party, the Communist party has not been able to rally the masses for decisive and determined action. They cannot be led around much longer by their noses. The enemy is at the gates. But what is important now, is not the question whom to blame. The fight has not been lost yet. The thing to do now is to exert every force to make up for lost time. This requires a thorough reexamination of the policies of the German and the International leadership. This needs an evaluation of the theory that the Fascists in power will rapidly disintegrate. The practical fruits of this theory (which is nothing less than the Stalinist version of the "lesser evil") are already altogether too abundant and there is a lesson for the Communists to learn from them, from the "red" referendum last year in Prussia and this year in Saxony. The headless competition of the Thaelmann leadership with the nationalist slogans and demagoguery of the Fascists must be scrapped. Only in this manner can the road be cleared for an earnest approach to the rest of the working class, to the social democratic rank and file. Instead of the empty epithet "social Fascist" the tactic of the united front must be applied to drive the reformist fakers to self-exposure. This is the road the Communists in Germany must adopt if they are to lead the masses successfully against the impending Fascist onslaught.

all its imperialist aggressors, to show their inseparable community of interests with the workers of Germany in the face of battle.

Make the May Day demonstrations fighting demonstrations by manifesting your undying hatred of American imperialism—your enemy, the enemy of the U. S. S. R. and of all workers. Make the First of May a day of struggle against the capitalist system, against unemployment and for unemployment relief at the expense of the bosses. Against wage cuts, speed up and long hours and for the maintenance of the wage scales, for better conditions in the shops, for the Six Hour Day without reduction in pay. Make the First of May a banner day of working class struggle against capitalism!

What Does the Left Opposition Propose? As a first step in this direction, the Left Opposition of the C. P. G. proposes the convocation of an extra-ordinary part congress to review all these questions. It demands that these questions be discussed on the basis of party democracy, that the worker Communists be allowed to voice their opinions. The harm already done can thus be dispelled rapidly and conclusively.

The capitalist press reports a semi-turn in the German party already. According to a dispatch in the New York Herald-Tribune of April 27, the Communists have decided to fight to the end against any form of Nazi government in Prussia. Furthermore, the dispatch says, the Communists have changed their view that the party leadership no longer regards the social democrats the chief enemy as before, but the Fascists. United action of the Red workers with the trade unions is foretold. There are indications of a change also in the editorial in the Daily Worker quoted above. It is significant that the social democrats are not once referred to as "social Fascists". If this information proves to be correct a good part of the urgent proposals of the Left Opposition have already broken ground for themselves.

LETTERS FROM THE MILITANTS

Once More on the Bronx Cooperatives

NEW YORK, N. Y.

The conflict which has arisen between the members of the Food Workers Industrial Union and the C. P. bureaucracy (See The Militant, April 16, 1932) is constantly becoming sharper and has aroused wide spread interest among Communist and Left wing workers all over town.

As The Militant reported two weeks ago, the clash resulted from the expressed intentions of the management of the Consumers Cooperatives in the Bronx—which stands under the control of the party leadership—to reorganize that enterprise at the general expense of the food workers employed there. So far, a 10 per cent wage cut has already been put through, the working day has been increased by one hour and a tax of 10 per cent for the benefit of the T. U. U. C. (the Left wing union center) has been imposed upon the Cooperative employees. Not content with all these measures, the bureaucracy has seen fit to engage non-union men in place of the old help. This aroused the F. W. I. U. members to the point of exasperation.

The workers of the Con-Coops brought to the attention of the management the fact that a non-member of the Union was working there and requested that he be replaced with a Union man. The manager, an ex-drug store boss from Washington, D. C., refused their request. They were therefore compelled to lodge a protest with the Union.

Tribes, one of the organizers of the F. W. I. U. was sent to the Con-Coops to investigate the complaint. He informed the management that the Con-Coops were Union shops and that only members of the F. W. I. U. could work there. He demanded that the non-member be removed and that he be substituted with one of the many unemployed workers from the Union.

The manager refused to comply with the demand, and a temporary stoppage was the result. This stirred the anger of the Con-Coops and Union workers. The situation became so heated that a meeting of the District Control Commission of the Communist Party had to be called. After a long and weary session, the following amazing decisions were rendered:

1. To condemn the action of the Union organizer.

2. To mildly criticize the management of the Con-Coops.

It is only natural that the workers have been made furious by these decisions. It is hard for them to swallow the fact that the unheard of actions of the management have the tacit approval of the party bureaucrats. The suspicions of the rank and file with regard to the bureaucracy have been heightened to an unprecedented degree. And there is good cause for their suspicions. A few of the following incidents, known to all of the Left wing food workers will show why.

In the fall of 1930, there was a conference of the camp workers of all the party summer camps. The conference was shocked and outraged by the demand of one, Doroshkin, manager of Camp Kinderland, to reduce the wages of the camp employees. The protest of those present was so unanimous that the party representative to the conference was forced to repudiate Doroshkin and to make an official statement that the latter would not be returned to his post the following summer. But last year this same Doroshkin was right back in his old place and even much more of a slave driver than before.

As was reported by The Militant on August 1, 1931, a certain Newman, manager of the camp Woclonia, threatened to call the state troopers to oust a worker from the camp who had resisted against his arbitrary dismissal. The party Central Control Commission, acting under the pressure of the workers following this outrage, decided very diplomatically to keep Newman from occupying any paid post for six months. The six months will be up in July. The workers are wondering: Will Newman, like Doroshkin, be returned to his post once more?

While Newman gets this mild rebuff, the worker who resisted his bureaucratic methods, a militant worker arrested at the time of the needle trades strike last year, was faced with a very mysterious withdrawal of his bail and finally, with deportation by the government authorities.

The case of the worker Napoleon, whose exceptionally militant record is well known among the party members, and whose heroism was even made the subject of poems that appeared in the Daily Worker, similarly arouses suspicion. Napoleon was expelled from the Food Workers Industrial Union as a counter-revolutionary because he dared criticize the leadership. He happened to be out on bail for union activities in the strike at the Zelgreen cafeterias at the time. He was never notified by the bureaucrats when to appear in court. His bail was forfeited and he has been left to rot in jail.

The food workers are restless. They have been called counter-revolutionaries and worse by the bureaucratic Zack for daring to take a stand against the spurious "reorganization" of the Con-Coops. Are they too to be left at the mercy of the class enemy because they are courageous enough to criticize the headmen?

The incidents above and the latest occurrences at the Con-Coops are not accidental. Hundreds of Left wing workers have already reacted to the arbitrary and headless antics of the party bureaucracy with their feet. They have gone over to the A. F. of L. union. The devoted and sincere party members are alarmed. They will not allow the bureaucrats to wreck the work for which they have offered so many sacrifices in the union and on the picket line. They know the danger involved in tampering with the rights of the Union membership. They realize that workers join the union not as full fledged Communists, but to better their conditions. They know that it takes time and patience and self-sacrifice to develop the union workers into hardened class fighters. The party workers will not stand by and see the bureaucrats drive the union workers away from the movement. They know what is at stake.

The Left Opposition has been warning the party workers against the bureaucracy ever since its existence. It is a pioneer in the fight. The party workers who have come to realize the baletfulness of the bureaucratic methods of the party leadership must search deeper for the causes behind them. Whatever is wrong with the leadership in the Cooperatives is also wrong with the leadership on a national and more than that, on an international scale. The roots of the bureaucracy lie in the whole system of Stalinism which has been leading the Comintern as a whole to a steady decline, to disintegration and impotence, ever since the death of Lenin. The workers who really want to fight bureaucracy, will have to fight against the whole rotten Stalinist system. The time is not distant when the best elements of the party membership will realize this and struggle side by side with the Left Opposition for the regeneration of the party and the Communist International along the Leninist line, along the line of revolutionary victory.

—FOOD WORKER.

From an Illinois Miner

Dear Comrades:

It has been some time since I wrote to you relative to the situation in southern Illinois. Well, the situation is plenty hot down here now.

The strike is effective in every degree throughout the whole state. The District Organization is pursuing once more the wrong policy of separate agreements. This has caused a stir among the miners from the large mines, especially here in Franklin County. In several local unions we have pushed resolutions demanding that the officials recall those separate contracts.

The negotiations between the bosses and the miners are at a deadlock. The operators moved to adjourn sine die. The perspective is that a plenty hot struggle will develop. The District Officials are making every maneuver to get the miners to accept a wage cut. However, they have not openly committed themselves to this proposition. "Competition, stabilization, freight rates," are the substitutes for an energetic program of struggle. That the District Officials are not as brazen as before is simply due to the fact that progressive forces within the miners are fast developing and have attained a powerful following. On the other hand Lewis has declared himself to be after Wilke's scalp to the end. This causes the district to cater to the progressive elements.

April 1st we held a huge mass meeting at the West Frankfort Ball Park with several thousand miners present. We cooperated with the Communist party to the extent of using this 8 hour day celebration as a protest meeting against Criminal Syndicalism. Our active young militant, Gerry Allard, spoke and acted as secretary of all arrangements. This seemed to be much to the disappointment of the Stalinists. A resolution was unanimously adopted calling upon the miners to mobilize their forces in defense of the seven workers. It was also decided to call upon all local unions to send delegations to the State's Attorney demanding the release of the victims. The program consisted of 8 prominent progressive mine leaders. In spite of the fact that the Party opposed Edmundson he spoke at the meeting. William Browder was squeezed in the program as presenting the I. L. D. This is the first time that the Party representatives have been able to speak publicly since the raids.

We have a powerful unemployed movement started here in southern Illinois, which the Party attacked. We have branches in West Frankfort, Herrin, Coello, Benton, Christopher, Marion, Johnston City and Logan. Allard is serving in the capacity of general organizer of the movement and Secretary of the West Frankfort Unemployed Branch with seven hundred members. It is really valuable experience that we all have gained in this work. The organization is reaching greater powers every day and beginning to develop along militant lines in spite of the weak beginning it had due to the lack that time of real leadership, also being infested with religious cults of every description. Organizing unemployed is like organizing Negroes, the religious angle always breaks loose. Thus far we have exercised the greatest possible degree of democracy, but by degrees we are placing a check on it.

Over 4,000 members have joined our movement in 2 months period. Starting out with five men the organization is maturing to a point where it will be a fighting, achieving organization. It is comical to see all the crafts of the A. F. of L. come to the support of the movement after it attracts thousands of people. All the U. M. W. A. locals in the country have endorsed it, several churches, the Sub. District Association and one

We are off on the first week of our drive to BUILD THE OPPOSITION PRESS. This is a week to be devoted to the distribution of recent back issues of our papers. Back numbers have been mailed and are already in the hands of the comrades. The thing to do now is to distribute them and follow up these distributions with sales of current issues and our literature. An encouraging response to our appeal for our sympathizers to help us in this drive came in from South Bend, Indiana. The back numbers asked for were in the mail three hours after receipt of request for them. Comrade should remember that all returns must be in the mail (air mail) not later than Monday noon following the close of the week.

Upon consideration we found it advisable to revise some of the quotas. As they stand now they include a larger number of cities and are closer to what can actually be realized. They are: New York—$325; Minneapolis—$200; Chicago—$100; Toronto—$70; Philadelphia—$40; Cleveland—$40; Boston—$40; Newark—$35; Kansas City—$30; St. Louis—$25; Los Angeles—$20; Youngstown—$10; New Haven—$10; Montreal—$10; Duluth—$10; Springfield, Ill.—$10; W. Frankfort, Ill.—$10; Pittsburgh—$10; Trenton—$5. Which city will be the first to reach its quota?

Judging from the returns to date and especially from last week's showing Minneapolis is a two to one shot. But the final word has not been said and any one of our branches which has been saving its wind for the drive down the home stretch may step out to the front of the race. For last week Minneapolis reported 16 subs, New York, 5; Youngstown, 4; Chicago, 1; and 1 is credited to miscellaneous. This brings the total for the drive to 127. The standing of the branches is as follows:

Minneapolis	49
New York	38
Chicago	9
Boston	4
Youngstown	4
St. Louis	1
Newark	1
Philadelphia	1
Montreal	1

chapter of the American Legion, all without solicitation.

The meetings of the unemployed down here pack every hall we meet in. Relief has been rushed. This has developed the enthusiasm of the masses to a point where they suddenly realize what an ounce of organization can do. Rough roads lay ahead of them and in the bumpings that they will get scores of good fighters for the revolutionary movement will develop. Young workers, who formerly were attracted to a distant Metropolis in search of employment, no longer can be swayed by a general exodus. They are staying here now and fighting is going to be on the order of the day.

Tomorrow is a big day for the miners of Franklin County. A huge county demonstration is planned by the miners. Every local union has called a special meeting and made plans for the parade and demonstration. We anticipate, conservatively, 5,000 miners. The advertising leaflet calls for a fight on Boss Scabery. This is the latest maneuver of the bosses to wedge in for open shop. 500 of us marched at the Big Mine out near the edge of the town and pulled the bosses out of the mine. After we did this we threatened to put out all maintenance men if the practice of using boss strike breakers was abused. Maintenance forces are the men who take care of the mines from flooding, squeezes, falls, etc. The bosses attempted to use their stool pigeon crew of bosses instead of members of the United Mine Workers. This caused a commotion. As a result hell is going to pop out unless this demand of the miners is adhered to. The officials tell us, "Boys, we have no contract with the coal operators so what can we do about it?" Hot stuff! We have been busy thinking of slogans for banners. Scores of banners will stream the whole country.

The Party bureaucrats have been out maneuvered on every issue where they tried their Centrist policies, and where they attempted to discredit those who fought against bureaucracy. They have been forced to like it on several occasions. The artillery that they let loose against Allard for a while, has now stopped. It was doing them more harm than good and at the same time giving Allard publicity on matters that reacted very bad against them and Communism. Now they are attempting to use Party members of the rank and file to start in sniping away a him. But even this has failed simply because his position was unavailable. If any one is responsible for the uplifting of the terror against Communists in this country, Allard and a handful of militants are to be given the credit. The Party came forward on a May Day program and again we were instrumental in getting various local unions to endorse the demonstration. It appears to me that the Party is orientating itself to progressive elements, some with shady records. I cannot understand the sudden change of political lines. However, I am fully in accord with a united front of all miners.

Your article on the Anthracite was very informative. I received a personal letter from a young miner from Shenandoah, Pa. He reported along the lines that you had in your article. Our next big step among the progressives is to get our district forces centralized and then develop national contact.

Best Regards to all the Comrades,

—AN ILLINOIS MINER.

The First Week of the Press Drive

Miscellaneous 19

Minneapolis is now far in the lead but New York regards this as a small item to be wiped out at its subscription drive affair to be held this Saturday. The idea of giving ticket holders an 8 issue sub to The Militant should draw a large attendance and shoot it back into the lead. Minneapolis—on your toes, the fight isn't over. The showing made last week by Youngstown is very encouraging. We still expect to hear from Cleveland, Kansas City, New Haven, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Springfield and W. Frankfort, Ill., Toronto. We also expect to hear again from Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, Newark, Montreal, Chicago, and Youngstown.

MILITANT BUILDERS

The staff of Militant Builders is moving upward. This is one of the most encouraging signs. It means that more and more comrades are being drawn into the drive. In our opinion we are approaching the point at which the simple addition of numbers produces a quantity far in excess of their sum. Our barometer of progress is proving itself. The staff and its record follow: C. R. Hedlund—9; C. Cowl—5; V. R. Dunne—5; M. Dunne—5; A. Konikov—4; F. Barach—4; L. Basky—3; L. Roseland—3; C. Skoglund—3; O. Coover—3; C. Johnson—2; J. Carr—2; R. Sacharow—2; F. Cheloff—2; G. Ray—2; M. Glottlieb—1; M. Koehler—1; W. Winne—1; J. Carter—1; R. Ruskin—1; C. Forssen—1; H. Capelis—1; S. Zalmanoff—1; W. Hermann—1; A. Swaback—1; A. Glotzer—1; L. Logan—1; Kaldia—1; M. Sterling—1; W. Curran—1.

The staff looks very much like a roll call of the Minneapolis branch. The comrades in other branches should get busy and bolster up their end of the representation.

Comrade Coover reports the following from Minneapolis: No. 1 team scored nine points this week making their total as of April 21st—thirty-seven and a quarter (37 1/4) points. No. 2 team scored sixteen (16) points making their total forty-three (43). The total score for the branch—eighty and a quarter (80 1/4) points.

"We warned Chicago and New York they had better watch out and we meant it and offer the above as proof."

"Several of the Minneapolis Militant Builders have not been mentioned in the Militant yet. The complete list is as follows: M. Dunne—5 points; V. Dunne—10; F. Barach—8; S. Lesin—4 3/4; J. Ross—4 1/2; C. Forssen—1 1/2; C. Johnson—3 1/2; W. Curran—1 1/2; C. R. Hedlund—17; O. Coover—5; L. Roseland—4 1/2; C. Skoglund—4; S. Barach—1; S. Kalmannoff—2; C. Cowl—8 1/2; M. Glottlieb—1 1/2. (A point is equivalent to one dollar). The above includes the subs for Unser Kampf, Young Spartacus.

"Comrade Hedlund in turning in $11 for subs he got from members of his union remarked: 'I didn't have much time or I would have got them all'."

Lovestone and the «Pseudo-Revolutionists»

Our attack upon the proposal made in Izvestia by Karl Radek for a military alliance between the Soviet Union and the United States against Japan, has called forth at least one reply. If the diplomats and statesmen in the Stalinist camp who hastened to endorse Radek's idea promptly relapsed into silence and have since said nothing more on the matter, at least their Right wing brothers-under-the-skin have entered the field to break a lance for the embarrassed Stalinists.

In the current issue of the Workers Age (April 23, 1932), the leading editorial is devoted to a warm defense of Radek and an "anonymous" assault upon our position, with the argument that even though Radek is playing "bad politics based upon an unrealistic analysis" there is nothing at all the matter with the idea in principle, that it is quite in harmony with the teachings and practices of Leninism. The case is even helped along by the printing of a quotation from Lenin which is supposed to put the imprimatur of Bolshevism on the idea of a military alliance and, by implication, upon the Lovestoneites. As for our arguments, they are summarily dismissed as follows:

"That it is wrong in principle for the Soviet power to form temporary alliances, even military alliances, with capitalist powers, only a muddled pseudo-revolutionary phrasemonger will maintain. For we must remember that 'war is the continuation of politics by other means', and that 'politics is concentrated economics'; any 'principle' that would forbid a military alliance must likewise, if logically extended, forbid a political treaty or a commercial agreement!"

Utilizing Capitalist Antagonisms

Have the Bolsheviks (or any other ruling revolutionary proletarian party) the right to utilize differences and antagonisms existing at a given moment in the camp of world imperialism? Absolutely, the right and the duty. So long as the proletariat in other countries has not yet come to the aid of an isolated workers' dictatorship, the latter must exploit the antagonisms in the camp of world imperialism in the interests of its own preservation. The noteworthy example of this is the action of the Bolsheviks when the German imperialists marched against the Soviets following their failure to accept the terms of the Brest-Litovsk treaty in February 1918, that is, while the Allied imperialists were still at war with Germany. Trotsky describes the action as follows:

"On the twenty-second of February, at the meeting of the Central Committee, I reported that the French military mission had conveyed the French and English offers to help us in a war with Germany. I expressed myself as in favor of accepting the offer, on condition, of course, that we be completely independent in matters of foreign policy. Bucharin insisted that it was inadmissible for us to enter into any arrangements with the imperialists. Lenin came vigorously to my aid, and the Central Committee adopted my resolution by six votes against five. As far as I can remember now, Lenin dictated the resolution in these words: 'That comrade Trotsky be authorized to accept the assistance of the brigands of French imperialism against the German brigands.'"

This is the "agreement" (Lenin deliberately uses ironical quotation marks around the word) to which Lenin refers in his "Letter to the American Working Men". In reprinting excerpts from this letter, Lovestone, to justify his contention, commits a little forgery which is quite characteristic of him and entitles the letter: "On 'Alliances' with imperialists."

HAVE YOU READ TROTSKY'S PAMPHLET ON GERMANY?

The face of the labor movement of the entire world, and of the Communist workers in particular, is closely tied up with the fate of the German workers in their immediate political situation. To understand this in its full and Marxian implications, every militant worker should read Trotsky's pamphlet GERMANY, THE KEY TO THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION—Shall Fascism Really Be Victorious?

"We shook hands with the French monarchist although we knew that each one of us would be pleased to hang the other . . . And however much the hypocrites of Anglo-French and American imperialism may howl and abuse us . . . I will not hesitate for a moment to conclude a similar 'agreement' with the German imperialist robbers in case the attacks of the Anglo-French armies would require it."

But such entirely legitimate "agreements" are quite a distance from the alliance proposed by Radek and justified by Lovestone in principle. What Radek proposed was the conclusion of a military alliance between the United States, as one of "the capitalist powers which at the present stage do not infringe on her (the Soviet Union's) frontiers or interests", an alliance against imperialist Japan. That is how the issue stands. In reply to this reactionary proposal we quoted from Lenin's theses in March 1918, directed not only against the ultra-Leftist advocates of a "revolutionary war against Germany" (Bucharin and Radek), but also against the Mensheviks and Social Revolutionists who insisted upon a Soviet alliance with France and England against the Hohenzollern armies.

"Our policy must be based, not on a choice between two imperialisms but on the possibility of strengthening the socialist revolution or at least on the necessity of enabling it to offer resistance until the other countries join the revolutionary movement . . . We have always fought our own imperialism, but the overthrow of the imperialism of one country by means of an alliance with the imperialism of another, is a line of action that we reject both on reasons of principle and because we consider it inadmissible."

Let us remember that this was written at a time when Russia's need for "allies" was infinitely more acute than today, at a time when there was no Red army and when (unlike the situation in Manchuria) the German forces had already advanced upon Russian territory into the very heart of the country. In spite of this Lenin offered objections in principle to the proposals for an alliance with the Anglo-French imperialists. He did not withdraw them even when Kamkov, leader of the Social Revolutionists, announced to the Soviet Congress the withdrawal of that party's support of the Bolshevik government because Lenin preferred to sign the humiliating treaty of Brest-Litovsk.

Towards the end of the same year, Lenin wrote to the party's Central Committee: "Now the least enlightened will understand what cowardly treason to socialism the Mensheviks and the S. R. committed by accepting the alliance with the rapacious Franco-English bourgeoisie with the alleged aim of annulling the Brest peace." And again, to the Sixth Congress of the Soviets, Lenin declared in retrospect: "Fate condemned us to isolation and after the Brest peace we have lived through a grievous period. We were told: 'Better a new alliance with the imperialists than such a peace! . . . rather a new war together with the Anglo-French than the yoke of this violent peace. We replied: if we address ourselves to the international working class, we shall be able to continue our work."

As Lenin writes in the "Letter" published by Lovestone: "There are agreements and agreements." With one, the proletariat makes a revolutionary use of temporary divisions in the imperialist camp; with the other, the proletariat allies itself with the bourgeoisie of one country, sacrificing its revolutionary principles—towards a reactionary end, to which we shall refer later on.

Lenin made one kind of "agreement". When the Soviets were pressed to the wall by the advancing Germans, he readily accepted arms and ammunition from the French and English; he agreed to use their military specialists to blow up bridges and railroad lines in order to impede the German advance. The Soviets bound themselves to nothing. They created no illusions among the workers of the world concerning any "friendliness to the Soviet republic" or "nobleness of purpose" on the part of the Entente brigands. They concluded no secret (or any other kind of) treaty of alliance with France. They continued to agitate unreservedly for the overthrow of both sets of imperialist powers by their respective proletariats.

Under similar circumstances, the Soviets would act the same way today in the conflict with Japan. In face of a Japanese intervention against the U. S. S. R., or even a threat of such a step, the Soviets would be entirely justified in buying or accepting arms or ammunition from, let us say, the United States (if it could get them from this imperialist power which, far from standing aside, as Radek implies, is the fundamental counter-revolutionary force in the world

Appeal to the S. A. P.

If one is of the opinion that in the S. U. the beginnings of a classless society are already in existence, it is not necessary to concentrate all forces for the development of a proletarian revolution in other countries. As the realization of a classless society in the S. U. will apparently lead by example to the introduction of socialism in other countries. Therefore the whole policy of the Communist parties is confined to a simple role: propaganda against the war of intervention against the S. U. Only people who do not grasp the international character of the proletarian revolution (like Brandler and Thaelmann and now in the S. A. P.—Rueck, Schaber, Dueby) can assert that the policy of Stalin is good and only the policy of Thaelmann is bad. Just as until 1923 the correct policy of the Communist Party of the S. U. exerted a fruitful influence on other Communist parties, so the false policy of the Communist Party of the S. U. now exerts a devastating influence on other Communist parties. Until 1923 the leading role of the C. P. of the S. U. influenced the C. I. positively, now negatively. From this follows the necessity of changing the policy of the C. P. of the S. U., the abrogation of the theory of socialism in one country from which all the strategic and tactical errors of the C. I. follow. So long as the only proletarian revolution exists in Russia, the leading role in the C. I. will remain that of the Communist Party of the S. U.

National Socialism vs. Leninism

If it is correct that socialism can be realized in the S. U., that a classless society can be built, then the victory of Fascism in Germany is not dangerous, at least not so dangerous that it can jeopardize the existence of the proletarian state. If the existence of the S. U. is determined only by national factors, then the events on the international arena, in China and especially in Germany are only of a secondary nature. And if the consequences of a possible seizure of power by the Fascists in Germany are underestimated and it is considered as a phenomenon of short duration then one can hold the point of view that the S. P. G. is now the principal enemy. Then the programs of "national and social liberation" and of "social Fascism" are correct, then a united front with the S. P. G. and with the unions is not necessary, then also is acceptable the policy of the "Red Trade Union Opposition" (R. G. O.—the C. P. trade union organization). Without a correct revolutionary theory there can be no correct revolutionary practice! It is not a matter of a few mistakes of the C. I. on "fine points" but of a whole system of backsliding from the positions of Marxism-Leninism. The Brandler and Thaelmanns could not grasp this and therefore their policy suffered a complete bankruptcy. Rueck, Schaber, Dueby are repeating the same thing today.

One cannot train Communist cadres without taking a definite stand with regard to the whole policy of the C. I. for the past 9 years. The policy of the C. I. in China shows how a revolution in colonial countries should not be organized. Contrary to the theses and statutes of the Communist International adopted at the Second Congress (Theses on the national and colonial questions, 1920, 9-66-77) which state:

"The Communist International should enter into a temporary collaboration, even an alliance with the revolutionary movement of the colonies and the backward countries, must not however combine itself with it, but must unconditionally maintain the independent character of the revolutionary movement—be it even in embryo form," the Comintern under the leadership of Stalin pursued a policy in China which aimed at the suppression of "the independent character" of the Communist party of China by all means. The counter-revolutionary party of Chiang-Kai-Shek's Kuo Min Tang was recognized as a party "friendly" to the Comintern, the Communists of China were ordered not to come out as an independent party which warns the proletariat and the peasants of the inevitable betrayal by the Kuo Min Tang and then leads them to the realization of the revolution, but to remain as a fraction of the Kuo Min Tang. They strove not to the proletarian dictatorship but to the "democratic dictatorship of the workers and peasants." The Communists of China were forced in the years of 1925-1927 to suppress workers' strikes and peasants uprising because of the union with a "friendly" party and for the sake of "national unity." This policy led to the tragedy of the Chinese revolution, to the murder of thousands of Communists and of an even larger number of workers and peasants by the blood-thirsty counter-revolution, by Stalin's allies of yesterday. The C. I. stands helpless in the face of present events in China. The Communist Party of China does not exist.

The Anglo-Russian Committee

The experiences in England are just as important. The history of the Anglo-Russian Committee should be studied by all revolutionaries who want to gain clarity on questions of the United Front and who want to understand the present weakness of British Communism. The bloc of the Soviet-Russian and English trade unions was entered into against the protests of the Opposition for the purpose of diminishing the war danger and was sustained even after the betrayal of Purcell and others. In this way the betrayal of the reformists was covered up by the authority of the Soviet Union "in order to remove the war danger" and the growth of the Communist Party of England was made impossible. The reformists quit the committee after they no longer had any need of it.

You workers of the S. A. P. and the S. J. V. (the Youth Section) you want to be Communists. You cannot be that only through the adoption of general principles of Communism. You must learn from the experiences of the C. I. for the last 9 years. Without drawing the correct conclusions from this period of weakness and defeat of the C. I. one cannot become a Marxist-Leninist.

United Front and Cartels.

Without the C. P. G., S. P. G. and unions, no united front of the proletariat is possible. Many of you seem to forget this obvious truth. This can be seen from the cartels which you have established. We see that the cartels are made into discussion clubs in which one speaker after another tries to prove that the C. P. G. is incapable of carrying through actions, thus creating unbelievable illusions in the fighting strength of the cartels. We never denied the necessity of discussions, but it is clear to us that the aim of anti-Fascist cartels—or whatever other name they may bear—consists in the first place in extra-parliamentary actions. The first condition for this is the participation of the decisive proletarian organizations. Due to the fact that the cartels became meeting places of the bankrupt Brandler group, the Urbahns group and various other unimportant organizations, you made it impossible for yourself, workers of the S. A. P., to reach members of the C. P. G., their local organizations, as well as the S. P. G. and the Unions. You must learn this lesson from the past if you want actively to help build the class front of the proletariat.

The example of our organization in Bruchsal is instructive. Thanks to our group, there was established a united front with the S. P. G. with the unions and all other non-party organizations. This it seems is the only place in Germany where in spite of the existence of the Eastern group of the S. P. G. not an "iron front" was forced but a class front of the workers of Bruchsal.

We consider the question of a united front of the proletariat not a thing in itself. The necessity and significance of the united front becomes clear only when the closeness and full danger of Fascism is realized, as well as the necessity to defeat Fascism before the seizure of power, since after its victory this would be incomparably more difficult and bloody. If not impossible for a long period. None of the existing proletarian parties can do this work by itself. That is why we turn against the treacherous policy of the S. P. G. as well as against the false policy of the C. P. G. From this appraisal of the situation it follows for every worker who wants to struggle against Fascism earnestly and successfully that a real united front must be established between the various political camps of the divided working masses. The private anti-Fascist cartels consisting of yourselves, Brandler and Urbahns will not solve this problem as you have not the masses with you.

What Constitutes A Revolutionary Policy
Correct united front tactics are possible only on the basis of a clear revolutionary policy. Your party has in no way yet fully overcome reformism but repeatedly makes concessions to it. If you will remove this condition and fully embrace a real revolutionary policy you must struggle for the following Communist fundamentals:

1. The victory of the proletariat is possible only through an armed uprising, during which the proletariat destroys the bourgeois state apparatus and establishes the dictatorship of the proletariat which is the form of the rule of the working class in the transition period from capitalism to socialism.

2. The dictatorship of the proletariat is exercised through councils (Soviets) which exercise the widest proletarian democracy. They are led by a party which in struggle for the seizure of power gains the confidence of the proletariat and this can only be a Communist party.

3. The Communist party is the mind of the working class and must represent its historical interests. It leads the proletariat into struggle for power and after the victory toward the building of socialism.

4. The struggle for a socialist society is an international struggle. The Communist International is that organization which directs this struggle, subjects the temporary interests of the proletariat to the historical ones and its limited national aims to the international aims.

5. The "theory" of the possibility of realizing socialism in a single country is reactionary, it contradicts the teachings of Marx and Lenin.

6. The presupposition for the recognition of the revolutionary, that is, Communist world movement is the reform of the Communist International and of the C. P. which will remove the strategic and tactical errors of the present leadership, will re-introduce inner party democracy and will achieve the unity of the Communist ranks on the basis of Leninism.

7. The victory of Fascism in Germany will mean not only the bloody suppression of the German working class, but also the greater sharpening of the war danger for the Soviet Union.

8. One of the most important tasks in the present situation is the defense of the Soviet Union as the fortress of the international proletariat. Only the defeat of Fascism and the overthrow of the bourgeoisie in one's own country can safeguard the existence of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the Soviet Union.

Therefore, comrades of the S. A. P., fight all forms of reformism and centrism.

today and, in the deepest sense of the word, the spearhead of the anti-Soviet movement in the camp of imperialism).

The Meaning of an Alliance

But the conclusion of a military alliance with America is another matter entirely. Such measures are not taken merely for the sake of remaining on paper. In the event that war actually breaks out between the Soviet Union and Japan, the United States will appear on the scene as the military ally of the former. It will be in a position to carry out its imperialist designs not merely against Japan, but primarily against China, under the convenient banner of defending the workers' fatherland from military intervention by Japan! The American bourgeoisie, which has always fastened the imperialist yoke upon weaker peoples in the name of the loftiest ideals—the "open door" in China or "democratic elections" in Nicaragua—could not wish for a more noble banner under which to sink its teeth into China than the "defense" of the Soviet Union from Japanese intervention!

Still more: Let us again assume the outbreak of a Japanese-Soviet war. On the basis of the "alliance", the Soviets are "legally" justified in calling for the dispatch of American aid to relieve its hard-pressed forces from the Japanese offensive. If Lovestone is a member of Congress by that time, we assume that he will vote war credits to the army and navy; perhaps, also, he will call upon the working class to suspend its war upon the bourgeoisie which is engaged, you see, in fighting to a successful finish its war in defense of the Soviet Union.

If not, he will be infinitely less con-

The Bureaucrats Analyze the Elections

How the Rank and File Party Members React to their «Analysis»

The article below, taken from our German brother organ Die Permanente Revolution, gives a good picture of the party bureaucracy's methods of "analyzing" election results and of the genuine reactions of the party membership to the set-backs the C. P. G. has recently suffered.

The result of the elections "lags behind the objective possibilities that the present situation offers us. The election results are unsatisfactory for the Communist party". (Rote Fahne, March 14).

"The Communists do not consider it necessary to shout out loud about their victory" (Pravda, March 17, 1932).

"From this point of view, the five million votes for the fighting candidacy of the C. P. G. in the first ballot must be described as a big victory" (Thaelmann on March 25. See Rote Fahne of March 30).

It can readily be seen from these quotations how, inside of 14 days the defeat of March 13, which the Rote Fahne expressed with the words "unsatisfactory result" became a "great victory" of the C. P. G. What is this about face based on? Is it really true that after a more thorough investigation, the election results must be evaluated differently the way the Rote Fahne did on March 14? Let us look at the figures more closely. We find that in almost all the decisive industrial districts the party lost many votes. For example, in the "Thaelmann fortress" Hamburg, in several of its proletarian quarters alone: St. Pauli, St. Georg, Barmbeck and Eimsbüttel, the party lost from 25 to 28 per cent of the votes it received in the last local elections. The Nazis too have had small losses there. Only the Hindenburg Front gained from these losses. An investigation of the results in the other districts in the Reich does not permit an optimistic evaluation for the C. P. G. It is significant that the optimism of the Rote Fahne came into view only after the article in the Pravda. The Pravda, however, must baptize the defeat as a victory, because Stalin can stand no defeats, his policy is infallible. His theory that "the social democracy and Fascism are twins" has suffered shipwreck, the S. P. G. and the Nazis have become still stronger, the party has become weaker. This must not and cannot be expressed openly. That is why the decline of March 13 has become a "big victory of the C. P. G." The tone has been given, the line has been drawn, and now the editors and orators can rave about the "big victory". Now it has become clear that "the correctness of the strategic and tactical line of the party has been confirmed completely" and the barrage of slander against all those who are of a different opinion, can continue even in an increased measure.

The Lies of the Party Press

The "victory" of the party at the presidential elections, which has been invented by the bureaucracy, cannot, however, placate the party members. They know well, how they must evaluate the results of the elections. The bureaucracy offers a cheap explanation to quiet down the membership. The social Fascist leaders are guilty, because with the slogan of the lesser evil they have held the workers back from giving their vote to Thaelmann. But this is precisely the task of the social democracy! That the leaders of the S. P. G. and the trade unions are betrayers—every Communist is well aware of. That it is the task of the enemy to fight against C. P. G., is only natural. The leaders of the S. P. G. can travel no other road than the one they have taken ever since August 4, 1914. To get excited over this is useless. But how is it possible that the S. P. G. succeeds in winning millions, yes, the greatest part of the German working class for the policy of the "lesser evil", even though they have no more reforms to offer to the workers? How is it possible that the C. P. G. has not been able to extend its influence in the working class, what with the socialist construction in the Soviet Union? These are questions which require an answer. But that leads too far: By answering such questions it must become clear how false the strategic and tactical line of the party is. And this, the party bureaucracy can in no case permit to happen. Therefore, the cheap explanation, that the leaders of the S. P. G. are guilty for the defeat of the C. P. G.

Furthermore, "the counter revolutionary, deceptive maneuvers of the S. A. P. and the Trotskyists: For Thaelmann—against the C. P. G." are also to blame for the party's defeat. Only an editor of the Rote Fahne can write such lies about the Left Opposition. The brother organ of the Rote Fahne in France, L'Humanité, in the article by Perin of March 13, goes as far as to maintain that Trotsky has appealed for the election of Hindenburg. But the scribbles on the party press know very well that Die Permanente Revolution appealed to: "Vote for Thaelmann, the Candidate of the C. P. G." and "Despite the Thaelmann Course, Every Force for the Strengthening of the C. P. G." So much for the lessons the party press draws from the results of the March 13 elections.

By means of self-criticism the party will overcome all shortcomings and weaknesses, the party press writes day in day out. Is the examination of the political line of the party, and of its actions therefore in order? May the party members, for instance, say how they evaluate the results of March 13? What is self-criticism? Let us take a few examples: In Berlin there was a gathering of party functionaries after the conclusion from the election results to the effect that the party policy must be corrected. That was sufficient to arouse an uninterrupted hullabaloo on part of the party bureaucracy. One discussion speaker, excited by the continual interruptions, had to call out: "This is even worse than among the Nazis" and another: "Heinz Neumann may speak, but no workers!" Such self-criticism was too much for the bureaucracy and the meeting was adjourned abruptly. It was to be continued on Thursday, March 24. The bureaucracy needed this postponement, in order to eliminate all criticism. The following document, which we bring in full, is an exact picture of what took place:

"Berlin, March 21, 1932

"To All Sub-District Committees!
"To All Unit Organizers!
"To All Fraction Leaders in the Mass Organizations!

"What must absolutely be kept in mind in distributing invitations for the continuation of the conference of party functionaries on Thursday, March 24?

"1. The last party functionaries' conference was attended to the extent of about 5-6 unemployed party comrades. The functionaries from the most important front, from the factory front, were therefore almost entirely absent. That is why invitations must be extended in such a manner that more than half of the representatives are factory workers.

"2. Half of the comrades present at the last conference were in the party less than a year, and half of these in turn, less than three months. We must see to it that this time our really active party functionaries are invited and represented.

The sub-district committee, the unit organizers and the fraction leaders in the mass organizations are responsible for such a distribution of the invitations as will make it impossible in the future, for open enemies of the party to get access to our internal conferences through a careless distribution of invitations.

Only in this manner can the responsible party functionaries guarantee that the coming party functionaries' conference will be a real impetus to revolutionary mass work for the next few weeks and months in the struggle around the run-off elections and the elections in Prussia.

Secretariat of the D. E. C.

This is a concrete example of "self-criticism" in Berlin. Every party member who criticizes is an "open enemy of the party". In Hamburg, the District Organizer, Schubert went so far as to say at a conference of party functionaries that the poor results in the elections at Hamburg are due to the comrades in the Kampfbund (the party's anti-Fascist "mass" organization), who were only guarding the posters at night and slept in the daytime, when they should have been discussing at the unemployed registry offices. When those present protested against this shameful arrogance, Schubert declared: "Whoever does not maintain discipline to the end of the elections, stands expelled". This is the picture of the party's "self-criticism". Such "self-criticism" is the deception which makes it possible for the party bureaucracy to insult the members and to forbid any criticism of the policies of the party leadership.

But this cannot go on. The members are beginning to realize that the party leadership is leading them into the void. They will criticize. After the second ballot, the party members will resort even more to criticism. It is the task of the Left Opposition to pose the demand for free criticism in the party into the foreground. It is on this field that we must drive the first wedge.

Here you have a classic instance of how generally accepted postulates can be prostituted to serve a reactionary purpose, of how truth, "logically extended", becomes a lie.

Economics, Politics and War

The Soviet Union grants foreign imperialist concessionaries certain economic rights, even allowing them to exploit Russian labor and accumulate capital. And yet, even though "politics is concentrated economics", it stubbornly refuses, in principle, to grant the concessionary any political rights whatsoever. With the introduction of the N. E. P., the exploiting Kulak was granted definite economic privileges, yet Lenin opposed granting him any political rights.

The worker makes a "commercial agreement" to work for his employer and to surrender the surplus value he produces so that his employer may accumulate capital. William Green "logically extends" this idea, he "concentrates" economics into politics, and tells the worker to vote for his employer at the polls. And since "war is a continuation of politics by other means", he helps herd the workers into the trenches so that more capital can be accumulated at home.

The Soviet Union might allow the Japanese the use of the Chinese Eastern Railway for the "economic" purpose—let us imagine—of dumping Japanese products on the Chinese market and causing the ruin of certain native industries. Yet, Russia would rightly refuse the use of the Chinese Eastern for the transport of Japanese troops in a war against China, in spite of Lovestone's learned explanations that war is a continuation of politics which is only concentrated economics.

A revolutionary trade union, finally, would take proper advantage of a rift in the ranks of the manufacturers, or of antagonisms between different strata among the latter, and adjust its tactics in order to make the most gains for the workers. But it would not enter into an "alliance" with one set of manufacturers for the purpose of wiping out a rival set of manufacturers. (It is with some reluctance that we refrain from dwelling here on an analysis of the exult to which Lovestone's recent advocacy a "logical extension" of the policy pursued in the needle trades union under the regime of Lovestone-Zimmerman...)

No, we are against "military alliances" of the Stalin-Browder-Radek-Lovestone type, and yet we are entirely in favor of utilizing imperialist disagreements as well as of concluding "commercial agreements". If "logical extension" is to be spoken of at all, then it is only in this connection:

The reactionary theory of socialism in one country is predicated upon transforming the international Communist movement into a pacifist frontier guard defending the Soviet Union from intervention while it builds an isolated, national utopia. In endeavoring to build this national socialist fantasy, intervention must be waived off at any price. The price thus far has included the heavy payments made by the English proletariat for the Soviet alliance with Purcell; the payments made by the Chinese proletariat and peasantry for Stalin's alliance with Chiang Kai-Shek and Wang Chin Wei; the payments still being made for the pacifist confusion and delusion of the world proletariat by the signing of the Kellogg Pact and Litvinov's Kautskyism antics every six months at Geneva.

Lovestone exerts himself, and defames Lenin in the bargain, in an effort to present Radek's proposal, as well as the party's demand for the "expulsion of the Japanese diplomats", as isolated aberrations, as accidental deviations from the generally correct line. Not at all! They are entirely logical results of the fundamental line. The tree of national socialism can only bear chauvinist fruit.

EDITORIAL NOTES

"UNDER RANK AND FILE LEADERSHIP"

One of the demands in the program of the lefts, who were elected to the convention of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, was for "a real strike under rank and file leadership". This slogan does not appear here for the first time. It did not originate with the workers who stood as the candidates of the Left in the International elections, and they should not be blamed for it. There is no doubt that this anti-leadership slogan was imposed upon them by their own "leaders", the Stalinists, whose "rank and file" ballyhoo is intended for the deception of others and by no means for their own guidance in relation to their own rank and file.

In their steadily losing battle of recent times with the traitorous leaders of the Right wing unions, the demoralized officials of Stalinism have been trying to outwit their opponents and to sneak into the leadership of the workers without their knowledge. This is the grand "strategy" which motivates the demagogic appeal for the leadership of the "rank and file". The sad results which these unworthy maneuvers have brought, not the least of which has been the disorientation of the Communist workers in the simplest and most elementary questions, justify a discussion of this ridiculous slogan from the standpoint of the A B C of Marxism.

The first thing which must strike the observant worker, and which in part accounts for the miserable failure of the slogan about rank and file leadership, is the howling inconsistency of its authors. On the one side they stand at the head of the party by virtue of appointment and rule it with the most bureaucratic arbitrariness. If one is looking for an example of "the leadership of the rank and file" he will never find the merest trace of it in the Stalinized party. The rank and file Communist who would venture to assert the modest right to say what he thinks in criticism of the leadership, to say nothing of the advocacy of the slogan which he propagates in the unions under party instruction, would soon be handed his passports. This is what has happened to many, and the workers in the unions know it. Integrity, common sense and a decent respect for ordinary human intelligence all argue against this sordid attempt to fool the workers with an idea that is flatly contradicted in the practices of the Amters and all the other Fosters.

But hypocrisy and dishonesty are prime ingredients of Stalinism; and, in addition, contempt for the workers. Abusing the faith of the conscious proletariat in the Russian revolution and the Comintern, they imagine they can sanctify anything by mere command. This is what misleads them into such self-contradictory policies in relation to the general labor movement. Ruling within the limited sphere of the party by decree, they forget that in order to influence the non-Communist masses it is necessary to convince them. And since the masses take nothing on faith, but test everything out in life and learn from their experience, the slogans of the party which do not correspond to reality are unavailing. Thus it happens that such manifest absurdities as the "leadership of the rank and file" leave the masses untouched, and only succeed in deceiving and disorientating the Communist workers. In this case simple questions, long ago settled in the camp of the Marxists.

LENIN ON LEADERS AND MASSES

Twelve years ago Lenin wrote a pamphlet for the purpose of clearing up some misconceptions in the newly-formed Communist parties. One of these misconceptions was the prejudice, derived from syndicalism, regarding leaders and masses. Replying to the arguments of those "Leftists" in the German party who contrasted the one to the other he remarked: "What old and well-known rubbish! What 'left' childishness!" The simple explanations and ironical comments of the great teacher, regarding the masses and the leaders and the inter-relationships between them, apply so pertinently to the present aberration of the American Stalinists on the subject of "rank and file leadership" that a few quotations will be in order.

"One notices the superficial and incoherent use of the now 'fashionable' terms, 'masses' and 'leaders'. People have heard much and have conned by rote all the frivolous attacks on 'leaders'—contrasting them with the 'masses'—but failed to grasp the application and the inner meaning of these words."

"To a Russian Bolshevik... all talk of 'from above' or 'from below', the dictatorship of leaders or the dictatorship of the masses cannot but appear as childish nonsense. It is something like discussing whether the left leg or the right arm is more useful to a man."

"People bend every effort to elaborate something extraordinary, and in their zeal to be intellectual they become ridiculous. It is common knowledge... that the classes are usually and in most cases led by political parties, at least in modern civilized countries; that political parties, as a general rule, are led by more or less stable groups of the more influential, authoritative experienced members, elected to the most responsible positions, and called leaders. All this is elementary. It is simple and plain. Why then all this rigamarole, this new Volapuk?"

These citations are taken from The Infantile Sickness of "Left" Communism. Have the new members of the party ever seen this pamphlet, and have the old members forgotten it? These teachings, like all the fundamental doctrines elaborated by the Comintern under Lenin, have been declared out of date; they are buried under the filth and confusion of the Stalin regime. The Communist worker who wants to find his way back to the Lenin path might well begin with a study, or a reexamination, of the "Infantile Sickness".

After that he would never be able to go around shouting such absurdities as "the leadership of the rank and file". He would not be able even to listen to such an instruction from his own "leaders" without laughing under the table.

THE ROLE OF THE CONSCIOUS WORKERS

The chatter about "rank and file leadership" is a disgrace for Communists. Such horseplay can very well be left to the confusionists of syndicalism who object to the idea of a workers' political party on the ground that the masses need no leaders. This demoralizing nonsense only hampers the organization of the working class and thus serves the bourgeoisie. The mission of the Communists is to educate the workers, not to muddle and confuse them; to aspire, frankly, to lead them in their struggle, not to trail behind them and cater to ignorance and prejudice with demagogic slogans.

The working class under capitalism, is not and cannot be a homogeneous body. The enormous pressure of the ruling class ideology presses heavily upon it. Bourgeois ideas, disseminated through the press, the schools, the church, the movies, the political parties, and in other ways, demoralize and corrupt the thoughts of the workers. Besides that, the working class under capitalism is divided into various economic categories, with different standards of living and, to a certain extent, different immediate interests. The upper stratum, the aristocracy of labor, which is the most conservative, and at the same time the best organized, becomes a means of strengthening bourgeois influences over the class. The labor bureaucrats, with their high salaries and petty-bourgeois standards of life, act as the agents of capital in the labor movement.

As a result of all this, it is possible, under capitalism, only for a minority of the working class to free itself from bourgeois influences and ideas and to understand the historical class position of the proletariat. These are the conscious workers, the vanguard of the class. In order to influence the class in its own interest most effectively it is necessary for these conscious workers to organize themselves and to fight unitedly against the domination of the capitalists and their agents in the labor movement. From this arises the Marxist idea of the centralized workers' party. It is the first letter of the Marxist alphabet on the question of working class organization.

This principle of leadership, by the most conscious and resolute elements, applies to strikes and other daily struggles as well as to the class struggle as a whole. The agitation for "the leadership of the rank and file" negates this principle and sows confusion. By this it only makes the leadership of the reactionary agents of the capitalists more secure. This harmful and anti-Marxist slogan should be cast aside. Instead of it, the Communist workers in the unions, as in every other field of the class struggle, should frankly contrast their policy and their leadership to the policy and the leadership of the labor lieutenants of capital. This is the only way to teach the workers and help them in their struggle. There is no roundabout way.

—J. P. C.

The Negro and the Class Struggle

The National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition), by direction of the National Conference, appointed a commission to assemble material on the Negro question in America and to open a discussion in the League. The following article by comrade Oehler, a member of the commission, is a contribution to the discussion and presents his personal views. —Ed.

In modern Europe, where capitalism has long ago had its decisive battles with feudalism, there still linger remnants of the past, feudal carry-overs complicating the solution of the proletarian problems. This complication does not confront the workers of America, but in its place we have a variety of more conflicting inheritances. One of these was the carry-over of chattel slavery, a more backward system which gained supremacy over attempted feudalist inroads in new America by its economic advantages in the south for large scale agriculture production. The race form of chattel slavery in America gave impetus to this development.

The period when economic systems were gaining a foothold in new America cannot be separated from the class struggles in Europe at that time. The discovery of America which gave the feudal kingdoms greater land rights only accelerated the internal contradictions between the feudal land property relations and the developing bourgeois property relations. The commercial system of Europe was on the upgrade and the race for America reflected this. The discovery of America accelerated bourgeois development in Europe and logically expressed its growth in the colonies.

In Europe, feudalism ruled by the monopoly of land through the feudal estates and the Catholic church and by hindering the developing handicraft system, keeping it part of the feudal hand-tool production. Free land in America played havoc with feudal relations, not just because there was free land, but primarily because with this free land developed the bourgeois property relations. Bourgeois relations are made difficult by free land, but the presence of large tracts of usable free land in a new country smashes all feudal attempts at stability when capitalism moves in at the same time.

The Problem of Labor Power

Labor power and its control was the burning problem of the rulers of the colonies, not only its scarcity but also its control once obtained. Wage workers would soon disappear as free farmers, hunters and trappers. The white slaves and indentured slaves from Europe enabled the merchant and commercial classes to retain a sufficient supply of cheap labor power, but this could only be kept up by a constant influx from Europe. The land to the west was an escape for this labor supply. At the same time, however, this resulted in developing bourgeois agriculture relations in the northern part of the colonies.

In Europe, where capitalism was already at work appropriating those who had escaped feudalism through the handicraft system or by free peasant farming, and turning them into an army of propertyless wage slaves, there was no further escape. Either work as wage slaves, starve to death, or be killed or imprisoned as beggars and thieves—these were the alternatives. In America the escape to the west was still open. But this "escape" laid the basis for the further development and strengthening of bourgeois domination in America.

In the south conditions were different. The kinds of crops and the climatic conditions called for a different form. The crops demanded large scale agriculture production, and, capitalist agriculture relations were yet in their infancy. Feudalism could answer this request but, it could not furnish serfs tied to the land and accustomed to the hot climate, when livelihood could be obtained by hunting and fishing, and trapping and free land for farming. The only suitable alternative, that rising bourgeois relations could tolerate was chattel slavery; bringing in large scale agriculture production, labor power bound in slavery, suitable for the climate. It was proven that the Indian could not serve this purpose. The white man from Europe had too easy an escape, even if it were possible to brand him as a chattel slave. The Negro race answered the need. Indentured slavery was the closest form to chattel slavery possible for the white man of Europe. It sufficed for the recruitment of a supply of labor in the north, but was not suitable for cotton and tobacco production in the south.

The traffic in Negro slaves was just as profitable as the traffic in indentured slaves. The chattel slave was more profitable for the south under the conditions. But in the latter period of Slavery in America the bourgeois relation had far outstripped the other forces and had shown that the wage slave was by far the most profitable for the master class. The conflict of these two antagonistic systems reached its climax in the Civil War. The forceful expropriation of the chattel masters' property in the form of the slaves put an end to the most dangerous internal enemy of the bourgeois system. However, this did not remove all the obstacles and give a free hand for capitalist penetration. The carry-over was as heavy as a mountain, hindering all speedy solutions.

The expropriation of the chattel masters of their property in the slaves, opened up new avenues for capitalist development and new markets for penetration. The dictatorship which the capitalists set up in the south after the Civil War soon reduced the chattel masters to submission to the new rulers of America. In fact, the dictatorship was becoming a boomerang. The former slave was taking his liberty seriously in an increasing degree. The exploiters of the wage slaves were not long in learning they had a hundred times more in common with the former chattel masters than with the former slaves. The freedom taken by the slaves had to be checked; the dictatorship against the chattel masters was modified when their resistance was broken.

en, when they came to terms—the terms of the northern capitalists. From them on the capitalist supremacy took on a form of democracy for the white rulers of the south, and a new form of dictatorship against the Negro masses who were driven into worse slavery than before.

The New Role of the Negro

The freeing of the Negro from chattel slavery opened the door to a tremendous supply of cheap labor for the American capitalist. In fact the supply was too great for developing capitalism to absorb. However, it remained in reserve, ever ready to be used as expansion would warrant. Although capitalist development in America was fairly fast, the influx of European wage slaves, already trained, kept in check the rapid transformation of former chattel slaves into wage slaves. The slaves' "freedom" turned out to be a bourgeois joke. The former slave found himself, free from his former master's obligation to feed, clothe and shelter him, and keep him well as property, but not free from the economic exploitation and political domination of the capitalists and plantation owners. Left "free", without economic means for a livelihood (land and tools), the Negro was free to starve to death, to submit to his former master in worse economic subjection than before, or to become a wage slave, providing he could find an employer. The "free" Negro, without land or tools, had only one road to travel as a class and race—to submit to the new forms of exploitation, since conditions were not ripe for a successful revolution to free themselves from their white masters and obtain the land and tools of production for themselves. As a race they adjusted themselves to the new condition—unassimilated as wage slave; not held as chattel slaves; reflecting the old and looking at the new, but representing neither. They started the process by seeking out an existence on the land and as servants of the white rulers; part slave, part serf and part wage slave.

At the time of the transformation only the Marxists realized the historic significance of the "freeing" of the chattel slaves. The history of American labor cannot be written properly unless this current is traced back and properly connected with the development of the white and negro proletariat and their allies in the coming revolution.

Westward expansion, internal northern American development and colonial expansion could tolerate concessions to the white rulers of the south in return for their political support as plantation owners. Rule the Negroes in your own state as you like so long as you support your political hegemony, said the northern capitalist; and besides you can make more profits by your support than by resistance. And just as the freedom of the American revolution amounted to so many words and pieces of paper for the workers and farmers, so much did the freedom of the Civil War amount to for the Negro masses.

BUREAUCRATIC ULTIMATISM

Instead of aiding the social democratic workers to find their way through experience, the C. E. C. of the Communist party abets the leaders of the social democracy against the workers. The Welles and the Hilferdings are enabled to screen with flying colors their own unwillingness to fight, their dread of fighting, their inability to fight by citing the aversion of the Communist party for participating in a common struggle. The stubborn, dolish and insensate rejection by the Communist party of the policies of the United Front provides the social democracy, under the present conditions, with its most important political weapon. This is just the reason why the social democracy—with the parasitism inherent in its nature—snaps up our criticism of the ultimatic policies of Stalin-Thaelmann.

The official leaders of the Comintern are now expatiating with profound demeanor upon the need to elevate the theoretical level of the party and to study "the history of Bolshevism". Actually "the level" is falling constantly, the lessons of Bolshevism are forgotten, distorted and trampled under foot. In the meantime, it is by no means difficult to find in the history of the Russian party the precursor of the present policy of the German C. E. C.: he is none other than the deceased Bogdanov the founder of ultimatism or of "the up-and-outers" (Otzovists). As far back as 1905 he deemed it impossible for the Bolsheviks to participate in the Petrograd Soviet, unless the Soviet recognized beforehand the leadership of the Social Democrats. Under Bogdanov's influence, the Petrograd Bureau of the C. E. C. (Bolsheviks) passed a resolution in October 1905: to submit before the Petrograd Soviet the demand that it recognize the leadership of the party; and in event of refusal—to walk out of the Soviet. Krassikov, a young lawyer, in those days a member of the C. E. C. (Bolsheviks), read this ultimatum at the plenary session of the Soviet. The worker deputies, among them Bolsheviks also, exchanged surprised looks and then passed on to the business in the order of the day. Not a man walked out of the Soviet. Shortly after that Lenin arrived from abroad, and he raked the ultimaticists over the coals mercilessly. "You can't—he lectured them—nor can any one else by means of ultimatums force the masses to skip the necessary phases of their own political development."

Bogdanov, however, did not discard his methodology, and he subsequently founded an entire faction of "ultimaticists" or "up-and-outers" (Otzovists): they received the latter nickname because of their tendency to call upon the Bolsheviks to get up and get out from all those organizations that refused to accept the ultimatum laid down from above: "you must first accept our leadership." The ultimaticists attempted to apply their policy not only to the Soviets but also in the parliamentary sphere and to the trade unions, in short, to all legal and semi-legal organizations of the working class.

Lenin's fight against ultimatism was a fight for the correct interrelation between the party and the class. The ultimaticists, in the old Bolshevik party, never played a rôle of the slightest importance, otherwise the victory of Bolshevism would not have been possible. The strength of Bolshevism lay in its wide awake and sensitive relation to the class. Lenin continued his fight against ultimatism even when he was in supreme command, in particular and especially, as regards the attitude to the trade unions. "Indeed, if now in Russia," he wrote, "after two and a half years of unheard of victories over the bourgeoisie of Russia and of the Entente, we were to place before the trade unions as a condition for their joining us that they 'recognize the dictatorship' we would be guilty of stupidity, we would impair our influence over the masses, we would aid the mensheviks. For the task of the Communists consists in being able to convince the backward to know how to work among them and not to fence ourselves from them by a barrier of fictitious and puerile 'left' slogans". (THE INFANTILE DISEASE OF "LEFTISM".) This holds all the more for the Communist parties of the West, which represent only a minority of the working class.

During the last few years, however, the situation in the U. S. S. R. has changed radically. The arming of the Communist party with sovereignty means the introduction of a new element into the interrelation between the vanguard and the class: into this relation there enters the element of force. Lenin's struggle against party and Soviet bureaucracy was in its essence a struggle not against the faulty organization of departments, nor against departmental red-tape and inefficiency but against the apparatus laying down the law to the class, against the transformation of the party bureaucracy into a new "ruling" clique. Lenin's counsel, from his death bed, that a proletarian Control Commission be created independent of the C. E. C. and that Stalin and his faction be removed from the party apparatus was aimed against the bureaucratic degeneration of the party. For various reasons, which cannot be dealt with here, the party ignored this counsel. Of recent years the bureaucratic degeneration of the party has reached the extreme limit. Stalin's apparatus simply lays down the law. The language of command is the language of ultimatism. Every worker must perform and forthwith accept as infallible all the past, present and future decisions of the C. E. C. The more erroneous the policies become, the greater are the pretensions to infallibility.

After gathering into its hands the apparatus of the Comintern, the Stalinist faction naturally transferred also its methods over to the foreign sections, i. e., to the Communist parties in the capitalist nations. The policy of the German leaders has for its counterpart the policy of the Moscow leadership. Thaelmann observes how Stalin's bureaucracy rules the roost, by condemning as counter-revolutionary all those who do not recognize its infallibility. Wherein is Thaelmann worse than Stalin? If the working class does not willingly place itself under his leadership that is only because the working class is counter-revolutionary. Double dyed counter-revolutionaries are those who point out the balefulness of ultimatism. The collected works of Lenin are among the most counter-revolutionary publications. There is sufficient reason why Stalin should—as he does—submit them to such rigid censorship, particularly on their publication in foreign languages. Baleful as ultimatism is under all conditions—if in the U. S. S. R. it dissipates the moral capital of the party—it breeds double disaster for the Western parties which must yet begin accumulating their moral capital. Within the Soviet Union, at least, the victorious revolution has created material grounds for bureaucratic ultimatism, in the guise of an apparatus for repression. Whereas in capitalist countries, including Germany, ultimatism becomes converted into an impotent caricature, and interferes with the movement of the Communist party to power. Above all, the ultimatism of Thaelmann-Remmele is funny.

And whatever is funny is fatal, particularly in matters concerning a revolutionary party.

Let us for a moment transfer the problem to England, where the Communist party (as a consequence of the ruinous mistakes of Stalinist bureaucracy) still comprises an insignificant portion of the proletariat. If one accepts the theory that every type of the United Front, except the Communist, is "counter-revolutionary", then obviously the British proletariat must put off its revolutionary struggle until that time when the Communist Party is able to come to the fore. But the Communist party cannot come to the front of the class except on the basis of its own revolutionary experience. However, its experience cannot take on a revolutionary character in any other way than by drawing mass millions into the struggle. Yet non-Communist masses, the more so if organized, cannot be drawn into the struggle except through the policy of the United Front. We fall into a charmed circle, out of which there is no way out by means of bureaucratic ultimatism. But the revolutionary dialectic has long since pointed the way out and has demonstrated it by countless examples in the most diverse spheres; by correlating the struggle for power with the struggle for reforms; by maintaining complete independence of the party while preserving the unity of the trade unions; by fighting against the bourgeois régime and at the same time utilizing its institutions; by criticizing relentlessly parliamentarism—from the parliamentary tribunal; by waging war mercilessly against reformism, and at the same time making practical agreements with the reformists in partial struggles.

In England, the incompetence of ultimatism hits one in the eye because of the extreme weakness of the party. In Germany the balefulness of ultimatism is masked somewhat by the considerable numerical strength of the party and by its growth. But the German party is growing on account of the pressure of events and not thanks to the policies of the leadership; not because of ultimatism, but despite it. Moreover, the numerical growth of the party does not play the decisive rôle; what does decide is the political interrelation between the party and the class. Along this line, which is fundamental, the situation is not improving, because the German party has placed between itself and the class the thorny hedge of ultimatism.

The S.P. «Lefts» Program

The "militant" socialists have forced their attention upon the American movement by issuing a "Militant Program of the Socialist Party of America". The noise the Militants created in heralding their opposition to the party fathers prompted O'Neal to give them a spanking, issued as a criticism in the New Leader. But like all bureaucrats and upholders of the crimes of the Second International, O'Neal splashed a lot of words, set up a few straw men and evaded the whole issue. No doubt this kind of criticism will spur the "militants" to new conquests. In this advance of the "militants", it is well to point out what their present step means and to lay bare some of the contradictions.

The deepening crisis has caused this stir and forces the more enlightened members of the S. P. to seriously question the crimes of the Second International. For the rank and file of the "militants" it is a step forward, but for those "leaders" who were formerly supporting the Communists it is a big step backward. At least, one will have to give these "leaders" credit for one thing. They have set themselves a big task. They intend to reform the Second International. Already sections of the more advanced workers in their rank and file are to the left of the "militant" program and are seriously questioning it.

The program is written in the fashion of a crafty lawyer who puts out a feeler, insinuating much, condemning considerably, but accusing no one in particular. The program points out some of the crimes of the Second International, but there is no hint as to who their American bed-fellows are. They seem to be afraid of stepping on somebody's toes. Like good politicians of the capitalist orders these "militant" leaders have left the door open for proper adjustments with the fathers at a later date.

The "Militant Program" accuses the Second International of crimes beyond class "redemption" and in the same breath advocates reforming this even of Capitalism. Such a position is even more tragic than the position of the liberal who admits all the evils of capitalism and then sets out to cure it.

The reformers of the Second International speak of class struggle saying, "The moment this Marxian concept is abandoned, not only in theory but in practice as well, at that moment Socialism loses its significance." We are told this in 1932 by the "militant socialists", but this universal, open abandonment of the class struggle by Second International was heralded unashamedly to the workers of the world in 1914 and ever since then, and it is from then on that "Socialism" has lost "its significance". No group of "Lefts" can blow life into what is already dead. If the "militant socialists" blow anything into the American party we can be sure it will not be Marxism. They can blow into the Socialist Party some radical phrases, and make it more presentable for conditions of crisis. In this stage of increasing class struggle, capitalism must bring into life the American variety of social democracy, so ably presented by the German "Comrades". If a few sincere but non-Marxian worker "leaders" allow themselves to be utilized together with the conscious fakers so much the better for the development of reformism in America, for the capitalists. The Second International served its master well in Europe. Why not give it a chance in America, even if it needs a little doctoring up for presentation? American capitalism had better make haste while there is time and construct some kind of a storm cellar for the coming class battles. Will the rank and file "militants" of the Socialist Party help in this process, or will they take the next step toward the Communist movement?

The program says, "It is a fundamental principle of Marxism that Socialism cannot be achieved as a result of a series of reforms within the framework of the Capitalist State." When the fathers of the party read this they became frightened, but as soon as they read the next sentence all their fear was quieted, for in its own peculiar way, in the language of the politicians, it lays the basis for the understanding of words and deeds. The next sentence of the program says, "Emancipation of the workers can begin only when the workers capture political power and constitute themselves the ruling class." Just another way of saying, we will shoot the capitalist to death with paper ballots. The question of what to do with the capitalist state (smash it) and what kind of a state will replace it, is left for people to guess as they please. This is no accident on the part of the "militant socialist leaders". These reformers of the reformers in America say the dictatorship of the proletariat is alright in Russia. But in America—that's a different question. Years ago the intense class struggle in Europe forced the "left" Socialists to accept the dictatorship in Russia as a reality but in the next breath they said it was not for their country. And now, years later, the developing class struggle in America forces the "lefts" to say the same. Already we find some of the rank and file objecting to these clever formulations, this lip service to revolution and action for reformism. They demand another step.

The program says, "At the same time, we set ourselves firmly against dictatorship in this country as long as democratic means of transition to a socialist society are still available." We will vote the capitalists out of power, and these defeated capitalists will give us the key to every mine, mill and factory; and the next day they will report to work in overalls." So say the "militants", who are going to use the democratic means of transition to socialism. What a mess. Shapiro, Coleman, Sinclair and Blanchard and their like. What kind of a game do you call this? They may be able to convince some followers that they "don't know any better" but we know them from before.

Every one remembers the last part of the Communist Manifesto and the last sentence. It is well to know the last words of the "militant socialist" program: "We must create and promote a spirit of intelligent hopefulness. Such an opportunity as is at hand for all of us to hasten the emancipation of the working class of America may not come again for generations. We call for action. Let us close ranks and go forward to Socialism in our time." This gem of reform ignorance has two mistakes: ordinary and extraordinary. These reformers tell their followers that if they don't get busy and help them reform the reformers at once we may not have another chance for generations. We can settle this problem by informing the "militant Socialists" that they will not reform the Second International in this generation and in the next generation there will be no need because the Second International will only be a terrible memory for the victorious world proletariat.

Bourgeois Left Gains in French Elections

The first ballot of the French elections, last Sunday, although not decisive in its results, indicates a definite trend toward the bourgeois Left in the country. The die-hard policies of Andre Tardieu and his Right bloc, in control at the present time, seem to have driven broad layers of the French intermediate classes to the side of the moderate bourgeois parties. The Radical-Socialists under the leadership of the pan-European "pacifist" Edouard Herriot have already received 63 seats, the largest bloc of votes for any of the parties participating. The Left Republicans of Premier Tardieu received 37 seats, reducing their former strength considerably. The socialists with their 40 mandates also show a substantial gain. Comparisons with the results of the first ballot in the last elections (1928) demonstrate the trend toward the Left very distinctly.

The political line of Tardieu, particularly aggressive in its foreign relations, has opened up French industry and economy to counter-attacks by the other world powers. The high tariffs and the suspicious attitude aroused in the other countries has instigated the fear of "isolation" among the rather formidable middle layers of French society. The Radical-Socialists and the socialists have been for some time campaigning for disarmament and European "cooperation" and have been able to achieve a measure of success in their campaigns.

Growing unemployment and the worsening of the general conditions of the working class, due to the economic crisis which is first unfolding in all seriousness in France, produces still another and very important movement toward the radicalization of the masses. The socialists have, for their part, flirted with the idea of new reforms in their campaigns. That French imperialism, in its present precarious position, with an economic crisis on its hands and with a very wobbly and unrealistic political preponderance in Europe, will not be able to concede in any great measure to the road of social legislation, is a foregone conclusion.

The Radical-Socialists are quite conscious of this and hence the reports of their weariness of an alliance with the socialists. Despite the many protests and declarations of Herriot in the press, to the effect that he will not conclude any bloc with the Tardieu group, we cannot help remaining skeptical. The Radical-Socialists have the interests of the French master class well in mind, and just as in the past, they are apt to be more inclined to draw their conclusions from the eventual logic of French politics than from considerations of temporary gain implied in an alliance with the socialists.

Still, the socialists have been consistently making overtures to the Herriot

WEEKLY MILITANT DEPENDS UPON SUCCESS OF $1,000 DRIVE

It is necessary to put the question bluntly: We depend absolutely on the thousand dollar press fund to keep the weekly MILITANT alive. In raising funds to sustain THE MILITANT and our other publications we have up to the present resorted to "normal" methods—soliciting subscriptions, renewals, etc. The situation of our press at the present time necessitates a much harder drive. We must put on more pressure, we must exert ourselves more and sacrifice more. The life of the weekly MILITANT is at stake.

The past year and a half has witnessed an unprecedented extension of our propaganda activities. It has seen the rebirth of THE MILITANT as a weekly, our penetration of the language field with a Jewish paper and a Greek paper, the issuance of a Youth organ and a whole series of Left Opposition books and pamphlets. All these steps were absolutely necessary in our struggle to delve deeper into the ranks of the American revolutionary workers. The word of the Left Opposition, in pamphlet and in newspaper form, in the English, Yiddish, and Greek languages, has been brought to new hundreds and thousands of class conscious proletarians. A good start was made in new directions.

Now we are faced with the problem of making all these steps permanent and durable achievements. Can this be done? It must be done, if we are to fulfill the historic task of the Left Opposition in America, if we are to continue the work of regenerating the Communist movement, of returning the Communist party to the road of Lenin, if we are to re-establish its Marxian basis.

The most important organ of propaganda and education that we have is the weekly MILITANT. Upon its existence, upon its maintenance depends the life of all our other organs. The terrific effects of the economic crisis with the monstrous unemployment it has brought about, make it impossible for us to get sufficient funds for the sustenance of THE MILITANT and our other papers by the ordinary methods. SPECIAL EFFORTS AND SACRIFICES ARE NECESSARY IF THE WEEKLY MILITANT IS TO CONTINUE IN EXISTENCE!

Funds are urgently needed. THE MILITANT requires your aid immediately. Let every comrade, every sympathizer, every reader of THE MILITANT get busy. Get subscriptions, get new readers, get DONATIONS. Send in your contribution and all the funds you collect immediately to the National Office. Do your share! Every cent, every helping hand is needed to keep the Weekly MILITANT going!

The Strike in the N. Y. Building Trades

Between 30,000 and 40,000 New York building trades workers went on strike May 1st because of a failure to arrive at a wage scale agreement. The building trades employers association had previously, arbitrarily posted notice of wage cuts ranging from 25% to 30%. However, the immediate cause of the strike was the fact that the elevator manufacturers broke ranks and made a verbal promise to the elevator contractors' union of a day scale of $11.20 instead of the $10 announced in notices posted. The press carries statements to the effect that the leaders of the building trades council were otherwise prepared to accept the cut.

On Monday May the 2nd three unions still remained at work, the elevator constructors, the electricians and the iron and steel workers. But the following day the employers decided to make the shut-down complete and disperse with the service of these three unions also. The officials of the bricklayers union evidently still expect to gain special favors. Their previous agreement carries a "no strike" clause, and they now insist upon arbitration.

How serious is the building trades union leadership about the strike? It should be remembered that it is not at all called in protest against the wage cut, but rather in protest against a verbal promise for special consideration for one union. Secondly, the leadership made no preparation whatever for strike. It has made no proposals to solidify the unions of the seventeen different internationalists to resist the wage slashes. It has made no proposals for strike activities to prepare against possible scabbing. Thirdly, it made no efforts to establish some semblance of concerted action on a national scale. It is perfectly true that building cannot be transferred from one city to another, nevertheless the lack of concerted action has permitted opening wedges to be made in many cities where the building trades workers have already submitted to drastic wage cuts. Lastly, the union leadership was willing to accept the wage cut decree, had the employers remained united.

Conditions of the Unions
It is of course correct for unions to make all possible use of any break in the ranks of the employers; but such can be utilized only provided the organizations are prepared to make a serious fight. Of what there is no indication whatever.

The building trades unions in New York as well as elsewhere, have suffered serious membership losses. In the main, this has been due to the fact that, with the widespread heavy unemployment members have been unable to keep up their dues payments and the unions have failed to maintain closed shop conditions. To resist in a serious manner the present attacks upon the wage scale it is first of all necessary that real efforts should be made to regain what has been lost and to strengthen the unions. That strength, however, can be expressed effectively only when the unions arrive at a basis of unity of action. That such is not yet the case is amply demonstrated by the fact that three unions could remain at work after the strike was called. Moreover, there will be little possibility of preventing strike breaking unless such unity actually exists.

Must Prepare to Resist
It should be clear to the building trades workers by this time that a reduced scale of wages will not at all serve to increase the jobs. On the contrary, it is the continued unemployment and the surplus of hands available which is being utilized by the employers to reduce wages and thus reduce the standard of living everywhere. To this should be added, that acceptance of one wage cut leaves the road open for the employers to press for more.

No matter how much the building trades unions have suffered from their own inherent craft weakness, and from their corrupt leadership, they are still the best organized section in the country. In other words, this means that it is still up to them to lead the fight against the general wage slashing. The cuts already suffered should therefore become a serious warning that it is now high time to prepare to lead that fight and to prepare to lead it on a national scale.

Militant Builders

Attention Militant Builders! To each comrade and sympathizer, who during the final month of the drive, May 1 to June 1, accounts for $15 subs or donations to any of our papers we will give a free copy of Volume 1 of comrade Trotsky's History of the Russian Revolution. To each comrade who falls short of $15 but reaches $10, we will give a free copy of WHAT NEXT by comrade Trotsky. This is an opportunity no comrade can afford to overlook.

To the comrade who stands highest in the staff of Militant Builders at the close of the entire drive we will give free a bound volume of THE MILITANT. To the comrade who stands second we will give a free copy of THE PROBLEMS OF THE CHINESE REVOLUTION.

The record of the builders for the entire drive to date with the final month listed in parenthesis, is as follows:

Stalinist-Lovestone Unity Negotiations

We have received the following two letters:

I.
Dear Comrades:
The unity negotiations with Lovestone have been going on for some time. Everything has been conducted in the quietest through secret personal conferences—and nothing has been put in writing on the party side. This precaution was explained to me as a measure "to prevent Lovestone from having anything to show which cannot be denied if the negotiations fail." My personal opinion, however, is that they will come to an agreement. You may not agree with me, but these are my reasons.

I do know that several meetings between them have taken place. I understand that the C. I. representative also talked to Lovestone, but am not absolutely sure of this. The negotiations hinge at present on the Brandler question. The C. E. C. negotiators demanded a statement repudiating Brandler as the main condition for unity. They also insisted that Lovestone issue such a statement personally, under his own signature, in addition to the statement by the group. This proposition was taken under advisement for some time.

Then another conference was arranged and Lovestone made the following reply: He will act together with the group and cannot issue any statement in his own name. The group will not issue any statement against Brandler before being readmitted into the party. However, if they were taken back into the party, they would "submit to party discipline" and carry out any instructions given them on any question.

A second demand of the C. E. C. I. was that the Lovestoneites issue a declaration to the effect that "the party line is right and has always been right". To this, Lovestone gave the same reply as above: no statements before the unity—submission to discipline, including declarations they are instructed to make—afterward.

Then the C. E. C. cabled the report to the Comintern and asked for instructions. A few days ago, the reply of the C. I., signed by Kuusinen arrived. It said: "Conditions not acceptable". This was reported to Lovestone. Up to the present he has not replied.

The old-time Fosterites who have prospered in late years, are not very enthusiastic about the return of the Lovestone group and the consequent sharpening of "competition" for the places, which for these people have come to mean life itself. But it is hard to get direct expressions from many of them. They are so afraid of getting cross-ways with "the C. I. line" that they wait to make sure what is expected of them before committing themselves.

The most significant result of the negotiations with Lovestone is the effect on those who, like myself, were disoriented by the "left turn". It was the expulsion of Lovestone that really arrested our trend toward the Left Opposition. It certainly makes one feel foolish to think about it now and to realize that the readmission of the Lovestoneites will complete the circle and leave us where we started—with nothing to show for our "strategy" but a bad taste in the mouth.

It will also interest you to know that the "Soviet-American military alliance" issue caused some repercussions, even in the apparatus. When that famous editorial came to the Daily Worker office—it was written, I am told, by the C. I. man—it evoked strenuous protest at first from Harry Gannes. He is something of an editor or half-editor there and began to mutter something about principles, Marxism, etc. You know he has occasional outbursts of this kind. However, he was promptly told that this editorial came from "the top" and he soon subsided.

Yours,
—P.

II.
From a Member of the Lovestone Group

Dear Comrades:
Last Thursday we held a general membership meeting of the group and heard the report on the unity negotiations with the party. Lovestone made the report.

He said the negotiations began several weeks ago soon after the unity mass meeting of our group in the Labor Temple. The first conference took place between Lovestone and the C. I. rep. The C. I. rep., according to Lovestone, proposed that the group return to the party and work everything out gradually. Lovestone demanded as a condition party democracy, a full discussion and following that, a convention.

The C. I. rep. said: "Do you mean to say that you want party democracy in (Continued on page 8)

IN THE CANADIAN MOVEMENT

The State and the Trade Unions in Canada

The doctrine of Criminal Conspiracy was accepted in the early colonies of British North America. The historical details are of no great importance here. The arrest of twenty-four striking printers in Toronto in the seventies of the last century, on a charge of conspiracy, brought home to the workers that there was no law in the Dominion corresponding to the English Trade Union Act of 1871. In 1867 the British North America Act assigned the subject of criminal law to the Dominion and property and civil rights to provincial jurisdiction. Consequently, Parliament in 1872 passed a Trade Union Act identical in most respects with the English legislation of the previous year. It was laid down that the purposes of a trade union shall not by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade be deemed to be unlawful so as to render any member of such a union liable to criminal prosecution for conspiracy or otherwise. (This is some sort of recognition of freedom of association.)

Conspiracy and the Right to Strike
Section 590 of the Criminal Code deals with the right to strike in these terms: "No prosecution shall be maintainable against any person for conspiracy in refusing to work with or for any employer or workman or for doing any act or causing any act to be done for the purpose of a combination unless such act is punishable by statute." Thus the trade unions in Canada are relieved of the incidence of conspiracy to a very limited extent. For, unfortunately for the trade unionist, nearly every important act "done for the purpose of a combination" in the course of a strike is "punishable by statute." The definition of a "trade combination" in the Code restricts it to the workers in the direct employment of the employer involved in the dispute. Picketing is punishable by statute as "watching and besetting." The strike of workers in "public utilities" before invoking the conciliatory provisions of the "Industrial Disputes Investigation Act" is an indictable offence. A sympathetic strike may therefore become a wholesale violation of statutory prohibitions, and on top of that, a seditious conspiracy.

Sympathetic Strike Illegal
The case of the King versus Russell grew out of the Winnipeg General Strike of May 1919. The leaders were arrested and charged with seditious conspiracy. In their defence it was urged that the strike was the lawful act of a trade combination under section 590. But the Manitoba Court of Appeal ruled that: "The immunity provided by section 590 of the (Criminal) Code does not extend to a general 'sympathetic' strike. A conspiracy to bring about a strike involving no trade dispute between the strikers and their employers is illegal. The law in Canada applying thereto is the same as it was in England before the Trades Dispute Act of 1906, to which there is no similar enactment in Canada . . ."

Following the Winnipeg strike, the Trades and Labor Congress proposed that the government amend the definition of a "trade combination" by adding the words of the English Act (1906) "workmen means all persons employed in any trade or industry whether or not in the employment of the employer directly or involved in a trade agreement". The memorandum of the Department of Justice was an illuminating reply wherein it was solemnly stated "as a principle of the common law . . . that a combination of persons to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means, is criminal, and it is moreover actionable civilly, if there be special damage. Compatible with this rule a sympathetic strike cannot practically be worked."

In other words, trade unions, which, finding the craft form utterly inadequate in the struggle with capitalist consolidations would parallel the latter by industrial unions, federations and alliances, are liable to be charged with conspiracy, if they engage in militant action in support of their members working in a given shop for a given employer. But that is not all! Only a strike growing out of a trade dispute within these narrow limits is "legal". A strike for any political purpose, for the release of class-war prisoners, against the transport of munitions, against intervention in the affairs of the Soviet Union, for social insurance, etc., would all be held illegal conspiracies. As to whether they can be "practically worked", if the Department of Justice lives long enough it will yet learn many things contrary to statutory provision.

The vulnerability of the trade unions to prosecution for illegal conspiracy has become more acute by virtue of the operation of Section 98 of the Criminal Code (its starting point was an order-in-council issued under the War-measures Act).

The section in question reads as follows: "98. Unlawful associations. Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada by use of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to accomplish such change, or for any other purpose or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, or defend, shall be an unlawful association."

Observe the neighborly conjunction of the words "force" and "terrorism" with "industrial or economic change". Does it require an undue stretch of imagination to conceive that in the electric atmosphere of a considerable "trade dispute" the word "force" may be construed to embrace forms even of slight moral pressure? Thus in his charge to the jury Judge Metcalf in The King versus Russell declared that "sometimes it has a deterring effect upon peoples' minds by exposing them to have their motions watched and to encounter black looks". The same judge, commenting on section 132 of the Criminal Code which defines "seditious words" as "words expressing a seditious intention", added that "seditious" is a comprehensive term embracing all those practices whether, by word, deed, or writing which are likely to disturb the tranquility of the State, and to lead ignorant persons to endeavor to subvert the government and the laws of the Empire". The statement of objects not only of a union which subscribes to a socialist aim which as the abolition of the wage-system, but even of an organization which adheres to the conservative slogan "a fair day's pay for a fair day's work" may in the course of any dispute of consequence become "words, deeds, or writings, likely to disturb the tranquility" of the employing class, their police and their courts.

Picketing is a Crime and a Tort
The right to strike, if at all effectual, must carry with it the corollary right to organize the unorganized and persuade them to join the strike. In this connection, Section 501 of the Code makes it an indictable offence for anyone who "wrongfully and without lawful authority, with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing anything which he has a lawful right to do, or to do anything from which he has a lawful right to abstain . . . (f) besets or watches the house or other place where such other person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be". If, moreover, the "watching and besetting" amounts to a common-law nuisance, it is within the prohibition of the statute (Section 221) as "an unlawful act or omission to discharge a legal duty, which act or omission endangers the lives, health, property or comfort of the public, or by which the public are obstructed in the exercise or enjoyment of any right common to all his Majesty's subjects".

Rennes versus The King, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada practically decided that "peaceful picketing was without legal sanction, there being no legislation in Canada corresponding to Section 2, subsection of the British Trades Dispute Act of 1906". As a "common-law nuisance", picketing is subject to be restricted by injunction. In Canada Paper vs. Brown, the court declared that "our Criminal Code fully reorganizes the right of a man to carry on his business without interference, let, or hindrance". Occasionally a court has said "Government by injunction is a thing abhorrent to the law of England and of this province." But abhorrent or not, the number of injunctions that issue to break strikes is on the increase.

"Incitement to Breach of Contract"
In the Dominion, the unions are subject to the doctrine of the courts that "for a number of persons to combine together to procure others to break contracts is unlawful, and if such others are induced to break and do break, their contracts, this constitutes an actionable wrong" and the unions will be mulcted in heavy damages". It is cold comfort for the trade union militant that the law on this subject is in a state of "chaotic uncertainty" and that many of the noble and learned law lords have confessed themselves baffled to draw a definite line between "acts whose real purpose is to advance the defendants' interests and acts whose real purpose is to injure the plaintiff in his trade." The British Act of 1906, as an aftermath of the famous Taff-Vale Judgment, and as a result of political pressure, provided that "an act done by a person in contemplation of a trade dispute shall not be actionable on the ground only that it induces some other person to break a contract of employment, or that it is an interference with the trade, business, or employment of some other person . . ." A further provision at that time relieved the unions of liability under the doctrine of "civil conspiracy."

The Criminal Code further makes certain statutory breaches of contract indictable offences. The worker connected with the supply of power, light, gas, water, or railroads who "wilfully breaks any contract made by him" etc., that is who may desire to strike without the preliminaries of notice, negotiation, or "conciliation" is subject to fine or imprisonment.

III.
This bare outline of the legal vulnerability of the trade unions in the Dominion, should indicate how fatal on their part would be a policy of "neutrality", of indifferently passing by, like the Biblical Levite, on the other side of the road, while the Government is throttling the revolutionary vanguard. The Trades Congress officialdom has on several occasions, under rank and file pressure, made "representations" to the government, for the repeal or "amendment" of the obnoxious sections of the Code. But something more is required than a legal brief, read to a cabinet minister by a bureaucrat deputation. Whatever concessions have been wrung from the capitalist class in the past have been along the way of mass struggle and political action. Unions which abandon their militant functions for defensive or offensive purposes, invite legal and governmental strangulation at the hands of a capitalist class which in the epoch of imperialism can less than ever afford to yield concessions from sheer "liberalism".

The deep-going economic crisis must work a molecular radicalization in the ranks of "organized labor". The Communists should throw overboard the self-stultifying Stalinist approach to the old unions as "social fascist". That policy has only succeeded in wreaking the havoc of isolation, at a time when every point of militant support in the mass organizations was necessary in defence of party legality. At that, despite the defeatist attitude to work in the reactionary unions, dozens of the most conservative locals and Trade Councils adopted the resolution circulated for the repeal of Section 98. The past has shown, proved, that where the charters of the A. F. of L. run up against the iron exigencies which impel the masses to action, such charters have the worth of a treaty guaranteeing Belgian neutrality.

Press Drive Under Way--2nd. Week

Although figures for the first week of the final month of the drive are not complete as we go to press (Thursday) we are able, on the basis of preliminary reports, to say that the drive has opened very encouragingly with $100.00 towards our goal realized in less than a week. Our comrades and sympathizers all over the country are beginning to respond to our appeal for their assistance in making this drive a success. A comrade from Los Angeles writes, in renewing his subscription: "Just a few words about The Militant from an old party member. In the literature of the official party press of this country, each number of The Militant is like an invigorating breeze over a stagnant pool. Though disagreeing with the party on a number of questions The Militant is blasting its way to the hearts and minds of many party members and sympathizers by introducing healthy discussions among the radical workers."

Another comrade, from Chicago, writes: "Just a few minutes after reading the appeal for funds in The Militant I found the enclosed bill being waited in the breeze down Michigan Boulevard. The Chicago branch gets credit for this I understand." You bet!

Against our goal of $1,000, we have already realized $100. This is due principally to the splendid showing made by the New York and Minneapolis branches. The quotas and results which we give below tell a story more eloquent than words.

	Quota	Reported
New York	$25	$58
Minneapolis	$200	$27.50
Chicago	$100	$ 3.00
Toronto	$70
Philadelphia	$40
Cleveland	$40
Boston	$40
Newark	$35	$ 2.00
Kansas City	$30
St. Louis	$25
Los Angeles	$35	$ 2.00
Youngstown	$10
New Haven	$10
Montreal	$10
Duluth	$10
Springfield, Ill.	$10
W. Frankfort, Ill.	$10
Trenton	$ 5
Miscellaneous		$7.00
	$1,000.00	$100.00

The good showing made by New York is the result of its successful affair held April 30 with which it opened the final month of the drive. As previously reported the admission price of 25 cents entitled the holder to an 8 issue sub to

The Militant. This unique idea conceived and carried thru by the captains of the New York teams, comrades Craine and Bord, resulted in 29 new subs being added to New York's total. These 29 trial subs together with 4 others which the branch accounted for during the past week make its total to date, 71 and place it at the head of the standing once more. Will it be able to maintain its lead in face of Minneapolis' determined drive is the question everyone is asking.

Minneapolis continuing its powerful drive accounted for fifteen subs to The Militant, 4 to Unser Kampf and 2 to Young Spartacus. But what subs? They amount to $27.50. One is a sub comrade Hedlund, our leading Militant builder, got for two and a half years. Another is one comrade Curran got by persuading a member of the opposing team, comrade Zalmanoff, to sign on the dotted line. Comrades, this method should not be overlooked!

Comrade Coover's report bodes no good for the other branches. "The April Militant drive in Minneapolis is closed. The No. 1 Team, M. Dunne, captain, scored a total to April 30, of 51 1-4 points. Not bad. But the No. 2 Team, Bill Curran, captain, scored a total of 56 1-2 points, giving it a lead of 5 1-4 points. The No. 2 Team should be the guests at the press entertainment but it looks now as if it will take all the members of both team to do the honors for the guests at the entertainment when it is finally pulled off. We are going to give the other branches a trimming in the question of the quotas as well as the final stage of the drive. I think the above figures will take care of New York to date on the sub drive in spite of their excellent idea of giving an 8 issue sub with each 25 cents admission. You will hear more from Minneapolis in the future."

To this honor roll must be added comrade Sacharow's report of the doings of the Chicago branch. "The branch has been divided into two teams and we may yet finish the sub campaign with a bang." Go to it, Chicago!

The standing of the branches reads as follows:
New York, 71; Minneapolis, 64; Chicago, 12; Newark, 4; Boston, 4; Youngstown, 4; Miscellaneous, 25.
St. Louis, Philadelphia, and Montreal remain where they were last week at $1 each. The total has risen to 137, an increase of 60 over last week. Excellent! But not enough! The other branches should snap into it. It is not late. Let us hear from them!

Now everybody into the second week of the drive! This is collection week. Let us see what can be done!

The Negro and the Class Struggle

Revolutions and civil wars are always followed by "counter revolution" (reaction, terror, etc. against the exploited) unless the workers are able to carry the law over to the point where they seize power for themselves. During the struggle, concessions are necessary to gain the support of the exploited for the exploiters' war. But once the former exploiter is defeated, the new exploiter makes haste to bring about a new alignment with the former enemy, under the hegemony of the new exploiter, against the exploited. The results of the civil war only confirmed this truth again.

The legal forms of capitalist rule were not sufficient for the needs of the plantation owners of the south. Lynch law was added—a necessary measure used against the whole exploited class whenever the formal legal means do not suffice to keep them in check. Lynch law exists for the Negro every minute of the day and night. But it is not the elimination of the lynch law that will free the Negro. Rather lynch law, as such, can only be done away with by the overthrow of capitalism. In the struggle to overthrow capitalism a necessary part is the constant struggle against lynch law and all forms of discrimination (discriminating law prohibiting admittance to public and private buildings, schools, universities, parks, etc.; restrictions regarding jury service and civil service; disfranchisement; prohibition of intermarriage; lease system, chain gangs, etc., and admittance to working class organizations, trade unions etc.)

The Negro in America—bourgeoisie, petit-bourgeois, farmer and worker—stands as an oppressed racial minority, a national minority. Of course they are a minority of the nation; and in this sense it is not so. A national minority are a people not only with racial differences, but a people with special differences of language, custom and religion, or with a separate national character or national interests. Politically speaking, national minorities always have the integral element of racial minority (race or branch of race). But a racial minority, in the hodge-podge of capitalist society, does not necessarily signify national minority. On the other hand, racial oppression does not always mean the oppression of a national minority. This oppression may be inflicted on a national majority, as in the case of China and India. One could give countless examples of this kind in the past history.

America, the outstanding representative of Capitalism, is the best example to show the differences between a racial minority and a national minority. America is now a nation and its people take pride in their nationality, regardless of the descent, especially those Americans of the second and third generation of foreign descent. In the United States we find many racial groups making up the nation as "Americans". The Swedes, English, Spanish or French born in America, who may still have the "pure blood" of their race, can be considered as a racial minority (races of Europe) of the population of the United States. In this way they are catalogued mechanically as part of a national group. But, in spite of this, they cannot be considered as a national minority in the political sense.

The Negro was brought from Africa, from a system of Barbarism where nations as political states were only in the process of formation. He was hurried through the process and now is part of Capitalism. He brought with him racial characteristics, as well as traditions and modes of the past. However, his life in America has overbalanced that which was brought from the past, has modified it, has changed it. Capitalist America has forced him to adopt the language and religion and modes of the country and of the economic system as the DETERMINING FACTORS of this part of his make-up. The more complicated economic structure here in America has swallowed up the past. And, although it cannot be eliminated and expresses itself in the new make-up, it is not the determining factor of the American Negro.

As an oppressed racial minority it is one question, and the question is the race form of the class struggle. As an oppressed national minority it is another question. The attempt to construe the Negro question this way can only result,

LETTERS FROM THE MILITANTS

A. F. of L. Fakers Betray Sign Writers

NEW YORK, N. Y.—

The strike conducted by Sign Writers' Local 230 of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America has ended in defeat for the workers. The union instead of renewing its agreement with the bosses which expired on March 30th was forced to grant a ten per cent cut. The rank and file of the union was persuaded by its bureaucratic leadership against its own interests to give the bosses the right to hire and fire and lay off at will. The union has also relinquished its control over overtime work. The bosses no longer need the union's permission to order the workers to work longer than the eight hours which now constitute the working day. There is now no practical difference in essentials between the unionized and non-union shops.

The union bureaucrats succeeded in putting through a change in the agreement: the bosses agreed to allow helpers to do apprentices' work and vice versa. This practically wipes out the difference between these workers. The helpers are a large majority of the workers in the trade. With unemployment at about sixty per cent, the bosses will give work to the helpers at the expense of the apprentices, satisfy temporarily and to some extent the dissatisfaction of the helpers, and enable the union officials to maintain their highly paid positions and the fiction that they serve the workers' interests. It is an old trick. Only workers ignorant of the fathomless corruption and treachery of A. F. of L. bureaucrats could be taken in by so palpably treacherous a maneuver.

In a union controlled by the workers in their own interests the formal elimination of the difference between helpers and apprentices already accomplished in reality, would be made a progressive step. Wide awake class conscious workers would fight to make this step conditional upon the introduction of the six hour day without reduction in pay and upon the same wage scale for apprentices and helpers.

The strike failed principally because the bosses were able to keep their shops running full blast without any difficulty. Scabbing by unemployed open shop workers and by members of the union was prevalent. To add their treacherous bit the union bureaucrats fooled the workers into picketing—not the shops where the scab displays were made—but the Broadway moving picture theatres where some of the signs were displayed!

To consummate their treachery the bureaucrats called upon a representative of the district council of the Brotherhood to put over the wage cut. This professional betrayer with a face as white as a cheese mouthed phrases about militancy, fighting, the working class, ad nauseam. His conclusion was—a ten per cent cut! The workers harried by the fear of permanently losing their jobs by trying to maintain an ineffective strike, and bamboozled by the district council representative's demagoguery, voted without dissent for the cut and the elimination from the agreement of the clauses demanded by the bosses.

Against the future attacks which their present victory will embolden the bosses to make, the workers must prepare. They must seriously undertake a campaign to organize the trade. As a prerequisite condition for this they must drastically reduce the enormously high initiation fees which is $500 for helpers. (In our letter in The Militant of April 18th we used in this connection, the incorrect formulation: "they must abolish the initiation fees.") The workers must propose the same wage scale for apprentices and helpers. The division into apprentices and helpers no longer corresponds to any real difference between them and serves only the interests of the bureaucrats by enabling them to play off the helpers against the apprentices or the other way around. The workers must also set up as one of their demands the six hour day with no reduction in pay. The six hour day is entirely practicable in the trade and can put back to work many workers now vainly looking for jobs.

These demands are the essentials of a program for which the workers can fight in resisting the attacks on the bosses. In trying to realize these demands they will have to fight the enemy in the union—the bureaucratic misleaders. This should not deter them. It is the road all workers in the A. F. of L. have to travel in fighting for their interests.
